¹ That is, strengthening food. Instead of medhas, the Kânva recension has throughout medham (as once in our text).

² At the preceding offering, that to the Maruta h Sântapanâh, the ishî is either to be interrupted at the end of the Samish/ayagus (see I, 9, 2, 25-28), or only the offering of the Barhis (I, 9, 2, 29-31) is to be omitted. The concluding ceremonies are to be performed either on the same day, after the offering to the Maruto Grihamedhinah—which itself concludes with the Idâ, and (acc. to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 6, 6) has neither fore-offerings nor after-offerings—or the following morning after the Darvihoma (see par. 17). Kâty. V, 6, 3-5; 32-33.

parts. Having then made a hollow in each (pap), he (the Adhvaryu) pours clarified butter therein, and wipes both the dipping-spoon and the offering-spoon. Thereupon he takes the two dishes of pap, and walks up (to the altar); and again, he takes the dipping and offering spoons, and walks up; and having touched¹ the covered altar, and laid the enclosing-sticks round (the fire)², he puts on as many pieces of firewood as he thinks fit. He then deposits those two dishes of pap, and the dipping and offering spoons, in their places (outside the altar). The Hotri sits down on the Hotri's seat. Taking the dipping and offering spoons, he (the Adhvaryu) says,—

7. 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Agni!' with reference to Agni's butter-portion. He then takes four 'cuttings' of butter from the hollow of the southern pap, and steps over (to the south side of the fire). Having stepped over, and called for the (Âgnîdhra's) 'Sraushat,' he says (to the Hotri), 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Agni!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

8. He then says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Soma!' with reference to Soma's butter-portion. He then takes four cuttings of butter from the hollow of the northern pap, and steps over. Having stepped over and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Soma!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

9. He then says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to the Maruts, the Householders!' He makes an 'under-layer' of butter (in the offering-spoon) from the hollow of the southern pap, takes two cuttings from the latter, pours some butter thereon, and steps across. Having stepped across and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the Maruts, the Householders!' and pours out the oblation as soon as the Vasha^t has been uttered.

¹ According to Kâty. V, 6, 14, he is to do so either silently, or with the text (Vâg. S. II, 2) used in spreading the sacrificial grass on the altar. See I, 3, 3, 11.

² See I, 3, 3, 13; 3, 4, 1 seq.

10. He then says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Agni Svish^tak^rit¹!' He makes an under-layer of butter from the hollow of the northern pap, takes two cuttings from the latter, pours some butter thereon, and steps across. Having stepped across and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Agni Svish^tak^rit!' and pours out the oblation as soon as the Vasha^t has been uttered. Thereupon he cuts off the Idâ², but no fore-portion³. Having invoked (the Idâ), they cleanse themselves. This is one mode of performance.

11. Then there is this other. The same altar covered (with sacrificial grass) which has served for the Maruts, the Scorchers, is (used now). Near this covered altar they lay down the enclosing-sticks and pieces of firewood; and having had (the cows) milked in the same way (as before) he cooks the rice-pap. The butter he puts on so as to be no mere accessory⁴. Having cooked (the pap) and basted

¹ See I, 7, 3, 1 seq.

² See I, 8, 1, 1 seq.

³ See I, 7, 4, 6 seq.

⁴ Ned eva prativesam âgyam adhisrayati. There seems to be some mistake here. The commentary on Kâty. V, 6, 6 has 'tad eva' instead of 'ned eva.' Sâyana says that the butter is put on the Dakshinâgni; but according to Kâty. V, 6, 24, it is put on the fire together with the pap. The Kânva text has, abhyardha âgyam it, and removed it (from the fire), he anoints it. He then removes the butter in the pot (from the fire), and wipes the dipping and offering spoons. Thereupon, taking the dish with the pap, he walks up (to the altar); and again, taking the butter in the pot, he walks up; and again, taking the dipping and offering spoons, he walks up (to the altar). He then touches that covered altar, lays the enclosing-sticks round (the Âhavantya fire), and puts on as many pieces of wood as he thinks fit. He then deposits successively¹ (in their respective places) the dish with the pap, the pot with butter, and the dipping and offering spoons. The Hotri sits down in the Hotri's seat. Taking the dipping and offering spoons, he (the Adhvaryu) says,—

12. 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Agni!' with a view to (offering) Agni's butter-portion. He then takes four 'cuttings' of butter from the pot and steps across (to the offering-place on the south side of the fire). Having stepped across and called for the (Âgnîdhra's) Sraushaṭ, he says (to the Hotri), 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Agni!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vashaṭ has been uttered.

13. He then says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Soma!' with a view to Soma's butter-portion. He then takes four cuttings of butter from the pot, and steps across. Having stepped sthâlyâm adhisrayati, 'he puts on the butter in the pot on the near side.'

¹ In the original this is expressed by repetition of the verb, as was the case in the last sentence but one, where the original construction is retained. The Kâṇva text has merely, 'Having taken (the pap) with the dish, he hastes up (udâdravati).'

across, and called for the Sraushat, he says, 'Pronounce the offering-formula to Soma!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

14. Thereupon he says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to the Maruts, the Householders!' He then makes an 'under-layer' of butter (in the guhû), takes two cuttings from that pap, pours some butter thereon, re-anoints (replenishes with butter the parts of the sacrificial dish from which he has made)¹ the two cuttings, and steps across (to the offering-place). Having stepped across and called for the Sraushat, he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the Maruts, the Householders!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

15. Thereupon he says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to Agni Svishakrit!' He then makes an under-layer of butter, takes one cutting from the pap, pours twice butter thereon, without, however, re-anointing the (place of the) cutting; and steps across. Having stepped across, and called for the Sraushat, he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Agni Svishakrit!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

16. He then cuts off the Idâ, but no fore-portion. Having invoked (the Idâ), they (the priests) eat it. As many members of (the sacrificer's) household as are entitled to partake of the remains of sacrificial food¹ may eat (of the pap); or the officiating priests may eat it; or, if there be abundant pap, other Brâhmans also may eat of it. The pot having then been covered, before it is quite emptied, they put it away in a safe place, for the 'full-spoon ceremony.' Thereupon they let the calves together with their mothers; and thus the cattle take that nourishment. That night he performs the Agnihotra with rice-gruel. In the morning they milk a cow, which suckles an adopted calf², for the purpose of the offering to the fathers.

¹ 'Pratyanakti' is probably the same as 'pratyabhghârayati,' generally applied to the basting of the avadâna-sthâna, or that part of the havis from whence the cuttings have been made (Kâty. I, 9, 11; the 'replenishing' of the havis in Sat. Br. I, 7, 3, 6 refers to the same thing). See, however, Kâty. V, 6, 22, where it is ruled that no pratyabhghârâna is to take place at the present sacrifice. The Kânva MS., on the other hand, reads, 'he does not re-anoint the two cuttings.' Perhaps he is to anoint separately the two cut-off pieces.

17. Thereupon, in the morning, either after or before the performance of the Agnihotra—which ever he pleases—he cuts out (the remaining rice-pap) with the darvi-spoon³ from the un-emptied pot, with the text (Vâg. S. III, 49), 'Full, O spoon, fly away, well filled fly back to us!

¹ That is, those who have been invested with the sacrificial cord. According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 7, 1 the mistress of the house is not to eat of it, but an additional (prativeśa) pap is to be cooked specially for her on the Dakṣhiṇa fire.

² 'In the morning they tie up the (adopted) calf of a nivânyâ (cow suckling a strange calf),' Kârva text.

³ The Darvi-homa, or oblation of a darvi-spoonful of boiled rice to Indra, the associate of the Maruts, may be considered as part of the Grîhamedhîyâ ishî, being, as it were, an offering of remains (or scrapings, nishkāsa, Taitt. Br. I, 6, 7, 3); cf. Kâty. V, 6, 33. Like all Guhoti-offerings, the darvi-homa is performed by the Adhvaryu while seated on the north side of the fire. According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 7, 3, it is to be offered in the Gârhapatya, but according to Kâty. V, 6, 38 (comm.) in the Âhavanîya. If the concluding ceremonies of the Sântapanîyâ ishî (from the offering of the Barhis) have not already been performed on the previous night, they have to be performed after the conclusion of the darvi-homa. If, however, only the offering of the Barhis was then omitted, the darvi-homa, if performed before the Agnihotra, is followed immediately by that oblation.

O thou (Indra), of a hundredfold powers, let us two barter food and drink, like wares!' In like manner as an invitational prayer (is used at offerings) so does he by this (verse) invite him (Indra) to that share.

18. Let him then tell (the Sacrificer) to make a bull roar. 'If it roars,' say some, 'then that (sound) is the Vashaṭ; let him offer after that Vashaṭ.' And in this way indeed he calls Indra in his own form to the slaying of *Vṛitra*¹; for the bull is indeed Indra's form: hence he thereby calls Indra in his own form to the slaying of Vṛitra. If it roars, then one may know that Indra has come to his sacrifice, that his sacrifice is with Indra. And should it not roar, let the priest, seated on the south side (viz. the Brahman), say, 'Sacrifice!'—this, indeed, is Indra's voice.

19. He offers with the text (Vâg. S. III, 50), 'Give unto me, (and) I give unto thee. Bestow (gifts) on me, (and) I bestow on thee²! And mayest thou give me guerdon, (and) I will give thee guerdon! Svâhâ!'

20. He then offers a cake on seven potsherds to the sportive (Kṛtdinaḥ) Maruts. For when Indra went forward in order to slay Vṛitra, the sportive Maruts were sporting around him singing his praises; and even so do they sport around this (Sacrificer), singing his praises, now that he is about to slay his wicked, spiteful enemy: this is why (he sacrifices) to the sportive Maruts¹. Thereupon (follows the performance) of the Great Oblation (Mahâ-havis): this (performance) is in accordance with that of the great (seasonable) oblation².

¹ On the symbolic connection of the seasonal offerings, especially the Sâkamedhâḥ, with the slaying of Vṛitra, the evil spirit of drought, see II, 6, 4, 1.

² According to Mahîdhara, this first line is spoken by Indra to his worshipper; the second line containing the latter's reply.

FOURTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Verily, by means of the Great Oblation the gods slew *Vṛitra*³; by means of it they gained that supreme authority which they now wield; and so does he (the Sacrificer) thereby now slay his wicked, spiteful enemy, and gain the victory: this is why he performs this sacrifice.

2. The mode of its performance (is as follows): They raise an *uttara-vedi*⁴; they use clotted butter⁵; and they churn the fire. There are nine

¹ Comp. Taitt. Br. I, 6, 7, 4: When Indra had slain Vṛitra (with the thunderbolt) he went to the farthest distances, thinking that he had missed (his aim). He said, 'Who will know this' [viz. whether Vṛitra is really dead or not, comm.].? The Maruts said, 'We will choose a boon, then we will know (find it out): let the first oblation be prepared for us! They sported (danced about) on him (Vṛitra, and thereby found out that he was dead).

² That is to say, the Mahâ-havis, or Great Oblation, though apparently only an integral part of the Sâkamedhâh, is in reality its chief ceremony, and may therefore be considered as being itself on a par with the other seasonal offerings; hence it requires the five oblations common to all the Kâturmâsyas; see II, 5, 1, 8-11. The Black Yagur it seems does not use the term Mahâ-havis, but assigns more importance to the Mahâ-pitriyagña (see II, 6, 1, 1 seq.). See Âpastamba's Paribhâṣhâs, 80, 81 (M. Müller, Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Ges. IX), according to which the sacrifice to the Manes belongs to the Mahâyagñas.

³ See p. 416, note 1.

⁴ See p. 392, note 1. The southern altar is not required at the present ceremony.

⁵ See p. 404, note 1.

fore-offerings and nine after-offerings¹, and three Samishṭayagus. In the first place there are those five oblations².

3. Now as to why there is a cake on eight potsherds for Agni. With Agni, (shaped into) a sharp point (tegas)³, indeed, they (the gods) slew him (Vritra); and Agni, that sharp point, swerved not: hence there is (a cake) for Agni.

4. Then as to why there is a rice-pap for Soma. With the aid of Soma, the king, indeed they slew him, they who have Soma for their king: hence there is a pap for Soma.

5. Then as to why there is a cake on twelve, or eight⁴, potsherds for Savitri. Savitri, indeed, is the impeller (prasavitri) of the gods; and impelled by Savitri they slew him: hence there is (a cake) for Savitri.

6. Then as to why there is a rice-pap for Sarasvatī. Sarasvatī in truth is Speech; and Speech indeed it was that cheered them up, saying, 'Strike! slay⁵!' Hence there is a pap for Sarasvatī.

7. Then as to why there is a rice-pap for Pūshan. Pūshan doubtless is this earth⁶, and this

¹ See II, 5, 2, 30 and 41.

² See II, 5, 1, 11, with note 9.

³ See II, 5, 3, 2. This cake, again, is to be prepared (or offered) simultaneously with the rising of the sun; see p. 409 note.

⁴ According to Taitt. S. I, 8, 4 it is to be one on twelve potsherds.

⁵ The Kāṇva text has, 'Attack (abhipadyasva)! strike! slay!'

⁶ This identification of Pūshan with the earth is very strange, the more so as, at II, 5, 1, 11, special stress is laid on the male nature of Pūshan. Perhaps it is in his character of bountiful bestower of food and cattle, or as the tutelary god of travellers, that he is so identified.

earth, indeed, gave him (Vṛitra) up to slaughter; and they slew him, thus given up by her: hence there is a rice-pap for Pûshan.

8. Then follows a cake on twelve potsherds for Indra and Agni; for by means of that they slew him, since Agni means fiery glow (tegas), and Indra means manly power, and by means of these two powers they did indeed slay him. Moreover, Agni is the priesthood, and Indra is the nobility; having allied these two, having closely united the priesthood with the nobility, they (the gods) slew him by means of these two powers: hence there is a cake on twelve potsherds for Indra and Agni.

9. Then follows a rice-pap for Mahendra. For before the slaying of Vṛitra he was indeed Indra; but after slaying Vṛitra he became Mahendra (the great Indra), even as (a king becomes) a mahârâga, after obtaining the victory: hence there is a rice-pap for Mahendra. And thereby indeed he renders him great (strong) for the slaying of Vṛitra: for this reason also there is a rice-pap for Mahendra.

10. Then follows a cake on one potsherd for Visvakarman. To the gods, indeed, on performing the Sâkamedha-sacrifice and obtaining the victory (over Vṛitra), that sacred work (karman) was made complete (visva), and all was conquered; and so is that sacred work made complete, and all is conquered, by him who has performed the Sâkamedha-sacrifice and obtained the victory: hence there is a cake on one potsherd for Visvakarman.

11. And, verily, by performing this sacrifice the gods became what race, what prosperity of the gods there now is; and that same race he propagates, that same prosperity he attains, whosoever, knowing this, performs this sacrifice. Let him therefore perform this sacrifice.

SIXTH ADHYÂYA. FIRST BRÂHMANA.

1. Verily, by means of the Great Oblation the gods slew Vṛitra, and gained that supreme authority which they now wield. And by means of the sacrifice to the fathers they then recalled to life those of them that had been slain in this battle; and they, indeed, were the fathers: hence the name *Pitṛiyagñā*¹ (sacrifice to the Manes).

2. Now the spring, the summer, and the rainy season,—they are those who vanquished (Vṛitra); and the autumn, the winter, and the dewy season,—they are those whom they (the gods) recalled to life².

3. Now when he performs that sacrifice, he does so, hoping that thus they (the Asuras) will not slay any of his, or because the gods did so (perform it). Moreover he thereby offers to those (fathers) the share which the gods assigned to them; and thus he gratifies those whom the gods recalled to life, and leads his own fathers up to a better world; and whatever injury or loss he suffers through his own unrighteous conduct (or wrong sacrificial performance)³ that is thereby made good to him: that is why he performs this sacrifice (to the fathers).

¹ This is generally called the Mahâpitṛiyagñā, as distinguished from the ordinary monthly Pitṛiyagñā of the new-moon sacrifice; for which see II, 4, 2, 1 seq.

² See II, 1, 3, 1 seq.

³ Instead of 'ākaraṇena,' the Kāṇva MS. has 'karāṇēna (l).' Cf. Sâyana's interpretation 'anukaraṇena anugamanena ka.'

4. He offers a cake on six potsherds to the Pitaraḥ Somavantaḥ, or to Soma Pitṛimat¹. Six doubtless are the seasons, and the fathers are the seasons: hence it is one of six potsherds.

5. Thereupon they parch barley-grain on the Anvâhâryapaṭana (or Dakshinâgni) for the Pitaro Barhishadaḥ². They then grind one half of it; and (the other) half remains thus unground,—this is the parched grain for the Barhis-seated fathers.

6. Then a porridge is (prepared) for the Pitaro 'gnishvâtâtâḥ³ (by the ground half of the parched grain) being mixed with the milk of a cow suckling an adopted calf, by stirring it once with a single splinter. It is indeed once for all that the fathers have departed, and hence it is stirred but once. These are the oblations.

7. Now those (fathers) who have sacrificed with Soma are the Pitaraḥ Somavantaḥ; and those who gain the world (of the gods) by means of cooked (sacrificial food) offered by them are the Pitaro Barhishadaḥ; and they who (have offered) neither the one nor the other, and whom Agni consumes by burning, they are the Pitaro 'gnishvâtâtâḥ. These, then, are the fathers⁴.

8. He takes out [the rice for] that cake of six potsherds, while seated behind the Gârhapatya, and looking southwards, with the sacrificial cord over his right shoulder. From thence he rises and

¹ That is, either to 'the fathers, accompanied by Soma (or possessed of Soma),' or to 'Soma, accompanied by the fathers.' The Black Yagus assigns the oblation to Soma Pitṛimat.

² That is, 'the fathers seated on the barhis.'

³ That is, 'the fathers consumed by the fire.'

⁴ 'These, then, are the three kinds of fathers,' Kâṇva recension.

threshes (the rice), while standing north of the Dakshina-fire, with his face towards the south. He cleans it but once¹; since it is once for all that the fathers have departed.

9. He places the two mill-stones on (the black antelope skin, so as to be inclined) towards the south²; and puts the six potsherds on the south part of the Gârhapatya hearth. The reason why they keep the southern direction is because that is the region of the fathers: this is why they keep the southern direction.

10. Thereupon he raises a square altar south of the Dakshinâgni³. He makes the corners point towards the intermediate quarters. There are doubtless four intermediate quarters, and the fathers are the intermediate quarters: this is why he makes the corners point towards the intermediate quarters.

11. In the centre of this (altar) he lays down the fire. From the east, indeed, the gods came westwards to the men: hence one offers to them while standing with his face towards the east. On all sides are the fathers, for the fathers are the intermediate regions, and the intermediate regions are indeed on all sides : this is why he lays down the fire in the centre.

¹ Not thrice, as at an ordinary ish/i; see I, 1, 4, 23.

² Not towards the east, as at the Darsapûrnamâsa; cf. p. 38, note 3. At offerings to the Manes the south, as a rule, takes the place of the east, the west that of the south, &c.

³ At the conclusion of the Âptya ceremony (cf. I, 2, 2, 18-3, 5) he erects south of the (ordinary) Dakshina-fire a (quadrangular) shed (see further on, paragraph 20) with a door on the north side. Inside it he prepares a quadrangular altar (of the same size as at the Darsapûrnamâsa; cf. I, 2, 5, 14) with the corners towards the intermediate quarters, in the centre of which he makes the (new) Dakshinâgni hearth. [According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 8, 5-6 no digging takes place in preparing the altar (which is to be square) at the Pitriyagña.] When the Dakshina-fire is transferred to the new fire-place, the Prâñitâ-water (see p. 9, note) is carried after it, followed by the Brahman and Sacrificer, and placed east (not north) of the hearth. The laying down of the fire is preceded by the usual fivefold lustration of the hearth (see p. 2).

12. From thence he throws the grass-bush (stambayagus) eastwards¹. Having thrown away the grass-bush, he first encloses (the altar) thus (viz. on the west side), then thus (viz. on the north side), then thus (on the east side). Having enclosed it with the first line of enclosure, he (the Adhvaryu) draws (three) lines (across the altar)² and [the Âgnîdhra] removes (from them the dust) which has to be removed. In the same way he encloses it with the second line of enclosure; and having enclosed it with the second line of enclosure, and smoothed it down, he says, 'Place the sprinkling water on (the altar)!' They accordingly place the sprinkling water on (the altar); and the firewood and barhis they lay down beside it³. He (the Âgnîdhra) wipes the spoons. He then walks up (to the altar) with the butter (and puts it down thereon¹, north of the sprinkling water). He (the Adhvaryu) takes butter, while 'sacrificially-invested²'

¹ Instead of northwards, as is done at the normal ishî; see I, 2, 4, 12 seq.

² After tracing the first line of enclosure, the Adhvaryu draws three lines across the altar, either from west to east or from south to north; and says to the Âgnîdhra, 'Take thrice!' The latter then takes the dust from the lines and throws it on the utkara (the heap of rubbish, formed north of the altar in preparing the latter), and thereupon again obliterates them. According to Kâty. II, 6, 29, the same ceremony may be performed at the Darsapûrnamâsa; but there no mention is made of it by our author (see I, 2, 5, 12).

³ Viz. the Âgnîdhra lays them down between the altar and the prañîtâh (see p. 422, note 3); the firewood behind (west of) the sacrificial grass (barhis), and both with the tops towards the south. The wooden sword also has been previously put down by the Adhvaryu close behind the prañîtâh.

13. Here now they say, 'Let him take butter in the upabhṛit (by) twice (ladling with the dipping spoon); since there are two after-offerings³ at this (sacrifice).' Let him, nevertheless, ladle eight times into the upabhṛit: let him do so, lest he should depart from the manner of the sacrifice. After ladling out butter, and shifting his cord back to the right shoulder,—

14. The Adhvaryu takes the lustral water, and sprinkles first the firewood, and then the altar⁴. Thereupon they hand the sacrificial grass⁵ to him, and he puts it down (on the altar) with the knot to the east. Having thereupon sprinkled it and

¹ The lady of the house not being present at the sacrifice to the Manes, neither the ceremony of girding (I, 3, 1, 12 seq.), nor that of her looking at the butter—while it is taken from the Gârhapatya fire, along the east side of the Âhavanīya to the altar—takes place on this occasion. According to the commentators on Kâty. V, 8, 25 (Paddh. p. 519), however, the Adhvaryu has to look down on the butter, with the same text (Vâg. S. I, 30) which was used by the sacrificer's wife. For some details to be supplied here, see I, 3, 1, 22–28.

² He has hitherto worn his sacrificial cord on the right shoulder and under the left arm ('eastward-invested'), and now shifts it so as to be on the left shoulder and under the right arm ('sacrificially-invested'). As to the taking or ladling of butter into the offering-spoons, see I, 3, 2, 1 seq.

³ See I, 3, 2, 9.

⁴ See I, 3, 3, 1 seq.

⁵ The barhis, on this occasion, must have been cut close to the root (upamûlam, II, 4, 2, 17; ûpamûle ditam, Kânva rec.). According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 8, 6–7, on the other hand, it has apparently to be torn up with the roots (yat parushi dinam tad devânâm, yad antarâ tan manushyânâm, yat samûlam tat pitṛînam).

poured out (the lustral water on the lower ends of the grass-stalks), and untied the knot, he (at once) seizes the knot, not the prastara¹;—it is once for all that the fathers have departed: hence he does not take the prastara.

15. After undoing the band, he moves thrice² round from right to left, spreading the sacrificial grass all over (the altar); while spreading it all over from right to left in three layers, he reserves as much as may serve for the prastara-bunch. He then moves again thrice round (the altar) from left to right. The reason why he again moves thrice round from left to right, is that, while the first time he went away from here after those three ancestors of his, he now comes back again from them to this, his own world: that is why he again moves thrice round from left to right.

16. He lays the enclosing-sticks along (the fire, with their tops) towards the south³; and the prastara also he spreads (with the grass-tops) towards the south; nor does he lay down the two vidhr̥tis between (the barhis and the prastara). Once for all the fathers have departed from hence: therefore he lays no vidhr̥tis between.

¹ As he did on the former occasion, I, 3, 3, 5.

² According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 8, 7, because the fathers abide in the third world from here (trīṭīye vâ ito loke pitarāḥ).

³ Viz. he is to lay down the enclosing-sticks along the north, west, and east sides, the last two with their tops towards the south. The third text (cf. I, 3, 4, 4) has, of course, to be changed to 'May Mitra-Varuṇa lay thee around in the east,' &c.; as has also the one he mutters after putting the two sticks on the fire, to 'May the sun guard thee from the south against any imprecation!' (I, 3, 4, 8.) According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 8, 8—9, on the other hand, he is to lay down only two enclosing-sticks (viz. the middle or western, and the northern one, cf. Sâyana on Taitt. S. II, p. 72).

17. Thereon he lays the guhû, and east of it (on the barhis) the upabhrî. Having then put down the dhruvâ, the cake, the parched grain, and the porridge (each east of the preceding one), he touches the oblations.

18. All of them having now become 'sacrificially-invested,' the Sacrificer and Brahman (being) thus (invested) walk round (from the east, along the south) to the west side; and the Âgnîdhra (from the west) to the east side (of the fire)¹.

19. They perform this (sacrifice) in a low voice. Secret, indeed, are the fathers, and secret also is (what is spoken) in a low voice: hence they perform (the offering) in a low voice.

20. They perform it in an enclosed place. Secret, indeed, are the fathers, and secret also is that which is enclosed: hence they perform in an enclosed place.

21. While putting firewood (on the fire), he then says (to the Hotri), 'Recite to the fire, as it is being kindled!' Only (this) one kindling-verse the Hotri recites², (and that) thrice;—the fathers have departed once for all: hence the Hotri recites thrice only one kindling-verse.

22. He recites, 'Loving we deposit thee (O Agni), loving we enkindle thee: O loving one, bring hither the loving fathers to eat their oblation! Thereupon he says, 'Bring Agni hither¹! bring Soma hither! bring hither the fathers, accompanied by Soma! bring hither the fathers, seated on the barhis! bring hither the fathers, consumed by Agni! bring hither the butter-drinking gods! bring hither Agni for the Hotriship! bring hither (thine) own greatness²!' Having thus called on (Agni) to bring hither (the fathers and gods), he sits down.

¹ Here he remains standing, while the Sacrificer and Brahman sit down facing the east.

² Instead of the ordinary eleven verses, the first and last of which are recited thrice; see I, 3, 5, 6. According to Taitt. Br. I, 6, 9, 1, the Adhvaryu summons the Hotri with 'Recite to the fire, as it is being kindled for the gods (and) fathers!' The bunch of firewood, with the exception of one stick, which is reserved for the after-offerings, is divided into three parts, one of which is thrown on the fire at the same time when the syllable 'om' is pronounced by the Hotri at the end of the kindling-verse.

23. Having then called³ for the (Âgnîdhra's) 'Sraushat,' he does not elect the Hotri; for this being a sacrifice to the Manes, he does not elect the Hotri⁴, lest he should consign the Hotri to the Manes. He says, 'Hotri, seat thyself!' and takes his seat. The Hotri, having sat down on the Hotri's seat, urges (the Adhvaryu) to proceed; and thus urged, the Adhvaryu takes the two spoons and steps across to the west (of the fire); and having stepped across and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the kindling-sticks!' He performs four fore-offerings⁵, ¹ The Kâṇva MS. reads, 'Bring Agni hither, O Agni!' Before this, Âsval. II, 19, 7 inserts, 'Bring hither the gods (and) fathers for the sacrificer!' See I, 4, 2, 16.

² According to the Kâṇva text he adds here the same formula as at ordinary ishâs (I, 4, 2, 17), 'Bring (them) hither, O Gâtavedas, and offer up a good offering!' For the formulas 'Bring hither Agni for the Hotriship! bring hither thine own greatness!' Âsval. II, 19, 8 apparently substitutes 'Bring hither Agni Kavyavâhana!' cf. further on, par. 30.

³ 'The Adhvaryu, having offered the two libations of butter, and called for the Sraushat,' Kâṇva recension.

⁴ On the pravara, or election of the (divine and human) Hotri, see I, 4, 2, 1 seq., 5, 1, 1 seq. The call 'Hotri, seat thyself!' here takes the place of the formulas given I, 5, 1, 5 seq.

⁵ See I, 5, 3, 1 seq.

omitting the one to the Barhis; for the barhis means offspring, and he therefore performs the four fore-offerings without the one to the barhis, lest he should consign his offspring to the fathers. Thereupon they proceed with the two butter-portions; and having offered the two butter-portions,—

24. They all shift their sacrificial cord over to the right shoulder, being now about to proceed with those (chief) oblations. The Sacrificer and Brahman, (being) thus (invested), step across (from the west) to the east side, and the Āgnīdhra (from the east) to the west side (of the fire). And furthermore, the (Adhvaryu's) call for the 'Sraushat' is 'Ōm svadhâ!' and the (Āgnīdhra's) response is 'Astu svadhâ!' and the Vashat-call is 'Svadhâ nama!'.

25. As to this, Âsuri said, 'Let them call for the Sraushat (by "Ō Srāvaya"), and let them respond with the "(Astu) Sraushat," and let them pronounce the "Vashat," lest we should depart from the manner of the sacrifice.'

26. [The Adhvaryu] then says, 'Pronounce the invitatory prayer to the fathers, accompanied by Soma!' or '—to Soma, accompanied by the fathers!'—Two invitatory prayers he (the Hotri) pronounces (at the offerings), because it is with one that one moves the gods, and with two the fathers, since the fathers have departed once (for all)²: hence he pronounces two invitatory prayers.

¹ At the sacrifice to the Manes, the Āgnīdhra, when uttering his response, stands south of the Adhvaryu. See p. 132, note. The first syllable of 'svadhâ' is protracted. According to the comm. on Kâty. V, 9, 12, the offering formulas also begin with 'Yē svadhâmahe,' instead of 'Yē yagâmahe' (see I, 5, 2, 16 and note).

² I do not quite see the pertinency of the reason here alleged, unless it be that the author means to say that once (by the first act) the fathers have departed, and by a second act they return hither. According to Âsval. II, 19, 22, the two invitory prayers to the Pitarah Somavanta are Rig-v. X, 15, 1; IX, 96, 11; to Soma Pitrimat, Rig-v. I, 91, 1; 20; to the Pitaro Barhishada, Rig-v. X, 15, 4; 3; to the Pitaro 'gnishvâtâtâh, Rig-v. X, 15, 11; 13; [to Yama X, 14, 4; 5.]—The offering-prayers being respectively, Rig-v. X, 15, 5; VIII, 48, 13; X, 15, 2; X, 15, 14; [X, 14, 1.]

27. [The Adhvaryu] makes an 'under-layer' of butter (in the guhû or offering-spoon). He then cuts a piece from the cake, and together therewith some of the parched grain and the porridge¹. This he puts down at the same time (in the guhû); makes two sprinklings of butter thereon; and re-anoints (replenishes with butter, the parts of the sacrificial dishes from which he has made) the cuttings. He does not walk over (to the south side of the fire); but having risen and stepped up (to the fire) on the same side (where he was seated), and called (on the Âgnîdhra) for the 'Sraushat', he says (to the Hotrî), 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the fathers, accompanied by Soma!' and pours the oblation (into the fire) as soon as the *Vasha*² has been uttered.

Somewhat different the Black Yagus; viz. Soma Pitrimat, anuvâkyâs Rig-v. I, 91, 1; IX, 96, 11; yâgyâ VIII, 48, 13; Pitaro Barhishada, anuvâkyâs X, 15, 4; 3; yâgyâ X, 15, 5; Pitaro 'gnishvâtâtâh, anuvâkyâs X, 15, 11; 14 (ye 'gnishvâtâtâh, &c. I); yâgyâ 'vânyâyai dugdhe, &c. [Then either upahoma with the formulas X, 15, 1; 2; IV, 2, 16; or] an oblation to Agni Kavyavâhana (anuvâkyâs, 1. 'yad agne kavyavâhana,' 2. X, 15, 12; yâgyâ X, 14, 3) [and another to Yama Ângirasvat Pitrimat (anuv. X, 14, 4; 5; yâgyâ X, 14, 6).] Taitt. S. I, 8, 5; II, 6, 12; Taitt. Br. I, 6, 9.

¹ From the centre of each sacrificial dish he makes one 'cutting' with the srîtavâdâna, shaped like a cow's ear. Kâty. V, 9, 2, and Schol.

² Or rather the 'Svadhâ nama,' cf. par. 24. The Adhvaryu makes the oblation with his left hand, while looking towards the south. Paddh. on Kâty. V, 9.

28. Thereupon he says, 'Pronounce the invitational prayer to the fathers, seated on the barhis!' He then makes an under-layer of butter, takes a 'cutting' from (the north part of) the parched grain, and together therewith some of the porridge and the cake; puts down all this at the same time (in the guhû); makes two sprinklings of butter thereon, and re-anoints (the places of) the cuttings. He does not walk across; but having stepped up (to the fire) on the same side and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the fathers, seated on the barhis!' and pours out the oblation as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

29. Thereupon he says, 'Pronounce the invitational prayer to the fathers, consumed by the fire!' He then makes an under-layer of butter, takes a cutting from (the south part of) the porridge, and therewith some of the cake and the parched grains; puts down all this at the same time (in the guhû); makes two sprinklings of butter thereon, and re-anoints (the places of) the cuttings. He does not walk across; but having stepped up (to the fire) on the same side, and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the fathers, consumed by the fire!' and pours out the oblation as soon as the Vasha has been uttered.

30. Thereupon he says, 'Pronounce the invitational prayer to Agni Kavyavâhana!' that being for (Agni as) the Svishtakṛit ('maker of good offering'). For to the gods indeed he is havyavâhana ('bearer of oblations'), and to the fathers he is kavyavâhana ('the bearer of what is meet for the wise'): hence he says, 'Pronounce the invitational prayer to Agni Kavyavâhana!'

31. He makes an under-layer of butter (in the offering-spoon); then cuts a piece from (the front part of) the cake, and therewith some of the parched grain and the porridge; puts down all this at the same time; and makes two sprinklings of butter thereon. The (places from which he has made the) cuttings he does not replenish with butter, nor does he walk across; but having stepped up (to the fire) on the same side (where he was seated), and called for the 'Sraushat,' he says, 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to Agni Kavyavâhana!' and pours out the oblation, as soon as the Vashat has been uttered.

32. Now the reason why he does not walk across (to the ordinary place of offering), but pours out the oblation after stepping up (to the fire) on the same side, is that the fathers have departed once for all; and the reason also, why he cuts but once from each of the sacrificial dishes, is that the fathers have departed once for all. And the reason why in making the cuttings, he keeps them together, is that the fathers are the seasons;—he thus keeps the seasons together, joins them to one another: that is why in making the cuttings, he keeps them together.

33. Here now some hand over that entire (remaining) porridge to the Hotri; and the Hotri, having invoked it¹, smells it and hands it to the Brahman. The Brahman smells it and hands it to the Âgnîdhra; and the Âgnîdhra also smells it. And so indeed they do this. But, as from any other oblation they cut off the Idâ and the fore-portion, so let them cut from this also; and having invoked it (the Idâ) they smell it, but do not eat it. 'But,' said Âsuri, 'we think that some should be eaten, of whatever is offered up in the fire.'

¹ According to the comm. on Kâty. V, 9, 13, 'manthah' is, in that case, substituted for 'idâ' in the invocation, see I, 8, 1, 19 seq. The Kânva MS. has as follows: Thereupon, by way of idâ, they place that same porridge into the hand of the Hotri. The Hotri, having invoked it, smells it. They hand it to the Âgnîdhra. The Âgnîdhra smells it. They hand it to the Brahman. The Brahman smells it. As to this Âsuri said, 'As from any other oblation they cut off the "idâ" and the fore-portion, so let them cut off and smell,

34. Now he who is about to present (the obsequial cakes to the fathers),—either the Adhvaryu or the Sacrificer,—takes the vessel of water and walks thrice round (the altar) from right to left sprinkling all about (the altar). He then, with the text, 'N. N., wash thyself¹!' pours out water (in the north-west corner of the altar) for the Sacrificer's father² to wash himself; and (in the south-west corner), with 'N. N., wash thyself!' for the grandfather; and (in the south-east corner), with 'N. N., wash thyself!' for the great-grandfather.

but not eat: some indeed must be eaten of that of which offering is made in the fire.'

¹ See II, 4, 2, 16 seq. According to the comm. on Kâty. V, 9, 17, some sprinkle three times round the altar for each of the three ancestors. But according to the Paddhati, he sprinkles once round the altar, beginning from the north-west corner; then he sits down and pours out water in that corner for the father. Thereupon, after walking round in the opposite direction (from left to right) to the south-west corner, he again sprinkles all round, and in the same way pours out water in that corner for the grandfather; and after retracing his steps as far as the south-east corner, he performs the same circumambulation, and pours out water in that corner for the great-grandfather; whereupon he again retraces his steps up to the west of the altar.

² In the case of a sacrificer whose father is still alive, these ceremonies are performed in honour of the father's father, grandfather, and great-grandfather.

As one would pour out water for (a guest) who is to take food with him, so in this case.

35. Thereupon he takes one 'cutting' from the cake and puts it in his left hand; from the parched grain also he takes one cutting and puts it in his left hand; and from the porridge also he takes one cutting and puts it in his left hand.

36. And in the corner (of the altar) opposite this intermediate quarter (viz. the north-west), he then presents (an obsequial cake¹) to the Sacrificer's father, with the formula, 'N. N., this for thee!' And in the corner opposite this intermediate quarter (the south-west), he presents one to the Sacrificer's grandfather, with 'N. N., this for thee!' And in the corner opposite this intermediate quarter (the south-east), he presents one to the Sacrificer's great-grandfather, with 'N. N., this for thee!' And in the corner opposite this intermediate quarter (the north-east), he cleanses (his hands), with the text (Vâg. S. II, 31), 'Here, O Fathers, regale yourselves! Like bulls come hither, each to his own share!' whereby he means to say, 'Eat ye each his share!' And the reason why he thus presents (food) to the Fathers is that in this way he does not exclude his own fathers from this sacrifice.

37. Thereupon they all, being sacrificially invested, walk out (of the shed) on the north side, (pass along the east side of, and) stand by the (north) side of, the Âhavantya fire. For he who has established his fires, and performs the New and Full-moon sacrifices, approaches the gods; but they have just been performing the sacrifice to the Manes, and therefore they now propitiate the gods.

¹ He mixes the three pieces (about as much as a thumb's joint each) cut from the sacrificial dishes, and forms them into three pindas or round cakes.

38. They stand by the Āhavantya fire (worshipping) with two (verses) addressed to Indra [viz. Rig-veda I, 82, 2-3; Vâg. S. III, 51-52], since the Āhavantya is Indra. 'The friends have eaten, and regaled themselves, and have shaken off (the enemies)¹; the self-shining bards have extolled (thee) with their newest hymn: yoke, then, thy pair of bay steeds, O Indra!—To thee, the splendid, we will sing praises, O bountiful one! Thus praised, do thou now issue forth, with well-filled car, agreeably to our desire! yoke, then, thy pair of bay steeds, O Indra!'

39. Thereupon they return to the Gârhapatya and stand by it worshipping with the verses (Rig-veda X, 57, 3-5; Vâg. S. III, 53-55), 'We invoke the Mind with man-lauding strain², and with the hymns of the fathers.—May the Mind come back to us for (us to obtain) wisdom, vigour, and life, and that we may long see the sun!—May the divine race restore to us the Mind, O Fathers, that we may abide with the living kind!' They have indeed been performing the sacrifice to the Manes; but now they return to the (land of the) living: hence he says, 'That we may abide with the living kind!'

40. Thereupon he who has presented (the obsequial cakes) again shifts his sacrificial cord to the right shoulder and betakes himself (to the fire in the shed), and mutters (Vâg. S. II, 31), 'The

¹ '—the friends have shaken off (their intoxication),' Ludwig; '—they showered down upon us delightful gifts,' Grassmann; 'they shook their dear (bodies),' Sâyana; '—have trembled through their precious (bodies),' Wilson.

² The Rig-veda has 'somena' instead of 'stomena.'

Fathers have regaled themselves: like bulls they came each to his share:’ whereby he means to say, ‘they have eaten each his own share.’

41. He now takes the vessel of water and again, while sprinkling, walks thrice round (the altar) from left to right (sunwise). With ‘N. N., wash thyself!’ he pours out water (in the respective corner) for the Sacrificer’s father to wash himself; with ‘N. N., wash thyself!’ for the grandfather; with ‘N. N., wash thyself!’ for the great-grandfather. As one would pour out water for (a guest) who has taken food with him, so in this case. And as to his again walking thrice round from left to right, while sprinkling,—they think, ‘This holy work of ours shall be accomplished sunwise¹,’ and hence he walks thrice round from left to right, while sprinkling.

42. He then pulls down the tuck (of the nether garment)² and makes obeisance (to the Fathers). The tuck, doubtless, is sacred to the Fathers: hence he makes obeisance to them after pulling down the tuck; and obeisance means worship: hence he thereby recognises them as entitled to worship. Six times he makes obeisance to them, since there are six seasons, and the Fathers are the seasons: hence he thereby establishes his sacrifice in the seasons,—that is why he makes obeisance six times³. ‘Give houses unto us, O Fathers!' he (further) says, because the Fathers are the guardians of houses;—and this is the prayer for blessing at this sacred performance.

¹ The Kāṇva text has, ‘The reason why he moves thrice round, sprinkling from left to right, is that, after going after those three ancestors of his, he thereby leaves them, and returns to this, his own, world.’ See II, 6, 1, 15.

² On the nīvi, or unwoven end of the waist-cloth (Hindi dhoti, Mahr. dhotar), which had to be passed under and tucked up behind, at the beginning of the present ceremony, see p. 368, note 2. Cf. Āpast. Dharmas. I, 2, 6, 19.

³ For the six formulas used for this purpose; see p. 368, note 2.

43. Being now about to proceed with the after-offerings, they all invest themselves sacrificially (by shifting the cord over to the left shoulder); and thus (invested) the Sacrificer and Brahman walk round to the west, and the Âgnîdhra to the east, side; and the Hotri sits down on the Hotri's seat.

44. He (the Adhvaryu) then says, 'Brahman, I shall step forward.' Thereupon he puts the stick (reserved at the time of kindling) on (the fire), and says, 'Âgnîdh, trim the fire!' He then takes the two spoons and crosses over to the west side. After crossing over and calling for the 'Sraushat,' he says (to the Hotri), 'Pronounce the offering-prayer to the gods!' He performs two after-offerings, omitting the one to the Barhis; for the Barhis means offspring: hence he performs two after-offerings, omitting the one to the Barhis, lest he should consign his offspring to the Fathers.

45. He then separates the two spoons¹, after laying them down (in their respective places on the altar); and having separated them, and anointed the enclosing-sticks, he takes one enclosing-stick, calls for the 'Sraushat,' and says, 'The divine Hotris are summoned for the proclamation of success, the human is called upon for the song of praise!' The Hotri intones the 'song of praise (sûktavâka).' The Adhvaryu, on the other hand, does not seize the prastara-bunch, but watches while the Hotri recites the song of praise.

¹ See I, 8, 3, 1 seq.

46. Thereupon the Āgnīdhra says, 'Throw it after!¹' He (the Adhvaryu) throws nothing after, but silently touches himself.

47. He (the Āgnīdhra) then says, 'Discourse together!' [The Adhvaryu asks], 'Has he gone (to the gods), Agnīdh?'—'He has gone!'—'Bid (the gods) hear!'—'May one (or, they) hear!'—'Good-speed to the divine Hotṛis! Success to the human!—Pronounce the All-hail and blessing!' Thus saying, he merely touches the enclosing-sticks, but does not (now) throw them (into the fire). The Barhis and enclosing-sticks he throws in afterwards².

48. And here some throw also the remaining sacrificial food into the fire; but let him not do so; for that (remaining havis) is the residue of an offering; and lest he should offer the residue of an offering, let them (the priests) rather throw it into the water or eat it.

SECOND BRĀHMAṆA.

1. Verily, by means of the Great Oblation the gods slew Vṛitra; by it they gained that supreme authority which they now wield. Now whichever of them were hit by (the Asuras') arrows in that battle, those same darts they extracted, those they pulled out, by performing the Tryambaka-offerings.

2. And, accordingly, when he performs those offerings, he either does so hoping that thus no arrow

¹ See I, 8, 3, 19 seq.

² Viz. after the strewing of the Veda,—see I, 9, 2, 24, the formulas being pronounced by the Hotṛi on this occasion,—at the time when the Samish/āyagus, which is here omitted, would have to be performed in an ordinary ishā.

(misfortune) will hit any of his, or because the gods did so. And thereby he delivers from Rudra's power both the descendants that are born unto him and those that are unborn; and his offspring is brought forth without disease and blemish. This is why he performs these offerings.

3. They are (offered) to Rudra: Rudra's, indeed, is the dart; and hence (these offerings) belong to Rudra. They consist of (cakes) on one potsherd: 'To one deity they shall belong!' so (he thinks, and) therefore they consist of (cakes) on one potsherd.

4. There is one for each individual,—as many as he has descendants,—exceeded by one. (There being) one for each individual, he thereby delivers from Rudra's power the descendants that are born unto him; and there being an additional one, he thereby delivers from Rudra's power the descendants that are not yet born to him: this is why there are (as many cakes as there are descendants) exceeded by one.

5. He takes out (the rice for) those (cakes), while seated behind the Gârhapatya, sacrificially invested and facing the north. From thence he rises and threshes (the rice), while standing with his face towards the north. He places the two mill-stones on (the black antelope skin, so as to incline) towards the north; and puts the potsherds on the north side of the Gârhapatya hearth. As to why they keep the northern quarter,—that indeed is the quarter of that god (Rudra), and hence they keep the northern quarter.

6. They (the cakes) may be anointed (with ghee),—for the havis is anointed¹;—but let them rather be unanointed ; for, indeed, Rudra would be hankering after the (sacrificer's) cattle, if he were to anoint (the cakes): let them therefore be unanointed.

¹ This refers to the so-called prâṇadâna, or 'bestowal of life

7. Having removed all (the cakes from the potsherds) into one dish, and taken a fire-brand from the Dakshina-fire, he walks aside towards the north—for that is the region of that god—and offers. He offers on a road,—for on roads that god roves ; he offers on a cross-road,—for the cross-road, indeed, is known to be his (Rudra's) favourite haunt¹. This is why he offers on a cross-road.

8. He offers with the central leaflet of a palâsa-leaf. The palâsa-leaf, truly, is the Brahman (priesthood)²: with the Brahman, therefore, he offers. He takes a cutting from (the northern part of) all the cakes ; from the additional one alone he takes no cutting.

(or soul),’ that is, the anointing of the sacrificial dishes with ghee, previously to their being placed on the altar. The anointing takes place with the text (Vâg. S. ed. p. 35), ‘That life (or soul, prâna) of thine which has entered into the cattle, and becomes diffused through the various forms of the gods,—endowed with (that) life (âtman-vân)—for thou art laden with ghee—go to Agni, O Soma ! and obtain bliss (svar) for the Sacrificer !’ Kâty. II, 8, 14. At the new and full-moon sacrifice, this ceremony is not even alluded to in our Brâhmaṇa, either in this or the Kâṇva recension. See I, 3, 4, 16. The Kâṇva text reads, ‘They may be anointed,’ so they say, &c.

¹ ‘He offers on a cross-road, for such is the halting-place (paḍ-bîsa) of the Agnis,’ Taitt. Br. I, 6, 10, 3.

² ‘The central leaflet of the palâsa-leaf is the Brahman,’ Kâṇva text. The leaf of the palâsa (Butea Frondosa) consists of three leaflets,—leathery, above shining and pretty smooth, and below slightly hoary ; the central (or terminal) one being obovate and considerably larger than the lateral ones (which, according to Roxburgh, Flora Ind., III, p. 244, are from 4 to 6 inches long, and from 3 to 4½ broad). ‘Palâsasâkhâyâm yâni trîṇi parṇâni tatra madhyamam parṇam prasastayâ srugrûpam,’ Sây. on Taitt. S. I, 8, 6.

9. He offers¹, with the text (Vâg. S. III, 57 a), 'This is thy share, O Rudra! graciously accept it together with thy sister Ambikâ! Svâhâ!' Ambikâ², indeed, is the name of his (Rudra's) sister; and this share belongs to him conjointly with her; and because that share belongs to him conjointly with a woman (strī), therefore (these oblations) are called Tryambakâḥ. Thereby, then, he delivers from Rudra's power the descendants that have been born unto him.

10. Now as to that additional (cake),—he buries it in a mole-hill³, with the text (Vâg. S. III, 57 b), 'This is thy share, O Rudra! the mole is thy animal (victim).' He thus assigns to him the mole as the only animal⁴, and he (Rudra) does not therefore injure any other animal. Then as to why he buries (the cake): concealed, indeed, are embryos, and concealed also is what is buried,—that is why he buries it. By this (offering) he delivers from the power of Rudra those descendants of his, that are not yet born.

¹ He consecrates, by the usual fivefold lustration, some spot on a cross-way, to the north of the sacrificial ground, and after laying down the fire-brand taken from the Dakshinâgni, he offers thereon, using the central leaflet of a palâra-leaf as the offering-spoon.

² In Taitt. Br. I, 6, 10, 4, this sister of Rudra is identified with the autumn, wherewith the god is wont to kill (viz. by means of catarrh, fever, &c., Sây.). See also Weber, Ind. Stud. I, 183; Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, vol. iv. p. 321.

³ 'Ākhût-kara;,' 'ākhukarisha,' Kāṇva text. Possibly a mouse-hole, or the earth thrown up by a mouse, is meant. See p. 278, note 3. Cf. Taitt. Br. I, 6, 10, 2: 'N. N. is thy victim,' thus saying, let him indicate the one he (the Sacrificer) hates; thereby he delivers over to him (Rudra) the one he hates. If he hate no one, let him say, 'the mole (mouse) is thy victim.'

⁴ 'Thus he makes over to him only the mole as victim, and puts it into his mouth,' Kāṇva text.

11. Thereupon they return (to the fire) and mutter (Vâg. S. III, 58, 59), 'We have satisfied the claims of Rudra, satisfied the divine Tryambaka, that he may make us richer, that he may make us more prosperous, that he may render us steady in our purpose. —Thou (O Rudra) art a remedy for the cow, a remedy for the horse, a remedy for man; a blessing for the ram and the ewe.' This is the prayer for blessing at this performance.

12. They then walk thrice round the altar not sun-wise, beating their left thighs (with the right hand), with the text (Vâg. S. III, 60 a), 'We worship Tryambaka, the fragrant increaser of prosperity. Even as a gourd (is severed) from its stem, so may I be severed from death, not from immortality!' This is the prayer for blessing at this performance: thereby they invoke a blessing (upon the Sacrificer), for verily blessed is he who shall be severed from death, not from immortality. That is why he says, 'May I be severed from death, not from immortality.'

13. Let the maidens then also walk round, thinking, 'May we enjoy prosperity!' That sister of Rudra, named Ambikâ, indeed is the dispenser of happiness: hence the maidens also should walk round, thinking, 'May we enjoy prosperity!'

14. The text (prescribed) for them is (Vâg. S. III, 60 b), 'We worship Tryambaka, the fragrant bestower of husbands. Even as a gourd (is severed) from its stem, so may I be severed from this (world), not from thence (yonder world)! By saying 'from this,' she means to say 'from my relatives;' and by saying 'not from thence,' she means to say 'not from husbands.' Husbands, doubtless, are the support of woman: hence she says 'not from thence.'

15. Then they (the Sacrificer and priests) again walk round thrice sunwise, beating their right thighs, with the same text. As to why they again walk round thrice sunwise,—they think, ‘Sunwise this sacred work of ours shall be accomplished,’ and therefore they again walk thrice round sunwise.

16. The Sacrificer now takes those (remains of the cakes) into his joined palms and throws them upwards higher than a cow can reach¹. Thereby they cut out his (Rudra’s) darts from their bodies. If they fail to catch them², they touch (those that have fallen to the ground). Thereby they make them medicine, and hence, if they fail to catch them, they touch them.

17. Having then packed them into two net-work baskets and tied them to the two ends of either a bamboo staff or the beam of a balance, he steps

¹ ‘Yathā gaur nodāpnuyāt.’ ‘Yāvad gaur nodāpnuyāt tāvat,’ Kāṇva text. Sāyana takes go to mean ‘earth,’ and interprets, ‘in such a way that the earth does not obtain it (i. e. that they do not fall to the ground).’ Kāty. prescribes, V, 10, 18, The Sacrificer, with his joined open hands, throws the Rudra-cakes upwards as high as not to be reachable by a cow (agoḥprāpanam); 19, He catches them; 20, If they cannot be (caught), then touching (of those that have fallen on the ground).

² I adopt (not without reluctance) Sāyana’s interpretation of vilipsantaḥ (= labdhum asaktāḥ), which seems to be that of Kātyāyana also. The St. Petersburg Dict. takes it in the sense of ‘(if they are) desirous of distributing them.’ Taitt. Br. I, 6, 10, 5 has merely ‘utkiranti bhagasya lipsante,’ ‘they throw (them) up, (whereby) they desire to obtain prosperity.’ Āpastamba, as quoted by Sāy. on Taitt. S. I, 8, 6, says,—Having thrown up the cakes and caught them again (pratilabhya), and having, with ‘We worship Tryambaka,’ put them into the Sacrificer’s joined palms; and having taken them up separately (ṣapādāya), with (or thinking) ‘We desire to obtain you of (ṣ)from Bhaga;’ let them put them together (samāvapeyuh) thrice in this way.

aside towards the north; and if he meets with a tree or a stake or a bamboo or an ant-hill, he fastens them thereon, with the text (Vâg. S. III, 61), 'These, O Rudra, are thy provisions; therewith depart beyond the Mûgavats!'—(supplied) with provisions people indeed set out on a journey: hence he thereby dismisses him supplied with provisions whithersoever he is bound. Now in this case his journey is beyond the Mûgavats: hence he says, 'Depart beyond the Mûgavats!'—'with thy bow unstrung and muffled up—,' whereby he means to say, 'Depart propitious, not injuring us¹;' 'Clad in a skin,'—whereby he lulls him to sleep²; for while sleeping he injures no one: hence he says, 'Clad in a skin.'

18. They then turn to the right about, and return (to the uttaravedi) without looking back. Having returned thither, they touch water; for they have been performing a ceremony relating to Rudra³, and water is (a means of) purification: with water, that (means of) purification, they accordingly purify themselves.

19. Thereupon he shaves his hair and beard, and takes up the fire (of the uttaravedi),—for only after changing his place (to the ordinary sacrificial ground) he performs the (Full-moon) sacrifice on that fire, since it is not proper that he should perform the

¹ In the Vâg. Samhitâ this forms part of the text, but it is clearly a gloss taken from the Brâhmana. The Kâṇva recension of the Brâhmana has '—pinâkâvasa ity ahimsan naḥ sivaḥ sânto 'tîhity evaitad âha,' which has likewise found its way into the Samhitâ of that school. On the Mûgavats, see Muir, Orig. Sanskrit Texts, vol. ii. p. 352.

² According to Kâty. V, 10, 22, he mutters the word 'skin-clad' while steadying the two baskets.

³ See p. 2, note 2.

Agnihotra on the uttaravedi: for this reason he changes his place. Having gone to the house, and 'churned out' the fires¹, he performs the Full-moon offering. The Seasonal offerings, doubtless, are detached sacrifices; whereas the Full-moon offering is a regular, established sacrifice: hence he finally establishes himself by means of that regular sacrifice, and therefore changes his place (to the ordinary sacrificial ground).

THIRD BRÂHMANA.

1. Verily, imperishable is the righteousness of him that offers the Seasonal sacrifices; for such a one gains the year, and hence there is no cessation for him. He gains it (the year) in three divisions, he conquers it in three divisions. The year means the whole, and the whole is imperishable (without end): hence his righteousness is indeed imperishable. Moreover, he thereby becomes a Season, and as such goes to the gods; but there is no perishableness in the gods, and hence there is imperishable righteousness for him. This, then, is why he offers the Seasonal sacrifices.

2. Then as to why he should perform the Sunâsîrya offering. The prosperity (sri) that accrued to the gods on performing the Sâkamedha offerings, and gaining the victory (over Vṛitra), is suna; and the essence (rasa) that belonged to the year gained by them is sîra². Now that same prosperity which accrued to the gods on performing the Sâkamedha offerings, and that same essence which belonged to the year gained by them,—both these he takes possession of and makes his own: that is why he performs the Sunâsîrya.

¹ See II, 5, 2, 48.

² The author identifies sîra (plough) with sâra, 'essence, sap'; and takes suna, ploughshare (?), as identical with sunam, 'successfully, prosperously.' See next page, note 3.

3. The mode of its performance (is as follows): They prepare no uttaravedi; they do not use clotted butter; nor do they churn the fire¹. There are five fore-offerings, three after-offerings, and one Samish-tayagus.

4. Then, in the first place, there are those five (regular) oblations². By means of these oblations, indeed, Pragâpati produced creatures; with them he delivered the creatures both ways from Varuna's noose; with them the gods slew Vṛitra and gained that victory which was gained by them. And so does he, by means of them, obtain and make his own, both that prosperity which accrued to the gods from performing the Sâkamedha offerings, and that essence of the year which was gained by them. This is why those five oblations are (offered).

5. Then follows a Sunâsîrya³ cake on twelve

¹ But see XI, 5, 2, 8, 'At all four of these (Kâturmâsya offerings) they churn the fire.' On account of this contradiction, the commentators, on Kâty. V, 11, 3, consider the churning of the fire as optional. But, if the fires were produced by 'churning,' nine fore-offerings and after-offerings would have to be performed, as at the other Seasonal sacrifices, which is expressly forbidden in the above passage. According to Kâty. himself, the Sunâsîrya is to be treated like an ordinary ishî, except that the barhis is to be tied together in the way prescribed for the Seasonal offerings; see II, 5, 1, 18.

² See II, 5, 1, 8-11.

³ That is, according to Kâty. V, 11, 5, to Suna and Sîra,—probably the ploughshare and plough, considered as two tutelary deities of agricultural pursuits (Rig-veda IV, 57, 5-8); but by Yâska identified with Vâyu and Âditya;—or, according to Taitt. S. I, 8, potsherds. The import of this Sunâsrya oblation is what we have stated before.

6. After that there is an (oblation of) milk¹ to Vâyu. Now it is to milk that living beings readily take, when they are born: 'May the creatures readily take to me—now that I have gained the victory (by means of the Sâkamedha offerings)—for my prosperity, glory, and support!' so he thinks, and hence that (oblation of) milk.

7. Then as to why it is (offered) to Vâyu. Now Vâyu, indeed, is yonder blowing (wind); it is he that makes swell whatever rain falls here. But it is by the rain that plants grow; and on the plants being eaten and the water drunk, milk is produced out of that water. Hence it is he (Vâyu) that produces it; and for this reason it is (offered) to Vâyu.

8. Then follows a cake on one potsherd for Sûrya. Now Sûrya, indeed, is yonder scorching (sun); it is he that governs all this (world), now by means of a good, now by a bad (king)²; he assigns its place to everything here, now under a good, now under a bad (king): 'Now that I have obtained the victory, may he, in his pleasure, govern me through a good (king), may he assign to me a place under a good (king)!' thus he thinks; and for this reason there is a cake on one potsherd for Sûrya.

9. The priests' fee for this (oblation to Sûrya)

7, 1, Taïtt. Br. I, 7, 1, 1, to Indra Sunâsîra (i.e. Indra, accompanied by Suna and Sîra, Sây.).

¹ According to Kâty. V, 11, 6-10, the milk, in this case, is to be offered quite fresh (and warm) from the cow, without having been put on the fire. Rice-gruel may, however, be offered instead.

² Or, 'now by good, now by bad (means).'

is a white horse¹; whereby it is made of the characteristic form of yonder scorching (sun). If he be unable to procure a white horse, it may be a white bull; whereby it is likewise made of the characteristic form of yonder scorching (sun).

10. He may offer the Sunâsîrya at the same time when he performs the Sâkamedha offerings. By offering (Seasonal sacrifices) three times in the year, he indeed obtains the (whole) year: he may therefore offer (the Sunâsîrya) at any time².

11. Here now some wish to take possession of the nights; and should he wish to take possession of the nights, let him offer the Sunâsîrya (on the day) when, previously to the full-moon of Phâlguna, (the new moon) becomes visible in yonder sky.

12. Let him then get consecrated (for the Soma-sacrifice), lest the Phâlguna full-moon again pass by without his offering (Soma). For were the Phâlguna full-moon again to pass by without his having offered (Soma), he would certainly have to begin anew (to perform the Seasonal offerings): hence the Phâlguna full-moon should not again pass by without his offering Soma. Such (is the rule) for him who discontinues (the Seasonal offerings).

¹ According to Taitt. S. I, 8, 7, Taitt. Br. I, 7, 1, 2, the Dakshinâ consists of a plough yoked with twelve oxen.

² That is to say, he may perform the Sunâsîrya, either immediately after the Sâkamedhâ, or at any time within four months after that sacrifice (comm. on Kâty. V, 11, 3). Our author, however, evidently favours the views set forth in the succeeding paragraphs. According to these, the householder who wishes to discontinue the Seasonal offerings after the first round, and to become a Soma-sacrificer, is to perform the Sunâsîrya on the first day of the waxing moon of Phâlguna, and then to undergo the dîkshâ, or rite of consecration for the Soma-sacrifice (see III, 1, 2, 1 seq.), either immediately or before the approaching full-moon, when he is to perform the Agnishôma (or an animal offering to Agni and Soma or an Âgneyî ishî, Kâty. V, 11, 15). If, on the other hand, he intends to continue the Kâturmâsyas for another year (or more), he is to perform the Sunâsîrya on the upavasatha, or day preceding the full-moon.

13. And in the case of one who recommences (the Seasonal offerings),—let him perform the Sunâstria on the day preceding the Phâlguna full-moon, and on the following day the Vaisvadeva, and after that the Full-moon offering. This, then, (is the rule) for him who recommences (the Seasonal offerings).

14. Then as to (the Sacrificer) shaving his head all round¹. Now yonder sun, indeed, faces every quarter; it drinks up whatever (moisture) it dries up here: hence this (Sacrificer) thereby faces every quarter and becomes a consumer of food.

15. This fire also faces every quarter, since it burns all they put into it from whatsoever quarter: hence this (Sacrificer) thereby faces every quarter and becomes a consumer of food.

16. This man, on the other hand, faces but one quarter; but by shaving his head all round he comes to face every quarter; and whosoever, knowing this, has his head shaved all round, becomes just such a consumer of food as those two: let him therefore have his head shaved all round.

17. And on this point Âsuri said, 'What in the world has it to do with his face, even if he were to shave off all the hair of his head! It is by offering thrice in the year that he comes to face all the quarters and becomes a consumer of food : let him therefore not trouble himself about shaving his head.'

¹ 'Parivartayate' ('nivartayate,' Kâṇva), lit. 'he causes himself to be turned round,' is the technical expression for having one's head shaved all round (the sikhâ, or lock of hair on the crown of the head).

FOURTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Now when it is said, that the gods, by means of the Sâkamedha offerings, slew Vṛitra and gained that supreme authority which they now wield,—it is rather by means of all the Seasonal sacrifices that the gods slew Vṛitra; it is by all of them that they gained that supreme authority which they now wield.

2. They spake, 'With what king, with what leader¹ shall we fight?' Agni spake, 'With me for your king, with me for your leader!' With Agni for their king, with Agni for their leader, they gained four months; and with the Brahman (sacerdotium) and the threefold science they encompassed them.

3. They spake, 'With what king, with what leader shall we fight?' Varuṇa spake, 'With me for your king, with me for your leader!' With Varuṇa for their king, with Varuṇa for their leader, they gained other four months; and with the Brahman and the threefold science they encompassed them.

4. They spake, 'With what king, with what leader shall we fight?' Indra spake, 'With me for your king, with me for your leader!' With Indra for their king, with Indra for their leader, they gained other four months; and with the Brahman and the threefold science they encompassed them.

¹ Anîka (? 'van-guard'). cf. V, 3, 1, 1 'senâyâḥ senânîr anîkam;' II, 5, 3, 2.

5. And, accordingly, when he performs the Vaisvadeva, he thereby gains four months, with Agni for his king, with Agni for his leader. Then (in shaving) are used a porcupine's quill spotted in three places, and a copper razor; that three-spotted porcupine's quill resembles the threefold science, and the copper razor resembles the Brahman; for the Brahman is fire, and fire is of reddish (lohita) colour: hence a copper (loha) razor is used. Therewith he has (his head) shaved all round¹; and thus he (the Adhvaryu) encompasses him with the Brahman and the threefold science.

6. And when he performs the Varunapraghâsa offerings, he thereby gains other four months, with Varuna for his king, with Varuna for his leader. Then a three-spotted quill of a porcupine and a copper razor are used, wherewith he has himself shaved all round; and thus he (the priest) encompasses him with the Brahman and the threefold science.

7. And when he performs the Sâkamedha offerings, he thereby gains other four months, with Indra for his king, with Indra for his leader. Then a three-spotted quill of a porcupine and a copper razor are used, wherewith he has himself shaved; and thus he (the priest) encompasses him with the Brahman and the threefold science.

8. And when he performs the Vaisvadeva, then he becomes Agni, and attains to union with Agni and to co-existence in his world. And when he performs the Varunapraghâsa offerings, then he becomes Varuna, and attains to union with Varuna and to co-existence in his world. And when he performs the Sākamedha offerings, then he becomes Indra, and attains to union with Indra and to co-existence in his world¹.

¹ See p. 448, note 1.

9. And in whatever season he goes to yonder world, that season passes him on to the next season, and that season again passes him on to the next season,—he who performs the Seasonal sacrifices reaches the highest place, the supreme goal. Wherefore it is said, ‘They find not him that offereth the Seasonal offerings, for verily he goeth unto the highest place, to the supreme goal².’

¹ The Kāṇva text adds: And when he performs the Sunāsīriya, then he becomes Vāyu, and attains to union with Vāyu and to co-existence in his world.

² The Kāṇva text has: In whatever season the performer of Seasonal offerings goes to yonder world, that season passes him on to the next season, and that next one to the next one,—him the seasons, by transmission, make thus attain to the highest station, to the highest world. Wherefore is it said, ‘They find not him that offereth the Seasonal offerings, for he conquereth the highest world, the highest conquest (paramāṃ hy eva lokam paramāṃ gitim gayatīti).’

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS.

- Page 15, note 1. The pole of Indian carts is itself firmly bound with thongs.
- P. 27, paragraph 10. Read,—Vâg. S. I, 15 b; I, 15 c.
- P. 28, par. 12, and note 2. The Kâṇva text has the correct order of castes: 'tāny etāni kṛtvāri vāka chhiti brāhmaṇasyāgahy ādraveti rāganyasya ka vaisyasya kṛdhāveti sūdrasya.'
- P. 47, par. 1. The Taitt. S. (II, 6, 6) has a somewhat different version of this legend:—Agni had three elder brothers. While carrying the oblations to the gods, they perished. Agni was afraid, 'In like manner this one will meet with destruction (ārtim āriṣhyati).' He concealed himself. He entered the waters. The gods wished to find him. A fish betrayed him. He cursed it, 'May (people) kill thee by whatever means they can devise (dhiyā-dhiyā), who hast betrayed me!' Hence they kill the fish by whatever means they can devise, for he is accursed. They found him, and said to him, 'Come back to us and carry our oblation!' He said, 'I will ask a boon: whatever portion of the taken (ghee) shall fall outside the enclosing-sticks, before it is offered, that shall be my brothers' portion!' Hence whatever portion of the taken (ghee) falls outside the enclosing-sticks, that is their portion: with that he satisfies them.
- P. 47, par. 2. The Kāṇva text reads,—'They followed Indra even as now-a-days also a Brāhmaṇa follows a Kshatriya blessing him (āsamsamāno 'nukarati).'
- P. 85, par. 6. Read,—for this represents the fringe (of the Sacrificer's nether garment), and it is on the right side that the fringe (is tucked in) . . . for the fringe also is covered (by being tucked in). Cf. below to p. 368.
- P. 118, line 18. Read,—'Thine' instead of 'Your.'
- P. 164, par. 2. Professor Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen II, p. 118, translates, 'And from the mouth which had been drinking surā, the sparrow sprang: hence the latter sings so merrily, for indeed he sings so merrily as if it had drank surā.' Differently, however, ibid. III, p. 64.
- P. 175, par. 1. Compare also the corresponding legend in Taitt. Br. I, 6, 7, 4:—Indra, having slain Vṛitra, went to the farthest distance, thinking 'I have committed a sin (aparādham, ? I have missed him).' He said, 'Who will find this out?' The Maruts said, 'We will choose a boon, then we shall know: let the first offering be made to us!' They sported on him (Vṛitra), &c. (According to Sāyana, on Taitt. S. I, 8, 4, Indra flees from fear and says, within the Marut's hearing, 'Is Vṛitra dead or not? Who will go near him and find it out?' &c.)
- P. 183, par. 1. According to Sāyana, on Taitt. Br. I, 1, 3, 10, it was the Soma-plant (soma-vallī) that was carried off by Gāyatrī devatā, and one of its leaves (parṇa) was broken off, and on falling to the ground became a palāśa tree. See also Taitt. S. VI, 1, 6; Sat. Br. III, 2, 4, 1 seq.; Weber, Ind. Stud. II, 312 seq.
- P. 184, note 4. Add,—Compare Max Müller, Hist. of Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 352.
- P. 206, par. 19. Correct,—'Bhāllaveya' (also II, 1, 4, 6).
- P. 288, note 2. On the etymology of nakṣatra, see also Max Müller, Rig-veda-Samhitā IV, p. lxxi note.
- P. 310, pars. 8–9. Correct,—'And whichever (of the Asuras) they (the gods) slew, he indeed remained the same (viz. alive). In consequence of this the gods were left inferior.'
- P. 313, par. 20. The paragraph should have been rendered thus:—To Aruṇa Aupavesi his kinsmen said, 'Thou art advanced in years: establish thou the fires!' He replied, 'Thereby ye tell me, "keep silence!" he who has established his fires must not speak an untruth, and only by not speaking at all one speaks no untruth: to that extent the service (of the consecrated fire) consists in truth.' Similarly the Kāṇva text,—arunam haupavesim gṛhātaya ūkṣu sthaviro vā asy agnī ādhatsveti.—sa hovāka tan maitad brūtha vātam-asya evaidhī mā brūtheti na hy agnī ādhāya mṛishā vaden no vātā vadato mṛishodyam asti tasmād u satyam eva vivadishet. See Delbrück, Syntaktische Forschungen III, p. 29.
- P. 368, par. 24. Read,—He (the Sacrificer) then pulls down the tuck of his (nether garment) and performs obeisance. Cf. p. 435, note 2.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.					Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.			II Class.									III Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	ख	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	kh
3 Media	g	ग	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	. . .
4 " aspirata	gh	घ	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	. . .
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	𐬑	𐬕𐬎	𐬕𐬎	𐬕𐬎	𐬕𐬎	𐬕𐬎	. . .
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	𐬢	{ 𐬢 (ng) 𐬢 (N) 𐬢 (𐬑h)
7 Spiritus asper	h	ह	h, hs
8 " lenis	,
9 " asper faucalis	'h
10 " lenis faucalis	'h
11 " asper fricatus	'h
12 " lenis fricatus	'h
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
14 " aspirata	kh	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	𐬕𐬀	kh
15 Media	g	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	. . .
16 " aspirata	gh	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	𐬕𐬌𐬀	. . .
17 " Nasalis	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	. . .

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	य	𐬚	𐬚	ي	ي	,	y
19 Spiritus asper	(y)	𐬚	𐬚
20 " lenis	(y)	𐬚	𐬚
21 " asper assibilatus	s	...	श	𐬚	𐬚
22 " lenis assibilatus	z	𐬚	𐬚
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	त	𐬚	𐬚	t
24 " aspirata	th	थ	𐬚	𐬚	th
25 " assibilata	TH	...	𐬚	𐬚
26 Media	d	द	𐬚	𐬚
27 " aspirata	dh	ध	𐬚	𐬚
28 " assibilata	DH	...	𐬚	𐬚
29 Nasalis	n	न	𐬚	𐬚	n
30 Semivocalis	l	𐬚	𐬚	l
31 " mollis 1	l	𐬚	𐬚
32 " mollis 2	L	...	𐬚	𐬚
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	स	𐬚	𐬚	s
34 " asper 2	s (ʃ)	...	𐬚	𐬚
35 " lenis	z	𐬚	𐬚	z
36 " asperrimus 1	z (ʒ)	...	𐬚	𐬚	z
37 " asperrimus 2	z (ʒ)	...	𐬚	𐬚	z

Dentales modificatae (linguales, &c.)
38 Tenuis	t
39 " aspirata	th
40 Media	d
41 " aspirata	dh
42 Nasalis	n
43 Semivocalis	r
44 " fricata	f
45 " diacritica	ʀ
46 Spiritus asper	sh
47 " lenis	zh
Labiales.
48 Tenuis	p
49 " aspirata	ph
50 Media	b
51 " aspirata	bh
52 Tenuissima
53 Nasalis	m
54 Semivocalis	w
55 " aspirata	hw
56 Spiritus asper	f
57 " lenis	v
58 Anusvāra
59 Visarga	h

[illegible]

14 DAY USE
RETURN TO DESK FROM WHICH BORROWED
LOAN DEPT.

TURN CIRCULATION DEPARTMENT
202 Main Library

AN PERIOD 1 HOME USE	2	3
	5	6

ALL BOOKS MAY BE RECALLED AFTER 7 DAYS
1-month loans may be renewed by calling 642-3405
onth loans may be recharged by bringing books to Circulation Desk
Renewals and recharges may be made 4 days prior to due date

DUE AS STAMPED BELOW

P 2 5 1977 REC. CIR. AUG 25 '77
EC 21 1977
REC. CIR. NOV 29 '77
1 1978
C. CIR. AUG 30 '78
AUG 14 1979
2 CIR. AUG 6 1979

NO. DD 6, UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA, BERKELEY
BERKELEY, CA 94720

YC 54595

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 021 314

REESE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.

Received December 1882

Accessions No. 21407 Shelf No. 625
7906

v 13

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London
HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE

7 PATERNOSTER ROW

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XIII

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1881

[All rights reserved]

40

Digitized by Google

VINAYA TEXTS

TRANSLATED FROM THE PĀLI

BY

T. W. RHYS DAVIDS

AND

HERMANN OLDENBERG

PART I

THE PĀTIMOKKHA

THE MAHĀVAGGA, I—IV

Orford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1881

[All rights reserved]

21407

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION TO THE VINAYA TEXTS FROM THE PÂLI	ix
THE PÂTIMOKKHA	I
Nidâna	I
The Pârâgika Rules	3
The Samghâdisesa Rules	7
The Aniyata Rules	16
The Nissaggiya Pâṭittiya Rules	18
The Pâṭittiya Rules	32
The Pâḍdesaniya Rules	56
The Sekhiya Rules	59
The Adhikarana-samatha Rules	68
THE MAHÂVAGGA	71
First Khandhaka (The Admission to the Order of Bhikkhus)	73
Second Khandhaka (The Uposatha Ceremony, and the Pâtimokkha)	239
Third Khandhaka (Residence during the Rainy Season)	298
Fourth Khandhaka (The Pavâraṇâ Ceremony)	325

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	357
---	-----

INTRODUCTION

TO THE

VINAYA TEXTS FROM THE PÂLI.

IN the present MSS. the Vinaya Piṭaka is divided into the following books :

- | | |
|--------------------|---|
| 1. Pârâgika, | } called collectively the Sutta-vibhaṅga. |
| 2. Pâkittiya, | |
| 3. Mahâvagga, | } called collectively the Khandhakas. |
| 4. Kullavagga, | |
| 5. Parivâra-pâṭha. | |

These books constitute that part of the sacred literature of the Buddhists which contains the regulations for the outward life of the members of the Buddhist Saṃgha—nearly the oldest, and probably the most influential, of all Fraternities of monks.

It is impossible to frame any narrower definition of the Vinaya than this, since the gradual change of circumstances in the Fraternity resulted in a gradual change also in the Vinaya itself. To give any more detailed account of what the Vinaya is, it will be necessary to trace what can be at present ascertained of its history; to show—that is, so far as it is yet possible to do so—the causes which led to the establishment of the oldest Rules and Ceremonies of the Order, and to follow step by step the accretions of new literary work around this older nucleus.

For this purpose we propose to consider first the Rules of the work called the Pâtimokkha; for the later texts presuppose its existence. It is one of the oldest, if not the oldest, of all Buddhist text-books; and it has been inserted in its entirety into the first part of the Vinaya, the Vibhaṅga¹.

The Pātimokkha—the meaning of the name will be discussed later on—seems to have owed its existence to the ancient Indian custom of holding sacred two periods in each month, the times of the Full Moon and of the New Moon.

The Vedic ceremonies of the Darsapūrṇamāsa sacrifice, and of the feast or sacred day (Upavasatha) connected with it, are known to have been very old, and the custom of celebrating these days would naturally be handed on from the Brāhmins to the different Samanas, and be modified and simplified (though, as it seems, sometimes increased in number) by them, in accordance with their creeds and their views of religious duty. According to Buddhist tradition²—and we see no sufficient reason for doubting the correctness of the account—the monks of other, that is, of non-Buddhistic sects, used to meet together at the middle and at the close of every half-month, and were accustomed then to proclaim their new teaching in public. At such times the people would crowd together; and the different sects found an opportunity of increasing their numbers and their influence.

The Buddhists also adopted the custom of these periodical meetings, but confined themselves to meeting twice in each month³. And the peculiarity which gave to these meetings among the Buddhists their distinguishing character seems to have been borrowed by them neither from the Brāhmins nor from other dissenters, but to have been an original invention of the Buddhists themselves. The Brethren and Sisters made use of these half-monthly gatherings to confess to the assembled Order the sins and faults which each of them had committed; and to take upon himself, or herself, the penance which the transgressor had thereby incurred. It would be unnecessary to dwell here upon the details of these penitential meetings, as we can refer the reader to the second book of the Mahāvagga, where he will find them fully set out.

¹ The opening sentence only is found in the Mahāvagga. See below, p. xv.

² Mahāvagga II, 1, 1.

³ Ibid. II, 4, 2.

It was for use at such penitential gatherings that the text, now known as the Pātimokkha, was composed. A list was drawn up—which of course it would be necessary from time to time to complete, and rectify—of those offences which ought to be confessed and atoned for; this list was read out in the half-monthly meetings of the Order; and the Brethren and Sisters who were present were asked if they were innocent of each one of the offences therein mentioned.

The use of such a list must have already begun in very early times. Tradition even ascribes the first laying down of each clause to the Buddha himself. This tradition is of course very far from being conclusive; but neither should we hold it impossible that the Pātimokkha, either in its present shape, or at least in its most essential parts, can reach back to the Buddha's own time, or to that of his personal disciples.

It is no doubt natural, through the influence of the history of early Christianity, or perhaps of the school of Socrates, to imagine that early Buddhism was far removed from all fixed and absolute forms, either of creed or of liturgy; and to represent the intercourse of Gotama and his disciples as purely and simply an interchange of spiritual edification, where the spirit was all in all, and the letter was nothing. But it should be remembered that Gotama continued to live for many years, almost for two generations, after he had formulated the essential points of his system, and after he had founded the brotherhood of his Order. And at that time the stream of scholastic and legal ideas which emanated from the earlier Brāhmanism was flowing in full force through the religious circles of India. A rich phraseology of sacred and ecclesiastical expressions, an armoury of technical terms in philosophy and in theology (still preserved in the Brāhmaṇas and Upanishads), had been developed and made ready for the use of the Buddhists, and Gainas, and other reforming schools. And earlier speculation had raised a whole series of problems, and long-continued custom had elaborated a multifarious system of ecclesiastical observances, which the newly risen sects, orthodox or heretical, could grapple with, or could adopt. It seems to us that Gotama's disciples, from the very beginning, were much more than a free and informal union of men held together merely through their common reverence for their Master, and through a common spiritual aim. They formed rather, and from the first, an organised Brotherhood.

But if we look upon the Sakyaputtiya Samanas—for that is the name which the people in the earliest times gave to the community—as from the first an organised body, it is highly probable that the earliest formularies, both of their creeds and of their liturgies, arose in a time, if not during the life of Gotama, yet at most not long after his decease. Now among the oldest expressions of belief we may with certainty rank the four sentences known as the Four Noble Truths and the summary of the so-called Noble Eightfold Path: and the oldest liturgical formularies preserved to us are, without any doubt, the Pâtimokkha and the various Kammavâkas. It is true that these liturgical formularies, being so much more extensive, may possibly have been modified or added to before they reached the form in which we now possess them; but there is not the slightest trace of any other liturgies having ever been in use in the Buddhist fraternity.

It is of course impossible to attempt to draw a line between the part which Gotama himself may have had in the settlement of the list of offences contained in the Pâtimokkha, and the part that may have been taken by his disciples. Nor indeed, considering the limited character of our knowledge, is that a point of much importance. But it should perhaps be noticed in this connection that Buddhist tradition does ascribe to one among Gotama's disciples—to Upâli—an especial connection with the Vinaya. This tradition reaches back at least as far as the time when the existing recension of the Pâli Piṭakas was made, for we find it both in the Sutta- and in the Vinaya-Piṭakas.

Thus in the Kullavagga (VI, 13, 1) we find the passage—
 ‘At that time the Blessed One proclaimed the Vinaya in many a way to the Bhikkhus, exalted the Vinaya, exalted the learning of the Vinaya, exalted again and again the venerable Upâli. Then thought the Bhikkhus, “The Blessed One hath proclaimed the Vinaya in many a way, hath exalted the Vinaya, hath exalted the learning of the Vinaya, hath exalted again and again the venerable Upâli. Come now let us learn the Vinaya from the venerable Upâli.” And so many Bhikkhus, old and middle-aged and young, learnt the Vinaya from the venerable Upâli.’

And again in a Sutta of the *Aṅguttara Nikâya*¹, where those Bhikkhus are enumerated who, in any particular respect, are the first and foremost in the Brotherhood, Upâli is mentioned as the first among the custodians of the Vinaya (the Vinaya-dharâ). And further, as is well known, it is Upâli who, according to the tradition, plays, at the First Council, the same part of propounder with regard to the Vinaya Texts which Ānanda does with regard to the Dhamma Texts². There may well be some truth in this very ancient tradition that Upâli was specially conversant with the Rules of the Order; but it would be hazardous on that account to ascribe to Upâli a share, not only in the handing down of existing Rules, but in the composition of the Pâtimokkha itself³.

As regards the order in which the various offences are arranged in the Pâtimokkha, the principal division corresponds to the division of the Order into Brethren and Sisters: there is a Bhikkhu-pâtimokkha and a Bhikkhunî-pâtimokkha. In each of these two chief divisions the offences are divided into various classes, beginning with the heaviest—with those, that is, that result in the exclusion of the offender from the Order. Inside each class the sequence of the clauses follows no invariable rule. Sometimes offences of a related character are placed together in groups¹, but sometimes those which would naturally come together are found scattered in quite different parts of the same class². It is perhaps worthy of notice that there sometimes seems, as in the two cases first mentioned in the last note, to be an effort to arrange the offences in groups (vagga) of ten: and in three cases we find regulations formulated with the utmost brevity (the offences being merely expressed by a locative case dependent upon pāṭittiyaṃ) at the commencement of such a vagga. It seems to us, at least in the present state of our knowledge, quite impossible to draw any conclusions from such peculiarities as to the comparative age of any different parts of the Pātimokkha. The irregularities in arrangement may very well be due to want of literary clearness in the compilers of the present Form of Confession, and it would be hazardous to attempt to trace in it any historical argument.

¹ Phayre MS., vol. i. fol. kau.

² Kullavagga XII.

³ In the Ceylon Chroniclers (Dīpavamsa, Bhānavāras 4 and 5) Upâli even becomes the first in a series of Vinayapâmoṃkhâ, or ‘Chiefs of the Vinaya;’ but no such office is known to the older tradition; and had it existed it would certainly have been mentioned in connection with the dispute about the so-called Ten Points of the Vinaya at the Council of Vesâlî.

The various points in regard to the Pātimokkha dealt with in the foregoing paragraphs do not of themselves show that it was at all older than the rest of the Vinaya Piṭaka; and indeed the work, as a separate work, is not considered among Buddhists to belong to the Piṭakas at all, and is therefore not included in the list of works of which the Piṭakas consist. But every single Rule or Clause in the Pātimokkha is in fact found word for word in the Sutta-vibhaṅga, the quotations being so complete that the Pātimokkha might be entirely put together again by piecing together extracts from the Vinaya Piṭaka. And it is not possible that the Pātimokkha originated merely by such a process of dovetailing; for the quotations in the Vinaya Piṭaka, though not actually called quotations, bear the unmistakable stamp of being taken from some pre-existing work. The cause which led to the Pātimokkha, and the

¹ For instance, regulations as to the conduct of Brethren towards Sisters come together in Pāṭittiya 21-30; those about meal-times in Pāṭittiya 31-40; about conduct in relation to armies in Pāṭittiya 48-50.

² For instance, Pāṭittiya 5, 6, and 43-45; and again, Pāṭittiya 20 and 62, &c.

Upasampadâ-kammavâṭa, being separately preserved at all, is the same as the cause which led to their exclusion from the lists of the Piṭaka texts—the fact, that is, of their being liturgical compositions.

We turn now to the consideration of the question how a series of further literary productions were gradually developed out of, or added to the Pâtimokkha¹.

Whoever reads through the Mahâvagga will at once be struck by one section of it which differs completely both in contents and in form from the rest of the work. This is the section in the Second Book, Chapter III, paragraphs 4–8.

This passage is preceded by the opening words of the Pâtimokkha; and in the passage itself those words are separately paraphrased or explained. But the explanation does not appear to be put into the mouth of the Buddha; it bears rather, without any historical or conversational form, the impersonal shape of a simple commentary: and it only differs from the later commentaries by peculiar solemn diffuseness and rhetorical tautology.

If we were to consider the Mahâvagga only, the sudden and unexplained appearance in this connection, and in this connection only, of an isolated passage of this kind, would have to remain an insoluble puzzle. But when we look further into the other parts of the Vinaya Piṭaka, an answer immediately suggests itself. In the portion of that Piṭaka which is better called the Sutta-vibhaṅga, but is divided in the MSS. into two divisions, under the somewhat misleading titles of Pârâṅgika and Pâḷittiya, we find, at regularly recurring intervals, passages of an exactly similar character, and without any doubt of the same origin, as the isolated passage in the Mahâvagga.

The Sutta-vibhaṅga is occupied with laying down and explaining all the Rules which are contained in the Pâtimokkha. Now, immediately after the text of each of these Rules, there is found a word for word commentary upon them—precisely as a word for word commentary follows, in the passage above cited in the Mahāvagga, upon the quoted words of the Introductory Formular of the Pātimokkha service. Here then lies the explanation. This Introductory Formular is the only passage contained in the Pātimokkha which is not found also in the Sutta-vibhaṅga. And with the explanation of the curiously isolated passage in the Mahāvagga we have also a new fact of very great importance. Not only does the Vinaya Piṭaka contain, word for word, the whole of the Pātimokkha, but it contains also, and again word for word, the whole of an ancient Commentary on the Pātimokkha.

¹ With the following paragraphs should be compared H. Oldenberg in the Introduction to his edition of the Pâli text of the Vinaya, vol. i, pp. xvi and following.

This commentary no longer exists as a separate work, and it would indeed be strange if it did. It was not required in the simple liturgical services of Ordination and Confession in use in the Order: and if any one wished to refer to it, in order to refresh his memory as to the explanation of any passage in the Pātimokkha, he had only to repeat, or to get repeated over to him, the corresponding passage from the Sutta-vibhaṅga. There he would find the Old Commentary (as we shall hereafter call it) word for word, together with the additional commentary by which it had been supplemented in later times.

A question may then possibly occur to the reader whether we can be really sure that the Old Commentary has been preserved complete, or whether what we have is a fragment only. We think there can be but little doubt as to the right answer. The Pātimokkha, which the Old Commentary deals with word by word, has been separately preserved to us, and we know that no one phrase of it remains uncommented upon. And further it is clear from several passages that the words of the old commentator were considered so sacred or authoritative that they have been kept intact even in cases where they are in contradiction to the later parts of the Vinaya Piṭaka¹. It should however be noted that this Old Commentary is philological and exegetical throughout, containing nothing of a legendary or quasi-historical nature. It is just possible to suggest that it may have originally contained not only such an explanation of the meaning of each Rule, but an account also of the occasion on which the Rule was laid down. But it is difficult to see why greater sacredness should have been attached to one part of the work than to another; or to explain how it was that, if any part was changed, the contradictory passages above referred to were not also altered. Every probability therefore points to the conclusion that we have the complete work still before us, and not fragments of it only.

¹ See, for instance, the comparison made by Oldenberg in the Introduction to his edition of the text, vol. i. p. xviii. The Old Commentary follows of course the passage there referred to in the Pātimokkha.

It seems to us to have been precisely the absence of any such historical account in the older Commentary which probably led to the formation of what was practically the new edition of the Pātimokkha which now lies before us in the first part of the Vinaya Piṭaka.

In the earliest books of the Sutta Piṭaka, which contains the statement of Buddhist belief, we find—just as in the Gospels and in the Socratic dialogues—that that belief is not stated directly. The books profess to give, not simply the belief itself, but the belief as the Buddha uttered it, with an account of the time when, and the place at which, he uttered it. The Buddha's new method of salvation, his new doctrine of what salvation was, did not present itself to the consciousness of the early Buddhist community as an idea, a doctrine, standing alone, and merely on its own merits. In their minds it was indissolubly bound up with the memory of the revered and striking personality of him who had proclaimed it. So in the Sutta Piṭaka the actor and speaker is almost throughout the Buddha himself: (occasionally, but very seldom, one of his disciples.) Introductions—often indeed short and tending in later times to disappear—give a full account of where, and when, he spoke; what was the occasion which led to his uttering that particular speech; and to whom he uttered it. But, throughout, the principal thing is what the Buddha said.

It is only natural that this distinguishing mark of the literature of the Buddhist Dhamma—much of which was no doubt in existence at a very early date—should have reacted upon the literature of the Buddhist Vinaya. The members of the Order were no longer contented to learn, and to understand the meaning of, the various Rules of the Pātimokkha. A desire sprang up to have, for each one of them also, a kind of historical basis; to know the story of how the Buddha himself came to lay down the Rule to his disciples. And it was only the Brother who was properly acquainted with all this who was accounted a real ‘Doctor of the Law.’

So it is said in the Kullavagga (IX, 5, 1):—‘If a Brother, Upāli, has not received gladly both the Pātimokkhas in their full extent, has not well divided them, well established them, well investigated them, both sutta by sutta, and in every detail; if when asked, “Where was this spoken by the Blessed One?” he fail to solve the question: then there will be some who will say to him, “But then, let the venerable one still devote himself to learning the Vinaya!” thus will they say¹.’

It is evident from this passage that, at the time when it was written, such a tradition regarding each Rule was in existence; and that the knowledge of these traditions was held in high esteem. It is therefore a reasonable conjecture that steps were taken to amalgamate these traditions with the Text and the Old Commentary in a complete work, which should also contain what we may call Notes on the Rules—that is, decisions on points of Law involved, though not expressed in so many words, in the Rules; discussions on what cases were really included and what were not, in particular regulations; enumeration of exceptions to the Rules; and so on.

Whether this conjecture be right or not, it is precisely such a work that we have now before us in that part of the Vinaya Piṭaka called the Sutta-vibhaṅga, and divided in the present MSS., as above pointed out, into two books called respectively—after the class of Rules with which they begin—Pârâgika and Pâṭittiya. And it is possible throughout, without the possibility of mistake, to distinguish between the three portions of which the present work is built up. The historical basis comes first, leading up to the extract from the Pâtimokkha, which is always placed in the Buddha's own mouth; then comes the Old Commentary, with its verbal explanations; and then, finally, the Notes giving the exceptions to, and the extensions of, the Rule in the Pâtimokkha.

¹ No ke Upāli bhikkhuno ubhayāni Pātimokkhāni vitthārena svāgatāni honti suvibhattāni suppvattāni suviniṭṭhitāni suddato anuvyañṅanaso, idam pan’āvuso kattha vuttam Bhagavatā ‘ti iti puttiko na sampāyati, tassa bhavanti vattāro: Iṅgha tāva āyasmā Vinayam pariyāpunassū ‘ti: iti ‘ssa bhavanti vattāro.

The foregoing paragraphs show the way in which the Sutta-vibhaṅga grew up on the basis of the Pâtimokkha. The following books—the Khandhakas—give a detailed and connected account of the admission into the Saṅgha; of the ceremony of the Uposatha; of the annually recurring observances connected with the beginning and the end of the rainy season; of the principal disciplinary proceedings; and of miscellaneous details regarding the medicine, food, dwelling-places, and daily life of the members of the Order (Bhikkhus). As in the Sutta-vibhaṅga, so here also, the outward form is arranged in such a way that in the case of every regulation a history was given of the occasion upon which the Buddha was supposed to have made it. These histories again lead up, in most cases, to a liturgical formula by which the regulation was to be carried out.

While, however, in the case of the Sutta-vibhaṅga the liturgy on which it has been founded has been preserved in a separate shape, the formularies in the Khandhakas have not as yet, except in some instances, been found in existence apart from the Khandhakas. The principal exception is the Upasampadâ-kammavâḱa (The Words of the Act of Ordination), which recurs in its entirety in the First Khandhaka of the Mahāvagga (I, 76, 3 to I, 78, 5). It is impossible therefore as yet to trace the history of the gradual formation of the Khandhakas as we think it already possible to do in the case of the Sutta-vibhaṅga.

In the Khandhakas too, no doubt, the introductory histories are the latest part. But while some of the formularies and regulations to which they lead up may well be very old, others are probably additions to, or modifications of, those older ones; and it is difficult to attempt to show, even with regard to the exceptions above mentioned, which are the older and which are the later. The misfortune that these forms are not all now separately extant¹ is probably simply due to the fact that the formularies separately preserved (including the Pâtimokkha) are the only ones which continued to be used in actual services among the members of the Order.

Such being the nature and contents, and such—so far as it can be traced—being the origin of the Sutta-vibhaṅga and of the Khandhakas respectively, it follows that in all probability they were composed, or put into their present shape, at about the same period in the development of early Buddhism—it is even possible that both works arose in immediate connection.

The kind of narrative setting with which, in both cases, the older material has been surrounded is alike in both. Here and there in both works are included real fragments of ancient legend or tradition—as, for instance, the account of the events from the attainment of Buddhahood down to the conversion of Sâriputta and Moggallâna (Mahāvagga I, 1–24), the story of Devadatta (Kullavagga VII), the story of the conversion and the sin of Sudinna (Vibhaṅga, First Pârâgika). But the greater number of these narratives are of the most meagre description, and have altogether the appearance of being mere inventions.

There is little doubt that this is what they, in fact, were. Actual remembrance of the Buddha, and of his time, could have sufficed only in the rarest instances to give a correct historical basis for the Rules or Ceremonies, which had to be explained. We find a precisely similar state of things leading, in the Introductions to the Gâtaka Stories, to what were unquestionably inventions: and it must be acknowledged that the compilers have not taken the slightest trouble to conceal the evidently unsubstantial character of most of these summary introductions. But it does not follow that they were invented at the time when the Sutta-vibhaṅga and the Khandhakas were compiled. They may possibly have formed part of the traditional explanatory teaching of the schools.

¹ Mr. Dickson has given us an excellent text of the Upasampadâ-kammavâḥā; and it were much to be wished that the rest of them should also be published. Mr. Clough has given a translation of six others in 'Miscellaneous Translations from Oriental Languages,' London, 1834; and the Liverpool Free Library has MSS. of others.

As to the time when the Sutta-vibhaṅga and the Khandhakas were compiled, we have important evidence in their silence regarding the well-known Ten Points.

The long-continued struggle on that question—as important for the history of Buddhism as the Arian controversy for that of Christianity—agitated the whole Buddhist world to its very centre; and the attempted settlement of it, at the Council of Vesālī, led to a most serious schism in the Buddhist Church. Now the ten expressions in which the question was summarised or catalogued¹ are (as was pointed out in the Introduction to the Pāli Text of the Mahāvagga) conspicuous by their absence from the Vibhaṅga, and from all, except the last, of the *Khandhakas*². The first mention of most of them, and the first use of any one of them as a distinctive war-cry, is found in those last books, which are evidently an appendix to the rest of the Khandhakas, and of an entirely different nature from the earlier ones; for they contain a regular historical account of the two Councils, that of Rāgagaha, and that of *Vesālī*³.

¹ Siṅgilona, dvaṅgula, &c. (Kullavagga XII, 1, 10).

² That is, as war-cries; gātarūparagata occurs in the sense of the precious metals.

³ In the present division of the Khandhakas into two parts, called the Larger and Smaller Divisions (Mahā- and Kulla-vagga), there are ten Khandhakas in the first Division, and ten, apart from this appendix, in the second Division. Without the appended two last Khandhakas the so-called smaller Division is really considerably smaller than the larger Division; and there is therefore a good reason for the name which was given to it. With the two last Khandhakas the difference in length of the two Divisions as a whole is not sufficiently striking to account satisfactorily for the choice of their names; and the smaller

But the Ten Points in dispute were all matters of ecclesiastical law, they all related to observances of the brotherhood, they were in fact questions as to whether or not the ancient Rules should be relaxed or not in these ten respects. Is it possible that in a collection of works like the Vibhaṅga and the Khandhakas, which seek to set forth, down to the minutest detail, and even with hair-splitting diffuseness, all that has any relation to the daily life of the Brethren, and the regulations of the Buddhist Order—is it possible that in such a collection, if, when it was compiled, the struggle on the Ten Points had already burst into flame, there should be no reference at all, even in interpolations, to any one of these ten disputes? That the difference of opinion on the Ten Points remains altogether unnoticed in those parts of the collection where, in the natural order of things, it would be obviously referred to, and that it is only mentioned in an appendix where the Council held on its account is described, shows clearly, in our opinion, that the Vibhaṅga and the Khandhakas (save the two last) are older than the Council of Vesālī—and, of course, a fortiori that the Pātimokkha and the Kammavâṅkās are so too.

The Council of Vesālī is said in the XIIth Khandhaka of the Kullavagga to have taken place a hundred years after the Buddha's death. This is no doubt a round number; and the exact year of the date of the Buddha's death is open to question. If it be placed, according to the Ceylon chronicles, at exactly 218 years before Asoka's coronation, it will fall in or about 483 B.C.

But the expression '218 years' can in no case be regarded as an absolutely reliable statement of actual fact, and the date of 483 B.C. must therefore be taken subject to a marginal allowance of some decades. And it appears to one of us, for various reasons which he has elsewhere stated at length, that the balance of probability leads to the conclusion that the date of the Buddha's Parinibbāna must be

Division actually contains two more Khandhakas than the larger. We lay no stress upon these facts, but it confirms the general argument to find little points of this kind tending in the same direction, brought down to the period from 420–400 B. C.¹ We do not enter upon that question here, as the details are intricate, and the result uncertain ; and it is sufficient for our present purpose to be able to fix the Council of Vesâlî, even after making allowance for all possibilities, at within thirty years of 350 B. C.

We would only point out that there is really no ground for discontent with a result which can be fixed, after all, within a few decades. For what difference does that make in this case? If we had to deal with Grecian history, such a result might well be deemed unsatisfactory. There are differences, both personal and political, between Greece in 480, in 440, and in 400—differences well known to us. But whether we fix the date of an event in India in 480, or in 440, what does it, at present, matter? Who would be bold enough to say that the mention of India in 480 B. C. calls up to his mind a condition of things different from that suggested by the mention of India in 440 B. C., or even in 400 B. C.? We need not therefore take too much to heart the uncertainty of this chronological result ; though we may regret that our comfort is drawn from no better source than our want of knowledge.

The Vibhaṅga and the Twenty Khandhakas were at that time (circa 350 B. C.) already held in such high repute that no one ventured to alter them ; a sanctity of this kind is not acquired without the lapse of a considerable time : and we think it is not going too far to say, Firstly, that these books must have been in existence, as we now have them, within thirty years, earlier or later, of, at least, 360 or 370 B. C. ; Secondly, that the Old Commentary they have preserved must be considerably, perhaps fifty years, older ; and Thirdly, that the Kammavâkās and the Pâtimokkha must be older still.

The reader will notice that in the foregoing discussion no mention has been made of the Fifth Book in the present division of the Vinaya Piṭaka—the Parivāra-pāṭha. The reason is that this work, an abstract of the other parts of the Vinaya, is in fact a very much later compilation, and probably the work of a Ceylonese Thera. In some stanzas, which are found at the end of the Parivāra-pāṭha, it is stated to have been composed by 'the highly wise, learned, and skilful Dīpa, after he had inquired here and there into the methods (literally, the way) followed by former teachers¹'

¹ See the dissertation on this subject in Rhys Davids's 'Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon ;' and, more shortly, the close of the Introduction to his 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli.'

We have every hope that the foregoing argument will commend itself to our fellow workers as being, in the main, well founded. We now propose to test it by applying it in explanation of several difficult terms and phrases found in the Vinaya Piṭaka, which seem to have been hitherto incorrectly interpreted.

It has been pointed out that, in the Pātimokkha, the offences are arranged in certain classes, called, with reference to the heinousness of the act committed, Pārājika, Saṅghādisesa, Pākittiya, Pāṭidesaniya, and Sekhiya. In other parts of the Vinaya, other offences are called Thullakkaya and Dukkata. On this nomenclature the Rev. S. Coles has founded a trenchant attack upon Buddhist morality. He says :

'Beside the Pārājikas there are lesser faults, the nature of which is determined by various causes, as will subsequently appear. These are Saṅghādisesa, Thullaccaya, and Dukkata faults, and can all be easily remedied, the two latter especially; as, after a fault of this kind has been committed, the culprit has only to confess to his Upajjhāya (ordaining priest) without much delay, and is then exempted from all evil consequences; but the Saṅghādisesa being more serious (about half a Pārājikā), a course of penance has to be submitted to, and confession without delay made to twenty-five superior Bhikkhus. The nature

¹ Pubbāṭariyamaggañ ka pukkhitvā ka tahim tahim
Dīpo nāma mahāpaṇṇo sutadharo viakkhano
Imam vitthārasamkhepam sagghāmaggena magghime
Kintayitvā likhāpesi sissakānam sukhāvaham.

and extent of these penances are not defined in the first book of the Vinaya Pitaka, but in others, to which reference will be made when these books are brought under consideration. Suffice it to say, that they can possibly have no deterring effect on crime, but rather form loop-holes through which most enormous and disgusting misdeeds may be committed, and yet the perpetrator may remain not only as a Buddhist, but as a Bhikkhu¹.

Mr. Coles then applies this argument to show that many offences against morality, being only called Dukkaṭa and not Pârâgika, must have been looked upon very leniently, not only by the Buddhists, but by Gotama himself; and that therefore his system of morality was not of the lofty kind it has usually been supposed to be, but was, in fact, a mere cloak and encouragement to wickedness and crime!

If Mr. Coles had looked at the Pitaka he was discussing from a historical, instead of from a controversial, point of view, he would scarcely have advanced this argument. The use of the term Dukkaṭa does not arise from, nor is it evidence of, a weakness in moral feeling; but merely of a difference in point of time. It occurs only in what we have ventured above to call the Notes: that is to say, in the latest portion of the Pitaka. When the author or authors of the final recension of the Vinaya had to speak of an offence not actually mentioned, though implied, in the text before them, they did not presume to call it by any of the names applied in the Pâtimokkha itself to the classification of offences. They no more dared to add to the number of Pârâgikâs, for instance, than a clergyman would now venture seriously to propose an addition to the Ten Commandments. They made use of two technical terms (both entirely new ones), namely, Thullakkaya and Dukkaṭa (literally, Serious Transgression and Bad-deed), using the former more sparingly, and for graver misdemeanours. No argument based on passages where the word Dukkaṭa occurs can therefore have any force as to the teaching of Gotama himself; and the Bhikkhus, who did use the word, were restrained from using the older term Pārāṅika by a feeling of reverence towards their sacred books—a feeling surely deserving, not of censure, but of sympathy.

¹ Journal of the Ceylon Asiatic Society, 1867-1870, p. 155.

Again, there are certain terms applied to various parts of the Vinaya itself on which the above historical analysis may throw some light. When Asoka, in the Edict of Bhabra, addressed to the Buddhist Order, exhorted them to take as their authority, among other works, the Vinaya-Samukase, or Abstract of the Vinaya, he may fairly be supposed to have referred to the Pātimokkha, which that epithet would very appropriately describe. If it be asked why he did not then call it the Pātimokkha, the explanation may be either that that word is more especially a term for the act to be performed, than for the liturgy which shows the way to perform it (though it was also undoubtedly used as a name of the liturgy), or else that the work was known under both designations.

We would just add, in passing, that, in the passage in question, the reading samukase (samutkarsha), instead of the formerly accepted samākase, is quite clear in General Cunningham's lithograph¹; and the generally accepted view that the Edict was addressed to a council, and is therefore an authoritative confirmation of the Ceylon traditions regarding the Council of Patna, ought to be reconsidered. The Edict merely says: 'King Devānampiya of Māgadha salutes the Samgha' (that is, the Order, or the Community, of Bhikkhus)². Without desiring to throw any doubt upon the reality of the Council of Patna, we are driven to the conclusion that such an expression as 'the Samgha' could not have been meant to describe a formal council. Surely, if the Edict had been addressed to such a council, the fact would have been plainly intimated.

¹ 'Corpus Inscriptionum Indicarum,' pl. xv.

² Burnouf translated 'à l'assemblée du Magadha,' and Wilson, 'to the venerable assembly of Māgadha' (see 'Corpus,' &c., p. 131); but the reading is clearly Māgadhe in the 'Corpus,' while the older facsimile in the Journal of the Bengal Asiatic Society (ix. 618) had the impossible form Māgdhem. Even if we could read Māgadham samgham (an expression for which we know no parallel), the above remarks would still hold good. Compare further Professor Kern in the 'Jaartelling der Zuidelijke Buddhisten,' pp. 30-35.

It is just possible that Vinaya-Samukase may refer to the Old Commentary as well as to the Pâtimokkha; but this is not probable, for there is no reason to believe that in Asoka's time the Old Commentary any longer existed apart from its setting in the Vibhaṅga. And Vinaya-Samukase cannot for the reasons above stated mean, as has been supposed, the Parivâra-pâṭha.

As regards the meaning of the word Pâtimokkha we have the explanation of the Old Commentator in that single passage of his work found, as above pointed out, in the Khandhakas¹. He there describes it as 'the origin, the front (mukha), the chief of the good Dhammas;' where the word Dhammâ means 'qualities,' and where the evident inference is that the commentator² derived Pâtimokkha from mukha. But, on the other hand, the tradition of the Northern Buddhists, in whose Sanskrit works the word is replaced by Prâtimoksha, points to a derivation from the root muḥ.

It seems scarcely open to doubt that we must, in accordance with this last interpretation, connect the word with muḥ, and not with mukha. 'Pratimukha' means in Sanskrit 'over against, standing close in front.' How is it possible to derive from that any meaning appropriate as a title for the liturgy of confession called Pâtimokkha? On the other hand, the derivation from muḥ is straightforward and simple. Prati-muḥ (âtmanep.) means 'to free oneself, to get rid of;' and it is precisely through the recitation of this formular, and the answering of the questions contained in it, that the conscience of the member of the Brotherhood was set free from the sense of the offence he had incurred¹. Pātimokkha or Prātimoksha means therefore 'Dis-burdening, Getting free.' The lengthening of the first vowel in the Pāli word is not without analogies which have been already adduced by Childers. It is certain that the word is older than the present shape of the Formulary now so called; for it is used several times in the Formulary itself, as well as in many of the oldest Suttas.

¹ Pâtimokkhan ti âdim etam mukham etam pamukham etam kusalanam dhammanam, tena vuṭṭati pâtimokkhan ti. Mahāvagga II, 3, 4.

² We use the phrase 'Old Commentator' for convenience only. The commentary was, no doubt, handed down by tradition in the Buddhist schools; and there is no reason to believe that it was the work of any one mind.

The Old Commentator makes the Pātimokkha 'the head of the good Dhammas.' There is a curious passage in the Pātimokkha where the Dhammas are said to be included in the Suttas:

'If a Bhikkhu at the half-monthly recitation of the Pātimokkha should say, "Now for the first time do I notice that this Dhamma, as one handed down in the Suttas, embraced in the Suttas, gets recited every half-month!" then' &c.²

It is plain here that neither Dhamma nor Sutta is used in the sense to which we are accustomed from the later books. The Dhammas recited half-monthly are those contained in the scheme of offences given in the Pātimokkha, and the Suttas must therefore mean the separate clauses of that Formulary.

The fact is that the use of the word Sutta is by no means confined in the oldest Pāli to the texts of what was afterwards the Sutta Piṭaka, nor is it exclusively used either in earlier or later times³ in opposition to Vinaya. Thus we find it used again, as we think, of the Rules of the Pātimokkha; and in contrast, as in the rule above quoted, to Dhamma, in Kullavagga IV, 14, 22, 23:

'This Bhikkhu, of such and such a name, is a preacher

¹ Compare Mahāvagga II, 3, 3.

² Yo pana bhikkhu anvaddhamāsam Pātimokkhe uddissamāne evam vadeyya; idān' eva kho aham gāṇāmi, ayam pi kira dhammo suttāgato suttapariyāpanno anvaddhamāsam uddeṣam āgakkhatīti, taṁ ke . . . (the 73rd Pākittiya, quoted in Kullavagga III, 34, 2).

³ Though more especially concerned here with the earlier use of the word Sutta, it may be well to remind our readers of the name Suttadharā applied in the Sumaṅgala Vilāsinī to secular lawyers (see Alwis, 'Introd.' &c., p. 100).

of the Dhamma; but the Suttas have not been handed down to him, nor the Sutta-Vibhaṅga.'

'This Bhikkhu, of such and such a name, is a preacher of the Dhamma, and the Suttas have been handed down to him, but not the Sutta-Vibhaṅga¹.'

So again in the constantly repeated phrase above referred to—

'If the two Pātimokkhas are (or are not, as the connection requires) thoroughly known to a Bhikkhu in their entirety with all their divisions and explanations, if he have (or have not) thoroughly mastered them Sutta by Sutta, and Detail by Detail; then' &c.²

—the word Sutta evidently refers to the clauses of the two Pātimokkhas; and we find also in the immediate context the mention of Dhamma or of Vinaya, or of both.

It is no doubt true that in one passage of the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta (IV, 8–11 = pp. 39, 40), Sutta is opposed to Vinaya in much the same way as Sutta Piṭaka was afterwards opposed to Vinaya Piṭaka; yet the contrast between these two ideas is usually expressed by the apposition of Dhamma to Vinaya³, and the passage in the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta stands, so far as we yet know, quite alone. Indeed in the oldest tradition the discourses or conversations now called Suttas seem not to have been called by that name, but are referred to as Suttanta.

So in the Mahāvagga III, 5, 9, 12 mention is made of devout men, or of devout women, who may have been accustomed to recite some well-known Suttanta⁴; and in the next Khandhaka (IV, 15, 4) we find Suttanta, Dhamma, and Vinaya all occurring in one context:

'It may happen, Brethren, that in some district on the day of Pavāraṇā the night may have become far spent

¹ Suttam tassa āgatam na Suttavibhaṅgam. On the latter term see below.

² Ubhayāni nu kho Pātimokkhāni vitthārena svāgatāni suvibhattāni suppa-vattāni suvinikkhitāni suttato anuvyaṅganaso (Mahāvagga I, 36, 14; I, 37, 14; Kullavagga IV, 14, 19; IX, 5, 1). Anuvyaṅgana may perhaps refer here to the Old Commentary.

³ Compare H. Oldenberg's Introduction to his edition of the Mahāvagga, pp. 7 and following.

⁴ Abhiññātam vā Suttantaṃ bhaṇati.

while the Brethren are in confusion—some reciting the Dhamma, those versed in the Suttantas intoning some Suttanta together, the custodians of the Vinaya discussing the Vinaya, and the preachers of the Dhamma discoursing about the Dhamma.'

The whole of these expressions recur in Kullavagga IV, 4, 4; and are found again, with others of a similar character, in Kullavagga VI, 6, 2. This last passage is in the Introduction to a fable which of course recurs, as a Gâtaka, in the Gâtaka collection, and with an introduction in almost the same words. We should therefore expect to find there also the epithet suttantika ('versed in the Suttantas'), if that expression had remained in use as late as the fifth century A.D.; but it is omitted, the Suttantikas having been then long since replaced by those entrusted, not with the whole, but with special portions only, of the Dhamma literature. The word Suttanta was however still in common use at the time when the presumably later books now contained in the Pitakas were composed; for it occurs in the *Āṅguttara Nikāya*¹, and in a constantly recurring verse in the Buddhavamsa in which it is opposed to *Vinaya*², and the word is still used in the MSS. as the title of the more important Suttas.

In the passage quoted above from the Kullavagga IV, 14, 22, 23 there is a term Sutta-vibhaṅga used as the name of some part of the Vinaya literature apparently distinct

¹ The Āṅguttara Nikāya, Paṇṇāsa Nipāta (Phayre MS. vol. ii. fol. gâh):
Ye te Suttantā Tathāgatassa bhāvitā gambhīrā gambhīratthā lokuttarā suññātapāṭisamyuttā tesu bhaṇṇamānesu na sūssissanti no sotam odahissanti na aṇṇāṭittam upatthāpessanti na ka te dhamme uggaheṭṭabbam pariyāpunitabbam maṇṇissanti; ye pana te suttantā kathitā kāveyyā kittakkharā kittabyaṅgaṇā bahirakā sāvakabhāsītā tesu bhaṇṇamānesu sūssissanti sotam odahissanti; &c.

Ibid. fol. ṇaḥ: Ye te bhikkhū bahussutā āgatāgamā dhammadharā vinayadharā mātikādhārā te na sakkakkaṃ suttantaṃ param vāḷenti, tesam akkayena khinnamūlako suttanto hoti apaṭisaraṇo.

On the form compare the Sanskrit drishṭānta, vrittānta, and siddhānta.

² Suttantaṃ Vinayaṇ kâpi navaṅgam Satthasāsanaṃ
Sabbam pariyāpunitvāna sobhayi Gīnasāsanaṃ.

The phrase is used of various Buddhas in verses 317, 348, 594, 627, and 786 of the Buddhavamsa. This reference we owe to Dr. Morris.

from the Suttas of the Pâtimokkha. 'The Suttas have been handed down to him, but not the Suttavibhaṅga.'

The word recurs only in one other passage¹, and that is in the appended Khandhakas of the Kullavagga, in the account of the Council of Vesālî². Seven passages are there quoted from the Pâtimokkha in condemnation of seven out of the Ten Points raised by the heretics; and in answer to the question, 'Where was it condemned?' and before the passages are quoted, the place where the passage was uttered is mentioned, and condemnation is stated to be 'in the Suttavibhaṅga.' Thus Revata says, 'Is it right, Lord, to drink galogi?'

Sabbakâmî replies, 'What, Friend, is this galogi?'

Revata: 'Is it right, Lord, to drink strong drink which not being fermented, is not yet intoxicating?'

Sabbakâmî: 'No, my friend, it is not right.'

Revata: 'Where has it been condemned?'

Sabbakâmî: 'At Kosambî in the Suttavibhaṅga.'

Revata: 'What does he (who drinks galogi) commit?'

Sabbakâmî: 'He commits the Pākittiya offence of drinking strong drink and of drinking intoxicating liquors.'

This is a quotation of the Pākittiya Rule, No. 51; but the words quoted do not in fact condemn the drinking of toddy, and neither the Pâtimokkha nor the Old Commentary contains any reference to the place, Kosambî, where the words are here said to have been uttered.

It is only in the introduction afterwards appended (in what is now called the Vibhaṅga) to the two older works, that Kosambî is mentioned; and in the appendix following the Rule 51 in the Vibhaṅga there are no exceptions which would include galogi. But Kosambî is mentioned in the Introductory History. It is therefore most probable that the term Sutta-vibhaṅga refers to what is now called the Vibhaṅga; or, if not, at least to that body of traditional teaching (including the Pâtimokkha and the Old Commentary) out of which the present Vibhaṅga was composed.

¹ That is, of the Vinaya Piṭaka. We are not certain that it may not be found in the Sutta Piṭaka.

² Kullavagga XII, 2, 8.

It may be convenient to make some reference here to the question whether the literature above discussed was handed down by memory only, or by writing. We are justified in expecting to find, in texts dealing in such minute detail with the daily life of the members of the Buddhist Order, some distinct evidence—and it will be equally distinct whether it consists in actual statement, or in silence—as to writing, and the use of written books. And this expectation is not disappointed.

In the first place, there are several passages which confirm in an indisputable manner the existence of the art of writing at the time when the Vinaya texts were put into their present shape.

‘A certain man, who had committed a theft, ran away, and got ordained among the Bhikkhus. Now he was written up in the king’s palace with an injunction that he should be slain wheresoever he should be found¹.’—

‘But there occurred to the parents of Upāli this consideration: “If Upāli should learn writing², Upāli might thus after our decease live at ease, and not be troubled.”’

And in the Vibhaṅga we find an interesting explanation of the Third Pārāgika Rule, which lays down that whosoever wilfully kills a man, or brings about his death, must be expelled from the Order.

In the Notes on this Rule the Sutta-vibhaṅga discusses the case of some one causing the death of another by persuading him that suicide is glorious, or that it results in salvation. And in this connection the possibility is considered of these representations being made to the proposed victim, not by word of mouth, and not by a messenger, but by writing.

‘He engraves a writing to this effect: “Who so dies, he acquires wealth, or acquires fame, or goes to heaven.” By that writing he is guilty of a Dukkata offence. The other sees the writing, and, determining to die, is filled with painful feelings. (The writer is) guilty of a Thullakkaya offence. He does die. (The writer is) guilty of a Pârâgika offence¹.

¹ Aññatāro puriso korikam katvā palāyitvā bhikkhūsu pabbagito hoti. So ka rañño antepure likhito hoti yattha passitabbo tatha hantabbo ’ti (Mahāvagga I, 43).

² Saṭe kho Upāli lekham sikkheyya (Mahāvagga I, 49, 1).

And again, with respect to the injunction addressed to the Sisters of the Order not to devote themselves to worldly wisdom (tirakkhâna-viggâ), the Vibhaṅga makes an exception in favour of learning to write².

It is evident therefore that writing was in vogue in the time when the Notes on the Rules were put into their present form, that it was made use of for the publication of official announcements, and for the drawing up of written communications in private life; and that while the knowledge of the art was a possible source of livelihood, it was not confined to 'clerks,' but was acquired by ordinary persons, and even by women.

But it is a long step from the use of writing for such public or private notifications to the adoption of it for the purpose of recording an extensive and sacred literature: and our texts show—and show, as it seems to us, in an equally indisputable manner—that for this latter purpose writing, however well known, had not yet come into use.

Had the sacred texts been written down and read, books, manuscripts, and the whole activity therewith connected, must have necessarily played a very important part in the daily life of the members of the Buddhist Order. Now the texts of the Vinaya place clearly enough before our eyes the whole of the 'personal property,' so to speak, of the Buddhist Ârâmas and Vihâras. Every movable thing, down to the smallest and least important domestic utensils, is in some way or other referred to, and its use pointed out; while the use of other articles, not usually found in the Vihâras, is mentioned, and condemned. But nowhere do we find the least trace of any reference to manuscripts; much less of inks, or pens, or styles, or leaves, or other writing materials.

¹ Lekham kkhindati yo evam marati so dhanam vâ labhati yasam vâ labhati saggam vâ gakkhatîti. Akkharakkharâya âpatti dukkaṭassa. Lekham passivâ marissâmiti dukkham vedanam uppâdeti. Âpatti thullakkayassa. Marati. Âpatti pâragikassa.

² Anâpatti lekham pariyâpunâti (Bhikkhunî-Pâtimokkha, Pâṭittiya 49).

And we do find, on the contrary, passages which show the difficulties which arose every time that the memorial tradition by word of mouth of any of the sacred texts was interrupted, or threatened to be interrupted.

So, for instance, we find the case discussed of no one Bhikkhu, among all the Brethren dwelling in some particular place, knowing the Pâtimokkha. There was no other way out of the difficulty, save that of one of the Bhikkhus being sent out to some neighbouring fraternity, with the commission there to learn the Pâtimokkha by heart, either in its full extent (that is, as we take it, all the rules being learnt in full) or at least in abstract¹.

And again, in a passage already quoted, we hear of the case of an Upâsaka, who knows some important Suttanta, and is afraid that the knowledge of it will fade away. So he sends to a fraternity of Bhikkhus, and invites the Brethren to come over to him; and in that case an exception is made to the Rule forbidding the Brethren to travel in the rainy season, provided only that they do not stay away from home longer than seven days².

We may quote in this connection a passage of the same tendency from the Aṅguttara Nikâya, in which, among the circumstances hurtful to the security and the propagation of the Buddhist faith, the possibility is mentioned of the well-instructed Bhikkhus neglecting to take pains to hand on to others the Suttantas which they know. Then, when they have passed away, 'the root of that Suttanta is cut off, and it finds no place of refuge³.'

It is very plain from these last passages that the Buddhist community in its earliest days did not think of the possibility of using writing as a means of guarding against such painful accidents. Can this have arisen from any belief that writing the books would have been an irreverent treatment of them? We cannot think that among such a community as that of the Buddhists—who were so advanced in their views that they deliberately adopted the language of the people, and even took no thought, within the ranks of their community, of caste—any such consideration would have prevailed. It seems much more probable that, at the date referred to, the art of writing had not been taken advantage of for the purposes of any kind of literature; but that its use was wholly confined to recording short messages or notes, or private letters, or advertisements of a public character—a result which may well have been due to the want of any practical material on which to engrave the letters that were nevertheless evidently known¹.

¹ Mahāvagga II, 17, 5. 6. On this meaning of vitthârena and samkhitena see also Mahāvagga II, 15, 1. 2.

² Mahāvagga III, 5, 9.

³ Katukka-Nipāta (Phayre MS. vol. i. fol. nā); and repeated in the Paṇḍita-Nipāta (ibid. vol. ii. fol. nā): Ye te bhikkhū bahussutā āgatāgamā dhammadharā vinayadharā mātikāddharā te na sakkakkaṃ suttantaṃ param vārenti tesam akkayena khinnamūlako suttanto hoti apatisarano.

On the texts above quoted, and the inferences which may fairly be drawn from them, we would base two remarks. Firstly, that there can be no reasonable ground for doubting the correctness of the ancient tradition preserved in the well-known verse of the Ceylon Chroniclers, when, speaking of the time of Vatta Gâmani, who began to reign 88 B. C., they say,

‘The text of the Three Piṭakas, and the Commentary too thereon,

The wise Bhikkhus of former time had handed down by word of mouth:

The then Bhikkhus, perceiving how all beings do decay, Meeting together, wrote them in books, that the Dhamma might last long².’

But, secondly, though we must therefore believe that the

¹ Compare Burnell, ‘Elements of South Indian Palaeography,’ p. 10.

² Dīpavamsa XX, 20, 21; Mahāvamsa, p. 207. As the stanza is common to both works it is taken in all probability, word for word, from the Old Commentary in Sinhalese, the Sīhalaṭṭakathā, preserved in the Mahāvihāra in Anurādhapura. See H. Oldenberg’s Introduction to his edition of the Dīpavamsa.

Vinaya, before it was reduced to writing, was handed down for about three hundred years solely by memory, and that it lived only in the minds of the Vinayadharâ, the Bhikkhus 'who were versed in the Vinaya,' we do not think it is at all necessary, or even possible, to impugn the substantial accuracy of the texts handed down in a manner that seems, to moderns, so unsafe. The Text, as it lies before us, stands so well against all proofs, whether we compare its different parts one with another, or with the little that is yet known of its northern counterparts¹, that we are justified in regarding these Pâli books as in fact the authentic mirror of the old Mâgadhî text as fixed in the central schools of the most ancient Buddhist Church. That text, in the dialect of Magadha, may have been lost to us, once for all; and we can scarcely hope, unless some isolated sentences may hereafter be found preserved here and there in Inscriptions, that this loss will ever be, even partially, made good. But we may well be thankful that the faithful zeal and industry of these old monks has preserved for us a translation, in a dialect so nearly allied to the original, and in so perfect and trustworthy a state as the Pâli version of the Vinaya still undoubtedly presents.

We trust that the choice we have made from the literature of the Vinaya Piṭaka for insertion in this Collection of Translations from the Sacred Books of the East will be considered to need little justification. As the oldest and in many respects most important material of the Vinaya literature we have included a version of the Pâtimokkha; though confining ourselves to the Bhikkhu-Pâtimokkha, as our predecessors, Mr. Dickson and Professor Minayeff, have done before us. We could not consider, even after their labours, that a new translation of this difficult text would be superfluous. And of the younger literature we have confined ourselves to the Khandhakas, both because these books, in their variety, and in the fulness of their contents, are better calculated to afford a correct view of the conditions, and the life, of that oldest and most influential of the many monkish orders, the Buddhist Samgha; and also because the Sutta-vibhaṅga is little more than an expansion of the Pātimokkha, which we have already, for the reasons just stated, determined to include¹.

¹ How little this is, is apparent from the fact that Burnouf, who had studied all those that were then accessible, did not even find the words pârâgika and saṃghâdisesa (Introduction, &c., p. 301). To the Tibetan texts Csoma Kôrösi has devoted a few pages ('Analysis of the Dulva' in Asiatic Researches, vol. xx. pp. 45 and foll.) Of the Chinese we have only the brief notices of M. Rémusat (Foe Koue Ki, pp. 104 and foll.) and of Mr. Beal (in H. Oldenberg's Introduction to the Vinaya, vol. i. pp. xlv, xlv). The last scholar also mentions several Vinaya works, of the contents of which however nothing further is known, in his Catalogue of Chinese Buddhist Works now in the India Office Library (pp. 67-71).

T. W. RHYS DAVIDS.
H. OLDENBERG.

November, 1880.

¹ For the Upasampadā-kammavāḍa see the passages recurring in the Khandhakas as pointed out above, p. xix.

ADDITIONAL NOTE ON MAHĀVAGGA III, 2, 2 (vassupanāyikā).

As entering upon Vassa is called vassam upagakkhati or vassam upeti, we believe that upanāyikā, the final member of the compound vassupanāyikā (entrance upon Vassa), must not be derived from upa-ni, but from upa-i (upan-i). Comp. Satapatha-Brāhmaṇa II, 3, 2, 2: ahar-ahar vai Nado Naishidho Yamam rāgānam dakshināta upanayati (Sāyana: upagakkhati). The preposition upan contained in upan-ayati will be treated of by Professor JOH. SCHMIDT in the 26th volume of Kuhn's Zeitschrift.

РÂTIMOKKHA.

THE PÂTIMOKKHA.

THE WORDS OF DISBURDENMENT.

REVERENCE TO THE BLESSED ONE, THE HOLY ONE,
THE FULLY ENLIGHTENED ONE.

NIDÂNA¹.

INTRODUCTION.

May the Chapter ², reverend Sirs, hear mē!

To-day is the sacred day (of the full, or 'new, moon), the fifteenth day of the half-month ³. If it be convenient to the Chapter, let the Chapter hold Upo-satha, let it repeat the Pâtimokkha. How is it with respect to the necessary preliminaries to a meeting of the Order? Let the reverend brethren announce their purity ⁴, and I will rehearse the Pâtimokkha!

We all gladly give ear and do attend ⁵!

¹ The whole of this Introduction, with the ancient commentary upon it (referred to above, in the Introduction), recurs in the Mahâ-vagga II, 3, where further notes will be found. The previous chapter in Dickson entitled the Pukkâhâvissaggana is not part of the ancient text of the Pâtimokkha.

² Samgho: of course not the whole Order, but those members then present, spoken of collectively.

³ Upasatha pannaraso. See below, Mahâvagga, Book II, and especially chap. 14.

⁴ That is, their freedom from any of those disabilities which are declared below, Book II, to incapacitate a member of the Order from assembling at a formal meeting on the Uposatha day.

⁵ On sabbe 'va santâ compare ubho 'va santâ in the ninth Nissaggiya, and the Old Commentary loc. cit.

Whosoever have incurred a fault, let him declare it! If no fault have been incurred it is meet to keep silence!

Now, venerable Sirs, it is by your silence, that I shall know whether you are pure. As to each one question put there must be an answer, so, in such a meeting as this, each question is put¹ as many as three times. Then if any Bhikkhu, when it has been three times put, knowingly omit to declare a fault incurred, he is guilty of uttering a conscious lie. Venerable Sirs, the uttering of a deliberate lie has been declared by the Blessed One to be a condition hurtful (to spiritual progress)². Therefore a fault, if there be one, should be declared by that Bhikkhu who remembers it, and desires to be cleansed therefrom. For a fault, when declared, shall be light to him.

Venerable Sirs, the Introduction is now recited.

Thus do I question you, venerable Sirs, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time do I question you, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time do I question you, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Introduction.

¹ The spelling of the Pâli word in the text should be anus-sâvitam, and so below, anussâviyamâne. By 'the text' we refer throughout to Mr. Dickson's very careful edition, all the necessary corrections in which—they are mostly only misprints—will be noticed in the following notes.

² See Mahāvagga II, 3, 7.

PÂRÂGIKÂ DHAMMÂ.

THE PÂRÂGIKA RULES¹.

Here these four Rules, concerning those acts which bring about Defeat², come into recitation.

1. Whatsoever Bhikkhu who has taken upon

¹ The whole of the following portion of the Pâtimokkha, together with the ancient commentary upon it, is contained in the first book of the Vibhaṅga, also called the Pârâgikam.

Dickson translates throughout Dhammâ by 'offences.' He is no doubt right in taking the word, not in its ordinary sense of condition or quality, but in a more strictly technical, legal, sense. 'Offences' is however not the right direction in which to limit the general sense. Dhammâ must here be 'Rules,' in accordance with the passages quoted in our Introduction, pp. xxviii-xxx.

² Childers (sub voce) follows Burnouf (Introduction, &c., p. 301) in deriving the word Pârâgika from AG with parâ prefixed, taking that compound in the sense of 'to expel.' Dickson's translation 'deadly sin' rests upon the same basis. The Buddhist commentators refer the word to the passive of GI with parâ prefixed, in the sense of 'to suffer defeat.' So the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ: Pârâgiko hotîti parâgito parâgayam âpanno. Now the root AG belongs to the Vedic dialect only, and is not met with in any Buddhist expressions, and even in the Vedas it does not occur with parâ prefixed. The Buddhist forms of speech have quite different and settled terms with which to convey the idea of expulsion. On the other hand, there was a considerable group of words in use in the Buddhist community with which pârâgika stands in close connection: parâgi, 'to suffer defeat;' parâgita, 'defeated;' parâgaya, 'defeat.' We cannot therefore but think that the native commentators are right in associating pârâgika also with this group, and that the word really means 'involving defeat.' This may mean specifically defeat in the struggle with Mâra the Evil One; but more probably defeat in the struggle against evil generally, defeat in the effort to accomplish the object for which the Bhikkhu entered the Order, in the effort to reach the 'supreme goal' of Arahatsip.

himself the Bhikkhus' system of self-training and rule of life, and has not thereafter withdrawn from the training, or declared his weakness, shall have carnal knowledge of any one, down even to an animal, he has fallen into defeat, he is no longer in communion¹.

✓ 2. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take, from village or from wood, anything not given—what men call 'theft'²—in such manner of taking as kings would seize the thief for, and slay, or bind, or banish him, saying, 'Thou art a thief, thou art stupid, thou art a fool, thou art dishonest,'—the Bhikkhu who in that manner takes the thing not given, he, too, has fallen into defeat, he is no longer in communion.

✓ 3. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall knowingly deprive of life a human being, or shall seek out an assassin against a human being, or shall utter the praises of death, or incite another to self-destruction, saying, 'Ho! my friend! what good do you get from this sinful, wretched life? death is better to thee than life!'—if, so thinking, and with such an aim, he, by various argument, utter the praises of death or incite another to self-destruction—he, too, is fallen into defeat, he is no longer in communion³.

¹ 'Declared his weakness' refers to the permission (on the ground that it was better to leave the Order than to burn) for a Bhikkhu to acknowledge himself unfit for the discipline, and throw off the robe. 'Withdrawn from the training' is the formal expression for thus throwing off the Robes. See below, Mahāvagga II, 22, 3.

On sikkhâsâgâṭṭvāṃ, which is by no means only 'Rules of the Order,' see the Vibhaṅga (Pâr. I, 8, 1).

² The Vibhaṅga (Pâr. II, 3) takes theyya-saṃkhâtāṃ as meaning 'with dishonest intent.'

³ The deviations here from Mr. Dickson's version will, we hope, justify themselves. There is no commentary on hâraka, though

- ✓ 4. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, without being clearly conscious of extraordinary qualities, shall give out regarding himself that insight into the knowledge of the noble ones has been accomplished, saying, 'Thus do I know,' 'Thus do I perceive:' and at some subsequent time whether on being pressed, or without being pressed, he, feeling guilty, shall be desirous of being cleansed from his fault, and shall say, 'Brethren! when I knew not, I said that I knew; when I saw not, I said that I saw—telling a fruitless falsehood;' then, unless he so spake through undue confidence he, too, has fallen into defeat, he is no longer in communion¹.

Venerable Sirs, the four Conditions of Defeat have been recited, of which when a Bhikkhu has fallen into one or other, he is no longer allowed to be in co-residence with the Bhikkhus. As before, so afterwards, he is defeated, he is not in communion².

the Vibhaṅga (Pâr. III, 3, 1) explains the different kinds of Satta. Pâpaka must be 'sinful,' not merely 'poor;' the suggestion is 'by destroying your life you will escape from the possibility of sinning.'

¹ The extraordinary qualities (literally, 'superhuman qualities') are defined to be the Vimokkhas, Samâdhis, the Samâpattis, the Ñâna-dassana, the having experienced the Noble Path, and having realised the Fruit thereof; that is to say, Arahatship and the highest forms of spiritual emotion and intelligence which can accompany Arahatship. They are in fact, therefore, superhuman only in the sense of extraordinary; as it is precisely human beings, and only human beings, who were supposed to be able to acquire these qualities.

Uddhaṭṭha, 'Self-righteousness,' is also the last but one of the ten Samyoganas, or 'Fetters,' which the Arahats has to break.

² The sentences which follow in the text, but are not here translated, and in which it is declared that all the following portions of the Pâtimokkha have already been heard, do not occur in the Vibhaṅga. They are not part of the Pâtimokkha; but only the

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones,
'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Pârâgikas.

form to be used, when the Pâtimokkha cannot be recited in full, and all the remaining Rules are to be omitted. According to Mahāvagga II, 15, 1, 4 this abridged recital may be used in certain cases of danger.

On Yathâ pure tatha paṭṭhâ there is no explanation in the Old Commentary. The phrase probably means that the Bhikkhu is irrevocably defeated. He must remain for ever in the condition (of permanent exclusion from the Order) into which he has brought himself.

SAMGHÂDISESÂ DHAMMÂ.

RULES WHICH REQUIRE, AS WELL IN THEIR EARLIER AS IN THEIR LATER STAGES, FORMAL MEETINGS OF THE ORDER ¹.

Here, venerable Sirs, the thirteen matters, which, as well in their earlier as in their later stages, require formal meetings of the Order, come into recitation.

1. The emission of semen by design, except by a person sleeping, is a Samghâdisesa.
- ✓ 2. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being degraded ², shall, with perverted ³ mind, come into bodily contact with a woman, by taking hold of her hand, or by taking hold of her hair, or by touching any part of her body—that is a Samghâdisesa.
- ✓ 3. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being degraded, shall, with perverted mind, address a woman with wicked words, exciting to passion as those of a young man to a maid—that is a Samghâdisesa ⁴.

¹ The expression is curious, but the authorities given by Childers (sub voce) are decisive as to its meaning. Whereas the Pârâgika offences were dealt with in one meeting of the Order, these thirteen offences gave rise to the various Samghakammâs (formal resolutions or proceedings at meetings of the Order), which are explained in detail in the third Khandhaka of the Kullavagga.

The text of, and the ancient commentary on this portion of the Pâtimokkha will be found in the Vibhaṅga in the Book on the Samghâdisesas.

² Otinno, literally, 'having gone down,' which the old commentator in the Vibhaṅga explains as 'lustfully, or with a mind bound by desire.' Our word 'degraded' has often a very similar connotation.

³ Viparizātana, literally, 'changed;,' here 'changed for the worse.' Compare Mahâ-sudassana Sutta II, 39, and the Old Comment at Minayeff, p. 64.

⁴ Compare the second Aniyata.

4. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being degraded, shall, with perverted mind, magnify, in the hearing of a woman, ministration to himself¹ (by saying), 'This, Sister, would be the noblest of ministrations, that to so righteous and exalted a religious person as myself you should ministerate by that act,' (meaning) sexual intercourse—that is a Samghâdisesa.

5. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall act as a go-between for a woman to a man, or for a man to a woman, or for a wife, or for a paramour, or even for a harlot—that is a Samghâdisesa.

6. A Bhikkhu who, begging (the materials) together, is having a hut put up for his own use, to belong to no one (else), must have it made of due measurement. And herein this is the measurement—in length twelve spans according to the accepted span², in breadth seven spans (measured) inside.

¹ Attakâmapârikariyâ, perhaps 'to his lusts;' but we follow the old commentator.

² Sugata-vidatthiyâ. Dickson translates 'of the span of Buddha,' Sugata being one of the many epithets applied to the Buddha in poetry, or poetical prose. Mr. James D'Alwis in the Ceylon Asiatic Society's Journal for 1874 has a long article to show that this cannot be the correct meaning of the word 'Sugata' in this connection; and we think he is right, though his discussion as to what it does mean (evidently more than a simple span) seems to lead to no certain conclusion. The older Ceylon commentators take the expression as being equal to one and a half carpenter's cubits, a 'carpenter's cubit' (Simhalese Wadu-riyana) being two ordinary cubits, so that 'the Buddha's span' (as they translate it) would be four feet and a half! But the Bhikkhus of the present day in Ceylon take it to be equal to the length of the supposed foot-print of the Buddha on Adam's Peak; that is, four ordinary cubits, or six feet. See Dickson's note; and compare Nissaggiya 15, and Pâṭṭiya 87-92.

There is no comment on the phrase in the Old Commentary,

The Bhikkhus must be brought to the place to approve the site; and those Bhikkhus shall approve a site free from danger¹, and with an open space around it². If a Bhikkhu shall, at his own request, have a hut put up on a dangerous site, without the open space around it, or shall not bring the Bhikkhus to approve the site, or shall exceed the (due) measure—that is a Samghâdisesa.

7. A Bhikkhu who is having a large³ residence made for his own use, and to belong (also) to others, shall bring the Bhikkhus to the place to approve the site; and those Bhikkhus shall approve a site free from danger, and with an open space around it. If a Bhikkhu shall have a large residence made on a dangerous site, without the open space around it, or shall not bring the Bhikkhus to the place to approve the site—that is a Samghâdisesa.

8. Whatsoever Bhikkhu⁴, in harshness, malice, or anger, shall harass (another) Bhikkhu by a groundless (charge of having committed) a Pârâgika offence, thinking to himself, 'Perchance I may (thus) get him to fall from this religious life⁵'—and then at some later time, either when he is pressed, or without his being pressed, the case turns out to be groundless, which is especially curious if the word Sugata meant 'the Buddha's,' that is to say, the Buddha's span, when that work was composed.

¹ That is, either to living creatures (birds, ants, and so on) by clearing the site; or to the future resident after it is built. See the old commentator's note on Sârambha at Minayeff, p. 71.

² 'Sufficient for a cart drawn by a yoke of oxen to pass round it,' according to the old commentator.

³ Mahallaka. Compare Kullavagga VI, 11, 1.

⁴ In the text read, of course, Bhikkhu, not Bhikkhû.

⁵ I. e. to throw off the robes, to leave the Order.

and the Bhikkhu confesses his malice¹—that is a Samghâdisesa.

9. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, in harshness, malice, or anger, shall harass another Bhikkhu by a groundless charge of having committed a Pârâgika offence, supporting himself by some point or other of no importance in a case that really rests on something of a different kind; thinking to himself, 'Perchance I may thus get him to fall from this religious life'—and then at some later time, either when he is pressed, or without his being pressed, the case turns out to rest on something of a different kind, and that Bhikkhu confesses his malice—that is a *Samghâdisesa*².

10. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall go about to cause division in a community³ that is at union, or shall persist in calling attention to some matter calculated to cause division, that Bhikkhu should thus be addressed by the Bhikkhus: 'Sir, go not about to cause division in a community that is at union;' or, 'Persist not in calling attention to a matter calculated to cause division;' 'Be, Sir, at one with the community, for the community, being at unity, in harmony, without dispute, dwells pleasantly under

¹ Dosam was probably meant here to refer to the doso at the beginning of the rule.

² For instance, the Bhikkhu has seen that A, who is a Khattiya, has committed some offence. He says either that he has seen a Khattiya commit that offence, and thus harasses an innocent person; or he says that A has committed a Pârâgika offence, whereas the offence is of a lesser nature.

For kâveyyan in the text read kâveyyan.

³ Samgha; that is, the company of the Brethren dwelling in one place, or in one district.

one authority¹. If that Bhikkhu, when he has thus been spoken to by the Bhikkhus, should persist as before, then let that Bhikkhu be (formally) admonished about it by the Bhikkhus as a body², even to the third time, to the intent that he abandon that course. If, while being so admonished up to the third time, he abandon that course, it is well: if he abandon it not—that is a Samghâdisesa.

11. Now if other Bhikkhus, one, or two, or three, become adherents of that Bhikkhu, and raise their voices on his side; if they should say thus: 'Say not, Sirs, anything against that Bhikkhu! That Bhikkhu both speaks according to the Dhamma, and he speaks according to the Vinaya; it is our wish, too, and desire, that he adopts, and gives expression to; and he speaks, knowing that what he says appears to us also to be right:'—then let those Bhikkhus be addressed by the Bhikkhus thus: 'Say not so, Sirs! That Bhikkhu speaks not according to the Dhamma, neither does he speak according to the Vinaya. Let not, Sirs, the causing of division in the community be pleasing to you! Be, Sirs, at one with the community! for the community, being at unity, in harmony, without dispute, dwells pleasantly under one discipline.' If those Bhikkhus, when they have thus been spoken to by the Bhikkhus, should persist as before, those Bhikkhus should be

¹ Ekuddeso; that is, the authority of the rules recited in the Pâtimokkha.

² Samanubhâsitabbo. We think 'admonish' is not too strong a rendering of this term; and not inconsistent with the equality of the fraternity, as the admonition comes from the united body. The preposition sam need not imply a Samghakamma, which appears to have been necessary only after the Samghâdisesa offence had been completed. We occasionally render the word by 'adjure.'

(formally) adjured by the Bhikkhus, as a body, even to the third time, to the end that they abandon that course. If, while being so adjured, up to the third time, they abandon that course, it is well: if they abandon it not—that is a Samghâ-disesa.

✓ 12. Should a Bhikkhu refuse to listen to what is said to him¹; and when spoken to by the Bhikkhus, in accordance with the Dhamma², touching the precepts handed down in the body of recited law³, will allow nothing to be said to him (objecting), ‘Say nothing to me, Sirs, either good or bad: and I will say nothing, either good or bad, to you. Be good enough, Sirs, to refrain from speaking to me!’—then let that Bhikkhu be addressed by the Bhikkhus thus: ‘Do not, Sir, make yourself a person who cannot be spoken to: make yourself rather, Sir, a person to whom we can speak. Speak to the Bhikkhus, Sir, in accordance with the Dhamma; and the Bhikkhus, Sir, will speak in accordance with the Dhamma to you. For thus has the church⁴ of the Blessed One grown large; that is to say, by mutual converse, and by mutual help⁵.’ If that Bhikkhu, when he has thus been spoken to by the Bhikkhus, should persist as before, then let that Bhikkhu be

¹ Dubbaḷo is not ‘unruly,’ as Dickson has, following Childers, who gives ‘abusive, unruly, violent.’ It means rather ‘difficult to reason with, averse to instruction.’ Compare Gâtaka I, 151, 152.

² Sahadhammikaṃ, which is here adverbial; and where the Dhamma refers to the Rules, as is pointed out in the Introduction.

³ Uddesa-pariyâpannesu; uddesa being here practically the same as Pâtimokkha.

⁴ Parisâ, ‘the retinue, the followers, the adherents,’ referring here to the Samgha only.

⁵ In the text read vuḥḥâpanena.

(formally) adjured by the Bhikkhus as a body, even to the third time, to the end that he abandon that course. If, while being so adjured, up to the third time, he abandon that course, it is well : if he abandon it not—that is a Samghâdisesa.

✓ 13. Should a Bhikkhu dwell near a certain village or town, leading a life hurtful to the laity, and devoted to evil, (so that) his evil deeds are seen and heard, and the families led astray by him are seen and heard, let that Bhikkhu be spoken to by the Bhikkhus thus: 'Your life, Sir, is hurtful to the laity, and evil; your evil deeds, Sir, are seen and heard; and families are seen and heard to be led astray by you. Be so good, Sir, as to depart from this residence; you have dwelt here, Sir, long enough.' If, when that Bhikkhu is thus addressed by the Bhikkhus he should answer the Bhikkhus thus: 'The Bhikkhus are walking in longing, the Bhikkhus are walking in malice, the Bhikkhus are walking in delusion, the Bhikkhus are walking in fear; and, for a fault of a like nature, they send some away, and some they send not away¹:'—then that Bhikkhu should be spoken to by the Bhikkhus thus: 'Say not so, Sir! The Bhikkhus walk not in longing, the Bhikkhus walk not in malice, the Bhikkhus walk not in delusion, the Bhikkhus walk not in fear; and they send not some away, for a fault of a like nature, while they send others not away. Your life, Sir, is hurtful to the laity, and evil; your evil deeds, Sir, are seen and heard, and families are seen and heard, Sir, to be led astray by you. Be so good, Sir, as to depart from this residence; you have dwelt here, Sir, long enough.' If that Bhikkhu, when thus spoken to by the Bhikkhus should persist as before, that Bhikkhu should be (formally) adjured by the Bhikkhus as a body, even to the third time, to the end that he abandon that course. If, while being so adjured, up to the third time, he abandon that course, it is well: if he abandon it not—that is a Samghâdisesa.

¹ On the use of Pabbâgeti in this sense comp. the 2nd Pâr.

Venerable Sirs, the thirteen matters which require, as well in their earlier as in their later stages, formal meetings of the Order, have been recited; nine which become offences at once, and four which are not completed until the third admonition.

If a Bhikkhu have committed either one or other of these¹, for as many days as he knowingly conceals his sin, for so many days must that Bhikkhu, even against his will, remain in probation². When the probation is over, that Bhikkhu must, for six further days, undergo the Mānatta discipline³ (Penance). When the Penance has been removed, that Bhikkhu must be reinstated in some place where the community of the Bhikkhus forms a body of twenty. If a community of Bhikkhus forming a body of less than twenty, even by one, should reinstate that Bhikkhu, he is not reinstated, and that community is blameworthy. This is the proper course in that case.

¹ Literally, 'of which.' In the text there should be no full stop after yāvattatīyakā.

² On the regulations respecting Parivāsa (Probation), see Kullavagga II, 1-3.

³ On the regulations respecting Mānatta (Penance), see Kullavagga II, 6-8.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones,
'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Samghâdisesas.

ANİYATÂ DHAMMÂ¹.

RULES REGARDING UNDETERMINED MATTERS.

Here, venerable Sirs, the two Rules regarding undetermined matters come into recitation.

- ✓ 1. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take a seat with a woman, one man with one woman, in secret, on a secluded seat, suitable² (for sexual intercourse); and if a believing woman, trustworthy of speech, who has seen (them so), shall lay it to his charge under one or other of three Rules, either under the Pârâgika³, or under the Samghâdisesa⁴, or under the Pâkittiya⁵ Rules:—let then that Bhikkhu, if he acknowledge that he has so sat, be dealt with (according to the circumstances reported) for a Pârâgika, or for a Samghâdisesa, or for a Pâkittiya; or let that Bhikkhu be dealt with under that one of those three Rules under which the believing woman, trustworthy in speech, shall lay it to his charge.

This rule relates to a matter undetermined.

2. And furthermore, even if the seat be not secluded, and not convenient (for sexual intercourse), but be convenient for addressing a woman with wicked words⁶, then whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take

¹ The whole of the following portion of the Pâtimokkha, together with the Old Commentary on it, recurs in the Vibhaṅga, Book III.

² Alamkammaniye, an expression found only in this passage. The Vibhaṅga interprets it as above (Aniyata I, 2, 1).

³ The 1st Pârâgika.

⁴ The 2nd Samghâdisesa.

⁵ Pâkittiya 44, 45; and compare also 7, 27.

⁶ Compare the 3rd Samghâdisesa, and probably the 4th is also referred to.

a seat with a woman, one man with one woman, in secret, on such a seat, and a believing woman, trustworthy in speech, who has seen (them so), shall lay it to his charge under one or other of two Rules, either under the Samghâdisesa, or under the Pâkittiya Rule—let then that Bhikkhu, if he acknowledge that he has so sat, be dealt with (according to the circumstances reported) for a Samghâdisesa, or for a Pâkittiya; or let that Bhikkhu be dealt with under that one of those two Rules under which the believing woman, trustworthy in speech, shall lay it to his charge.

This rule relates to a matter undetermined.

Venerable Sirs, the two Rules regarding uncertain matters have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Aniyatas.

NISSAGGIYÂ PÂKITTIYÂ DHAMMÂ.

PÂKITTIYA RULES INVOLVING FORFEITURE.

Here, venerable Sirs, the thirty Pâkittiya Rules involving forfeiture come into recitation.

1. When the robes have been settled, when the Kaṭhina has been taken up by the Bhikkhu, an extra robe may be kept up to the end of a period of ten days. To him who goes beyond that there is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture¹.

¹ The following Rules, most of which have long ago fallen into abeyance, depend in great measure upon communistic customs of the ancient Fraternity, which are now somewhat difficult to understand. The following explanation of this rule, and more especially of the first few words of it, is therefore submitted with diffidence. At the end of the Vassa period (see below, Mahāvagga, Books III and VII) the Samgha, or community of brethren in any place, was accustomed to give over to some one of the Bhikkhus such store of robes (Kaṭhina-dussa) as it possessed; and it should here be observed that no Bhikkhu had a separate personal ownership over his robes, though nominally given to him for his own use, and really his own subject to the rules, they were, technically speaking, the property of the whole Samgha (that is, here, of the Order as a whole, not of the community residing together at that place). The Bhikkhu above referred to then spread the store of robes out to dry (suriye attharati); and afterwards satisfied out of it the wants of any brother whose robes, through the dampness of the season or other causes, had become spoiled. Meanwhile, each of the Bhikkhus had, of course, to wear something—it being one of the points most frequently insisted upon that a Bhikkhu should be decently clad, in direct contradiction to certain then popular views as to the sanctity of nakedness—but, during the interval, some of the rules about the robes were temporarily relaxed.

Now the Mahāvagga (VII, 1, 7) gives eight reasons by which the Kaṭhina license would be extinguished for any one particular Bhikkhu alone—as it would be for the community at that place by the formal 'taking up of the store of robes' (Kaṭhinuddhâra or Kaṭhinassa ubbhâra);—and with it that Bhikkhu's claim to a share in the common store. These eight reasons are merely eight ways in which that particular Bhikkhu's wants are already amply supplied; and the necessity, in his case, for a relaxation of the rules no longer exists.

2. When the robes have been settled, after the taking up of the Kaṭhina by the Bhikkhu, if a Bhikkhu be without his three robes, even for a single night, unless with the permission of the Bhikkhus—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture¹.

One of these reasons is that his set of robes is settled or done for (ĳivaram niṭṭhitam); which, according to the old commentator on our rule here, means that his set has been made, or spoiled, or destroyed, or burnt, or that his hope of receiving one from the laity has been disappointed (niṭṭhitaĳivarasmin ti ĳivaram katam vâ hoti natṭham vâ vinaṭṭham vâ daddham vâ ĳivarâsâ vâ upaĳĳhinnâ, according to which the Scholion in Dickson's note must be corrected). In each of these cases his wants are already supplied by the set of robes he has retained for wear during the process of drying: only the case of those Bhikkhus remains to be settled who have not had new robes made, and whose old ones were still good enough to wear during that process.

After the Kaṭhinuddhâra, either particular or general, no Bhikkhu can retain for his own use an atireka-ĳivara, a spare robe. He must give it up to any brother who has need of it.

As to the 'ten days,' the Sutta Vibhaṅga has the following story. Ânanda, after the Kaṭhinuddhâra, has a spare robe. He wants to give it to Sâriputta; but the latter is in Sâketa, and is not expected back till the ninth or tenth day. So the Buddha, to meet such cases, establishes the rule that the spare robe may be kept up to the tenth day.

The words 'a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture,' repeated at the end of each of the Nissaggiyas, are intended to mean that that offence involves, firstly, all that a Pâkittiya involves; and secondly, forfeiture.

¹ To this Rule there is the following story in the Sutta Vibhaṅga. Certain Bhikkhus left their robes in charge of the other Bhikkhus,

3. When the robes have been settled, when the Katthina has been taken up by the Bhikkhu, if a set of robes should be offered to a Bhikkhu out of season, it may be accepted by that Bhikkhu, should he so wish. But when he has accepted it, it must be made up at once; and if it be not sufficient for him, it may be kept up to the end of a month by that Bhikkhu should he have any hope that the deficiency may be supplied. If he keep it beyond that time, even if there be hope of (the deficiency) being supplied—that is a Pāṭittiya offence requiring forfeiture.

4. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have his soiled robe¹ washed, or dyed, or beaten by a Bhikkhunī (sister)² who is not related to him—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture³.

5. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall receive a robe from the hands of a Bhikkhunī not related to him, except in exchange—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture.

6. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall ask a householder, or a householder's wife⁴, not being related to him, and went on a journey. The robes, being laid by for a long time, became spoilt. The Buddha thereupon forbade a Bhikkhu, under the circumstances stated in this Rule, to separate himself from his robes (ti-kīvara).

As regards the permission we have the story that a sick Bhikkhu was invited home that his friends might nurse him. He answers, 'The Blessed One has forbidden us to separate ourselves from our robes. I am sick, and unable to travel in my robes.' Then the Blessed One allows a sick brother to obtain leave to dispense with the Rule.

¹ Literally, 'an old robe,' which the Vibhaṅga (Nissaggiya IV, 2, 1) explains as one that has been once worn.

² And so, frequently, below.

³ Compare the 17th Nissaggiya.

⁴ Householder is here gahapati; that is, pater familias. See Rh. D.'s note on Mahā-sudassana Sutta I, 41.

for a robe, except at the right season—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

Here the right season means when the Bhikkhu has been robbed of his robe, or when his robe has been destroyed. This is the right season in this connection.

7. If the householder, or the householder's wife, should offer him a choice¹ from (the materials for) many robes, that Bhikkhu may have robes made out of it up to the (due portion of) inner and outer robes. If he has robes made beyond this limit—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

8. In case the value in barter of a set of robes has been laid by, for a particular Bhikkhu, by a householder who is not a relative of his, or a householder's lady, with the intention 'I will get a set of robes in exchange for this robe-fund, and so provide a dress for such and such a Bhikkhu :—in that case,

¹ One MS. of the Vibhaṅga reads abhihaṭṭum; but another reads abhihaṭṭhum, as does Minayeff; while the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ makes it equal to abhiharitum. The right reading is probably abhihaṭṭhum. In any case, the unusual form and grammatical construction throw some doubt on the exact meaning of the phrase. The Samanta-Pâsâdikâ, which explains it philologically as just mentioned, goes on in the next words to explain it syntactically as abhiharitvâ, which it refers to the subject of pavâreyya, and states could be done either actually, or by words. Dickson's rendering, 'arrange to supply him,' does not accurately convey the force of pavâreyya; but the right rendering may be 'should offer to bring forth for him (whatever he chose) from (amongst the material for) many robes.' The only possible alternative is 'should make him an offer to take whatever he chose from amongst the material for many robes.' Compare the 34th Pâkittiya.

Santar-uttara-paramam is meant, according to the Vibhaṅga, to imply 'to the extent of one inner, and one outer robe;' but we preserve the ambiguity of the text.

if that Bhikkhu, before the offer has been made to him, go and give directions as to the make of the robe, saying, 'It would be well, Sir, to get in exchange such and such a sort of robe with that robe-fund to clothe me with;' desiring something fine—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture¹.

9. In case two persons, householders or householders' ladies, have each laid by for a particular Bhikkhu the value in barter of a set of robes, with the intention, 'We will each get a set of robes in exchange for this robe-fund, and so provide a dress for such and such a Bhikkhu:—in that case, if that Bhikkhu, before the offer has been made to him, go and give directions as to the make of the robe, saying, 'It would be well, Sirs, to get in exchange, with the value in barter you have each laid by, such and such a sort of robe to clothe me with, the two becoming one:—desiring something fine—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

10. In case a Râga, or a Khattiya, or a Brâhman, or a Gahapati should send by messenger, for a particular Bhikkhu, the value in barter of a set of robes, saying, 'Get a set of robes in exchange for this robe-fund, and provide a dress for such and such a Bhikkhu!' if then that messenger should go to that Bhikkhu and say, 'I have brought, Sir, this robe-fund for your reverence. May your reverence accept the robe-fund! let then that monk answer that messenger thus: 'We do not, my friend, accept the value in barter for a set of robes; but we may accept a set of robes, at the right time, and of the suitable kind.' If then that messenger shall answer that Bhikkhu thus: 'Has then your reverence a person who attends (to such matters for you)?' then, Bhikkhus¹, let the Bhikkhu, to whom the robes are to belong, point out, as his agent, the man who keeps the ârâma in order², or some believer, saying, 'This man, my friend, is the Bhikkhus' agent.' If then that messenger, when he has made an appointment with that agent, shall come to that Bhikkhu, and say, 'I have made an appointment, Sir, with that agent whom your reverence pointed out. Let your reverence come, and he will clothe you with the set of robes betimes!' then, Bhikkhus¹, let that Bhikkhu, to whom the set of robes is to belong, go to the agent and warn him and remind him two or three times, saying, 'Sir, I have need of a set of robes!' If, while so warning and reminding³ two or three times, he should succeed in obtaining the robes, it is well. Should he not succeed in obtaining them, let him up to the fourth, fifth, or sixth time go and stand silently on that matter¹. If, while so standing silently on that matter up to the fourth, fifth, or sixth time, he should succeed in obtaining the set of robes, it is well. Should he not succeed in obtaining them (so), and then, exerting himself beyond that point succeed in obtaining them—that is a Pâṭittiya offence involving forfeiture. (But) if he should not succeed in obtaining them, let him either go himself, or send a messenger (to the place) whence the robe-fund was brought to him, and say, ‘The robe-fund which your reverences sent for a Bhikkhu, that has in no wise advantaged that Bhikkhu. Take heed, your reverences, of your own, that your own go not to ruin!’ This is the proper course in that case².

¹ Both Dickson and Childers have gone too far in rendering ketâpetvâ by 'purchase.' The Samanta-Pâsâdikâ (Minayeff, 78) explains it by parivattetvâ. So Rh. D., 'Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon,' p. 6.

In the text read Ketâpanam (compare Kakkâyana, p. 322 of Senart's edition); and it should not be rendered 'money;' see Rh. D., loc. cit. The 'Robe-fund' consisted of things for barter.

In the text the vâ after aññâtakassa should be omitted.

¹ This word of address is most noteworthy as standing quite isolated in the Pâtimokkha. It must be meant as an address by the Buddha himself to the Brethren; for, if it were the address of the Bhikkhu reciting the Pâtimokkha, the expression used would necessarily be âyasmanto, as in the closing words of each chapter, or other words to that effect. That it should have been left in is a striking proof of the faithfulness with which the Pâtimokkha has been preserved. Is it a survival of some form of words older even than the Pâtimokkha? or is it merely an ancient blunder?

² The ârâma is, literally, the grove or pleasure-ground in which the monks' residence stood; but it had probably before this already come to include the residence, or vihâra, itself.

³ In the text read kodayamâno, sârayamâno; the medial participle with active sense, as often.

Here ends the first section,
the ‘Robe-section.’

11. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have a rug or mat made with silk in it—that is a Pâṭittiya offence involving forfeiture³.

¹ In the text read khakkhattuparamam. This silent standing is the only mode of asking for food permitted to a Bhikkhu.

² Both here, and in the Conclusion of the Samghâdisesa, and further below in the 22nd Nissaggiya, where the same phrase occurs, Mr. Dickson takes it to mean, ‘This is the way to Nirvâna.’ We are unable to see any foundation for such a rendering.

³ The following rules were for use in a tropical climate, and refer not to bed coverings, but to materials spread over a hard seat or couch. The word translated ‘rug or mat’ is a more general term, meaning ‘a thing spread;’ but there is no corres-

12. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have a rug or mat made of pure black wool of goats' hair¹—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

13. In case a Bhikkhu is having a new rug made, two parts should be taken of pure black wool of goats' hair, the third part of white wool, and the fourth of the colour of oxen (reddish brown). If a Bhikkhu should have a new rug made without taking two parts of pure black wool, the third of white, and the fourth of tawny—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture².

14. When a Bhikkhu has had a new rug made, he should use it for six years. If he should have another new rug made within the six years, whether he has got rid, or has not got rid of the former one, unless with the permission of the Bhikkhus³—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

15. When a Bhikkhu is having a new rug made to sit upon, a piece of the breadth of the accepted span⁴ must be taken from all round the old one in ponding word in English, as 'coverlet' or 'counterpane' would imply a different state of things.

¹ The Sutta Vibhaṅga says that kâ/aka is of two kinds, either gâtiyâ kâ/aka or ragana-kâ/aka; that is, that the wool is either naturally black, or dyed of that colour. Elaka is a goat, not a sheep.

² This is deliberately chosen as an ugly mixture, which would lessen the commercial value of the rug, by making it unfashionable.

³ Regarding this permission the Vibhaṅga gives the following story. A sick monk was asked by his relatives to come home, that they might nurse him. He answered that he was too ill to carry his rug, could not get on without one, and could not have a new one made within six years. Then the Blessed One established this exception to the general Rule.

⁴ See the note on the 6th Samghâdisesa.

order to disfigure it. If a Bhikkhu should have a new seat-rug made without taking a span's width from all round the old one—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture.

16. In case a Bhikkhu should get some goats' wool whilst he is on a journey¹, let him accept it, if he likes; and when he has accepted it, he may carry it in his own hand, if there are no porters, for the distance of three leagues². Should he carry it further than that, even if there are no porters—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture.

17. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall get goats' wool washed, or dyed, or combed out by a Bhikkhunī who is not related to him—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture³.

18. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall receive gold or silver, or get some one to receive it for him, or allow it to be kept in deposit for him⁴—that is a Pāṭittiya offence involving forfeiture.

¹ Addhāna-magga-paṭipanno; which the Kaṅkhā Vitaranī (Minayeff, p. 80) explains as being on a long road, called addhāna (high-road). But one may be on a high-road without going a long journey.

² Yoganas; a yogana being a trifle under eight miles. See Rh. D., 'Ancient Coins and Measures' &c., pp. 16, 17.

³ Compare the 4th Nissaggiya.

⁴ Upanikkhittam vā sādīyeyya; which cannot possibly mean 'if he thinks to appropriate money entrusted to him,' as Mr. Dickson translates. See Rh. D., 'Ancient Coins' &c., p. 7.

The method of procedure on a breach of this rule, or of the next, is thus described in the Vibhaṅga. The guilty Bhikkhu has to give up the gold or silver to the community (Saṃgha, not here, as elsewhere in sentences concerning forfeiture, 'or to a gāṇa or to a puggala'). Then when an ârāmika or an upāsaka comes, it is to be given to him, to buy ghee or oil with it for the Saṃgha; and whatever is bought is the common property of all the Saṃgha, save the guilty Bhikkhu. Should the layman object to undertake the

19. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall engage in any one of the various transactions in which silver is used—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

20. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall engage in any one of the various kinds of buying and selling—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

End of the second section,
the 'Silk-section.'

21. A spare bowl may be kept up to the limit of ten days. To him who exceeds that there is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

22. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall get another new bowl in exchange for an (old) one broken in less than five places—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

That bowl must be forfeited by that Bhikkhu to the company of Bhikkhus; and whichever in that company of Bhikkhus shall be the worst bowl, that shall be given to that Bhikkhu with the words, 'This, Bhikkhu, is thy bowl; it must be kept until it breaks.' This is the right course in that case.

23. Now those medicines which may be used by the sick Bhikkhus—to wit, ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses—when they have received them, they may enjoy them, storing them up to the seventh day. To him who exceeds that there is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

spending of the gold or silver, he is to be asked to throw it away. Or, if this cannot be managed, then, as a last resource, some Bhikkhu is to be formally appointed 'Bullion-remover' (Rûpiya-kkhadaka), and he is to go and throw it away somewhere, 'animittam katvâ,' (without making any mark at the place!)

24. When he sees that a month of the hot days has yet to run, let a Bhikkhu provide himself with the materials for robes for the rainy season : when he sees that half a month of the hot days has yet to run, let him make them, and wear them. Should he provide himself with the materials for robes for the rainy season when more than a month of the hot days has yet to run ; or should he make them, and wear them, when more than half a month of the hot days has yet to run—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

25. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when he has himself given a set of robes to another Bhikkhu, shall thereafter, being angry or displeased with him, take them away, or get them taken away—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

26. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall himself ask for yarn, and have it woven up by weavers into cloth for a set of robes—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

27. In case a householder, who is not related to him, or a householder's lady, shall have the cloth for a set of robes woven for a particular Bhikkhu by weavers ; in that case, if that Bhikkhu, before the offer has been made to him, shall go to the weavers, and give directions as to the make of the robe, saying, 'This robe-cloth, my friends, is being woven for me. Make it long and broad, and make it thick, and well woven, and evenly woven¹, and with even lines, and well carded. If you do so, ourselves will make it up to you, friends, in some way or other!' If that Bhikkhu¹, having thus spoken, should make it up² to them in any way, even by the contents of a begging bowl—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

¹ Suppavâyitam, literally, 'well woven forth.' We follow the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ in its explanation of this word, but with considerable hesitation. Compare the relation between Sanskrit ota and prota ; and between English 'web' and 'woof.'

28. In case a robe should fall to the lot of a Bhikkhu, as a special gift³, ten days before the Kattika-temâsa³ full moon, that Bhikkhu may take it, considering it as a special gift: and when he has it, he may keep it up till the robe time³.

¹ In the text read Evañ ka so bhikkhu.

² Anupadaggeyya is a double potential. Daggâma would be equal to Sanskrit dadyâma; and to that a second potential termination has been added.

³ The expression in the Pâli is literally 'should a special robe come to a Bhikkhu,' &c.; where 'special robe' is akkēka-kîvaram, explained in the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ (Minayeff, 83) as equal to akkâyika-kîvaram. The Vibhaṅga says, 'If a man wants to join the army or to emigrate, or if a man has fallen sick, or a woman is with child, or an unbeliever has come to believe, or a believer is edified (pasâdo uppanno hoti); then, if such a one send a messenger to the Bhikkhus, saying, "Let their reverences come hither, I will give a gift for the rainy season" (vassâvâsikam; perhaps, "such a gift as the laity are wont to give to the Bhikkhus who have spent the vassa among them")—that is an akkēka-kîvaram' (Minayeff, 82, 83). Akkaya is an immediate, threatening, danger: compare the expression 'donatio mortis causâ.' 'Special robe' is, no doubt, an inadequate rendering; but we have chosen it in reference to the special circumstances under which the donation is made, and in default of a better translation. Compare the 85th Pâkittiya.

The Kattika-temâsi-punnamâ is, according to the Vibhaṅga (Minayeff, p. 82), the close of the Pavâranâ, the ceremony at the end of Vassa (see below, Book IV).

The robe time is the time when the robes were settled. The Vibhaṅga says, 'Robe time is, if the robes have not been laid out to dry (see the note to the first rule in this division of the Pâtimokkha), the last month of the rains; if they have, it is five months.'

Should he keep it beyond that—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

29. When vassa is completed up to the full moon in Kattika¹ in case a Bhikkhu, who is dwelling in a place belonging to the class of those forest dwellings which are held to be insecure and dangerous, should desire to do so, he may leave one or other of his three robes in a hut inside a village, and if there is any ground for that Bhikkhu being separated from that robe, he may be separated from it up to the sixth night. Should he separate himself from it more than that, except by permission from the Bhikkhus—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

30. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall cause to be diverted to himself any benefit already dedicated to the Samgha—that is a Pâkittiya offence involving forfeiture.

Here ends the third section,
the 'Bowl-section.'

Venerable Sirs, the thirty Pâkittiya Rules involving forfeiture have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

¹ This is a different date from that mentioned in the last rule, and one month later. The Vibhaṅga explains the date here as Kattika-kâtumâsinî, whereas the date in Rule 28 is temâsinî, and is called by the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ (Minayeff, p. 82) paṭhamakattika-puṇṇamâ.

The same distinction is evident, from Mahāvagga IV, 14, 7-11, between Pavāraṇā and the Kâtumâsinî. But how both these full moons came to be called Kattika is not clear.

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here ends the recitation of the Nissaggiyas.

PÂKITTİYÂ DHAMMÂ.

THE PÂKITTĪYA¹ RULES.

Now here, venerable Sirs, the ninety-two Pâkittiya Rules (Rules regarding matters requiring expiation) come into recitation.

1. There is Pâkittiya in a deliberate lie.
2. There is Pâkittiya in abusive language.
3. There is Pâkittiya in slander of a Bhikkhu.
4. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall cause one not received into the higher grade (of the Order²) to recite the Dhamma clause by clause³—that is a Pâkittiya.
5. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, for more than two or three nights, lie down (to sleep) in the same place with one not received into the higher grade (of the Order)—that is a Pâkittiya.
6. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall lie down (to sleep) in the same place with a woman—that is a Pâkittiya⁴.
7. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall preach the Dhamma, in more than five or six words, to a woman,

¹ That is, 'requiring repentance.' Compare the Sanskrit terms Prâyasakittika and Prâyasakittîya.

² Literally, 'one who has not received the upasampadâ.'

³ Anupasampannam padaso dhammam vâḥeyya. This rule is directed against a wrong method of teaching the Dhamma to a Sâmaṇera. See the extracts from the Old Commentary, and from the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ, given by Minayeff on p. 84. Read however in the second line osâpentî for âsâpentî; and then go on anvakkharam nâma, rūpam anikkān ti vukkamāno rupan ti opâpeti: anuvyaṅganam nâma, rūpam anikkān ti vukkamāno vedanā anikkā ti saddam nikkhâreti, &c.

⁴ For the text read mâtugâmena.

without a man arrived at years of discretion¹ (being present)—that is a Pāṭittiya.

8. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall tell one not received into the higher grade (of the Order) that the (speaker or any other Bhikkhu) has extraordinary spiritual gifts, even when such is the case²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

9. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall tell one not received into the higher grade (of the Order) of a Bhikkhu having fallen into any grave offence—that is a Pāṭittiya.

10. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall dig the ground or have it dug³—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Here ends the first section,
the 'Falsehood-section.'

11. There is Pāṭittiya in destroying any vegetable.

12. There is Pāṭittiya in prevarication, or in worrying (the assembled Bhikkhus; for instance, by refusing to answer⁴).

13. There is Pāṭittiya in stirring up ill-will against, in speaking disrespectfully of (any Bhikkhu deputed to any official duty⁵).

¹ Viññu. The Vibhaṅga says, 'a man able to understand what is well said, and what is wrongly said; what is wicked, and what is not wicked.' Compare the use of viññutā at Gātaka I, 231.

² To do so when it was not the case, would be a Pārāgika. See the 4th Pārāgika, and our note there on the meaning of uttarimanussa-dhammam. The 'even' here means that the truth of the averment makes no excuse for it.

³ Because doing so might bring some living thing into danger.

⁴ Vihesake; which must be understood as being done in a formal meeting of the Saṅgha during an official enquiry.

⁵ The words in parentheses are supplied from the explanations in the Vibhaṅga.

14. Whatsoever Bhikkhu who has put out, or got another to put out to air, a bedstead, or a chair, or a mat, or a stool¹, the common property of the Samgha; and when going away shall not put it back, or have it put back, but shall depart without saying anything to anybody—that is a Pâkittiya.

15. Whatsoever Bhikkhu has put out, or got another to put out, a bedstead in a dwelling-place common to a Samgha; and when going away shall not put it back, or have it put back, but shall depart without saying anything to anybody—that is a Pâkittiya.

16. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, in a dwelling-place common to a Samgha, shall lie down where he knows that he is encroaching on (the space occupied by) a Bhikkhu who arrived before him, thinking, 'If he become inconvenienced he may go away'—if he does it for that object, and for no other²—that is a Pâkittiya.

17. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being angry or displeased with another Bhikkhu, shall drive him out, or get him driven out of a dwelling-place common to a Samgha—that is a Pâkittiya.

18. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall hurriedly sit down, or lie down, in the upper story of a dwelling-place common to a *Samgha*³, on a bedstead or chair with removable legs—that is a Pâkittiya.

¹ Kokkham, the meaning of which is not quite clear. The Vibhaṅga says there are four kinds, made of bark, of usūra roots, of muṅga grass, and of bulrushes. It is apparently therefore of wickerwork.

² That is, according to the Vibhaṅga, the rule does not apply to an invalid, or to one suffering from the heat, or the cold; and so on.

³ Because if he does so, he might unwittingly upset the furniture,

19. In case a Bhikkhu is having a large dwelling-place put up, he may have the work rectified, in a place where straw is scarce, round the doors, and where the bolts are put in, and the openings for light are set, and till the roof has been twice or thrice covered in¹. Should he go beyond that, even in such a place—that is a Pāṭittiya.

20. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall sprinkle water with living creatures in it, or shall cause such to be sprinkled on grass or on clay—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Here ends the second section, the 'Bhūtagāma-section.'

Imp 21. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, not thereto deputed, shall exhort the Bhikkhuni's²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

or fall himself, to the injury of some one who was rightfully on the ground floor.

¹ In the text read dvittiṭṭhādanassa: ṭhite pi. This rule, directed against too great luxury in the matter of a perfectly finished dwelling, is somewhat obscure, owing to our want of information as to the mode in which such dwellings should be put up. It refers probably to a hut, albeit a large one, of wattle and daub (kudda: comp. Rh. D.'s note on the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta V, 41). The Samanta-Pāsādikā divides dvāra-kosa into dvāra-okāsa, and quotes various estimates from the old Sinhalese commentaries as to the proper extent of this space (see Minayeff, p. 87).

² Ovadeyya; that is, shall preach to them the eight Garu-dhammā. On these see the passages mentioned in the Index appended to the text of the Kullavagga; and on the ovāda see Kullavagga X, 9, 2, and following. The mode of procedure is laid down in the Vibhaṅga as follows: 'The Bhikkhu asks the Bhikkhuni's, "Are you all present, sisters, and do none raise objections (that is, are you samaggā)?" If they say, "That is so, Sir!" he asks, "Are the eight Garu-dhammā being kept up?" If they say, "They are, Sir!" he is to say, "That, sisters, is the exhortation!" and so deliver it to them. If they say, "They are

22. If a Bhikkhu, even when thereto deputed, exhort the Bhikkhunî's after the sun has set—that is a Pâṭittiya.

23. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall go to the dwelling-place of Bhikkhunî's, and there exhort the Bhikkhunî's¹, except on the (right) occasion—that is a Pâṭittiya.

Herein this is the right occasion : (to wit), when a Bhikkhunî is ill. This is the right occasion in this passage.

24. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall speak thus : ' The Bhikkhus exhort the Bhikkhunî's for the sake of gain ²!'—that is a Pâṭittiya.

25. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall give a robe to a Bhikkhunî who is not related to him, except in exchange—that is a Pâṭittiya.

26. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall make up a robe, or have it made up, for a Bhikkhunî who is not related to him—that is a Pâṭittiya.

27. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, by appointment, shall travel along a high road in company with a Bhikkhunî, even to go as far as the village, except on the right occasion—that is a Pâṭittiya.

not, Sir!" he should go all through them, saying, "A sister who has been received into the higher grade even one hundred years, &c. (and so on to the end of the Garu-dhammâ)."

'If he preach any other Dhamma to those who say, "We, Sir, are all present, and none raise objections!" he is guilty of a Dukkata. If he preach the eight Garu-dhammâ to those who say, "No, Sir, that is not so!" (vagg' amh' ayyâ ti, where vagga is vyagra, the opposite of samagga), he is guilty of a Dukkata. If he preach another Dhamma, when the eight Garu-dhammâ have not committed to their charge, he is guilty of a Dukkata.'

¹ Compare Kullavagga X, 6, 1.

² Âmisa-hetu; that is, in order that the sisters may be induced to supply the preachers with food, medicine, &c.

Herein this is the right occasion : (to wit), when the road is so insecure and dangerous that travellers on it have to carry arms. This is the right occasion in this passage.

28. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, by appointment, shall go on board the same boat, whether going up stream or down stream, in company with a Bhikkhunī, except for the purpose of crossing over to the other side—that is a Pāṭittiya.

29. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, knowing it to be so, shall eat food procured by the intervention of a Bhikkhunī, unless the laity (who give the food) had already undertaken (to give it to him)¹—that is a Pāṭittiya.

30. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take a seat, one man with one woman, in company with a Bhikkhunī, in a secret place²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Here ends the third section,
the 'Bhikkhunovāda-section.'

31. A Bhikkhu who is not sick may take one meal at a public rest-house³. Should he take more than that—that is a Pāṭittiya.

¹ The introductory story in the Vibhaṅga is of a Bhikkhu born in Rāgagaha, who went to a relative's house, and a meal was there being prepared for him by his relatives. A kulupikā bhikkhunī then arrives, and says, 'My friends, give the gentleman a meal !' Then the Bhikkhu was in doubt whether he ought not to refuse it as being Bhikkhunī-paripāṭitam.

² Compare the Aniyatā Dhammā.

³ Eko āvasatha-piṇḍo bhuṅgitabbo. An āvasatha is one of those 'chaultries,' or public resting-places, which good Buddhists were wont to put up in the villages or at cross roads. At some of 32. There is Pākittiya in going in a body to receive a meal¹, except on the right occasion.

Herein the right occasion is this: (to wit), when there is sickness, when robes are being given, when robes are being made, when on a journey (on foot), when on board a boat, when (the influx of Bhikkhus) is great², when a general invitation is given to Samanas³. This is right occasion in this passage.

33. There is Pākittiya in taking food in turn⁴, except on the right occasion.

Herein the right occasion is this: (to wit), when there is sickness, when robes are being given, when these a constant supply of rice was provided for travellers. See the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta I, 10; II, 5 (pp. 10, 16); Gāṭaka, No. 31 ('Buddhist Birth Stories,' pp. 280-285); Mahā-sudassana Sutta I, 63; Dhammapada Commentary apud Fausböll, 185. The Samanta-Pāsādikā on this rule (Minayeff, p. 88) says that āvasatha-piṇḍo is a meal in such an āvasatha.

¹ On this rule compare Kullavagga VII, 3, 13. 'In a body' means four or more Bhikkhus going together to the same house.

² Mahā-samayo. The Vibhaṅga relates how, when vassa was over, the Bhikkhus repaired in great numbers to visit the Buddha. On such occasions it was difficult or impossible for them all, if they adhered to the strict rule, to obtain their meals.

³ Samana-bhatta-samayo. See the Vibhaṅga, and the Samanta-Pāsādikā, quoted by Minayeff, pp. 88, 89. 'Samanas,' of course, includes others besides Buddhists.

⁴ Parampara-bhogane; that is, in picking and choosing with regard to food, or in regard to different invitations. The Bhikkhus were to eat straight on whatever was given, and to accept invitations in the order in which they were received. But a sick Bhikkhu might choose one morsel rather than another; and Bhikkhus in health might accept an invitation to a house where robes are going to be given, or made, rather than to a house where only a meal was offered. The last exception was simply to guard against the stock of robes falling short (Bhikkhū . . . nādhivāsenti: kīvaram parittam uppagati, says the Vibhaṅga).

robes are being made. This is right occasion in this passage.

34. In case people should offer a Bhikkhu, who has gone to some house, to take as much as he chose of their sweetmeats and cakes, that Bhikkhu, should he so wish, may accept two or three bowls full¹. If he should accept more than that—that is a Pākittiya.

When he has accepted two or three bowls full¹, he must take them away, and divide them up among the Bhikkhus. That is the proper course in this case.

35. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when he has once finished his meal, though still invited (to continue eating²), shall eat or partake of³ food that has not been left over⁴, whether hard or soft⁵—that is a Pākittiya.

¹ In the text read dvittipattapurā.

The word for sweetmeats, pūva, includes all those sweetmeats which it was then (as it is now) the custom to send as presents from one house to another at weddings, funerals, and such occasions.

‘Cakes’ (mantha) refers to those rice-cakes, &c., which were usually prepared as provision for a journey. Compare Gātaka I, 80.

‘Should offer to take as much as he chose’ is the phrase referred to above in our note on the 7th Nissaggiya. The Vibhaṅga says here, Abhihaṭṭam pavāreyyā ’ti yāvatakam ikkhasi tāvatakam ganhāhiti.

² Pavārito. The Vibhaṅga says, Pavārito nāma āsanam paññāyati bhoganam paññāyati hatthapāse ’hito abhiharati paññāyati, which means, we think, ‘A seat for him is there, food is there, (the host) standing near him still makes invitation, but there takes place a refusal (of the proffered food).’

³ Khādeyya vā bhuñgeyya vā.

⁴ The ‘not left over’ refers only to the case of a sick Bhikkhu. A Bhikkhu in health, when he has once finished his meal, ought not to eat what he has left.

⁵ Khādaniyam vā bhoganiyam vā. The former term is used of hard food, such as biscuits, cakes, meats, fruits, &c.; the latter

36. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall offer a Bhikkhu who has finished his meal, though still invited to continue eating, his choice of food, whether hard or soft, that has not been left over, saying, 'Come, now, Bhikkhu; take and eat!' deliberately desiring to stir up longing (in that Bhikkhu); then if that Bhikkhu eats¹—that is a Pāṭittiya.

37. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take or eat any food, whether hard or soft, at the wrong time²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

38. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall eat food, whether hard or soft, that has been put by—that is a Pāṭittiya.

39. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when he is not sick, shall request, for his own use, and shall partake of delicacies—to wit, ghee, butter, oil, honey, molasses, fish, flesh, milk, curds³—that is a Pāṭittiya.

40. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall place, as food, within the door of his mouth, anything not given to him, save only water and a tooth-cleaner⁴—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Here ends the fourth section,
the 'Bhogana-section.'

41. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, with his own term of soft foods, such as boiled rice, curries, &c. The two words for eating correspond to these two ideas.

¹ Bhuttasmiṃ pāṭittiya; that is, the offence is completed when the eating has taken place; but the offer alone is not a Pāṭittiya. So the Vibhaṅga.

² After sun-turn.

³ In the text read tāni; madhu phāṇitaṃ.

⁴ Dantapona; doubtless the same, perhaps an older expression for, the danta kaṭṭha referred to in Kullavagga V, 31. It is a piece of fragrant root (cinnamon, betel, &c.) about eight inches long.

hand, give food, whether hard or soft, to an Aṭelaka or to a Paribbāgaka or to a *Paribbāgikā*¹—that is a Pāṭittiya.

42. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall address a Bhikkhu thus: 'Come, brother; let us go, for a meal, to the village, or the town!' and then, whether after he has got an alms for him, or without having got an alms for him, shall send him away, saying, 'Go away, brother! Talking with you, or sitting with you, is not pleasant to me. Talking, or sitting each one by himself, is more pleasant to me!'—if he does this for this cause, and for no other²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

43. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall force his way into a house where a meal is going on³, and take a seat there—that is a Pāṭittiya.

¹ These are the various non-Buddhist religious teachers or devotees, most of whom rejected the Vedas. The Paribbāgakas were mostly, though not always, wandering logicians, willing to maintain theses against all the world. Paribbāgikā is merely the feminine of the last. Aṭelaka, which naturally has no feminine, were the naked ascetics.

The sect now called Gains are divided into two classes, Svetambaras and Digambaras, the latter of which eat naked. They are known to be the successors of the school called Niganthas in the Pāli Piṭakas; and it is not certain whether the Niganthas are included in the Aṭelakas. It is probable that the Brāhman ascetics, the Vānaprasthas, were not included under the term Paribbāgakas; but our information on the exact meaning of these terms is, as yet, very imperfect.

² That is merely to get rid of him, in order to gain any purpose of his own. The Vibhaṅga gives as examples that the Bhikkhu sees some valuable things, and wants to get them; or sees some woman, and wants to speak to her.

³ Sabbhogane kule; the meaning of which is not quite clear. The Old Commentary says, 'A sabbhogana kula is one where

44. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take a seat, in secret, with a woman, in a concealed place¹—that is a Pâkittiya.

45. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall take a seat, in secret, with a woman, one man with one woman—that is a Pâkittiya.

46. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, who has been invited (to a house), and has been (thus already) provided with a meal, shall, without having previously spoken about it to a Bhikkhu, if there is one there, go on his (begging) rounds among the families, either before meal-time or after meal-time², except on the right occasion—that is a Pâkittiya.

there is a husband and a wife; and they both, husband and wife, are not gone forth from, are not devoid of lust' (Minayeff, p. 89, under P.; but for anatikkantâ read anikkhantâ). Then the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ, doubtless to justify this suggested implication, makes sabhoganam equal to saha ubho hi ganehi (!); or, in the alternative, to sabhogam, since 'the wife is the bhoga of a man still given to passion, and the husband the bhoga of a wife.' The use of Bhogana in any such sense is extremely forced, and was perhaps only suggested by the following rules; but it is just possible we should translate, 'a household still given to pleasure' (compare Kullavagga VIII, 5, 1), or 'fond of good food' (compare Milinda Pañha 76).

On anupakhagga compare the 16th Pâkittiya.

¹ Compare the 30th Pâkittiya, and the two Aniyatâ Dhammâ.

² The Vibhaṅga has the following stories in regard to these two particulars. A family devoted to Upananda invited him and another Bhikkhu. Before meal-time he went to attend on other families (purebhattam kulâni payirupâsati). The people delayed giving his meal to the other Bhikkhu till Upananda should arrive. He came late; and the other Bhikkhu was thereby discomforted.

The family devoted to Upananda sent him food for his use; saying it was to be given to the Samgha, with special reference to him. He had gone for an alms to the village. The messengers delivered the food and the message, and asked where Upananda was.

Herein the right occasion is this: (to wit), a time of giving of robes, a time of making of robes. That is right occasion in this passage.

47. A Bhikkhu who is not sick may accept a (standing) invitation with regard to the requisites¹ for four months. If he accept it for a period longer than that—unless there be a second invitation, or a perpetual invitation—that is a Pākittiya.

48. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall go to see an army drawn up in battle-array, except for a cause thereto sufficient—that is a Pākittiya.

49. And if there be any reason for that Bhikkhu's going to the army, that Bhikkhu may remain there for two or three nights. If he remain longer than that—that is a Pākittiya.

50. And if while remaining there for two or three nights he should go to the battle-array, or to the numbering of the forces, or to the drawing up of the forces, or to a review²—that is a Pākittiya.

End of the fifth section,
the 'Aṭṭelaka-section.'

The Bhikkhus told the matter to the Blessed One. He directed the present to be accepted, and laid by till Upananda should return. After Upananda returned, he nevertheless went out again to attend on other families, and the food so sent went bad.

The Bhikkhu is to tell a resident Bhikkhu before, on account of this rule, giving up his usual rounds, in order that he may still go if a sick Bhikkhu wants medicine.

The exceptions are, as above, to prevent the stock of robes falling short.

¹ These are usually four—clothing, food, residence, and medicine. This rule refers more especially to medicine, as appears from the explanation in the Vibhaṅga.

² On this rule compare the third section of the Magghima-Sīla,

51. There is Pāṭittiya in the drinking of fermented liquors, or strong drinks¹.

52. There is Pāṭittiya in poking (another person) with the finger.

53. There is Pāṭittiya in sporting in the water².

54. There is Pāṭittiya in disrespect³.

55. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall frighten a Bhikkhu⁴—that is a Pāṭittiya.

56. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, who is not sick, shall, desiring to warm himself⁵, kindle a fire, or have a fire kindled, without cause sufficient thereto—that is a Pāṭittiya.

57. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall bathe at intervals of less than half a month, except on the proper occasion—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Herein this is proper occasion: (to wit), the two and a half months during which there is hot weather, and during which there is fever; namely, the last month and a half of the heats, and the first month and the third section of the Mahâ-Sila (translated in Rh. D.'s 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli,' pp. 192, 198). We follow the Vibhaṅga in the interpretation of the various terms.

¹ The Old Commentary (quoted by Minayeff, p. 90) distinguishes between surâ and meraya by the former being derived from flour, water, &c., and the latter from flowers, fruits, &c.

² Throwing water over one another, and chasing one another, were common amusements at the public and private bathing-places. Our MSS. read throughout hâsa-dhamme.

³ Anâdariye. That is, according to the Vibhaṅga, paying no heed, when one's attention is drawn by an upasampanna to the fact that this or that action is against the rule laid down (paññatam). But compare also Kullavagga VIII, 8, 1.

⁴ In the text read bhimsâpeyya.

⁵ H. O.'s MS. reads visibbanâpekho. At Mahâvagga I, 20, 15, visibbesum occurs in the sense of 'they warmed themselves.' Trenckner at p. 47 of the Milinda Pañha reads aggam galetvâ visivetvâ; and at p. 102, samsibbitavisibbitattâ sâkhânam.

of the rains¹: when sick; when there is work; when on a journey; when there has been wind and rain. This is right occasion in this connection.

58. A Bhikkhu who receives a new robe must choose one or other mode of disfigurement out of the three modes of disfigurement; either (making part of it) dark blue, or (marking part of it with) mud, or (making part of it) black. If a Bhikkhu should make use of a new robe without choosing one or other mode of disfigurement out of the three modes of disfigurement²—that is a Pāṭittiya.

59. Whatsoever Bhikkhu who has made over³ his robe to a Bhikkhu, or to a Bhikkhunī, or to a probationer, or to a Sāmaṇera, or to a Sāmaṇerī, shall continue to make use of it as a thing not (formally) given—that is a Pāṭittiya.

¹ The Vibhaṅga refers the first of these periods to the hot weather, and the second to the fever weather.

² In the text insert a full stop after kā/asāmaṃ vā. The object of this rule, according to the Vibhaṅga, is to enable a Bhikkhu to trace his robe should it get lost by being mixed up with others. Compare the 15th Nissaggiya.

³ The Vibhaṅga says, 'There are two ways of appointment (in making over, vikappanā), promising in the presence, and promising in the absence (of the person to whom the appointment is made). Promise in the presence is by the words, "I make over this robe to you, or to such and such a one (then present)!" Promising in the absence is by the words, "I give this robe to you for you to appoint (to some one else)." Then the person spoken to should say, "Who is your friend, or intimate acquaintance?" "Such a one, or such a one." Then the other should say, "I give this to them. This is their property. Wear it, or part with it, or do with it as you like!"'

These last are the formal words used on presenting a robe; and by their use the property in the robe is transferred. After that the original owner, in spite of the formal words, may not, according to our rule, continue to use the robe.

On apaṭṭuddhāraṃ see Childers, sub voce paṭṭuddhāro.

60. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall hide, or cause another to hide, a Bhikkhu's bowl, or his robe, or the mat on which he sits, or his needle-case¹, or his girdle, even though in fun—that is a Pâkittiya.

End of the sixth section,
the 'Surâpâna-section.'

61. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall deliberately deprive any living thing of life—that is a Pâkittiya.

62. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, knowingly, drink water with living things in it—that is a Pâkittiya.

63. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall stir up for decision again a matter which he knows to have been settled according to the Dhamma²—that is a Pâkittiya.

64. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, who knows of it, shall conceal a serious offence³ committed by a Bhikkhu—that is a Pâkittiya.

65. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall admit a person under twenty years of age to the higher grade in the Order, knowing him (or her) to be so—(while) the person is not admitted to the higher grade, and the other Bhikkhus (who assist) are blameworthy—this is in him⁴ a Pâkittiya.

66. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, by appointment, journey along the same route with a caravan of

¹ In the text read sûkigharam.

² Compare the 79th Pâkittiya, and Kullavagga IV, 14 passim.

³ That is, a Pârâgika, or a Samghâdisesa.

⁴ The upagghâya is guilty of a Pâkittiya; the âkariya, and the gana, of a Dukkaṭa, says the Vibhaṅga.

robbers, knowing it to be such, even as far as the next village¹—that is a Pākittiya.

67. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, by appointment, journey along the same route with a woman², even as far as the next village—that is a Pākittiya.

68. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall speak thus: ‘In this wise do I understand that the Dhamma has been proclaimed by the Blessed One: that to him who cultivates those Qualities which have been called “dangerous” by the Blessed One, there is not sufficient danger (to prevent his acquiring spiritual gifts)³;’ then that Bhikkhu should be addressed by the Bhikkhus thus: ‘Say not so, brother! bear not false witness against the Blessed One! For neither is it seemly to bring a false accusation against the Blessed One, nor could the Blessed One speak so. By many a figure⁴, brother, have the Dangerous Qualities been declared by the Blessed One to be full of danger⁵, and also to be sufficient to prevent him who cultivates them (from attaining spiritual gifts)³.’ If that Bhikkhu, when he has thus been spoken to by the Bhikkhus, should persist as before, then let that Bhikkhu be (formally) admonished about it by the Bhikkhus as a body, even to the third time, to the intent that he abandon that course.

¹ Compare the 27th Pākittiya. A caravan that sets out with intent to steal or rob on the way is meant.

² Compare the 27th and 28th Pākittiyas.

³ These are specified in detail in Mahāvagga II, 3, 7.

⁴ Pariyāya; fulness, extent, of illustration and explanation. Not merely manner, or method, of statement. Much of this pariyāya will be found in the various similes used in the Kullavagga loc. cit.

⁵ In the text here, and in the corresponding clause of No. 70, read anekapariyāyena āvuso antarāyikā dhammā antarāyikā vuttā bhagavatā, as in Kullavagga I, 32.

If, while being so admonished, up to the third time, he abandon that course, it is well. If he abandon it not—that is a Pâḷittiya¹.

69. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, knowing him to be so, shall eat in company with, or dwell together with², or sleep in one place with a Bhikkhu who talks thus (as in 68), and has not been dealt with according to the law³, and has not laid aside his delusion—that is a Pâḷittiya.

70. If a Sâmaṇera⁴ even should say thus: 'In this wise do I understand that the Dhamma has been proclaimed by the Blessed One: that to him who cultivates those Qualities which have been called "dangerous" by the Blessed One there is not sufficient danger (to prevent his attaining to spiritual gifts);' then that Sâmaṇera should be addressed by the Bhikkhus thus: 'Say not so, good Sâmaṇera! Bear not false witness against the Blessed One. For neither is it seemly to bring a false accusation against the Blessed One, nor could the Blessed One speak so. By many a figure, good Sâmaṇera, have the

¹ This rule is directed against the delusion that sin, to a very holy man, loses its danger and its sinfulness. Compare the 4th Samghâdisesa; and, on the method of procedure here laid down, the 10th to the 13th Samghâdisesas. At Kullavagga I, 32 lust is declared to be an antarâyiko dhammo; and falsehood another at Mahāvagga II, 3, 3. The Samanta-Pâsâdikâ (quoted by Mina-yeff, p. 92) gives five divisions of these 'dangerous qualities.'

² This the Vibhaṅga explains as holding Upasatha, or Pavâ-ranâ, or a Samghakamma with him.

³ Ukkhitto anosârîto, says the Vibhaṅga. Compare Mahāvagga IX, 4, 10, 11.

⁴ Samanuddeso; which is explained by the Old Commentary as equal to Sâmaṇera. Why, in the Pâtimokkha, now one and now the other expression should be used, is not clear. In the later texts Sâmaṇera is the usual form, but samanuddeso is found also in a few passages.

Dangerous Qualities been declared by the Blessed One to be full of danger, and also to be sufficient to prevent him who cultivates them (from attaining to spiritual gifts).’ And if that Sāmaṇera, when so addressed by the Bhikkhus, shall persist in that course, that Sāmaṇera should be addressed by the Bhikkhus thus: ‘From this day forth, good Sāmaṇera, neither can that Blessed One be referred to¹ by you as your Teacher, nor can the privilege, which the other Sāmaṇeras enjoy, of sleeping in the same place with the Bhikkhus for two or three nights², any longer be yours! Depart! away with you³!’

Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall encourage⁴, or support⁵, or eat with, or sleep in the same place with, a Sāmaṇera thus expelled—that is a Pākittiya.

End of the seventh section,
the ‘Sappāṇaka⁶-section.’

¹ Apadisitabbo. Compare the four Mahāpadesā in the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta IV, 7-11.

² Compare the 5th Pākittiya.

³ In the text read kara pi re; that is, kara api re, instead of kara pare. On vinassa compare Mahāvagga I, 61, 1.

⁴ Upalāpeyya. Compare Mahāvagga I, 59, and Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta I, 5, and the passages quoted in Rh. D.’s version of the latter passage. The Old Commentary says, ‘Flatters him (talks him over, tassa upalāpeti) by saying, “I will give you a bowl, or a robe, or hear you repeat, or answer your questions.”’

⁵ Upaṭṭhāpeyya. The Old Commentary says, ‘by providing him with chunam, or clay, or a tooth-cleanser, or water to wash his face with.’ No doubt upaṭṭhāpeti is used in the sense of showing such personal attentions to another, as the upaṭṭhāka did to the Buddha; and such services would very rightly come under this rule. Yet here, as often, the comment is rather a scholastic exegesis of the sentence, than a philologically exact explanation of the word.

⁶ This title is taken from the second, not, as in all the other cases, from the first rule in the section.

71. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when admonished by the Bhikkhus in respect of some precept in accordance with the Dhamma, shall speak thus: 'I cannot submit myself to that precept, brother, until I shall have enquired touching it of another Bhikkhu, an experienced master of the Vinaya'—that is a Pāṭittiya.

A Bhikkhu desirous of training, Bhikkhus¹, should learn, and enquire, and settle in his own mind. This is the right rule in this connection.

72. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when the Pâtimokkha is being recited, shall speak thus: 'What comes of these minor² precepts being here recited, save only that they tend to misgiving, and worry, and perplexity!'—there is Pāṭittiya in thus throwing contempt on the precepts³.

73. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when at the half month the Pâtimokkhā is being recited, should say thus: 'Now for the first time do I notice that this rule, they say, is handed down in the Suttas, is embraced in the Suttas!'—then, if the other Bhikkhus shall know concerning that Bhikkhu thus: 'This Bhikkhu has taken his place at the recitation of the Pâtimokkha once, or twice, not to say oftener⁴'—that Bhikkhu is not only not made free on account of his ignorance⁵, but he is to be dealt with according to the Dhamma for the offence into which he has fallen, and furthermore he is to be charged with foolishness (in the words), 'This is loss to thee,

¹ On this strange allocution see the note to the 10th Nissaggiya.

² Khuddânukhuddakehi. Compare the Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta VI, 3, and the passages quoted there in Rh. D.'s note.

³ In the text read vivānnake.

⁴ In the text read ko pana vâdo bhiyyo.

⁵ In the text read aññānakena.

brother, this is an evil to thee, in that when the Pātimokkha is being recited you fail to take it to your heart, and attend to it with care.' There is Pāḷittiya in such foolish conduct.

74. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being angry or displeased with another Bhikkhu, shall give a blow—that is a Pāḷittiya.

75. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, being angry or displeased with another Bhikkhu, shall make use of any threatening gesture¹—that is a Pāḷittiya.

76. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall harass a Bhikkhu with a (charge of) Samghâdisesa without ground—that is a Pāḷittiya.

77. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall intentionally suggest difficulties of conscience to a Bhikkhu, with the idea of causing him uneasiness, even for a moment; if he does it to that end alone—that is a Pāḷittiya.

78. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall stand by overhearing when Bhikkhus are quarrelling, or making a disturbance, or engaged in a dispute, hoping to hear what they shall utter; if he does it to that end alone—that is a Pāḷittiya.

79. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when he has declared his consent to formal proceedings conducted according to the Dhamma, shall thereafter grumble (about those proceedings)²—that is a Pāḷittiya.

¹ Talasattikam uggireyya. The Old Commentary says, Kāyam vâ kāyapaṭibaddham vâ antamaso uppalapattam pi ukkâreti. Compare âvudhâni uggiritvâ at Gâtaka I, 150.

² If he should raise any formal objections so as to re-open the question, that would fall under the 63rd Pāḷittiya. On 'declaring one's consent' in this and the following rule, see below, Mahāvagga II, 23. The whole rule, as well as on No. 63, is repeatedly referred to in Kullavagga IV, 14.

80. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when the Samgha is engaged in conducting a (formal) enquiry, shall rise from his seat, and go away, without having declared his consent—that is a Pâkittiya.

81. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when, in a regularly constituted *Samgha*¹, he has given away a robe, shall thereafter grumble about it, saying, 'The Bhikkhus appropriate the property of the Samgha according to friendship'—that is a Pâkittiya.

82. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall divert to the use of any individual property dedicated to the Samgha, knowing it to be so—that is a Pâkittiya.

Here ends the eighth section, the 'Sahadhammika-section.'

83. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall cross the threshold of an anointed Khattiya king, when the king has not gone forth, and the queen has not withdrawn, without first having had himself announced²—that is a Pâkittiya.

¹ Samaggena samghena. See the note to the 21st Pâkittiya.

² Indakhîla, the word translated 'threshold,' is explained in the Old Commentary by sayani-ghara, 'sleeping chamber;' but this is rather a didactic gloss on the rule. Compare the note above on the 43rd Pâkittiya. The phrase 'when the queen has not gone in' is somewhat doubtful. H. O.'s MS. of the Vibhaṅga reads (as Minayeff does) aniggata-ratanake, instead of Dickson's anîhata-ratanake. The former is the better reading; nîhata is impossible, it must be either nihata or nîhata. But ratanaka, though the queen is one of the seven Ratanas of a king, is not found elsewhere used absolutely for a queen: the use of râgake, too, immediately after rañño, instead of raññe or râgini, is curious. A possible alternative rendering would be 'when the court has not departed, and the regalia not laid aside:' but we prefer on

84. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall pick up, or cause another to pick up, except in a grove or in a dwelling-place, a jewel, or anything deemed a jewel¹—that is a Pāṭittiya.

Should a Bhikkhu have picked up, either in a grove or in a dwelling-place, a jewel, or anything deemed a jewel, it is to be laid aside, that he to whom it may belong may take it away. This is the right course in such a case.

85. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall, out of hours², enter a village, without having informed a Bhikkhu if one is present³, except on account of business of a special nature⁴ thereto sufficient—that is a Pāṭittiya.

86. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have a needle-case made of bone, or ivory, or horn, it shall be broken up—and that is a Pāṭittiya.

87. When a Bhikkhu is having a new bedstead or chair made, it should be made with legs eight inches in height, according to the accepted inch⁵, exclusive of the lowermost piece of the bed frame⁶. To him who exceeds that limit there is a Pāṭittiya, the whole the Old Commentator's explanation of rāgaka and ratanaka.

¹ Ratanasammatam; that is, a thing made of one of those substances ranked with gems, such as jade, coral, &c.

² Vikāle; that is, says the Old Commentary, from sun-turn in one day till sun-rise in the next.

³ Santam bhikkhum. If one is not present, he may go without. The Old Commentary gives no such definition of being present, as Mr. Dickson has supplied.

⁴ Akkāyika. Compare the note on the 28th Nissaggiya.

⁵ Sugataṅgulena. See the note on the 6th Samghādisesa.

⁶ A/ani. There is no explanation of this term, either in the Old Commentary, or in the Samanta-Pāsādikā.

and (the legs of the piece of furniture) shall be cut down (to the proper size).

88. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have a bedstead or a chair made, stuffed with cotton¹, the stuffing shall be torn out—and that is a Pâkittiya.

89. When a Bhikkhu is having a rug or mat to sit upon made, it must be made of the right measure. Herein this is the measure: in length two spans, according to the accepted span; in breadth one span; the border one span. To him who exceeds that limit there is a Pâkittiya, and (the article) shall be cut down (to the proper size).

90. When a Bhikkhu is having an itch-cloth² made, it must be made of the right measure. Herein this is the measure: in length four spans, according to the accepted span; in width two spans. To him who exceeds that limit there is a Pâkittiya, and (the cloth) shall be cut (down to the proper size).

91. When a Bhikkhu is having a garment made for the rainy season, it must be made of the right measure. Herein this is the right measure: in length six spans, according to the accepted span; in breadth two spans and a half. To him who exceeds that limit there is a Pâkittiya, and (the garment) shall be cut (down to the proper size).

92. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall have a robe made of the dimensions of a Sugata's robe³, or larger—

¹ Tûlam; which the Old Commentary expands into three kinds—tûlam from a tree, tûlam from a creeper, and tûlam from a young fowl.

² When a Bhikkhu had a boil, or running sore, or any such disease, the use of an itch-cloth (so called from the first in the list of skin complaints there mentioned) is laid down in Mahāvagga VIII, 17.

³ On the doubtful meaning of Sugata, see the note above on that is a Pākittiya, and (the robe) shall be cut down to the proper size.

Herein this is the measure of the Sugata robe of a Sugata: in length nine spans, according to the accepted span; in breadth six spans. This is the measure of the Sugata robe of a Sugata.

End of the ninth section,
the 'Ratana-section.'

Venerable Sirs, the ninety-two rules regarding matters requiring expiation have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Pākittiyas.

the 28th Nissaggiya. There is no reason whatever to believe that Gotama's robe was larger, in proportion, than those worn by the other members of his order. He exchanged robes with Mahā Kassapa. Of the two sets of robes brought by Pukkusa, one was given to Ānanda, and one was reserved for the Buddha himself; and no one can read the account in the Mahā-parinibbāna Sutta without feeling that both are supposed to be of the same size.

PÂTIDESANIYÂ DHAMMÂ.

RULES REGARDING MATTERS WHICH OUGHT TO BE CONFESSED.

Here, venerable Sirs, the four rules regarding matters which ought to be confessed come into recitation.

1. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, when a Bhikkhunî not related to him has entered within the houses¹, shall, with his own hand, accept at her hands food, either hard or soft, and eat or enjoy it—that is a matter which ought to be confessed by that Bhikkhu, saying, ‘I have fallen, Brethren, into a blameworthy offence, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; and I confess it!’

2. Now Bhikkhus, when they have been invited to laymen’s houses, eat. If the Bhikkhunî stay there giving directions, saying, ‘Here give curry, give rice here!’ the Bhikkhunî ought to be rebuked by those Bhikkhus, saying, ‘Stand aside, Sister, as long as the Bhikkhus are eating!’ If it should not occur to a single Bhikkhu to rebuke the Bhikkhunî, saying, ‘Stand aside, Sister, as long as the Bhikkhus are eating!’—that is a matter that ought to be confessed by those Bhikkhus, saying, ‘We have fallen, Brethren, into a blameworthy offence, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; and we confess it!’

3. Whatsoever Bhikkhu shall accept, with his own hand, food, either hard or soft, in such households as have been (by a formal sammuti) declared to be households, under discipline¹, without having been previously invited, and without being sick, and eat it or enjoy it—that is a matter that ought to be confessed by that Bhikkhu, saying, ‘I have fallen, Brethren, into a blameworthy offence, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; and I confess it!’

¹ Antaragharam pavittâ; that is, during her alms-visit to the village. Compare the 3rd Sekhiya; Mahāvagga I, 23, 3; and Kullavagga VIII, 5, 2.

4. Whatsoever Bhikkhu, while he is dwelling in a place belonging to the class of those forest dwellings which are held to be insecure and dangerous², shall accept, with his own hand, at his home, food, either hard or soft, without having previously given notice (of the danger incurred by people that enter that forest), unless he is sick, and shall eat it or enjoy it—that is a matter that ought to be confessed by that Bhikkhu, saying, ‘I have fallen, Brethren, into a blameworthy offence, unbecoming, which ought to be confessed; and I confess it!’

Here end the Pâtidesaniyas.

Venerable Sirs, the four rules regarding matters which require confession have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, ‘Are you pure in this matter?’

¹ Sekha-sammatâni kulâni; which the Vibhaṅga explains as a household grown rich in faith, but poor in goods; where whatever they get is given away to the Order, though the family may be some days in want of it. Compare what is said of Anâthapindika in the Introduction to the 40th Gâtaka (Gâtaka I, 228); though his lot had not reached the very lowest limit.

² Compare the 29th Nissaggiya.

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Pâṭidesaniyas.

SEKHIYÂ DHAMMÂ.

RULES REGARDING MATTERS CONNECTED WITH DISCIPLINE.

Here, venerable Sirs, the rules regarding matters connected with discipline come into recitation.

1. 'I will put on my under garment all around me¹.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

2. 'I will put on my robe all around me.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

3. 'Properly clad will I go amidst the houses².' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

4. 'Properly clad will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

5. '(With my body) under proper control³ will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

6. '(With my body) under proper control will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

7. 'With downcast eye⁴ will I go amidst the ¹ Parimandalam: 'so as to cover the navel-mandala, and the knee-mandala,' says the Old Commentary. Compare Childers sub voce Timandalam; and Kullavagga VIII, 5, 2.

² Antaraghare. The antaragharam is the space in a village between the huts; not exactly the same, and yet in the following rules practically the same, as the village (gâma).

³ Not, for instance, with dirty hands or feet, according to the Vibhaṅga.

⁴ The practical rule is for a Bhikkhu to look at a spot in the ground about a plough's length in front of him.

houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

8. 'With downcast eye will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

9. 'With robes not pulled up¹ will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

10. 'With robes not pulled up will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the first section.

11. 'Not with loud laughter will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

12. 'Not with loud laughter will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

13. 'Making but a little sound will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

14. 'Making but a little sound will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

15. 'Without swaying my body about will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

16. 'Without swaying my body about will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

¹ Or perhaps 'thrown off.' He is to be fully dressed as laid down in the 1st and 2nd Sekhiyas.

17. 'Without swaying my arms about will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

18. 'Without swaying my arms about will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

19. 'Without swaying my head about will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

20. 'Without swaying my head about will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the second section.

21. 'With my arms not akimbo¹ will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

22. 'With my arms not akimbo will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

23. 'With my head uncovered² will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

24. 'With my head uncovered will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

¹ Nakkhambhakato: 'putting the hands on the hips,' says the Old Commentary.

² Na ogun/hito: which the Old Commentary applies to the head.

25. 'Without walking on my heels or my toes¹ will I go amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

26. 'Without lolling² will I take my seat amidst the houses.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

27. 'With mind alert³ will I receive an alms.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

28. 'Paying attention to my bowl will I receive an alms.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

29. 'With equal curry⁴ will I receive an alms.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

30. 'Equally full⁵ will I receive an alms.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the third section.

31. 'With mind alert will I eat the alms placed in my bowl.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

32. 'Paying attention to my bowl will I eat the ¹ Na ukku/ikâya; an unusual sense of the word; but it is so explained here by the Old Commentary.

² Na pallatthikâya. 'Without making a rest with his hands, or with a cloth,' according to the Old Commentary. Compare the Tipallattha-miga Gâtaka, and No. 65 below.

³ Sakkakkam. Satim upa//hâpetvâ, says the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ. See also No. 31.

⁴ Samasûpakam. 'When the curry is in quantity one-fourth of the rice' explains the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ. See No. 34.

⁵ Samatittikam. 'Equally full, equally heaped up (samabhâritam)' explains the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ. Compare the several passages quoted in Rh. D.'s note on Tevigga Sutta I, 24.

alms placed in my bowl.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

33. 'Begging straight on from house to house¹ will I eat the alms placed in my bowl.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

34. 'With equal curry will I eat the alms placed in my bowl.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

35. 'Without pressing down from the top² will I eat the alms placed in my bowl.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

36. 'Neither the curry nor the condiment will I cover up with the rice, desiring to make it nicer³.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

37. 'Neither curry nor rice will I ask for, for my own particular use, unless I am sick.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

38. 'Not with envious thoughts will I look at others' bowls.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

39. 'Not into too large balls will I make (up my food).' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

40. 'Into round mouthfuls will I make up my food.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the fourth section.

¹ Sapadānam. See Childers sub voce. The Vibhaṅga says, Khabbaggiyā bhikkhū taṃ taṃ omadditvā pindapātaṃ bhuṅganti. The Samanta-Pāsādikā says, Sapadānan ti tattha tattha odhim akatvā anupāpāsiyā.

² Na thūpato omadditvā; on which the Samanta-Pāsādikā has 'matthakato vemagghato ti.' He is not to pick and choose what morsel he takes.

³ Compare the 8th Nissaggiya. In the text read upādāya.

41. 'Not till the ball is brought close will I open the door of my mouth.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

42. 'Not the whole hand, when eating, will I put into my mouth.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

43. 'When the food is in my mouth will I not talk.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

44. 'Without tossing the food into my mouth will I eat¹.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

45. 'Without nibbling at the balls of food will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

46. 'Without stuffing my cheeks out will I eat?.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

47. 'Without shaking my hands about³ will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

48. 'Without scattering the lumps of boiled rice will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

49. 'Without putting out my tongue will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

50. 'Without smacking my lips⁴ will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the fifth section.

¹ *Pind*ukkhepakan ti pindam ukkhipitvâ ukkhipitvâ, says the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ.

² Avagandakâra kan ti makkato viya gande katvâ, says the Samanta-Pâsâdikâ (Minayeff, p. 93).

³ That is, to disengage particles of the rice, to shake them off on to the ground.

⁴ Literally, without making the sound 'Kapu-kapu.'

51. 'Without making a hissing sound will I eat¹.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

52. 'Without licking my fingers will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

53. 'Without licking my bowl will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

54. 'Without licking my lips will I eat.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

55. 'Not with a hand soiled with food will I take hold of the water-jar.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

56. 'The rinsings of the bowl mixed with lumps of boiled rice will I not throw into the inner court².' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

57. 'Not to a person with a sunshade in his hand, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

58. 'Not to a person with a staff in his hand, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

59. 'Not to a person with a sword in his hand, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

60. 'Not to a person with a weapon in his hand, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the sixth section.

61. 'Not to a person wearing slippers, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

¹ Literally, without making the sound 'Suru-suru.'

² Antaraghare, which here means the space, or small open square in the middle of the house.

62. 'Not to a person wearing sandals, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

63. 'Not to a person seated in a cart, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

64. 'Not to a person lying on a couch, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

65. 'Not to a person lolling, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

66. 'Not to a person with a turban on his head, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

67. 'Not to a person with his head covered, unless he is sick, will I preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

68. 'Not to a person seated on a seat, unless he is sick, will I, seated on the earth, preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

69. 'Not to a person seated on a high seat, unless he is sick, will I, seated on a low seat, preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

70. 'Not to a person sitting, unless he is sick, will I, standing, preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

End of the seventh section.

71. 'Not to a person walking in front of me, unless he is sick, will I, walking behind, preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

72. 'Not to a person walking on a path, unless he is sick, will I, walking by the side of the path, preach the Dhamma.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

73. 'Not standing will I ease myself, unless I am sick.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

74. 'Not on growing grass will I ease myself, or spit.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

75. 'Not into water will I ease myself, or spit.' This is a discipline which ought to be observed.

Venerable Sirs, the rules regarding matters of discipline have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Sekhiyas.

THE ADHIKARANA-SAMATHÂ DHAMMÂ.

THE RULES REGARDING THE SETTLEMENT OF CASES.

Here, venerable Sirs, the seven rules regarding the settlement of cases come into recitation.

For the decision and settlement of cases as they from time to time arise, the Proceeding in presence¹ must be performed, or the Proceeding for the consciously innocent², or the Proceeding in the case of those who are no longer out of their mind³, or the Proceeding on confession of guilt⁴, or the Proceeding by majority of the chapter⁵, or the Proceeding for the obstinate⁶, or the Proceeding by covering over as with grass⁷.

Venerable Sirs, the seven rules regarding the settlement of cases have been recited.

In respect of them I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A second time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

A third time I ask the venerable ones, 'Are you pure in this matter?'

¹ Sammukhâ-vinaya. See Kullavagga IV, 14, 16, and following.

² Sati-vinaya. See Kullavagga IV, 14, 27.

³ Amûlha-vinaya. See Kullavagga IV, 5, and following, and IV, 14, 28.

⁴ Paññâya. See Kullavagga IV, 7, 8.

⁵ Yebhuyyasikâ. See Kullavagga IV, 9, and IV, 14, 24.

⁶ Tassapâpiyyasikâ. See Kullavagga IV, 11.

⁷ Tinavatthâraka. See Kullavagga IV, 13.

The venerable ones are pure herein. Therefore do they keep silence. Thus I understand.

Here endeth the recitation of the Adhikarana-samathas.

Venerable Sirs! Recited is the Introduction.
 Recited are the four Pârâgika Rules.
 Recited are the thirteen Samghâdisesa Rules.
 Recited are the two Aniyata Rules.
 Recited are the thirty Nissaggiya-Pâkittiya Rules.
 Recited are the ninety-two Pâkittiya Rules.
 Recited are the four Pâtidesaniya Rules.
 Recited are the Sekhiya Rules.
 Recited are the seven Adhikarana-samatha Rules.

So much (of the words) of the Blessed One, handed down in the Suttas, embraced in the Suttas, comes into recitation every half month. It behoveth all to train themselves according thereto in concord, in pleasantness, without dispute!

Here endeth the recitation of the Pâtimokkha for the use of the Bhikkhus.

MAHÂVAGGA.

THE MAHĀVAGGA.

REVERENCE TO THE BLESSED ONE, THE HOLY ONE,
THE FULLY ENLIGHTENED ONE.

FIRST KHANDHAKA.

(THE ADMISSION TO THE ORDER OF BHIKKHUS.)

1¹.

I. At that time the blessed Buddha dwelt at

¹ To this book is prefixed, as introduction, an account of the first events after Gotama's attaining Buddhahood, down to the conversion of his two chief disciples, Sāriputta and Moggallāna (chaps. 1-24). Among the elements of historical or legendary character with which, in the Vinaya Piṭaka, the discussion of the monastic discipline is interwoven, this account occupies by far the first place, both in extent and in importance. For it contains the oldest version accessible to us now and, most probably, for ever, of what the Buddhist fraternity deemed to be the history of their Master's life in its most important period.

The connection in which this legendary narration stands with the main subject of the first Khandhaka is not difficult to account for. The regulations regarding the admission to the fraternity, which are discussed in this Khandhaka, could not but present themselves to the redactors of the Piṭaka as being the very basis of their religious discipline and monastic life. It was possible to fancy the existence of the Saṃgha without the Pātimokkha rules, or without the regulations about the Pavāraṇā festival, but it was impossible to realise the idea of a Saṃgha without rules showing who was to be regarded as a duly admitted member of the fraternity, and who was not. It is quite natural, therefore, that the stories or legends concerning the ordination of Bhikkhus were put in connection with the record of the very first events of the history of the Saṃgha.

Nor is it difficult to account for the theory formulated by the Uruvelâ, on the bank of the river Nerañgarâ¹, at the foot of the Bodhi tree (tree of wisdom), just after he had become Sambuddha. And the blessed Buddha sat cross-legged at the foot of the Bodhi tree uninterruptedly during seven days, enjoying the bliss of emancipation².

historians of the Buddhist ecclesiastical law, of different successive forms in which the ordination of Bhikkhus had been performed. In the beginning, of course, there was nobody but the Buddha himself who could ordain Bhikkhus; to him those who desired to be received, expressed their wish, and he conferred on them the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations by the formula: 'Ehi bhikkhu,' &c. (see I, 6, 32, 34, &c.) It was a very natural conception that afterwards, as the Samgha grew larger, the Buddha should have transferred the power of admitting new members to the Bhikkhus themselves, and should have instituted that form of ordination which the redactors of the Piṭaka found valid at their own time.

The transition, however, from the supposed oldest form of ordination (the so-called ehi-bhikkhu-upasampadâ) to that latter form is in the Vinaya legends not represented as immediate. There is described an intermediate stage between the two, the ordination by the three sarāṇagamanas, or by the candidate's three times repeated declaration of his taking refuge in the Buddha, the Dhamma, and the Samgha (see Mahāvagga I, 12). The reason which has led the redactors of the Vinaya Piṭaka to this construction, was most probably the important part which in the upasampadâ service of the later time devolved upon the preceptor (upagghāya) of the candidate. As only learned Bhikkhus, who had completed the tenth year after their own upasampadâ, could perform the function of upagghāya at the upasampadâ ordination of other Bhikkhus (Mahāvagga I, 31, 8), it was natural that the redactors of the Vinaya found it impossible to ascribe this form of upasampadâ service to the first times of Buddha's teaching. For these times, therefore, they recorded another form, the upasampadâ by the three sarāṇagamanas, the introduction of which they assigned, very naturally, to the time soon after the conversion of Yasa's friends, by which event the number of Bhikkhus had been augmented at once from seven to sixty-one.

¹ The Lilayan or Phalgu river in Behar; see General Cunningham's map, Archaeological Reports, vol. i. plate iii.

² After having reached the sambodhi and before preaching to

2. Then the Blessed One (at the end of these seven days) during the first watch of the night fixed his mind upon the Chain of Causation¹, in direct and in reverse order: 'From Ignorance² spring the sam-the world the truth he has acquired, the Buddha remains, according to the tradition, during some weeks at Uruvelâ, 'enjoying the bliss of emancipation.' The Mahâvagga, which contains these legends in their oldest forms, assigns to this stay a period of four times seven days; the later tradition is unanimous in extending it to seven times seven days (Buddhaghosa in the commentary on the Mahâvagga; Gâtaka Atthav. vol. i. p. 77 seq.; Dîpavamsa I, 29, 30; Lalita Vistara, p. 488 seq.; Beal, Romantic Legend, p. 236 seq., &c.)

¹ The Chain of Causation, or the doctrine of the twelve nidânas (causes of existence), contains, as has often been observed, in a more developed form an answer to the same problem to which the second and third of the four Noble Truths (ariyasakkâ) also try to give a solution, viz. the problem of the origin and destruction of suffering. The Noble Truths simply reduce the origin of suffering to Thirst, or Desire (Taṇhâ), in its threefold form, thirst for pleasure, thirst for existence, thirst for prosperity (see I, 6, 20). In the system of the twelve nidânas Thirst also has found its place among the causes of suffering, but it is not considered as the immediate cause. A concatenation of other categories is inserted between taṇhâ and its ultimate effect; and on the other hand, the investigation of causes is carried on further beyond taṇhâ. The question is here asked, What does taṇhâ come from? and thus the series of causes and effects is led back to aviggâ (Ignorance), as its deepest root. We may add that the redactors of the Piṭakas, who of course could not but observe this parallelity between the second and third ariyasakkâs and the system of the twelve nidânas, go so far, in one instance (Ânguttara-Nikâya, Tika-Nipâta, fol. ke of the Phayre MS.), as to directly replace, in giving the text of the four ariyasakkâs, the second and third of them by the twelve nidânas, in direct and reverse order respectively. Professor Childers has furnished a valuable note on the nidânas; see Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays (second edition), II, 453 seq.

² In the Sammâdiṭṭhisuttanta (Magghima-Nikâya, fol. khû of Turnour's MS.) we find the following explanation of what Ignorance is: 'Not to know Suffering, not to know the Cause of suffering, khâras¹, from the samkhâras springs Consciousness, from Consciousness spring Name-and-Form, from Name-and-Form spring the six Provinces (of the not to know the Cessation of suffering, not to know the Path which leads to the cessation of suffering, this is called Ignorance.' The same is repeated in the explanation of the nidâna formula, which is given in the Vibhaṅga (Abhidhamma-Piṭaka, Paṭikkasamuppâdaviḥaṅga, fol. 4i of the Phayre MS.), and we must accept it, therefore, as the authentic expression of Buddhistical belief. It is obvious, however, that this explanation leaves room for another question. Ignorance, we are told, is the source of all evil and of all suffering, and the subject ignored is stated to be the four Truths. But who is the subject that ignores them? All attributes (as the viññâṇa, &c.), that constitute sentient beings and enable them to know or to ignore, are said to be first produced by Ignorance, and we should conclude, therefore, that they cannot exist before Ignorance has begun to act. Or are we to understand that it is the Ignorance incurred by a sentient being in a preceding existence, that causes the samkhâras and Consciousness, the connecting links between the different existences; to act and to bring about the birth of a new being?

As is well known, this Ignorance (Avidyâ) plays a great part also in the Brahmanical philosophy of the Upanishads; and the Buddhist belief is, no doubt, founded to a considerable extent on older theories. But we cannot venture in a note to touch upon one of the most difficult and interesting questions which await the research of Indianists.

¹ It is very frequently stated that there are three samkhâras or productions: kâyasamkhâra, vaġīsamkhâra, and ġittasamkhâra, or, productions of body, of speech, and of thought (see, for instance, the Sammâdhisuttanta, Magghima-Nikâya, fol. khû of Turnour's MS.) The kâyasamkhâra consists, according to the Samkhâra-Yamaka (Abhidhamma-Piṭaka), in inhalation and expiration (assâsapassâsâ); the vaġīsamkhâra in attention and investigation (vitakkaviġârâ); the ġittasamkhâra in ideas, sensations, and all attributes of mind except attention and investigation (saññâ ka vedanâ ka itapetvâ vitakkaviġâre sabbe pi ġittasampayuttakâ dhammâ). The Vibhaṅga (Abhidhamma-Piṭaka, Paṭikkasamuppâdaviḥaṅga, l.1.) gives, when discussing the samkhâras, six categories instead of the three: 'Now which are six senses¹), from the six Provinces springs Contact, from Contact springs Sensation, from Sensation springs Thirst (or Desire), from Thirst springs Attachment, from Attachment springs Existence, from Existence springs Birth, from Birth spring Old Age and Death, grief, lamentation, suffering, dejection, and despair. Such is the origination of this whole mass of suffering. Again, by the destruction of Ignorance, which consists in the complete absence of lust, the saṃkhâras are destroyed, by the destruction of the saṃkhâras Consciousness is destroyed, by the destruction of Consciousness Name-and-Form are destroyed, by the destruction of Name-and-Form the six Provinces are destroyed, by the destruction of the six Provinces Contact is destroyed, by the destruction of Contact Sensation is destroyed, by the destruction of Sensation Thirst is destroyed, by the destruction of Thirst Attachment is destroyed, by the destruction of Attachment Existence is destroyed, by the destruction of Existence Birth is destroyed, by the destruction of Birth Old Age and Death, grief, lamentation, suffering, dejection, and despair are the saṃkhâras that are produced by Ignorance? Samkhâras (or, productions) that lead to righteousness, saṃkhâras that lead to sinfulness, saṃkhâras that lead to immovability, productions of body, of speech, and of thought.' The Pāli words are: 'Tattha katame aviggāpakkayā saṃkhārā? puññābhisamkhāro apuññābhisamkhāro ānaṅgābhisamkhāro kāyasamkhāro vaṭṭisamkhāro kitta-samkhāro.' The list of fifty-five categories belonging to the saṃkhāra-khandha, which Sp. Hardy gives in his Manual (p. 404 seq.; comp. also Rh. D., 'Buddhism,' p. 91 seq., and 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,' p. 242), is not founded, as far as we know, on the authority of the Piṭakas themselves, but on later compendia and commentaries.

¹ I. e. eye, ear, nose, tongue, body (or the faculty of touch), and mind.

destroyed. Such is the cessation of this whole mass of suffering.'

3. Knowing this the Blessed One then on that occasion pronounced this solemn utterance: 'When the real nature of things becomes clear to the ardent, meditating Brāhmaṇa, then all his doubts fade away, since he realises what is that nature and what its cause.'

4. Then the Blessed One during the middle watch of the night fixed his mind upon the Chain of Causation, in direct and reverse order: 'From Ignorance spring the saṃkhâras, &c. Such is the origination of this whole mass of suffering, &c. Such is the cessation of this whole mass of suffering.'

5. Knowing this the Blessed One then on that occasion pronounced this solemn utterance: 'When the real nature of things becomes clear to the ardent, meditating Brāhmaṇa, then all his doubts fade away, since he has understood the cessation of causation.'

6. Then the Blessed One during the third watch of the night fixed his mind, &c.

7. Knowing this the Blessed One then on that occasion pronounced this solemn utterance: 'When the real nature of things becomes clear to the ardent, meditating Brāhmaṇa, he stands, dispelling the hosts of Māra, like the sun that illuminates the sky.'

Here ends the account of what passed under the Bodhi tree.

2.

1. Then the Blessed One, at the end of those seven days, arose from that state of meditation, and went from the foot of the Bodhi tree to the Agapâla banyan tree (banyan tree of the goat-herds¹). And when he had reached it, he sat cross-legged at the foot of the Agapâla banyan tree uninterruptedly during seven days, enjoying the bliss of emancipation.

2. Now a certain Brâhmana, who was of a haughty disposition², went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he exchanged greeting with the Blessed One; having exchanged with him greeting and complaisant words, he stationed himself near him; then standing near him that Brâhmana thus spoke to the Blessed One: 'By what, Gotama, does one become a Brâhmana, and what are the characteristics that make a man a Brâhmana?'

3. And the Blessed One, having heard that, on this occasion pronounced this solemn utterance: 'That Brâhmana who has removed (from himself) all sinfulness, who is free from haughtiness, free from impurity, self-restrained, who is an accomplished master of knowledge (or, of the Veda), who has fulfilled the duties of holiness, such a Brâhmana may justly call himself a Brāhmaṇa, whose behaviour is uneven to nothing in the world.'

¹ Buddhaghosa: 'The goat-herds used to go to the shadow of that banyan tree and to sit there; therefore it was called the banyan tree of the goat-herds.' The northern Buddhists say that this tree had been planted by a shepherd boy, during the Bodhi-satta's six years' penance, in order to shelter him; see Beal, Rom. Legend, pp. 192, 238, and the Mahāvastu.

² 'Huhun̄kagâtiko.' Buddhaghosa: 'Because he was diṭṭha-maṅgalika, he became filled with haughtiness and wrath, and went about uttering the sound "huhum."'' Diṭṭhamāṅgalika (having seen something auspicious?) is obscure to us.

Here ends the account of what passed under the Agapāla tree.

3.

1. Then the Blessed One, at the end of those seven days, arose from that state of meditation, and went from the foot of the Agapāla banyan tree to the Muḥalinda tree. And when he had reached it, he sat cross-legged at the foot of the Muḥalinda tree uninterruptedly during seven days, enjoying the bliss of emancipation.

2. At that time a great cloud appeared out of season, rainy weather which lasted seven days, cold weather, storms, and darkness. And the Nāga (or Serpent) king Muḥalinda came out from his abode, and seven times encircled the body of the Blessed One with his windings, and kept extending his large hood over the Blessed One's head, thinking to himself: 'May no coldness (touch) the Blessed One! May no heat (touch) the Blessed One! May no vexation by gadflies and gnats, by storms and sunheat and reptiles (touch) the Blessed One!'

3. And at the end of those seven days, when the Nāga king Muḥalinda saw the open, cloudless sky, he loosened his windings from the body of the Blessed One, made his own appearance disappear, created the appearance of a youth, and stationed himself in front of the Blessed One, raising his clasped hands, and paying reverence to the Blessed One.

4. And the Blessed One, perceiving that, on this occasion, pronounced this solemn utterance: 'Happy is the solitude of him who is full of joy, who has learnt the Truth, who sees (the Truth). Happy is freedom from malice in this world, (self-)restraint towards all beings that have life. Happy is freedom from lust in this world, getting beyond all desires; the putting away of that pride which comes from the thought "I am!" This truly is the highest happiness!'

Here ends the account of what passed under the Muḥalinda tree.

4.

1. Then the Blessed One, at the end of those seven days, arose from that state of meditation, and went from the foot of the Muḥalinda tree to the Râgâyatana (tree¹); when he had reached it, he sat cross-legged at the foot of the Râgâyatana tree uninterruptedly during seven days, enjoying the bliss of emancipation.

2. At that time Tapussa and Bhallika, two merchants, came travelling on the road from Ukkala (Orissa) to that place. Then a deity who had been (in a former life) a blood-relation of the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika, thus spoke to the merchants

¹ Buddhaghosa says that Râgâyatana (lit. a royal apartment) was the name of a tree. It is the same tree which in the Lalita Vistara (p. 493, ed. Calcutta) is called Târâyana, and in the Dīpavamsa (II, 50) Khîrapâla. The place where the two merchants met Buddha, is thus described in the Mahāvastu: kshîrikâvanashande bahudevatake kētiye.

Tapussa and Bhallika : 'Here, my noble friends, at the foot of the Râgâyatana tree, is staying the Blessed One, who has just become Sambuddha. Go and show your reverence to him, the Blessed One, by (offering him) rice-cakes and lumps of honey. Long will this be to you for a good and for a blessing.'

3. And the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika took rice-cakes and lumps of honey, and went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, they stationed themselves near him; standing near him, the merchants Tapussa and Bhallika thus addressed the Blessed One : 'May, O Lord, the Blessed One accept from us these rice-cakes and lumps of honey, that that may long be to us for a good and for a blessing!'

4. Then the Blessed One thought : 'The Tathâgatas¹ do not accept (food) with their hands. Now with what shall I accept the rice-cakes and lumps of honey?' Then the four Mahârâga gods¹, understanding by the power of their minds the reflection which had arisen in the mind of the Blessed One, offered to the Blessed One from the four quarters (of the horizon) four bowls made of stone (saying), 'May, O Lord, the Blessed One accept herewith the rice-cakes and the lumps of honey!' The Blessed One accepted those new stone bowls; and therein he received the rice-cakes and honey lumps, and those, when he had received, he ate.

¹ The term Tathâgata is, in the Buddhistical literature, exclusively applied to Sammâsambuddhas, and it is more especially used in the Piṭakas when the Buddha is represented as speaking of himself in the third person as 'the Tathâgata.' The meaning 'sentient being,' which is given to the word in the Abhidhânâpadîpikâ, and in Childers's Dictionary, is not confirmed, as far as we know, by any passage of the Piṭakas. This translation of the word is very possibly based merely on a misunderstanding of the phrase often repeated in the Sutta Piṭaka : hoti tathâgato param maraṇâ, which means, of course, 'does a Buddha exist after death?' In the Gâinâ books we sometimes find the term tatthagaya (tatragata), 'he who has attained that world, i.e. emancipation,' applied to the Gînas as opposed to other beings who are called ihagaya (idhagata), 'living in this world.' See, for instance, the Gînakaritra, § 16. Considering the close relation in which most of the dogmatical terms of the Gâinâs stand to those of the Baudddhas, it is difficult to believe that tathâgata and tatthagaya

5. And Tapussa and Bhallika, the merchants, when they saw that the Blessed One had cleansed² his bowl and his hands, bowed down in reverence should not originally have conveyed very similar ideas. We think that on the long way from the original Mâgadhi to the Pâli and Sanskrit, the term tatthagata or tatthâgata (tatra + âgata), 'he who has arrived there, i.e. at emancipation,' may very easily have undergone the change into tathâgata, which would have made it unintelligible, were we not able to compare its unaltered form as preserved by the Gainas.

¹ The four guardian gods of the quarters of the world; see Hardy's Manual, p. 24. Their Pâli names, as given in the Abhidhânappadîpikâ, vv. 31, 32, the Dîpavamsa XVI, 12, &c., were, Dhatarattha, Virûhaka, Virûpakkha, and Vessavana or Kuvera.

² Onîtapattapâni, which is said very frequently of a person who has finished his meal, is translated by Childers, 'whose hand is removed from the bowl' (comp. also Trenckner, Pali Miscellany, p. 66). We do not think this explanation right, though it agrees with, or probably is based on, a note of Buddhaghosa ('pattato ka apanîtapânim'). Onîta, i.e. avanîta, is not apanîta, and the end of the dinner was marked, not by the Bhikkhu's removing his hand from the bowl, but by his washing the bowl (see Kullavagga VIII, 4, 6), and, of course, his hands. In Sanskrit the meaning of ava-nî is, to pour (water) upon something; see the Petersburg Dictionary. We have translated, therefore, onîtapattapâni accordingly.

at the feet of the Blessed One and thus addressed the Blessed One: 'We take our refuge, Lord, in the Blessed One and in the Dhamma; may the Blessed One receive us as disciples who, from this day forth while our life lasts, have taken their refuge (in him).' These were the first in the world to become lay-disciples (of the Buddha) by the formula which contained (only) the dyad¹.

Here ends the account of what passed under the Râgâyatana tree.

5.

1. Then the Blessed One, at the end of those seven days, arose from that state of meditation, and went from the foot of the Râgâyatana tree to the Agapâla banyan tree. And when he had reached it, the Blessed One stayed there at the foot of the Agapâla banyan tree.

2. Then in the mind of the Blessed One, who was alone, and had retired into solitude, the following thought arose: 'I have penetrated this doctrine which is profound, difficult to perceive and to understand, which brings quietude of heart, which is exalted, which is unattainable by reasoning, abstruse, intelligible (only) to the wise. This people, on the other hand, is given to desire, intent upon desire, delighting in desire. To this people, therefore, who are given to desire, intent upon desire, delighting in desire, the law of causality and the chain of causation will be a matter difficult to understand; most difficult for them to understand will be also the extinction of all samkhâras, the getting rid of all the substrata (of existence¹), the destruction of desire, the absence of passion, quietude of heart, Nirvâna! Now if I proclaim the doctrine, and other men are not able to understand my preaching, there would result but weariness and annoyance to me.'

¹ Because there was no Samgha at that time, their declaration of taking refuge, by which they became upâsakas, could refer only to the dyad (the Buddha and the Dhamma), instead of to the triad of the Buddha, the Dhamma, and the Samgha.

3. And then the following . . . ² stanzas, unheard before, occurred to the Blessed One: 'With great pains have I acquired it. Enough! why should I now proclaim it? This doctrine will not be easy to understand to beings that are lost in lust and hatred.

'Given to lust, surrounded with thick darkness, they will not see what is repugnant (to their minds), abstruse, profound, difficult to perceive, and subtle.'

4. When the Blessed One pondered over this matter, his mind became inclined to remain in quiet, and not to preach the doctrine. Then Brahmâ

¹ The upadhis (substrata of existence) are specified in the commentary on the Sutta-Nipâta, ap. Dhammapada, p. 433: 'sabbûpadhinam parikkhayâ 'ti sabbesam khandhakâmagunakilesâbhisamkhârabhedânâ upadhinam parikkhinattâ.' Probably abhisamkhâra is not co-ordinate with the other members of the compound, but is determined by them, comp. pabbagâbhisamkhâra, iddhâbhisamkhâra, gamikâbhisamkhâra. The upadhis, therefore, according to this passage, consist: firstly, in the actions of mind that are directed towards the khandhas (i. e. that have the effect of propagating and augmenting the dominion of the khandhas); secondly, in the actions tending to the fivefold pleasures of sense; and thirdly, in those connected with kilesa (evil passion).

² Buddhaghosa explains anakkhâriya by anuaakkhâriya, which is alike unintelligible to us. The Lalita Vistara (p. 515, ed. Calcutta) has abhîkshnam ('repeatedly').

Sahampati¹, understanding by the power of his mind the reflection which had arisen in the mind of the Blessed One, thought: 'Alas! the world perishes! Alas! the world is destroyed! if the mind of the Tathâgata, of the holy, of the absolute Sambuddha inclines itself to remain in quiet, and not to preach the doctrine.'

5. Then Brahmâ Sahampati disappeared from Brahma's world, and appeared before the Blessed One (as quickly) as a strong man might stretch his bent arm out, or draw back his out-stretched arm.

6. And Brahmâ Sahampati adjusted his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, and putting his right knee on the ground, raised his joined hands towards the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, may the Blessed One preach the doctrine! may the perfect One preach the doctrine! there are beings whose mental eyes are darkened by scarcely any dust; but if they do not hear the doctrine, they cannot attain salvation. These will understand the doctrine.'

7. Thus spoke Brahmâ Sahampati; and when he had thus spoken, he further said: 'The Dhamma hitherto manifested in the country of Magadha has been impure, thought out by contaminated men. But do thou now open the door of the Immortal²; let them hear the doctrine discovered by the spotless One!

'As a man standing on a rock, on mountain's

¹ It is difficult to believe that the Pâli name of Brahmâ Sahampati, the ruler of the Brahma worlds (see Spence Hardy's Manual, pp. 43, 56), is not connected with the Brahman svayambhû of the Brahmanical literature. Perhaps the Sanskrit equivalent of sahampati might be svayampati.

² Amata, an epithet of Arahatsip, which may perhaps mean simply ambrosia. See Rh. D., Buddhism, pp. 60, 111, 184.

top, might overlook the people all around, thus, O wise One, ascending to the highest palace of Truth, look down, all-seeing One, upon the people lost in suffering, overcome by birth and decay,—thou, who hast freed thyself from suffering!

‘Arise, O hero; O victorious One! Wander through the world, O leader of the pilgrim band, who thyself art free from debt. May the Blessed One preach the doctrine; there will be people who can understand it!’

8. When he had spoken thus, the Blessed One said to Brahmâ Sahampati: ‘The following thought, Brahmâ, has occurred to me: “I have penetrated this doctrine, . . . (&c., down to end of § 2).” And also, Brahmâ, the following . . . ¹ stanzas have presented themselves to my mind, which had not been heard (by me) before: “With great pains, . . . (&c., down to end of § 3).” When I pondered over this matter, Brahmâ, my mind became inclined to remain in quiet, and not to preach the doctrine.’

9. And a second time Brahmâ Sahampati said to the Blessed One: ‘Lord, may the Blessed One preach the doctrine, . . . (&c., as in §§ 6, 7).’ And for the second time the Blessed One said to Brahmâ Sahampati: ‘The following thought . . . (&c., as before).’

10. And a third time Brahmâ Sahampati said to the Blessed One: ‘Lord, may the Blessed One preach the doctrine, . . . (&c., as before).’

Then the Blessed One, when he had heard Brahmâ’s solicitation, looked, full of compassion towards sentient beings, over the world, with his (all-perceiving) eye of a Buddha. And the Blessed One, looking over the world with his eye of a Buddha, saw beings whose mental eyes were darkened by scarcely any dust, and beings whose eyes were covered by much dust, beings sharp of sense and blunt of sense, of good disposition and of bad disposition, easy to instruct and difficult to instruct, some of them seeing the dangers of future life and of sin.

¹ See § 3 with our note for this omitted word.

11. As, in a pond of blue lotuses, or water-roses, or white lotuses, some blue lotuses, or water-roses, or white lotuses, born in the water, grown up in the water, do not emerge over the water, but thrive hidden under the water; and other blue lotuses, or water-roses, or white lotuses, born in the water, grown up in the water, reach to the surface of the water; and other blue lotuses, or water-roses, or white lotuses, born in the water, grown up in the water, stand emerging out of the water, and the water does not touch them,—

12. Thus the Blessed One, looking over the world with his eye of a Buddha, saw beings whose mental eyes were darkened, . . . (&c., the text repeats § 10); and when he had thus seen them, he addressed Brahmâ Sahampati in the following stanza: 'Wide opened is the door of the Immortal to all who have ears to hear; let them send forth faith to meet it. The Dhamma sweet and good I spake not, Brahmâ, despairing of the weary task, to men.'

13. Then Brahmâ Sahampati understood: 'The Blessed One grants my request that He should preach the doctrine.' And he bowed down before the Blessed One, and passed round him with his right side towards him; and then he straightway disappeared.

Here ends the story of Brahmâ's request.

6.

1. Now the Blessed One thought : 'To whom shall I preach the doctrine first? Who will understand this doctrine easily?' And the Blessed One thought: 'There is *Â/âra Kâlâma*¹; he is clever, wise, and learned; long since have the eye of his mind been darkened by scarcely any dust. What if I were to preach the doctrine first to Â/âra Kâlâma? He will easily understand this doctrine.'

2. Then an invisible deity said to the Blessed One: 'Â/âra Kâlâma has died, Lord, seven days ago.' And knowledge sprang up in the Blessed One's mind that Â/âra Kâlâma had died seven days ago. And the Blessed One thought: 'Highly noble was Â/âra Kâlâma. If he had heard my doctrine, he would easily have understood it.'

3. Then the Blessed One thought: 'To whom shall I preach the doctrine first? Who will understand this doctrine easily?' And the Blessed One thought: 'There is *Uddaka Râmaputta*¹; he is clever, wise, and learned; long since have the eye of his mind been darkened by scarcely any dust. What if I were to preach the doctrine first to Uddaka Râmaputta? He will easily understand this doctrine.'

4. Then an invisible deity said to the Blessed One: 'Uddaka Râmaputta has died, Lord, yesterday evening.' And knowledge arose in the Blessed One's mind that Uddaka Râmaputta had died the previous evening. And the Blessed One thought:

¹ Â/âra Kâlâma and Uddaka Râmaputta were the two teachers to whom Gotama had attached himself first after his pabbaggâ. See Fausbøll's Gâtaka, vol. i. p. 66; Rh. D., Buddhism, p. 34.

‘Highly noble was Uddaka Rāmaputta. If he had heard my doctrine, he would easily have understood it.’

5. Then the Blessed One thought: ‘To whom shall I preach the doctrine first? Who will understand this doctrine easily?’ And the Blessed One thought: ‘The five Bhikkhus¹ have done many services to me²; they attended on me during the time of my exertions (to attain sanctification by undergoing austerities). What if I were to preach the doctrine first to the five Bhikkhus?’

6. Now the Blessed One thought: ‘Where do the five Bhikkhus dwell now?’ And the Blessed One saw by the power of his divine, clear vision, surpassing that of men, that the five Bhikkhus were living at Benares, in the deer park Isipatana³. And the Blessed One, after having remained at Uruvelā as long as he thought fit, went forth to Benares.

7. Now Upaka, a man belonging to the Āgīvaka sect (i. e. the sect of naked ascetics), saw the Blessed One travelling on the road, between Gayā and the Bodhi tree; and when he saw him, he said to the Blessed One: ‘Your countenance, friend, is serene; your complexion is pure and bright. In whose name, friend, have you retired from the world? Who is your teacher? Whose doctrine do you profess?’

¹ See about the five companions of Buddha’s self-mortification, in the time before the sambodhi, the Gāṭaka, vol. i. p. 67; Hardy, Manual, p. 165; Rh. D., Buddhism, p. 35. The names of the five Bhikkhus were, Kondañña, Vappa, Bhaddiya, Mahānāma, Assagi.

² Perhaps instead of kho ‘me’ (= kho ime) we should read kho me.

³ ‘The Mrigadāwa, or Deer Park, is represented by a fine wood, which still covers an area of about half a mile, and extends from the great tower of Dhamek on the north, to the Chaukundi mound on the south.’ Cunningham, Arch. Reports, I, p. 107.

8. When Upaka the Āgātvaka had spoken thus, the Blessed One addressed him in the following stanzas: ‘I have overcome all foes; I am all-wise; I am free from stains in every way; I have left everything; and have obtained emancipation by the destruction of desire. Having myself gained knowledge, whom should I call my master? I have no teacher; no one is equal to me; in the world of men and of gods no being is like me. I am the holy One in this world, I am the highest teacher, I alone am the absolute Sambuddha; I have gained coolness (by the extinction of all passion) and have obtained Nirvāṇa. To found the Kingdom of Truth I go to the city of the Kāśīs (Benares); I will beat the drum of the Immortal in the darkness of this world.’

9. (Upaka replied): ‘You profess then, friend, to be the holy, absolute *Gina*¹.’

(Buddha said): ‘Like me are all Ginas who have reached extinction of the *Āsavas*²; I have overcome (gītā me) all states of sinfulness; therefore, Upaka, am I the Gina.’

When he had spoken thus, Upaka the Āgātvaka replied: ‘It may be so, friend;’ shook his head, took another road, and went away.

10. And the Blessed One, wandering from place to place, came to Benares, to the deer park Isipatana, to the place where the five Bhikkhus were. And the five Bhikkhus saw the Blessed One coming from afar; when they saw him, they concerted with each other, saying, 'Friends, there comes the samāna Gotama, who lives in abundance, who has given up his exertions, and who has turned to an abundant life. Let us not salute him; nor rise from our seats when he approaches; nor take his bowl and his robe from his hands. But let us put there a seat; if he likes, let him sit down.'

¹ Gina, or the victorious One, is one of the many appellations common to the founders of the Bauddha and Gaina sects.

² Sensuality, individuality, delusion, and ignorance (Kāma, Bhava, Diṭṭhi, and Aviggā).

11. But when the Blessed One gradually approached near unto those five Bhikkhus, the five Bhikkhus kept not their agreement. They went forth to meet the Blessed One; one took his bowl and his robe, another prepared a seat, a third one brought water for the washing of the feet, a foot-stool, and a towel¹. Then the Blessed One sat down on the seat they had prepared; and when he was seated, the Blessed One washed his feet. Now they addressed the Blessed One by his name, and with the appellation 'Friend.'

12. When they spoke to him thus, the Blessed One said to the five Bhikkhus: 'Do not address, O Bhikkhus, the Tathāgata by his name, and with the appellation "Friend." The Tathāgata, O Bhikkhus, is the holy, absolute Sambuddha. Give ear, O Bhikkhus! The immortal (Amata) has been won (by me); I will teach you; to you I preach the doctrine. If you walk in the way I show you, you will, ere long, have penetrated to the truth, having yourselves known it and seen it face to face; and you will live in the possession of that highest goal of the holy life, for the sake of which noble youths fully give up the world and go forth into the houseless state.'

¹ Buddhaghosa, in a note on Kullavagga II, 1, 1, says that pādapiṭṭha is a stool to put the washed foot on, pāḍakathalika (or pāḍakathalikā?), a stool to put the unwashed foot on, or a cloth to rub the feet with (pādaghamśana).

13. When he had spoken thus, the five monks said to the Blessed One: 'By those observances, friend Gotama, by those practices, by those austerities, you have not been able to obtain power surpassing that of men, nor the superiority of full and holy knowledge and insight. How will you now, living in abundance, having given up your exertions, having turned to an abundant life, be able to obtain power surpassing that of men, and the superiority of full and holy knowledge and insight?'

14. When they had spoken thus, the Blessed One said to the five Bhikkhus: 'The Tathâgata, O Bhikkhus, does not live in abundance, he has not given up exertion, he has not turned to an abundant life. The Tathâgata, O Bhikkhus, is the holy, absolute Sambuddha. Give ear, O Bhikkhus; the immortal has been won (by me); I will teach you, to you I will preach the doctrine. If you walk in the way I show you, you will, ere long, have penetrated to the truth, having yourselves known it and seen it face to face; and you will live in the possession of that highest goal of the holy life, for the sake of which noble youths fully give up the world and go forth into the houseless state.'

15. And the five Bhikkhus said to the Blessed One a second time (as above). And the Blessed One said to the five Bhikkhus a second time (as above). And the five Bhikkhus said to the Blessed One a third time (as above).

16. When they had spoken thus, the Blessed One said to the five Bhikkhus: 'Do you admit, O Bhikkhus, that I have never spoken to you in this way before this day?'

'You have never spoken so, Lord.'

'The Tathâgata, O Bhikkhus, is the holy, absolute Sambuddha. Give ear, O Bhikkhus, &c. (as above).'

And the Blessed One was able to convince the five Bhikkhus; and the five Bhikkhus again¹ listened willingly to the Blessed One; they gave ear, and fixed their mind on the knowledge (which the Buddha imparted to them).

17. And the Blessed One thus addressed the five Bhikkhus²: 'There are two extremes, O Bhikkhus, which he who has given up the world, ought to avoid. What are these two extremes? A life given to pleasures, devoted to pleasures and lusts: this is degrading, sensual, vulgar, ignoble, and profitless; and a life given to mortifications: this is painful, ignoble, and profitless. By avoiding these two extremes, O Bhikkhus, the Tathâgata has gained the knowledge of the Middle Path which leads to insight, which leads to wisdom, which conduces to calm, to knowledge, to the Sambodhi, to Nirvâna.

18. 'Which, O Bhikkhus, is this Middle Path the knowledge of which the Tathâgata has gained, which leads to insight, which leads to wisdom, which con-

¹ As they had done before when they underwent austerities together with the Bodhisatta at Uruvelâ.

² Of the literature that exists referring to the discourse which follows now (the Dhammakappavattana Sutta), it will suffice to quote M. Feer's Études Bouddhiques, I, p. 189 seq., and Rh. D., 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pâli,' pp. 137-155, and in the Fortnightly Review for December 1879.

duces to calm, to knowledge, to the Sambodhi, to Nirvâna? It is the holy eightfold Path, namely, Right Belief, Right Aspiration, Right Speech, Right Conduct, Right Means of Livelihood, Right Endeavour, Right Memory, Right Meditation. This, O Bhikkhus, is the Middle Path the knowledge of which the Tathâgata has gained, which leads to insight, which leads to wisdom, which conduces to calm, to knowledge, to the Sambodhi, to Nirvâna.

19. 'This, O Bhikkhus, is the Noble Truth of Suffering: Birth is suffering; decay is suffering; illness is suffering; death is suffering. Presence of objects we hate, is suffering; Separation from objects we love, is suffering; not to obtain what we desire, is suffering. Briefly, the fivefold clinging to existence¹ is suffering.

20. 'This, O Bhikkhus, is the Noble Truth of the Cause of suffering: Thirst, that leads to re-birth, accompanied by pleasure and lust, finding its delight here and there. (This thirst is threefold), namely, thirst for pleasure, thirst for existence, thirst for prosperity.

21. 'This, O Bhikkhus, is the Noble Truth of the Cessation of suffering: (it ceases with) the complete cessation of this thirst,—a cessation which consists in the absence of every passion,—with the abandoning of this thirst, with the doing away with it, with the deliverance from it, with the destruction of desire.

22. 'This, O Bhikkhus, is the Noble Truth of the Path which leads to the cessation of suffering:

¹ Clinging to the five elements of existence, rūpa, vedanâ, saññâ, saṃkhârâ, viññâna. See § 38 seq.

that holy eightfold Path, that is to say, Right Belief, Right Aspiration, Right Speech, Right Conduct, Right Means of Livelihood, Right Endeavour, Right Memory, Right Meditation.

23. "This is the Noble Truth of Suffering;"—thus, O Bhikkhus, of this doctrine, which formerly had not been heard of, have I obtained insight, knowledge, understanding, wisdom, intuition. "This Noble Truth of Suffering must be understood," thus, O Bhikkhus, of this doctrine, . . . (&c., down to intuition). "This Noble Truth of Suffering I have understood," thus, O Bhikkhus, of this doctrine, . . . (&c., down to intuition).

24. "This is the Noble Truth of the Cause of suffering," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.) "This Noble Truth of the Cause of suffering must be abandoned¹. . . . has been abandoned by me," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.)

25. "This is the Noble Truth of the Cessation of suffering," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.) "This Noble Truth of the Cessation of suffering must be seen face to face has been seen by me face to face," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.)

26. "This is the Noble Truth of the Path which leads to the cessation of suffering," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.) "This Noble Truth of the Path which leads to the cessation of suffering, must be realised has been realised by me," thus, O Bhikkhus, (&c.)

27. 'As long, O Bhikkhus, as I did not possess with perfect purity this true knowledge and insight into these four Noble Truths, with its three modifications and its twelve constituent parts¹; so long, O Bhikkhus, I knew that I had not yet obtained the highest, absolute Sambodhi in the world of men and gods, in Māra's and Brahma's world, among all beings, Samanas and Brāhmanas, gods and men.

¹ I. e. the thirst (taṇhā), which is declared in this Noble Truth to be the cause of suffering, must be abandoned.

28. 'But since I possessed, O Bhikkhus, with perfect purity this true knowledge and insight into these four Noble Truths, with its three modifications and its twelve constituent parts, then I knew, O Bhikkhus, that I had obtained the highest, universal Sambodhi in the world of men and gods, (&c., as in § 27).

29. 'And this knowledge and insight arose in my mind: "The emancipation of my mind cannot be lost; this is my last birth; hence I shall not be born again!"'

Thus the Blessed One spoke. The five Bhikkhus were delighted, and they rejoiced at the words of the Blessed One. And when this exposition was propounded, the venerable Kondañña obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is to say, the following knowledge): 'Whatsoever is subject to the condition of origination, is subject also to the condition of cessation.'

30. And as the Blessed One had founded the Kingdom of Truth (by propounding the four Noble Truths), the earth-inhabiting devas shouted: 'Truly the Blessed One has founded at Benares, in the deer park Isipatana, the highest kingdom of Truth, which may be opposed neither by a Samana nor by a Brāhmaṇa, neither by a deva, nor by Māra, nor by Brahma, nor by any being in the world.'

¹ The three modifications and twelve constituent parts are those specified in §§ 23-26.

Hearing the shout of the earth-inhabiting devas, the kâtumahârâgika devas (gods belonging to the world of the four divine mahârâgas) shouted, (&c., as above). Hearing the shout of the kâtumahârâgika devas, the tâvatimsa devas¹, the yâma devas, the tusita devas, the nimmânarati devas, the paranimmita-vasavatti devas, the brahmakâyika devas shouted: 'Truly the Blessed One,' (&c., as above).

31. Thus in that moment, in that instant, in that second the shout reached the Brahma world; and this whole system of ten thousand worlds quaked, was shaken, and trembled; and an infinite, mighty light was seen through the world, which surpassed the light that can be produced by the divine power of the devas.

And the Blessed One pronounced this solemn utterance: 'Truly Kondañña has perceived it ("a ñ-ñâsi"), truly Kondañña has perceived it!' Hence the venerable Kondañña received the name Aññâ-takondañña (Kondañña who has perceived the doctrine).

32. And the venerable Aññâ-takondañña, having seen the Truth, having mastered the Truth, having understood the Truth, having penetrated the Truth, having overcome uncertainty, having dispelled all doubts, having gained full knowledge, dependent on nobody else for knowledge of the doctrine of the Teacher, thus spoke to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let me receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations from the Blessed One.'

¹ The thirty-three devas of the Vedic mythology. This enumeration gives the gods who reside in the different worlds, beginning from the lowest (the bhumma devâ, who inhabit the earth), and gradually ascending to the higher devalokas. See Hardy, Manual, p. 25.

'Come, O Bhikkhu,' said the Blessed One, 'well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.' Thus this venerable person received the upasampadâ ordination.

33. And the Blessed One administered to the other Bhikkhus exhortation and instruction by discourses relating to the Dhamma. And the venerable Vappa, and the venerable Bhaddiya, when they received from the Blessed One such exhortation and instruction by discourses relating to the Dhamma, obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is to say, the following knowledge): 'Whatever is subject to the condition of origination is subject also to the condition of cessation.'

34. And having seen the Truth, having mastered the Truth, . . . (&c., as in § 32), they thus spoke to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let us receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations from the Blessed One.'

'Come, O Bhikkhus,' said the Blessed One, 'well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.' Thus these venerable persons received the upasampadâ ordination.

35. And the Blessed One, living on what the Bhikkhus brought him, administered to the other Bhikkhus exhortation and instruction by discourse relating to the Dhamma; in this way the six persons lived on what the three Bhikkhus¹ brought home from their alms pilgrimage.

¹ Those three Bhikkhus of the five, who had been converted,

36, 37. And the venerable Mahānāma and the venerable Assaḡi, when they received from the Blessed One, . . . (&c., as in §§ 33, 34, down to :). Thus these venerable persons received the upasampadā ordination.

38. And the Blessed One thus spoke to the five Bhikkhus : 'The body (Rūpa), O Bhikkhus, is not the self. If the body, O Bhikkhus, were the self, the body would not be subject to disease, and we should be able to say : "Let my body be such and such a one, let my body not be such and such a one." But since the body, O Bhikkhus, is not the self, therefore the body is subject to disease, and we are not able to say : "Let my body be such and such a one, let my body not be such and such a one."

39-41. 'Sensation (Vedanā), O Bhikkhus, is not the self, . . . (&c.¹) Perception (Saññā) is not the self, . . . The Saṃkhâras² are not the self, . . . Consciousness (Viññāna) is not the self, . . . (&c.¹) went about for alms; while the Buddha remained with their two companions, and instructed them.

42. 'Now what do you think, O Bhikkhus, is the body permanent or perishable?'

¹ This is shown exactly in the same way and with the same words that are used in § 38 with regard to the body. Body, sensations, perceptions, saṃkhâras, and consciousness are the well-known five classes (khandha) of bodily and mental parts and powers; see Rh. D., 'Buddhism,' p. 90 seq. The self (attā), which, if it exists at all, must be permanent and imperishable, is not to be found in any one of these five classes, which are all subject to origin and decay. This discourse of the Buddha's, which is frequently called the Anattalakkhaṇa Sutta (Sutta of the not having the signs of self), shows the perishable nature of the five khandhas, and that the khandhas are not the self. But it does not deal with the question, whether the self exists or not, in any other way.

² See the note on chap. I. 2.

‘It is perishable, Lord.’

‘And that which is perishable, does that cause pain or joy?’

‘It causes pain, Lord.’

‘And that which is perishable, painful, subject to change, is it possible to regard that in this way: ‘This is mine, this am I, this is my self?’

‘That is impossible, Lord.’

43. ‘Is sensation permanent or perishable?’ (&c.¹)

44. ‘Therefore, O Bhikkhus, whatever body has been, will be, and is now, belonging or not belonging to sentient beings, gross or subtle, inferior or superior, distant or near, all that body is not mine, is not me, is not my self: thus it should be considered by right knowledge according to the truth.

45. ‘Whatever sensation, (&c.²)

46. ‘Considering this, O Bhikkhus, a learned, noble hearer of the word becomes weary of body, weary of sensation, weary of perception, weary of the Samkhâras, weary of consciousness. Becoming weary of all that, he divests himself of passion; by absence of passion he is made free; when he is free, he becomes aware that he is free; and he realises that re-birth is exhausted; that holiness is completed; that duty is fulfilled; and that there is no further return to this world³.’

47. Thus the Blessed One spoke; the five Bhikkhus were delighted, and rejoiced at the words of the Blessed One. And when this exposition had been propounded, the minds of the five Bhikkhus became free from attachment to the world, and were released from the *Āsavas*¹.

¹ Here follow the same questions, answers, and rejoinders, with regard to sensation, perception, the samkhâras, and consciousness.

² The same with regard to the other four khandhas.

³ Compare Burnouf, ‘Lotus de la bonne Loi,’ p. 481.

At that time there were six Arahats (persons who had reached absolute holiness) in the world.

End of the first Bhāṇavāra.

7².

1. At that time there was in Benares a noble youth, Yasa by name, the son of a setthi (or treasurer³) and delicately nurtured. He had three palaces, one for winter, one for summer, one for the rainy season. In the palace for the rainy season he lived during the four months (of that season), surrounded with female musicians among whom no man was, and he did not descend from that palace (all that time). Now one day Yasa, the noble youth, who was endowed with, and possessed of the five pleasures of sense¹, while he was attended (by those female musicians), fell asleep sooner than usual; and after him his attendants also fell asleep. Now an oil lamp was burning through the whole night.

¹ See the note on § 9.

² A well-known scene in the life of the Bodhisatta has evidently been represented after the model of this story. See Gātaka I, p. 61; Lalita Vistara, p. 251; Bigandet, Life of Gaudama, p. 55. Nowhere in the Pāli Piṭakas is the story told about the Bodhisatta himself.

³ This was a position of honour among the merchants. In the later literature we hear of an office of setthi (setthi-ñhāna) in a city, to which any one with the requisite wealth and talent was eligible (Gātaka I, 120-122); and, according to the Mahāvamsa, the king appointed to an office called setthitā, apparently at his court (Mah. p. 69). The Gahapati, or Treasurer, one of the seven jewels of a king, is explained by Buddhaghosa to be setthi-gahapati (see Rh. D.'s note on Mahā-sudassana Sutta I, 41). 'The Setthi,' standing alone, or 'the Mahā-setthi,' means Anātha Pindika (Gātaka I, 95, 227-230; Dhammapada Commentary, p. 395). Below, in chapter 9, § 1, it would seem that the rank of setthi was hereditary, and this is confirmed by the later literature; but this applies to the social rank only, and not to the office.

2. And Yasa, the noble youth, awoke sooner than usual; and he saw his attendants sleeping; one had her lute leaning against her arm-pit; one had her tabor leaning against her neck; one had her drum leaning against her arm-pit; one had dishevelled hair; one had saliva flowing from her mouth; and they were muttering in their sleep. One would think it was a cemetery one had fallen into². When he saw that, the evils (of the life he led) manifested themselves to him; his mind became weary (of worldly pleasures). And Yasa, the noble youth, gave utterance to this solemn exclamation: 'Alas! what distress; alas! what danger!'

3. And Yasa, the noble youth, put on his gilt slippers, and went to the gate of his house. Non-human beings opened the gate, in order that no being might prevent Yasa the noble youth's leaving the world, and going forth into the houseless state. And Yasa, the noble youth, went to the gate of the city. Non-human beings opened the gate, in order that no being might prevent Yasa the noble youth's leaving the world, and going forth into the houseless state. And Yasa, the noble youth, went to the deer park Isipatana.

¹ Pleasures of the eye, ear, nose, tongue, and touch.

² Hatthappattam susānam maññe, literally, 'one would think a cemetery had (suddenly) come to one's hand.'

4. At that time the Blessed One, having arisen in the night, at dawn was walking up and down in the open air. And the Blessed One saw Yasa, the noble youth, coming from afar. And when he saw him, he left the place where he was walking, and sat down on a seat laid out (for him). And Yasa, the noble youth, gave utterance near the Blessed One to that solemn exclamation: 'Alas! what distress; alas! what danger!' And the Blessed One said to Yasa, the noble youth: 'Here is no distress, Yasa, here is no danger. Come here, Yasa, sit down; I will teach you the Truth (Dhamma).'

5. And Yasa, the noble youth, when he heard that there was no distress, and that there was no danger, became glad and joyful; and he put off his gilt slippers, and went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. When Yasa, the noble youth, was sitting near him, the Blessed One preached to him in due course: that is to say, he talked about the merits obtained by alms-giving, about the duties of morality, about heaven, about the evils, the vanity, and the sinfulness of desires, and about the blessings of the abandonment of desire¹.

6. When the Blessed One saw that the mind of Yasa, the noble youth, was prepared, impressible, free from obstacles (to understanding the Truth), elated, and believing, then he preached what is the principal doctrine of the Buddhas, namely, Suffering, the Cause of suffering, the Cessation of suffering, the Path. Just as a clean cloth free from black specks properly takes the dye, thus Yasa, the noble youth, even while sitting there, obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is, the knowledge): 'Whatsoever is subject to the condition of origination is subject also to the condition of cessation.'

¹ Nekkhamma is neither naishkramya nor naishkarmya, but naishkāmya. Itivuttaka, fol. khi (Phayre MS.): kāmānam etam nissaranam yad idam nekkhammam, rūpānam etam nissaranam yad idam aruppaṃ.

7. Now the mother of Yasa, the noble youth, having gone up to his palace, did not see Yasa, the noble youth, and she went to the setthi, the householder (her husband), and having approached him, she said to the setthi, the householder: 'Your son Yasa, O householder, has disappeared.' Then the setthi, the householder, sent messengers on horseback to the four quarters of the horizon; and he went himself to the deer park Isipatana. Then the setthi, the householder, saw on the ground the marks of the gilt slippers; and when he saw them, he followed them up.

8. And the Blessed One saw the setthi, the householder, coming from afar. On seeing him, he thought: 'What if I were to effect such an exercise of miraculous power, that the setthi, the householder, sitting here, should not see Yasa, the noble youth, who is sitting here also.' And the Blessed One effected such an exercise of his miraculous power.

9. And the setthi, the householder, went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he said to the Blessed One: 'Pray, Lord, has the Blessed One seen Yasa, the noble youth?'

'Well, householder, sit down. Perhaps, sitting here, you may see Yasa, the noble youth, sitting here also.'

And the setthi, the householder, who thought : 'Indeed, sitting here I shall see Yasa, the noble youth, sitting here also !' became glad and joyful, and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him.

10. When the setthi, the householder, was sitting near him, the Blessed One preached to him in due course ; that is to say, he talked about the merits obtained by alms-giving, . . . (&c., as at end of § 5). And the setthi, the householder, having seen the Truth, having mastered the Truth, having penetrated the Truth, having overcome uncertainty, having dispelled all doubts, having gained full knowledge, dependent on nobody else for the knowledge of the doctrine of the Teacher, said to the Blessed One : 'Glorious, Lord ! glorious, Lord ! Just as if one should set up, Lord, what had been overturned, or should reveal what had been hidden, or should point out the way to one who had lost his way, or should bring a lamp into the darkness, in order that those who had eyes might see visible things, thus has the Blessed One preached the doctrine in many ways. I take my refuge, Lord, in the Blessed One, and in the Dhamma, and in the fraternity of Bhikkhus ; may the Blessed One receive me from this day forth while my life lasts as a disciple who has taken his refuge in Him.'

This was the first person in the world who became a lay-disciple by the formula of the holy triad.

11. And Yasa, the noble youth, while instruction was administered (by the Buddha) to his father, contemplated the stage of knowledge which he had seen with his mind and understood ; and his mind became free from attachment to the world, and was released from the Âsavas. Then the Blessed One thought: 'Yasa, the noble youth, while instruction was administered to his father, has contemplated the stage of knowledge which he had seen with his mind and understood; and his mind has become free from attachment to the world, and has become released from the Âsavas. It is impossible that Yasa, the noble youth, should return to the world and enjoy pleasures, as he did before, when he lived in his house. What if I were now to put an end to that exertion of my miraculous power.' And the Blessed One put an end to that exertion of his miraculous power.

12. Then the settthi, the householder, saw Yasa, the noble youth, sitting there. On seeing him he said to Yasa, the noble youth: 'My son Yasa, your mother is absorbed in lamentation and grief; restore your mother to life.'

13. Then Yasa, the noble youth, looked at the Blessed One. And the Blessed One said to the settthi, the householder: 'What do you think then, O householder? That Yasa has (first) won only an imperfect¹ degree of knowledge and insight into the Truth, as you have yourself? Or that rather he was contemplating the stage of knowledge which he had seen with his mind and understood; and that his mind has thus become free from attachment to the world, and has become released from the Âsavas? Now would it then be possible, O householder, that Yasa should return to the world and enjoy pleasures as he did before, when he lived in his house?'

'Not so, Lord.'

¹ The stage of a sekha, i. e. a person who has attained to any stage in the Noble Eightfold Path (such as sotâpattiphala, &c.) inferior to the highest (Arahatship).

‘Yasa, the noble youth, O householder, had (first) won, like yourself, an imperfect degree of knowledge and insight into the Truth. But when he was contemplating the stage of knowledge which he had seen with his mind and understood, his mind has become free from attachment to the world, and has become released from the Âsavas. It is impossible, O householder, that Yasa, the noble youth, should return to the world and enjoy pleasures as he did before, when he lived in his house.’

14. ‘It is all gain, Lord, to Yasa, the noble youth, it is high bliss, Lord, for Yasa, the noble youth, that the mind of Yasa, the noble youth, has become free from attachment to the world, and has become released from the Âsavas. Might, Lord, the Blessed One consent to take his meal with me to-day together with Yasa, the noble youth, as his attendant?’

The Blessed One expressed his consent by remaining silent. Then the setthi, the householder, when he understood that the Blessed One had accepted his invitation, rose from his seat, respectfully saluted the Blessed One, and passing round him with his right side towards him, departed thence.

15. And Yasa, the noble youth, soon after the setthi, the householder, was gone, said to the Blessed One: ‘Lord, let me receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations from the Blessed One.’

‘Come, O Bhikkhu,’ said the Blessed One, ‘well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.’

Thus this venerable person received the upasampadâ ordination. At that time there were seven Arahats in the world.

End of the story of Yasa’s pabbaggâ.

8.

1. And in the forenoon the blessed One, having put on his under-rob¹, took his alms-bowl, and, with his ktvara on, went with the venerable Yasa as his attendant to the house of the setthi, the householder. When he had arrived there, he sat down on a seat laid out for him. Then the mother and the former wife of the venerable Yasa went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, they sat down near him.

2. Then the Blessed One preached to them in due course; that is to say, he talked about the merits obtained by alms-giving, . . . (&c., as in chap. 7. 5, 6, down to:); thus they obtained, while sitting there, the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is, the knowledge): 'Whatsoever is subject to the condition of origination is subject also to the condition of cessation.'

3. And having seen the Truth, . . . (&c., as above, §§ 5, 6, down to:), dependent on nobody else for knowledge of the Teacher's doctrine, they thus spoke to the Blessed One: 'Glorious, Lord! glorious Lord! Just as if one should set up' (&c., as in chap. 7. 10, down to:). We take our refuge, Lord, in the Blessed One, and in the Dhamma, and in the fraternity of Bhikkhus; may the Blessed One receive us from this day forth, while our life lasts, as disciples who have taken their refuge in Him.'

These were the first females in the world who became lay-disciples by the formula of the holy triad.

¹ The rules about the dress of a Bhikkhu who is going to the village are given in the Kullavagga VIII, 4, 3; 5, 2. Compare Rh. D.'s note on the Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta V, 45.

4. And the mother and the father and the former wife of the venerable Yasa with their own hands served and offered¹ excellent food, both hard and soft, to the Blessed One and to the venerable Yasa; and when the Blessed One had finished his meal, and cleansed his bowl and his hands, they sat down near him. Then the Blessed One taught, incited, animated, and gladdened the mother, and father, and the former wife of the venerable Yasa by religious discourse; and then he rose from his seat and went away.

9.

1. Now four lay persons, friends of the venerable Yasa, belonging to the setthi families of Benares, and to the highest after the setthi families, by name Vimāla, Subāhu, Punṇagi, and Gavampati, heard: 'Yasa, the noble youth, has cut off his hair and beard, and has put on yellow robes, and has given up the world, and gone forth into the houseless state.' When they had heard that, they thought: 'Surely that cannot be a common doctrine and discipline, that cannot be a common renunciation of the world, if Yasa, the noble youth, has cut off his hair and beard, and has put on yellow robes, and has given up the world, and gone forth into the houseless state.'

¹ According to Subhūti (in Childers's Dictionary) sampavāreti means that the host hands dishes to the guest until the latter says, 'I have had enough.' Childers accordingly translates sampavāreti, 'to cause to refuse.' But as pavāreti means, 'to cause to accept,' it is impossible that sampavāreti should have exactly the opposite meaning. We prefer, therefore, to take it as an emphatic synonym of pavāreti.

2. Those four persons went to the place where the venerable Yasa was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the venerable Yasa, they stood by his side. And the venerable Yasa went with his four lay-friends to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. Sitting near him the venerable Yasa said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, here are four lay-friends of mine, belonging to the setthi families of Benares and to the highest after the setthi families; their names are Vimala, Subâhu, Punnagi, and Gavampati. May the Blessed One administer exhortation and instruction to these four persons.'

3. Then the Blessed One preached to them, (&c., as in chap. 8. 2).

4. And having seen the Truth, (&c., down to :) dependent on nobody else for the knowledge of the Teacher's doctrine, they thus spoke to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let us receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations from the Blessed One.'

'Come, O Bhikkhus,' said the Blessed One, 'well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.'

Thus these venerable persons received the upasampadâ ordination. And the Blessed One administered to these Bhikkhus exhortation and instruction by discourse relating to the Dhamma. While they received exhortation and instruction from the Blessed One by discourse relating to the Dhamma, their minds became free from attachment to the world, and were released from the Âsavas.

At that time there were eleven Arahats in the world.

Here ends the story of the ordination of the four laymen.

10.

Now fifty lay persons, friends of the venerable Yasa, belonging to the highest families in the country and to those next to the highest, heard, (&c., as in chap. 9, §§ 1, 2, 3, 4, down to:). While they received exhortation and instruction from the Blessed One by discourse relating to the Dhamma, their minds became free from attachment to the world, and were released from the Āsavas.

At that time there were sixty-one Arahats in the world.

11.

1. And the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: 'I am delivered, O Bhikkhus, from all fetters, human and divine. You, O Bhikkhus, are also delivered from all fetters, human and divine. Go ye now, O Bhikkhus, and wander, for the gain of the many, for the welfare of the many, out of compassion for the world, for the good, for the gain, and for the welfare of gods and men. Let not two of you go the same way¹. Preach, O Bhikkhus, the doctrine which is glorious in the beginning, glorious in the middle, glorious at the end, in the spirit and in the letter; proclaim a consummate, perfect, and pure life of holiness. There are beings whose mental eyes are covered by scarcely any dust, but if the doctrine is not preached to them, they cannot attain salvation. They will understand the doctrine. And I will go also, O Bhikkhus, to Uruvelâ, to Senâni-nigama¹, in order to preach the doctrine.'

¹ This cannot be understood as a general rule, for it is repeated nowhere where precepts for wandering Bhikkhus are given, and, on the contrary, numerous instances occur in the Sacred Texts

2. And Mâra the wicked One went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he addressed the Blessed One in the following stanza: 'Thou art bound by all fetters, human and divine. Thou art bound by strong fetters. Thou wilt not be delivered from me, O Samana.'

Buddha replied: 'I am delivered from all fetters, human and divine. I am delivered from the strong fetters. Thou art struck down, O Death.'

(Mâra said): 'The fetter which pervades the sky, with which mind is bound, with that fetter I will bind thee. Thou wilt not be delivered from me, O Samana.'

(Buddha replied): 'Whatever forms, sounds, odours, flavours, or contacts there are which please the in which two or more Bhikkhus are mentioned as wandering together, without any expression of disapproval being added. The precept given here evidently is intended to refer only to the earliest period in the spread of the new doctrine; just as in chap. 12 a form of upasampadâ is introduced by Buddha which was regarded as inadmissible in later times.

¹ The correct spelling of this name appears to be Senâni-nigama ('the General's Town'), and not Senâni-gama ('the Army's Town'); the Gâtaka Atthavannanâ (vol. i. p. 68) and the Paris MS. of the Mahâvagga (manu secunda) read Senâninigama. The Lalita Vistara has Senâpatigrâma.

senses, in me desire for them has ceased. Thou art struck down, O Death.'

Then Māra the wicked One understood: 'The Blessed One knows me, the perfect One knows me,' and, sad and afflicted, he vanished away.

Here ends the story of Māra.

12.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus brought (to Buddha), from different regions and different countries, persons who desired to obtain the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations, thinking: 'The Blessed One will confer on them the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations.' Thus both the Bhikkhus became tired (from the journey), and also those who desired to obtain the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations. Now when the Blessed One was alone and had retired into solitude, the following consideration presented itself to his mind: 'The Bhikkhus now bring to me from different regions and different countries persons who desire to obtain the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations, thinking: "The Blessed One will confer on them the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations." Now both the Bhikkhus become tired, and also those who desire to obtain the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations. What if I were to grant permission to the Bhikkhus, saying: "Confer henceforth, O Bhikkhus, in the different regions, and in the different countries, the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations yourselves (on those who desire to receive them)."' in the evening, in consequence of that, and on this occasion, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'When I was alone, O Bhikkhus, and had retired into solitude, the following consideration, &c. What if I were to permit, . . . ' (&c., as in § 1).

2. And the Blessed One, having left the solitude

3. 'I grant you, O Bhikkhus, this permission: Confer henceforth in the different regions and in the different countries the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations yourselves (on those who desire to receive them). And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to confer the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations in this way: Let him (who desires to receive the ordination), first have his hair and beard cut off; let him put on yellow robes, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet of the Bhikkhus (with his head), and sit down squatting; then let him raise his joined hands and tell him to say:

4. "I take my refuge in the Buddha, I take my refuge in the Dhamma, I take my refuge in the Samgha. And for the second time I take (&c. . . . Samgha). And for the third time I take my refuge in the Buddha, and for the third time I take my refuge in the Dhamma, and for the third time I take my refuge in the Samgha."

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations consisting in the three times repeated declaration of taking refuge (in the holy triad).'

End of the account of the upasampadâ ordination by the threefold declaration of taking refuge¹.

¹ On this ceremony, which is still gone through before the regular ordination, see the remarks in the note on chapter I, § 1.

13.

1. And the Blessed One, after having kept the vassa residence¹, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'By wise contemplation, O Bhikkhus, and by wise firmness of exertion have I attained the highest emancipation, have I realised the highest emancipation. Attain ye also, O Bhikkhus, the highest emancipation, realise the highest emancipation, by wise contemplation and by wise firmness of exertion.'

2. And Māra the wicked One went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he addressed the Blessed One by the following stanza: 'Thou art bound by Māra's fetters, human and divine. Thou art bound by strong fetters. Thou wilt not be delivered from me, O Samana.'

(Buddha replied): 'I am delivered from Māra's fetters, human and divine. I am delivered from the strong fetters. Thou art struck down, O Death.'

Then Māra the wicked One understood: 'The Blessed One knows me, the perfect One knows me;' and, sad and afflicted, he vanished away.

14.

1. And the Blessed One, after having dwelt at Benares as long as he thought fit, went forth to Uruvelā. And the Blessed One left the road and went to a certain grove; having gone there, and having entered it, he sat down at the foot of a tree. At that time there was a party of thirty friends, rich young men, who were sporting in that same grove together with their wives. One of them had no wife; for him they had procured a harlot. Now while they did not pay attention, and were indulging in their sports, that harlot took up the articles belonging to them, and ran away.

¹ See about the vassa residence the rules given in Book III.

2. Then those companions, doing service to their friend, went in search of that woman; and, roaming about that grove, they saw the Blessed One sitting at the foot of a tree. Seeing him they went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, they said to the Blessed One: 'Pray, Lord, has the Blessed One seen a woman passing by?'

'What have you to do, young men, with the woman?'

'We were sporting, Lord, in this grove, thirty friends, rich young men, together with our wives. One of us had no wife; for him we had procured a harlot. Now, Lord, while we did not pay attention, and were indulging in our sports, that harlot has taken up the articles belonging to us, and has run away. Therefore, Lord, we companions, doing service to our friend, go in search of that woman, and roam about this grove.'

3. 'Now what think you, young men? Which would be the better for you; that you should go in search of a woman, or that you should go in search of yourselves?'

'That, Lord, would be the better for us, that we should go in search of ourselves.'

'If so, young men, sit down, I will preach to you the Truth (Dhamma).'

The rich young companions replied: 'Yes, Lord,' and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, and sat down near him.

4. Then the Blessed One preached to them, (&c., as in chap. 8. 2, or 9. 3).

5. And having seen the Truth, (&c., as in chap. 9. 4 down to:). Thus these venerable persons received the upasampadâ ordination.

Here ends the story of the thirty rich young companions.

End of the second Bhānavāra.

15.

1. And the Blessed One, wandering from place to place, came to Uruvelâ. At that time there lived in Uruvelâ three *Gaṇilas*¹, Uruvelâ Kassapa, Nadi Kassapa (Kassapa of the River, i. e. the Nerañgarâ), and Gayâ Kassapa (Kassapa of the village Gayâ). Of these the Gaṇila Uruvelâ Kassapa was chief, leader, foremost, first, and highest over five hundred Gaṇilas; Nadi Kassapa was chief (&c., down to highest over) three hundred Gaṇilas, Gayâ Kassapa was chief (&c., down to highest over) two hundred Gaṇilas.

2. And the Blessed One went to the hermitage of

¹ The Gaṇilas (i. e. ascetics wearing matted hair) are Brahmanical vānaprasthas. The description of their ascetic life given in many passages of the Gâtaka Atthavannanâ and of the Apadâna exactly agrees with the picture of the forest life of the ὰλόβιοι which so frequently occurs in the Mahābhārata. In the Mahāvagga (VI, 35, 2) it is expressly stated that the Gaṇilas recognised the authority of the Veda, and it is in keeping with this that the usual term for adopting the state of a Gaṇila is 'isipabbaggam pabbagati' (frequently in the Gât. Atth.), i. e. leaving the world and becoming a Rishi.

the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa; having gone there, he said to the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa: 'If it is not disagreeable to you, Kassapa, let me spend one night in the room where your (sacred) fire is kept.'

'It is not disagreeable to me, great Samāna, but there is a savage Nāga (or Serpent) king of great magical power¹, a dreadfully venomous serpent; let him do no harm to you.'

And a second time the Blessed One said to the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa: 'If it is not disagreeable,' &c.

'It is not disagreeable,' &c.

And a third time the Blessed One said: 'If it is not disagreeable,' &c.

'It is not disagreeable,' &c.

'He is not likely to do any harm to me. Pray, Kassapa, allow me a place in the room where your fire is kept.'

'Stay there, great Samāna, as you wish it.'

3. Then the Blessed One entered the room where the fire was kept, made himself a couch of grass, and sat down cross-legged, keeping the body erect and surrounding himself with watchfulness of mind². And the Nāga saw that the Blessed One had entered; when he saw that, he became annoyed, and irritated, and sent forth a cloud of smoke. Then the Blessed One thought: 'What if I were to leave intact the skin, and hide, and flesh, and ligaments, and bones, and marrow of this Nâga ; but were to conquer the fire, which he will send forth, by my fire.'

¹ Iddhi. Compare the passages referred to by Rh. D. in 'Buddhist Suttas from the Pāli,' pp. 2, 40, 259; and further Mahāvagga VI, 15, 8, and Kullavagga VII, 1, 4, and VII, 2, 1.

² Satiṃ upaṭṭhāpetvā. Sati is here a more precise idea than memory.

4. And the Blessed One effected the appropriate exercise of miraculous power and sent forth a cloud of smoke. Then the Nâga, who could not master his rage¹, sent forth flames. And the Blessed One, converting his body into fire², sent forth flames. When they both shone forth with their flames, the fire room looked as if it were burning and blazing, as if it were all in flames. And the Gaṭīlas, surrounding the fire room, said : 'Truly the countenance of the great Samana is beautiful, but the Nâga will do harm to him³.'

5. That night having elapsed, the Blessed One, leaving intact the skin and hide and flesh and ligaments and bones and marrow of that Nâga, and conquering the Nâga's fire by his fire, threw him into his alms-bowl, and showed him to the Gaṭīla Uruvelâ Kassapa (saying), 'Here you see the Nâga, Kassapa ; his fire has been conquered by my fire.'

Then the Gaṭīla Uruvelâ Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties, in that he is able to conquer by his fire the fire of that savage Nâga king, who is possessed of magical power, that dreadfully venomous serpent. He is not, however, holy (arahâ) as I am.'

6⁴. Near the Nerañgarâ river the Blessed One

¹ Buddhaghosa explains makkha by kodha.

² Compare Kullavagga IV, 4, 4, where Dabba also tegodhâtum samâpaggati, that is, his finger is on fire.

³ Compare the Editor's corrections at Kullavagga, p. 363.

⁴ In §§ 6, 7 (excepting the last clause of § 7) the story related in §§ 1-5 is repeated in a more popular style. This appears to us to be a more archaic redaction than the preceding. We do not know said to the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa: 'If it is not disagreeable to you, Kassapa, let me dwell this moonlight night in your fire room.'

'It is not disagreeable to me, great Samana, but in your own behalf I warn you off. There is a savage Snake king there possessed of magical power, a dreadfully venomous serpent; let him do no harm to you.'

'He is not likely to do any harm to me; pray, Kassapa, allow me a place in your fire room.'

When he saw that Kassapa had given his permission, fearlessly He, who had overcome all fear, entered. When the chief of Serpents saw that the Sage had entered, he became irritated, and sent forth a cloud of smoke. Then the chief of men¹, joyful and unperplexed, also sent forth a cloud of smoke. Unable to master his rage, the chief of Serpents sent forth flames like a burning fire. Then the chief of men¹, the perfect master of the element of fire, also sent forth flames. When they shone forth both with their flames, the Gaṭilas looked at the fire room (saying), 'Truly the countenance of the great Samana is beautiful, but the Nāga will do harm to him.'

7. And when that night had elapsed, the flames of the Nāga were extinguished, but the various-coloured flames of Him who is possessed of magical powers remained. Dark blue and red, light red, yellow, and crystal-coloured flames of various colours any other instance in the Pāli Piṭakas of a similar repetition, excepting a short passage at the end of chap. 24. 3; and one other in the Mahā-padhāna Sutta.

¹ Literally, 'the Snake among men,' or 'the Elephant among men' (manussanāgo).

appeared on the Āṅgīrasa's¹ body. Having put the chief of Serpents into his alms-bowl, he showed him to the Brāhmaṇa (saying), 'Here you see the Nāga, Kassapa; his fire has been conquered by my fire.'

And the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa, having conceived an affection for the Blessed One in consequence of this wonder, said to the Blessed One: 'Stay with me, great Samana, I will daily provide you with food.'

End of the first Wonder.

16.

1. And the Blessed One resided in a certain grove near the hermitage of the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa. And on a beautiful night the four Mahārāgas², filling the whole grove with light by the brilliancy of their complexion, went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, they stood in the four directions like great firebrands.

2. And when that night had elapsed, the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he said to the Blessed One: 'It is time, great Samana, the meal is ready. Who were they, great Samana, who came, this beautiful night, filling the whole grove with light by the brilliancy of their complexion, to the place where you were, and having approached you and respectfully saluted you, stood in the four directions like great firebrands?’

¹ According to Vedic tradition the Gautamas, as is well known, belong to the Āṅgīrasa tribe.

² See chap. 4. 4.

‘They were the four Mahârâgas, Kassapa, who came to me in order to hear my preaching.’

Then the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa thought : ‘Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since even the four Mahârâgas come to hear his preaching. He is not, however, holy like me.’

And the Blessed One ate the food offered by the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa, and continued to stay in that same grove.

End of the second Wonder.

17.

1. And on a beautiful night Sakka (Sakra or Indra) the king of the devas, filling the whole grove with light by the brilliancy of his complexion, went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he stood near him like a great firebrand, surpassing in beauty and brilliancy the splendour of the former appearances.

2. And when that night had elapsed (&c., as in chap. 16. 2).

End of the third Wonder.

18.

And on a beautiful night Brahmā Sahampati (&c., as in chap. 17).

End of the fourth Wonder.

19.

1. At that time a great sacrifice which the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa used to celebrate was approaching, and all the people of Aṅga and Magadha wished to go to that sacrifice carrying abundant food, both hard and soft. Now the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa thought : 'Presently my great sacrifice is approaching, and all the people of Aṅga and Magadha will come and bring with them abundant food, both hard and soft. If the great Samāna should perform a wonder before that great assembly, gain and honour would increase to the great Samāna, and my gain and honour would diminish. Well, the great Samāna shall not appear here to-morrow.'

2. Then the Blessed One, understanding by the power of his mind this reflection which had arisen in the mind of the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa, went to Uttara Kuru ; having begged alms there, he took the food (he had received) to the Anotatta lake¹; there he took his meal and rested during the heat of the day at the same place.

And when the night had elapsed, the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa went to the place where the Blessed One was ; having approached him, he said to the

¹ One of the supposed seven great lakes in the Himavant.

Blessed One: 'It is time, great Samana, the meal is ready. Why did you not come yesterday, great Samana? We have thought of you: "Why does the great Samana not come?" and your portions of food, both hard and soft, were served up for you.'

3. (Buddha replied): 'Did you not think, Kassapa: "Presently my great sacrifice(&c., as above down to:). Well, the great Samana shall not appear here to-morrow?"'

4. 'Now I understood, Kassapa, by the power of my mind this reflection which had arisen in your mind, and I went to Uttara Kuru; having begged alms there, I took the food to the Anotatta lake; there I took my meal and rested during the heat of the day at the same place.'

Then the Gatila Uruvelâ Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since he is able to understand by the power of his mind the thoughts of other people. He is not, however, holy like me.'

And the Blessed One ate (&c., as in chap. 16. 2).

End of the fifth Wonder.

20.

1. At that time the Blessed One had rags taken from a dust heap (of which he was going to make himself a dress). Now the Blessed One thought: 'Where shall I wash these rags?' Then Sakka the king of the devas, understanding in his mind the thought which had arisen in the mind of the Blessed One, dug a tank with his own hand, and said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, might the Blessed One wash the rags here.'

And the Blessed One thought: 'What shall I rub the rags upon?' Then Sakka the king of the devas, understanding, &c., put there a great stone and said: 'Lord, might the Blessed One rub the rags upon this stone.'

2. And the Blessed One thought: 'What shall I take hold of when going up (from the tank)?' Then a deity that resided in a Kakudha tree, understanding, &c., bent down a branch and said: 'Lord, might the Blessed One take hold of this branch when going up (from the tank).'

And the Blessed One thought: 'What shall I lay the rags upon (in order to dry them)?' Then Sakka the king of the devas, understanding, &c., put there a great stone and said: 'Lord, might the Blessed One lay the rags upon this stone.'

3. And when that night had elapsed, the Gaṭṭila Uruvelā Kassapa went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he said to the Blessed One: 'It is time, great Samāna, the meal is ready. What is this, great Samāna? Formerly there was here no tank, and now here is this tank. Formerly no stone was put here; by whom has this stone been put here? Formerly this Kakudha tree did not bend down its branch, and now this branch is bent down.'

4. 'I had rags, Kassapa, taken from a dust heap; and I thought, Kassapa: "Where shall I wash these rags?"' Then, Kassapa, Sakka the king of the devas, understanding in his mind the thought which had arisen in my mind, dug a tank with his hand and said to me: "Lord, might the Blessed One wash the rags here." Thus this tank has been dug by the hand of a non-human being.

'And I thought, Kassapa : "What shall I rub the rags upon?" Then, Kassapa, Sakka, &c. Thus this stone has been put here by a non-human being.

5. 'And I thought, Kassapa : "What shall I take hold of when going up (from the tank)?" Then, Kassapa, a deity, &c. Thus this Kakudha tree has served me as a hold for my hand.

'And I thought, Kassapa : "Where shall I lay the rags upon (in order to dry them)?" Then, Kassapa, Sakka, &c. Thus this stone has been put here by a non-human being.'

6. Then the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa thought : 'Truly the great Samāna possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since Sakka the king of the devas does service to him. He is not, however, holy like me.'

And the Blessed One ate (&c., as in chap. 16. 2).

7. And when that night had elapsed, the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa went to the place where the Blessed One was ; having approached him, he announced to the Blessed One that it was time, by saying, 'It is time, great Samāna, the meal is ready.'

(Buddha replied): 'Go you, Kassapa ; I will follow you.'

Having thus sent away the Gaṭṭhā Uruvelā Kassapa, he went to pluck a fruit from the gambu tree after which this continent of Gambudīpa (the Gambu Island, or India) is named¹; then arriving before ¹ See about this gambu tree, which grows in the forest of Himavanta, Hardy's Manual, p. 18 seq.

Kassapa he sat down in the room where Kassapa's (sacred) fire was kept¹.

8. Then the Gaṭṭila Uruvelā Kassapa saw the Blessed One sitting in the fire room; seeing him he said to the Blessed One: 'By what way have you come, great Samana? I have departed before you, and you have arrived before me and are sitting in the fire room.'

9. 'When I had sent you away, Kassapa, I went to pluck a fruit from the gambu tree after which this continent of Gambudīpa is named; then I arrived before you and sat down in the fire room. Here is the gambu fruit, Kassapa, it is beautiful, fragrant, and full of flavour; you may eat it, if you like.'

'Nay, great Samana, to you alone it is becoming to eat it; eat it yourself.'

And the Gaṭṭila Uruvelā Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since he is able, having sent me away before him, to go and pluck a fruit from the gambu tree after which this continent of Gambudīpa is named, and then to arrive before me and to sit down in the fire room. He is not, however, holy like me.'

And the Blessed One ate (&c., as in chap. 16. 2).

10. And when that night had elapsed (&c., as in § 7, down to:). Having thus sent away the Gaṭṭila Uruvelā Kassapa, he went to pluck a fruit from a mango tree growing near the gambu tree after which this continent of Gambudīpa is named, &c. He went to pluck a fruit from an emblic myrobalan tree, &c., from a yellow myrobalan tree growing near the gambu tree, &c. He went to the Tāvātimsa heaven to pluck a pârikĕĕhattaka (or pâri-gâtaka) flower; then arriving before Kassapa he sat down in the fire room. Then the Gaṭiḷa Uruvelâ Kassapa saw (&c., as in § 8).

¹ Very probably it is this story in which a similar legend has originated that the Ceylonese tell about Mahinda, the converter of their island; see Dīpavaṃsa XII, 75.

11. 'When I had sent you away, Kassapa, I went to the Tāvātimsa heaven to pluck a pârikĕĕhattaka flower; then I arrived before you and sat down in the fire room. Here is the pârikĕĕhattaka flower, Kassapa; it is beautiful and fragrant; you may take it, if you like.'

'Nay, great Samana, to you alone it is becoming to keep it; keep it yourself.'

And the Gaṭiḷa (&c., as in § 9). 'He is not, however, holy as I am.'

12. At that time one day the Gaṭiḷas, who wished to attend on their sacred fires, could not succeed in splitting fire-wood. Now these Gaṭiḷas thought: 'Doubtless this is the magical power and the high faculty of the great Samana that we cannot succeed in splitting fire-wood.' Then the Blessed One said to the Gaṭiḷa Uruvelâ Kassapa: 'Shall the fire-wood be split, Kassapa?'

'Let it be split, great Samana.'

Then in a moment the five hundred pieces of fire-wood¹ were split. And the Gaṭiḷa Uruvelâ ¹ Bigandet (Life of Gaudama, p. 135) translates this passage from the Burmese version: 'Gaudama split it in a moment, in five hundred pieces.' Doubtless the true meaning is, that there were five hundred pieces of wood, one for each of the five hundred Gaṭiḷas over whom was Kassapa chief. In the following two stories (§§ 13, 14) we have five hundred sacred fires.

Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samāna possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since even the fire-wood splits itself (at his command). He is not, however, holy like me.'

13. At that time the Gaṭilas who wished to attend on their sacred fires, could not succeed in lighting up the fires (&c., as in the preceding story).

14. At that time the Gaṭilas, after having attended on their sacred fires, could not succeed in extinguishing the fires (&c., as above).

15. At that time in the cold winter nights, in the time between the ashākā festivals¹, when snow falls, the Gaṭilas plunged into the river Neraṅgarā, and emerged again, and repeatedly plunged into the water and emerged. And the Blessed One created five hundred vessels with burning fire²; at those the Gaṭilas coming out of the river warmed themselves. And the Gaṭilas thought: 'Doubtless this is the magical power and the high faculty of the great Samāna that these vessels with fire have been caused to appear here.' And the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samāna possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since he can create such great vessels with fire. He is not, however, holy like me.'

16. At that time a great rain fell out of season; and a great inundation arose. The place where the Blessed One lived was covered with water. Then the Blessed One thought: 'What if I were to cause the water to recede round about, and if I were to walk up and down in the midst of the water on a dust-covered spot.' And the Blessed One caused the water to recede round about, and he walked up and down in the midst of the water on a dust-covered spot.

¹ The ashākā festivals, about which accurate details are given in the Gṛhya Sūtras, were celebrated about the wane of the moon of the winter months mārgaśīrsha, taisha, and māgha; see Weber, Die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra, II, p. 337, and H. O.'s note on the Sāṅkhāyana Gṛhya, 3, 12, ap. Indische Studien, XV, p. 145.

² Buddhaghosa explains mandāmukhiyo by aggibhāganāni.

And the Gaṭīla Uruvelā Kassapa, who was afraid that the water might have carried away the great Samana, went with a boat together with many Gaṭīlas to the place where the Blessed One lived. Then the Gaṭīla Uruvelā Kassapa saw the Blessed One, who had caused the water to recede round about, walking up and down in the midst of the water on a dust-covered spot. Seeing him, he said to the Blessed One: 'Are you there, great Samana?'

'Here I am, Kassapa,' replied the Blessed One, and he rose in the air and stationed himself in the boat.

And the Gaṭīla Uruvelā Kassapa thought: 'Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties, since the water does not carry him away. He is not, however, holy like me.'

17. Then the Blessed One thought: 'This foolish man will still for a long time think thus: "Truly the great Samana possesses high magical powers and great faculties; he is not, however, holy like me." What if I were to move the mind of this Gaṭīla (in order to show him my superiority).'

And the Blessed One said to the Gaṭīla Uruvelā Kassapa: 'You are not holy (arahâ), Kassapa, nor have you entered the path of Arahatship, nor do you walk in such a practice as will lead you to Arahatship, or to entering the path of Arahatship.'

Then the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa prostrated himself, inclining his head to the feet of the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let me receive the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations from the Blessed One.'

18. (Buddha replied): 'You, Kassapa, are chief, leader, foremost, first, and highest of five hundred Gaṭilas; go first and inform them of your intention, and let them do what they think fit.'

Then the Gaṭila Uruvelā Kassapa went to those Gaṭilas; having gone to them, he said to those Gaṭilas: 'I wish, Sirs, to lead a religious life under the direction of the great Samana; you may do, Sirs, what you think fit.'

(The Gaṭilas replied): 'We have conceived, Sir, an affection for the great Samana long since; if you will lead, Sir, a religious life under the great Samana's direction, we will all lead a religious life under the great Samana's direction.'

19. Then the Gaṭilas flung their hair¹, their braids, their provisions², and the things for the agnihotra sacrifice into the river, and went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and prostrated themselves before him, inclining their heads to the feet of the Blessed One, they said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let us receive the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations from the Blessed One.'

¹ Which they had cut off in order to receive the pabbaggā ordination, see chap. 12. 3.

² We are extremely doubtful about the meaning of khârikâga, which Buddhaghosa explains by khâribhâra. Perhaps it may mean provisions of any description of which each Gaṭila used to keep one khâri (a certain dry measure).

‘Come, O Bhikkhus,’ said the Blessed One, ‘well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.’

Thus these venerable persons received the upa-sampadâ ordination.

20. And the Gaṭila Nadi Kassapa saw the hair, the braids, the provisions, the things for the agni-hotra sacrifice, which were carried down by the river; when he saw that, he became afraid that some misfortune might have befallen his brother. He sent some Gaṭilas, saying, ‘Go and look after my brother,’ and went himself with his three hundred Gaṭilas to the venerable Uruvelâ Kassapa; having approached him, he said to the venerable Uruvelâ Kassapa: ‘Now, Kassapa, is this bliss?’

(Uruvelâ Kassapa replied): ‘Yes, friend, this is bliss.’

21. And the Gaṭilas (who had come with Nadi Kassapa (&c., as in § 19).

22. And the Gaṭila Gayâ Kassapa saw (&c., as in § 20); when he saw that, he became afraid that some misfortune might have befallen his brothers. He sent some Gaṭilas, saying, ‘Go and look after my brothers,’ and went himself with his two hundred Gaṭilas to the venerable Uruvelâ Kassapa (&c., as above).

23. And the Gaṭilas (who had come with Gayâ Kassapa (&c., as in § 19).

24. ¹ At the command of the Blessed One the five hundred pieces of fire-wood could not be split and were split, the fires could not be lit up and were lit up, could not be extinguished and were extinguished; besides he created five hundred vessels with fire. Thus the number of these miracles amounts to three thousand five hundred.

¹ This is evidently a remark added to the text by a reader or commentator.

21.

1. And the Blessed One, after having dwelt at Uruvelâ as long as he thought fit, went forth to Gayâsîsa¹, accompanied by a great number of Bhikkhus, by one thousand Bhikkhus who all had been Gaḥilās before. There near Gayâ, at Gayâsîsa, the Blessed One dwelt together with those thousand Bhikkhus.

2. There the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Everything, O Bhikkhus, is burning. And how, O Bhikkhus, is everything burning?

'The eye, O Bhikkhus, is burning; visible things are burning; the mental impressions based on the eye are burning; the contact of the eye (with visible things) is burning; the sensation produced by the contact of the eye (with visible things), be it pleasant, be it painful, be it neither pleasant nor painful, that also is burning. With what fire is it burning? I declare unto you that it is burning with the fire of lust, with the fire of anger, with the fire of ignorance; it is burning with (the anxieties of) birth, decay, death, grief, lamentation, suffering, dejection, and despair.

3. 'The ear is burning, sounds are burning, &c. . . . The nose is burning, odours are burning, &c.

¹ According to General Cunningham, Gayâsîsa ('the head of Gayâ') is the mountain of Brahmâyoni near Gayâ. Arch. Rep. III, 107.

. . . . The tongue is burning, tastes are burning, &c. . . . The body is burning, objects of contact are burning, &c. . . . The mind is burning, thoughts are burning, &c. . . .¹

4. 'Considering this, O Bhikkhus, a disciple learned (in the scriptures), walking in the Noble Path, becomes weary of the eye, weary of visible things, weary of the mental impressions based on the eye, weary of the contact of the eye (with visible things), weary also of the sensation produced by the contact of the eye (with visible things), be it pleasant, be it painful, be it neither pleasant nor painful. He becomes weary of the ear (&c. . . . , down to thoughts¹). Becoming weary of all that, he divests himself of passion; by absence of passion he is made free; when he is free, he becomes aware that he is free; and he realises that re-birth is exhausted; that holiness is completed; that duty is fulfilled; and that there is no further return to this world.'

When this exposition was propounded, the minds of those thousand Bhikkhus became free from attachment to the world, and were released from the Âsavas.

Here ends the sermon on 'The Burning.'

End of the third Bhânavâra concerning the Wonders done at Uruvelâ.

¹ Here the same exposition which has been given relating to the eye, its objects, the sensations produced by its contact with objects, &c., is repeated with reference to the ear and the other organs of sense.

22.

1. And the Blessed One, after having dwelt at Gayâsîsa as long as he thought fit, went forth to Râgagaha, accompanied by a great number of Bhikkhus, by one thousand Bhikkhus who all had been Gaṭilas before. And the Blessed One, wandering from place to place, came to Râgagaha. There the Blessed One dwelt near Râgagaha, in the Latthivana pleasure garden, near the sacred shrine of *Supatittha*¹.

2. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra heard : 'The Samana Gotama Sakyaputta, an ascetic of the Sakya tribe, has just arrived at Râgagaha and is staying near Râgagaha, in the Latthivana pleasure garden, near the sacred shrine of Supatittha. Of Him the blessed Gotama such a glorious fame is spread abroad : "Truly he is the blessed, holy, absolute Sambuddha, endowed with knowledge and conduct, the most happy One, who understands all worlds, the highest One, who guides men as a driver curbs a bullock, the teacher of gods and men, the blessed Buddha. He makes known the Truth, which he has understood himself and seen face to face, to this world system with its devas, its Mâras, and its Brahmâs ; to all beings, Samanas and Brâhmanas, ¹ Latthivana (Sansk. yashâvana), literally, 'stick forest,' means a forest consisting of bambus. General Cunningham has the following note about this bambu forest : 'In 1862, when I was at Râjgir (i.e. Râgagaha), I heard the bambu forest always spoken of as Jaktiban ; . . . I fixed the position of the bambu forest to the south-west of Râjgir on the hill lying between the hot-springs of Tapoban and old Râgagrîha.' Reports, III, 140.

The word we have rendered sacred shrine is Ketiya.

gods and men; he preaches that Truth (Dhamma) which is glorious in the beginning, glorious in the middle, glorious at the end, in the spirit and in the letter; he proclaims a consummate, perfect, and pure life." It is good to obtain the sight of holy men (Arahats) like that.'

3. And the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra, surrounded by twelve myriads of Magadha Brâhmanas and householders¹, went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. And of those twelve myriads of Magadha Brâhmanas and householders some also respectfully saluted the Blessed One and sat down near him; some exchanged greeting with the Blessed One, having exchanged with him greeting and complaisant words, they sat down near him; some bent their clasped hands towards the Blessed One and sat down near him; some shouted out their name and their family name before the Blessed One and sat down near him; some silently sat down near him.

4. Now those twelve myriads of Magadha Brâhmanas and householders thought: 'How now is this? has the great Samana placed himself under the spiritual direction of Uruvelâ Kassapa, or has Uruvelâ Kassapa placed himself under the spiritual direction of the great Samana?'

And the Blessed One, who understood in his mind the reflection which had arisen in the minds of those twelve myriads of Magadha Brâhmanas and householders, addressed the venerable Uruvelâ Kassapa in this stanza: 'What knowledge have you gained, O inhabitant of Uruvelā, that has induced you, who were renowned for your penances¹, to forsake your sacred fire? I ask you, Kassapa, this question: How is it that your fire sacrifice has become deserted?'

¹ The word householder (gahapati) is used here, as is the case not unfrequently, to denote householders of the third caste. Compare Rh. D.'s note on Mahâ-sudassana Sutta, p. 260.

(Kassapa replied): 'It is visible things and sounds, and also tastes, pleasures and woman that the sacrifices speak of²; because I understood that whatever belongs to existence³ is filth, therefore I took no more delight in sacrifices and offerings⁴.'

5. 'But if your mind, Kassapa (said the Blessed One⁵), found there no more delight,—either in visible things, or sounds, or tastes,—what is it in the world of men or gods in which⁶ your mind, Kassapa, now finds delight? Tell me that.'

(Kassapa replied): 'I have seen the state of peace (i. e. Nirvāṇa) in which the basis of existence (upadhi³) and the obstacles to perfection (kiñ-

¹ Literally, 'who is known as emaciate.' This is said with reference to the mortifications practised by the Gaṣṭas or Vānaprasthas. The Mahābhārata (III, 1499) uses the same adjective (krīṣa) of a Gaṣṭa. Vadāno we take for a participle, but it is possible also to read vadāno, 'tell us,' which Professor Jacobi (Zeitschrift der Deutschen Morg. Ges., XXXIV, p. 187) prefers. Buddhaghosa takes kisakovadāno for a compound of kisaka and ovadāna: tāpasānam ovadako anusāsako.

² The meaning is: The mantras which are recited at the sacrifices contain praises of visible things, &c., and the rewards that are promised to him who offers such sacrifices do not extend beyond that same sphere.

³ The Pāli word is upadhi, which is translated by Childers, 'substratum of being.' See our note on chap. 5. 2. In this passage upadhi is said to refer to the Khandhas (Buddhaghosa).

⁴ Here we have the Vedic distinction of greater and smaller sacrifices (yagatayas and guhodayas).

⁵ The words 'said the Blessed One' (ti Bhagavā avoṭṭa) are probably interpolated from a gloss, as they destroy the metre.

⁶ Doubtless Buddhaghosa is right in explaining ko by kva.

*kaṇa*¹) have ceased, which is free from attachment to sensual existence, which cannot pass over into another state, which cannot be led to another state; therefore I took no more delight in sacrifices and offerings.'

6. Then the venerable Uruvelā Kassapa rose from his seat, adjusted his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, prostrated himself, inclining his head to the feet of the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One: 'My teacher, Lord, is the Blessed One, I am his pupil; my teacher, Lord, is the Blessed One, I am his pupil.' Then those twelve myriads of Magadha Brāhmaṇas and householders understood: 'Uruvelā Kassapa has placed himself under the spiritual direction of the great Samana.'

7, 8. And the Blessed One, who understood in his mind the reflection that had arisen in the minds of those twelve myriads of Magadha Brāhmaṇas and householders, preached to them in due course (&c., as in chap. 7, §§ 5, 6, down to:). Just as a clean cloth free from black specks properly takes the dye, thus eleven myriads of those Magadha Brāhmaṇas and householders with Bimbisāra at their head, while sitting there, obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is, the knowledge): 'Whatsoever is subject to the condition of origination is subject also to the condition of cessation.' One myriad announced their having become lay-pupils.

¹ Akiṇṇa here, and elsewhere, used as an epithet of Arahatsip, refers to the state of mind in which the kiṇṇas, that is, lust, malice, and delusion (so in the Samgīti Sutta of the Dīgha Nikāya), have ceased to be. It is literally 'being without the somethings,' which are the things that stand in the way, the obstacles to Buddhist perfection; and Buddhaghosa (in the Su-māṅgala Vilāsinī on the passage in the Samgīti Sutta) explains accordingly kiṇṇa by paṭibodha.

9. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra, having seen the Truth (&c. . . . down to) dependent on nobody else for the knowledge of the Teacher's doctrine, said to the Blessed One: 'In former days, Lord, when I was a prince, I entertained five wishes; these are fulfilled now. In former days, Lord, when I was a prince, I wished: "O that I might be inaugurated as king." This was my first wish, Lord; this is fulfilled now. "And might then the holy, absolute Sambuddha come into my kingdom." This was my second wish, Lord; this is fulfilled now.

10. "And might I pay my respects to Him, the Blessed One." This was my third wish, Lord; this is fulfilled now. "And might He the Blessed One preach his doctrine (Dhamma) to me." This was my fourth wish, Lord; this is fulfilled now. "And might I understand His, the Blessed One's doctrine." This was my fifth wish, Lord; this is fulfilled now. These were the five wishes, Lord, which I entertained in former days when I was a prince; these are fulfilled now.

11. 'Glorious, Lord! (&c., as in chap. 7. 10, down to:) who has taken his refuge in Him. And might the Blessed One, Lord, consent to take his meal with me to-morrow together with the fraternity of Bhikkhus.'

The Blessed One expressed his consent by remaining silent.

12. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra, when he understood that the Blessed One had accepted his invitation, rose from his seat, respectfully saluted the Blessed One, and, passing round him with his right side towards him, went away.

And when the night had elapsed, the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra ordered excellent food, both hard and soft, to be prepared, and had dinner-time announced to the Blessed One in the words: 'It is time, Lord, the meal is ready.' And in the forenoon the Blessed One, having put on his under-robcs, took his alms-bowl, and with his ktvara on entered the city of Râgagaha accompanied by a great number of Bhikkhus, by one thousand Bhikkhus who all had been Gaṭilas before.

13. At that time Sakka the king of the devas, assuming the appearance of a young Brâhman, walked in front of the Bhikkhu fraternity with Buddha at its head, singing the following stanzas: 'The self-controlled One with the self-controlled, with the former Gaṭilas, the released One with the released, the Blessed One, gold-coloured like an ornament of siṅgt gold¹, has entered Râgagaha.

'The emancipated One with the emancipated, with the former Gaṭilas, &c.

'He who has crossed (the ocean of passion) with them who have crossed (it), with the former Gaṭilas, the released One with the released, the Blessed One, gold-coloured like an ornament of siṅgt gold, has entered Râgagaha.

'He who is possessed of the ten Noble States²

¹ Gold colour is one (the 17th) of the thirty-two lakkhana which form the characteristics of Buddha as a mahâpurisa.

² The ten ariyavâsas. Buddhaghosa says: dasasu ariyavâsesu vutthavâso. The Samgîti Sutta gives the ten Noble States, as follows: 1. being free from the five bad qualities (pañkaṅga), 2. being possessed of the six good qualities (khaḷaṅga), 3. being guarded in the one thing (ekâraḁkha), 4. observing four things (katurâpassena), 5. rejecting each of the four false truths (pa-nunna pakkeka-sakka), 6. seeking right things (samavayasa- and of the ten Powers¹, who understands the ten Paths of Kamma² and possesses the ten (attributes of Arahatsip)³, the Blessed One, surrounded by ten hundred of followers, has entered Râgagaha.'

14. The people when they saw Sakka the king of the devas, said: 'This youth indeed is handsome; this youth indeed has a lovely appearance; this youth indeed is pleasing. Whose attendant may this youth be?'

When they talked thus, Sakka the king of the devas addressed those people in this stanza: 'He who is wise, entirely self-controlled, the unrivalled Buddha, the Arahata, the most happy upon earth: his attendant am I.'

15. And the Blessed One went to the palace of the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra. Having gone there, he sat down with the Bhikkhus who followed him, on seats laid out for them. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra with his own hands served and offered excellent food, both hard and soft, to the fraternity of Bhikkhus with the Buddha at dhesana), 7. having pure aims (anâvila-samkappa), 8. being full of ease (passaddhakâya-samkhâra), 9. being emancipated in heart (suvimuttakitta), 10. being emancipated in ideas (suvimuttapañña). The Samgiti then further enlarges on the meaning of each of these ten.

¹ The ten Balas, which are ten kinds of knowledge (ñâna); see Burnouf, Lotus, p. 781 and following, and compare Gâtaka I, 78.

² Buddhaghosa explains dasadhammavidû by dasakammapathavidû.

³ Buddhaghosa explains dasabhi k'ûpeto by supplying asekhehi dhammehi. The first eight of the ten asekhâ dhammâ consist in the full perfection of sammâdiñhi (right belief) and the other categories enumerated in the formula of the Noble Eightfold Path; the ninth and tenth are the perfection of sammâñâna (right knowledge) and sammâvimutti (right emancipation).

its head; and when the Blessed One had finished his meal and cleansed his bowl and his hands, he sat down near him.

16. Sitting near him the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisāra thought: 'Where may I find a place for the Blessed One to live in, not too far from the town and not too near, suitable for going and coming, easily accessible for all people who want (to see him), by day not too crowded, at night not exposed to much noise and alarm, clean of the smell of people, hidden from men, well fitted for a retired life?'

17. And the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisāra thought: 'There is the *Ve/uvana*¹, my pleasure garden, which is not too far from the town and not too near, suitable for going and coming, . . . (&c., down to a retired life). What if I were to make an offering of the Ve/uvana pleasure garden to the fraternity of Bhikkhus with the Buddha at its head?'

18. And the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisāra took a golden vessel (with water in it, to be poured over the Buddha's hand); and dedicated (the garden) to the Blessed One (by saying), 'I give up this Ve/uvana pleasure garden, Lord, to the fraternity of Bhikkhus with the Buddha at its head.' The Blessed One accepted the ârâma (park). Then the Blessed One, after having taught, incited, animated, and gladdened the Magadha king Seniya

¹ The site of the Ve/uvana ('bambu forest') near Râgagaha has not yet been discovered. 'It must have occupied about the position where the ancient basements, marked K. K. K. and G. in Cunningham's map of Râgagriha (pl. xiv, Reports, vol. i), were found by him' (Rh. D., 'Buddhism,' p. 62 note).

Bimbisāra by religious discourse, rose from his seat and went away.

And in consequence of this event the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to receive the donation of an ārama (a park).'

23.

1. At that time Saṅgaya, a paribbāgaka (wandering ascetic), resided at Rāgagaha with a great retinue of paribbāgakas, with two hundred and fifty paribbāgakas. At that time Sāriputta and Moggallāna (two young Brāhmanas) led a religious life as followers of Saṅgaya the paribbāgaka; these had given their word to each other: 'He who first attains to the immortal (amata, i.e. Nirvāna) shall tell the other one.'

2. Now one day the venerable Assagi in the forenoon, having put on his under-robes, and having taken his alms-bowl, and with his ḷīvara on, entered the city of Rāgagaha for alms; his walking, turning back, regarding, looking, drawing (his arms) back, and stretching (them) out was decorous; he turned his eyes to the ground, and was dignified in deportment. Now the paribbāgaka Sāriputta saw the venerable Assagi, who went through Rāgagaha for alms, whose walking, &c., was decorous, who kept his eyes on the ground, and was dignified in deportment. Seeing him he thought: 'Indeed this person is one of those Bhikkhus who are the worthy ones (Arahats) in the world, or who have entered the path of Arahatsip. What if I were to approach this Bhikkhu and to ask him: "In whose name, friend, have you retired from the world? Who is your teacher? Whose doctrine do you profess?"

3. Now the paribbâgaka Sâriputta thought: 'This is not the time to ask this Bhikkhu; he has entered the interior yard of a house, walking for alms. What if I were to follow this Bhikkhu step by step, according to the course recognised by those who want something¹.'

And the venerable Assagi, having finished his alms-pilgrimage through Râgagaha, went back with the food he had received. Then the paribbâgaka Sâriputta went to the place where the venerable Assagi was; having approached him, he exchanged greeting with the venerable Assagi; having exchanged with him greeting and complaisant words, he stationed himself at his side; standing at his side the paribbâgaka Sâriputta said to the venerable Assagi: 'Your countenance, friend, is serene; your complexion is pure and bright. In whose name, friend, have you retired from the world? Who is your teacher? Whose doctrine do you profess²?'

4. (Assagi replied): 'There is, friend, the great Samana Sakyaputta, an ascetic of the Sakya tribe; in His, the Blessed One's, name have I retired from the world; He, the Blessed One, is my teacher; and His, the Blessed One's, doctrine do I profess.'

¹ This seems to us the meaning of atthikehi upaññâtam maggam. Sâriputta followed Assagi as suppliants are accustomed to follow their proposed benefactor till a convenient season arrives for preferring their request.

² The same words as are put in the mouth of Upaka, when addressing the Buddha, above, chap. 6, § 7 (and see below, § 6).

‘And what is the doctrine, Sir, which your teacher holds, and preaches to you?’

‘I am only a young disciple, friend; I have but recently received the ordination; and I have newly adopted this doctrine and discipline. I cannot explain to you the doctrine in detail; but I will tell you in short what it means.’

Then the paribbāgaka Sâriputta said to the venerable Assagi: ‘Well, friend, tell me much or little as you like, but be sure to tell me the spirit (of the doctrine); I want but the spirit; why do you make so much of the letter?’

5. Then the venerable Assagi pronounced to the paribbāgaka Sâriputta the following text of the Dhamma: ‘Of all objects which proceed from a cause, the Tathāgata has explained the cause, and He has explained their cessation also; this is the doctrine of the great Samana¹.’

And the paribbāgaka Sâriputta after having heard this text obtained the pure and spotless Eye of the Truth (that is, the following knowledge): ‘Whatsoever is subject to the condition of origination is subject also to the condition of cessation.’ (And he said): ‘If this alone be the Doctrine (the Dhamma), now you have reached up to the state where all sorrow ceases (i. e. Nirvāṇa), (the state) which has remained unseen through many myriads of Kappas (world-ages) of the past.'

¹ This famous stanza doubtless alludes to the formula of the twelve Nidānas (see chap. 1. 2) which explains the origination and cessation of what are called here ‘dhammā hetuppabhavā.’ Hetu and paṭṭhaya (the word so frequently used in the formula of the Nidānas) are nearly synonymous. Colebrooke (Life and Essays, vol. ii. p. 419) says that the Bauddhas distinguish between hetu, ‘proximate cause,’ and paṭṭhaya (pratyaya), ‘concurrent occasion;’ but, in practical use, this slight difference of meaning, if it really existed, has but little weight attached to it.

6. Then the paribbâgaka Sâriputta went to the place where the paribbâgaka Moggallâna was. And the paribbâgaka Moggallâna saw the paribbâgaka Sâriputta coming from afar; seeing him he said to the paribbâgaka Sâriputta: 'Your countenance, friend, is serene; your complexion is pure and bright. Have you then really reached the immortal, friend?'

'Yes, friend, I have attained to the immortal.'

'And how, friend, have you done so?'

7-9. 'I saw, friend, the Bhikkhu Assagi who went through Râgagaha for alms (&c.¹, down to:); "But I will tell you in short what it means."

"Tell me much or little as you like, but be sure to tell me the spirit (of the doctrine); I want but the spirit; why do you make so much of the letter?"

10. 'Then, friend, the Bhikkhu Assagi pronounced the following Dhamma sentence: "Of all objects which proceed from a cause, the Tathâgata has explained the cause, and He has explained their cessation also; this is the doctrine of the great Samana."'

And the paribbâgaka Moggallâna, after having heard (&c., as in § 5, down to the end).

24.

1. Then the paribbâgaka Moggallâna said to the paribbâgaka Sâriputta: 'Let us go, friend, and join the Blessed One; that He, the Blessed One, may be our teacher.'

¹ See §§ 2-4. Instead of 'The paribbâgaka Sâriputta,' of course, the pronoun of the first person is to be read; instead of 'The venerable Assagi' read, 'The Bhikkhu Assagi;' and further, the vocative 'Friend' (âvuso), addressed to Moggallâna, is inserted three or four times in the course of this narration.

(Sâriputta replied): 'It is on our account, friend, that these two hundred and fifty paribbâgakas live here (as followers of Sañgaya), and it is we whom they regard; let us first inform them also of our intention; then they may do what they think fit.'

Then Sâriputta and Moggallâna went to the place where those paribbâgakas were; having approached them, they said to the paribbâgakas: 'Friends, we are going to join the Blessed One; that He, the Blessed One, may be our teacher.'

(The paribbâgakas replied): 'It is on your account, Sirs, that we live here, and it is you whom we regard; if you, Sirs, are about to place yourselves under the spiritual direction of the great Samana, we all will place ourselves also under the spiritual direction of the great Samana.'

2. Then Sâriputta and Moggallâna went to the place where the paribbâgaka Sañgaya was; having approached him, they said to the paribbâgaka Sañgaya: 'Friend, we are going to join the Blessed One; that He, the Blessed One, may be our teacher.'

(Sañgaya replied): 'Nay, friends, do not go; let us all three share in the leadership of this body (of disciples).'

And a second time Sâriputta and Moggallâna said, &c. And a third time Sâriputta and Moggallâna said, &c. (And a third time he replied): 'Nay, friends, do not go; let us all three share in the leadership of this body (of disciples).'

3. But Sâriputta and Moggallâna took with them those two hundred and fifty paribbâgakas and went to the Veḷuvana. But the paribbâgaka Sañgaya began, on the spot, to vomit hot blood from his mouth¹.

And the Blessed One saw them, Sâriputta and Moggallâna, coming from afar; on seeing them he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'There, O Bhikkhus, two companions arrive, Kolita and Upatissa²; these will be a pair of (true) pupils, a most distinguished, auspicious pair.'

When³ (Sâriputta and Moggallâna), who had reached emancipation in the perfect destruction of the substrata (of existence), which is a profound subject accessible only to knowledge, came to the Vêlûvana, the Teacher, who saw them, foretold about them: 'These two companions who are now coming—Kolita and Upatissa—these will be a pair of (true) pupils, a most distinguished, auspicious pair.'

¹ The later Burmese and Chinese works translated by Bigandet (Life of Gaudama, p. 152) and by Beal (Romantic Legend, p. 330) add that he died. This is not in the Pâli text, and the Sinhalese account given by Hardy (Manual, p. 197) is directly opposed to that statement.

² Upatissa was called Sâriputta after his mother ('The Son of Sâri'); Kolita had the family name Moggallâna (compare Beal, Romantic Legend, pp. 324, 331). The name Upatissa occurs in Asoka's well-known edict which has been found at Bairât. The king there quotes 'The Question of Upatissa' among the texts, the study of which he recommends to the brethren and sisters of the fraternity and to the laymen of either sex. This very probably refers to the dialogue between Assagi and Sâriputta.

³ As to this repetition of what had been related before, comp. the note on chap. 15. 6, 7. The words from gambhîre down to upadhisamkhaṇḍe form a sloka. This is one of several instances where an older passage in verse, and probably first composed in some nearly related dialect, appears in the Pâli Piṭakas in prose. It is this which explains the extraordinary grammatical construction of the first seven words. Compare Rh. D.'s note on the similar instance at Mahâ-parinibbâna Sutta V, 62. The exclamation put into the mouth of Sâriputta, and afterwards of Moggallâna (above, chap. 23, §§ 5, 10), ought also, perhaps, to be included in the same category.

4. Then Sâriputta and Moggallâna went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, they prostrated themselves, inclining their heads to the feet of the Blessed One, and said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, let us receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations from the Blessed One.'

'Come, O Bhikkhus,' said the Blessed One, 'well taught is the doctrine; lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.' Thus these venerable persons received the upasampadâ ordination.

5. At that time many distinguished young Magadha noblemen led a religious life under the direction of the Blessed One. The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), 'The Samana Gotama causes fathers to beget no sons; the Samana Gotama causes wives to become widows; the Samana Gotama causes families to become extinct. Now he has ordained one thousand Gatilas, and he has ordained these two hundred and fifty paribbâgakas who were followers of Saṅgaya; and these many distinguished young Magadha noblemen are now leading a religious life under the direction of the Samana Gotama.' And moreover, when they saw the Bhikkhus, they reviled them in the following stanza: 'The great Samana has come to Giribbaga (i. e. Râgagaha) of the Magadha people, leading with him all the followers of Saṅgaya; who will be the next to be led by him?'

6. Some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry; these Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One. (He replied): 'This noise, O Bhikkhus, will not last long; it will last only seven days; after seven days it will be over. And if they revile you, O Bhikkhus, in this stanza: "The great Samāna has come, &c.," you should reply to the revilers in the following stanza: "It is by means of the true doctrine that the great heroes, the Tathāgatas, lead men. Who will murmur at the wise, who lead men by the power of the Truth?"'

7. At that time the people, when seeing the Bhikkhus, reviled them in the following stanza: 'The great Samāna has come, &c.'

Then the Bhikkhus replied to the revilers in the following stanza: 'It is by means of the true doctrine, &c.'

Then the people understood: 'It is by truth, and not by wrong, that the Sakyaputtiya Samānas lead men;' and thus that noise lasted only seven days, and after seven days it was over.

Here ends the narration of the ordination of Sāriputta and Moggallāna.

End of the fourth Bhānavāra.

25¹.

1. At that time some Bhikkhus, as they had no upagghāyas (preceptors) and received no exhortation and instruction, went on their rounds for alms wearing improper under and upper garments (or, wearing their under and upper garments improperly), and in an improper attire. While people were eating, they held out their alms-bowls in which were leavings of food¹, over the hard food (which the people were eating), and held them out over soft food, and held them out over savoury food, and held them out over drinks. They asked for soup and boiled rice themselves, and ate it; in the dining halls they made a great and loud noise.

¹ The chief object of the first book being to discuss the regulations for the upasampadā ordination, at which the preceptor

2. The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas go on their rounds for alms wearing improper under and upper garments, . . . (&c., as in § 1, down to drinks)? How can they make so great and loud a noise in the dining halls? They behave like Brāhmanas at the dinners given to them.'

3. Some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry. Those Bhikkhus who were moderate, frugal, modest, conscientious, anxious for training, were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the Bhikkhus go on their rounds for alms wearing improper under and upper garments, &c.? How can they make so great and loud a noise in the dining halls?'

(upagghâya) of the candidate has a principal part, the text now goes on to relate the institution of the office and upagghâyas, and to explain the mutual duties incumbent on upagghâyas and pupils (saddhivihârikas).

¹ Buddhaghosa has the following note on utti//hapatta: 'utti//hapattan ti pindâya karanakapattam, tasmim hi manussâ ukki//hasaññino (this word is spelt so in the Paris MS. as well as in the Berlin MS. of the Samanta Pâsâdikâ; the usual spelling is ukkhi//ha), tasmâ utti//hapattan ti vuttam. athavâ utti//hahitvâ pattam upanâmentiti evam ettha attho da//habbo.' We take the word, as the former of Buddhaghosa's two explanations implies, for a composition of ukkhi//ha. For the conversion of palatal consonants into dentals, see E. Kuhn, Beiträge zur Pali-Grammatik, p. 36, and on the use of the word compare Trenckner's Milinda Pañho, pp. 213, 214.

4. These Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, having ordered the fraternity of Bhikkhus to assemble, questioned the Bhikkhus: 'Is it true, O Bhikkhus, that some Bhikkhus go on their rounds, . . . (&c., down to), that they make a great and loud noise in the dining halls?'

'It is true, Lord.'

5. Then the Blessed Buddha rebuked those Bhikkhus: 'It is improper, O Bhikkhus, what these foolish persons are doing, it is unbecoming, indecent, unworthy of Samaṇas, unallowable, and to be avoided. How can these foolish persons, O Bhikkhus, go on their rounds, &c.? How can they make so great and loud a noise in the dining halls? This will not do, O Bhikkhus, for converting the unconverted, and for augmenting the number of the converted; but it will result, O Bhikkhus, in the unconverted being repulsed (from the faith), and in many of the converted being estranged.'

6. And the Blessed One rebuked those Bhikkhus in many ways, spoke against unfrugality, ill-nature, immoderation, insatiableness, delighting in society, and indolence; spoke in many ways in praise of frugality, good-nature, of the moderate, contented, who have eradicated (sin), who have shaken off (sin), of the gracious, of the reverent, and of the energetic. And having delivered before the Bhikkhus a religious discourse in accordance to, and in conformity with these subjects, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, (that young Bhikkhus choose) an upagghāya (or preceptor).

'The upagghāya, O Bhikkhus, ought to consider the saddhivihārika (i.e. pupil) as a son; the saddhivihārika ought to consider the upagghāya as a father. Thus these two, united by mutual reverence, confidence, and communion of life, will progress, advance, and reach a high stage in this doctrine and discipline.

7. 'And let them choose, O Bhikkhus, an upagghāya in this way: Let him (who is going to choose an upagghāya) adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet (of the intended upagghāya), sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "Venerable Sir, be my upagghāya; venerable Sir, be my upagghāya; venerable Sir, be my upagghāya." (If the other answer): "Well," or, "Certainly," or, "Good," or, "All right," or, "Carry on (your work) with friendliness (towards me)," or should he express this by gesture (lit. by his body), or by word, or by gesture and word, then the upagghāya has been chosen. If he does not express this by gesture, nor by word, nor by gesture and word, the upagghāya has not been chosen.

8. 'The saddhivihārika, O Bhikkhus, ought to observe a strict conduct towards his upagghāya. And these are the rules for his conduct: Let him arise betimes, and having taken off his shoes¹ and adjusted his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, let him give (to the upagghâya) the teeth-cleanser and water to rinse his mouth with. Then let him prepare a seat (for the upagghâya). If there is rice-milk, let him rinse the jug and offer the rice-milk (to the upagghâya). When he has drunk it, let him give water (to the upagghâya), take the jug, hold it down, rinse it properly without (damaging it by) rubbing, and put it away. When the upagghâya has risen, let him take away the seat. If the place is dirty, let him sweep the place.

¹ If he had put on shoes for having a walk early in the morning or for keeping his feet clean (Buddhaghosa).

9. 'If the upagghâya wishes to go into the village, let (the saddhivihârîka) give (to the upagghâya) his under garment, take (from him) his second under garment (i.e. his house-dress?), give him his girdle, lay the two upper garments upon each other¹ and give them (to the upagghâya), rinse the alms-bowl, and give it him with some water in it. If the upagghâya wishes (to go with) an attendant Bhikkhu, let him put on his under garment so as to conceal the three circles (viz. the navel and the two knees) and as to cover the body all around; then let him put on his girdle, lay the two upper garments upon each other and put them on, tie the knots, take his alms-bowl, after having it rinsed, and follow the upagghâya as his attendant. Let him not go too far (from the upagghâya) nor too near. Let him take (from the upagghâya) what has been put into his alms-bowl².

10. 'When the upagghâya speaks, let (the sad- dhivihârika) not interrupt him. If the upagghâya is in danger of committing an offence by the words he says, let (the saddhivihârika) keep him back. When (the upagghâya) turns back (from his alms-pilgrimage), let the saddhivihârika go back (to the Vihâra) before (the upagghâya), prepare a seat, get water for the washing of his feet, a foot-stool, and a towel¹; then let him go to meet the upagghâya, take his bowl and his robe, give him his second under garment (his house-dress?), and take his under garment. If the robe (of the upagghâya) is wet with perspiration, let him dry it a while in a hot place, but let him not leave the robe in a hot place. Let him fold up the robe. When folding up the robe, let him fold it up so as to leave (every day) four inches (more than the day before) hanging over at the corners, in order that no fold may arise in the middle of it². Let him . . . the girdle³. If there is any food received in the alms-bowl, and the upagghâya desires to eat it, let him give water (to the upagghâya) and then offer him the food.

¹ Buddhaghosa explains sagunam katvâ by ekato katvâ.

² According to Buddhaghosa the meaning of these words is: If the alms-bowl of the upagghâya has become too heavy or hot by the food put into it, the saddhivihârîka ought to take it and give his own bowl to the upagghâya.

11. 'Let him offer to the upagghâya (water) to drink. When the upagghâya has finished his meal, let (the saddhivihârika) give him water, take his alms-bowl, hold it down, rinse it properly without (damaging it by) rubbing, pour the water out, and dry (the bowl) a while in some hot place, but let him not leave the bowl in the hot place. Let him put away the alms-bowl and the robe. When he puts away the alms-bowl, let him do so holding the alms-bowl with one hand, and first feeling with the other hand under the bed or under the chair (where he is going to put the bowl), and let him not put the bowl on the bare ground. When he hangs up the robe, let him take the robe with one hand and stroke with the other hand along the bambu peg or rope on which the robe is to be hung up, and hang up the robe so that the border is turned away from him (and turned to the wall), and the fold is turned towards him. When the upagghâya has risen, let him take away the seat and put away the water for the washing of the feet, the foot-stool, and the towel¹. If the place is dirty, let him sweep the place.

¹ See Chap. 6, 11, with the note.

² I. e. in order that the folds might not fall upon the same place every day, and the robe might be worn out at that place (Buddhaghosa).

³ The Pâli text is: 'Obhoge kâyabandhanam kâtabbam.' Buddhaghosa's note runs as follows: 'Kâyabandhanam samgharivâ (read samharitvâ) kîvarabhoge pakkhipitvâ thapetabbam.' We do not venture to offer any conjectures as to the meaning of this passage.

12. 'If the upagghâya wishes to bathe, let him prepare a bath. If he wants cold water, let him get cold water; if he wants hot water, let him get hot water. If the upagghâya wishes to go to the *gantâghara*², let (the saddhivihârîka) knead the powder³, moisten the clay⁴, take up the chair belonging to the gantâghara, follow the upagghâya from behind, give him the chair, take his

¹ See Chap. 6. 11, with the note.

² A gantâghara (Sansk. yantragriha, according to Dr. Bühler's conjecture) is a bathing-place for hot sitting baths. See Kullavagga V, 14, 3; VIII, 8; Kuhn's Zeitschrift für vergleichende Sprachf., XXV, 325.

³ It is first moistened by water and then kneaded into lumps (Buddhaghosa),—no doubt to be rubbed over the person who is bathing.

⁴ The face was besmeared with moistened clay in order to protect it from the heat. See Kullavagga V, 14, 3.

robe and put it aside, give him the powder and the clay. If he is able¹, let him also enter the gantâghara. When he is going to enter the gantâghara, let him besmear his face with clay, cover himself from before and behind, and thus enter the gantâghara.

13. 'Let him not sit down so as to encroach on senior Bhikkhus, nor let him dislodge junior Bhikkhus from their seats. Let him wait upon the upagghâya in the gantâghara. When he is going to leave the gantâghara, let him take up the chair belonging to the gantâghara, cover himself from before and behind, and thus leave the gantâghara. Let him wait upon the upagghâya also in the water. When he has bathed, let (the saddhivihârika) go out of the water first, let him dry his own body, put on his dress, then wipe off the water from his upagghâya's body, give him his under garment and his upper garment, take the chair belonging to the gantâghara, go before the upagghâya, prepare a seat for him, and get water for the washing of his feet, a foot-stool, and a towel². Let him offer to the upagghâya (water) to drink.

14. 'If (the upagghâya) likes being called upon to deliver a discourse, let him call upon (the upagghâya to do so). If (the upagghâya) likes questions being put to him, let him put questions (to the upagghâya).

'If the Vihâra, in which the upagghâya dwells, is dirty, let him clean that Vihâra, if he is able to do so. When cleaning the Vihâra, let him first take away the alms-bowl and the robe (of the upagghâya) and lay them aside. Let him take away the mat and the sheet¹ and lay them aside. Let him take away the mattress and the pillow and lay them aside.

¹ I. e. if he is not prevented by indisposition (Buddhaghosa).

² See Chap. 6. 11, with the note.

15. 'Let him turn down the bed, take it away properly without rubbing it (against the floor) and without knocking it against door or doorpost, and put it aside. Let him turn down the chair, take it away properly without rubbing it (against the floor) and without knocking it against door or doorpost, and put it aside. Let him take away the supporters of the bed² and put them aside. Let him take away the spitting-box and put it aside. Let him take away the board to recline on³ and put it aside. Let him take away the carpet, after having noticed how it was spread out, and put it aside. If there are cobwebs in the Vihâra, let him remove them as soon as he sees them. Let him wipe off the casements⁴ and the corners of the room. If a wall which is coated with red chalk, is dirty, let him moisten the mop, wring it out, and scour the wall. If the floor is coated black and is dirty, let him moisten the mop, wring it out, and scour the floor. If the floor is not blacked, let him sprinkle it with water and scrub it in order that the Vihâra may not become dusty. Let him heap up the sweepings and cast them aside.

16. 'Let him bask the carpet in the sunshine, clean it, dust it by beating, take it back, and spread it out as it was spread before. Let him put the supporters of the bed in the sunshine, wipe them,

¹ See VIII, 16, 3. 4.

² The bedstead rested on movable supporters. See Kullavagga VI, 2, 5.

³ See Kullavagga VI, 20, 2.

⁴ See the Samanta Pâsâdikâ, ap. Minayeff, Prâtîmoksha, p. 87.

take them back, and put them in their place. Let him put the bed in the sunshine, clean it, dust it by beating, turn it down, take it back properly without rubbing it (against the floor) and without knocking it against door and doorpost, and put it in its place. Let him put the chair in the sunshine, &c.¹ Let him put mattress and pillow in the sunshine, clean them, dust them by beating, take them back, and lay them out as they were laid out before. Let him put the mat and sheet in the sunshine, &c.¹ Let him put the spittoon in the sunshine, wipe it, take it back, and put it in its place. Let him put in the sunshine the board to recline on, &c.¹

17. 'Let him put away the alms-bowl and the robe. When he puts them away (&c., as in § 11, down to:), and hang up the robe so that the border is turned away from him and the fold is turned towards him.

18. 'If dusty winds blow from the East, let him shut the windows on the East. If dusty winds blow from the West, let him shut the windows on the West, &c.² If it is cold weather, let him open the windows by day and shut them at night. If it is hot weather, let him shut the windows by day and open them at night.

19. 'If the cell is dirty, let him sweep the cell. If the store-room is dirty, let him sweep the store-room. If the refectory, &c. If the fire room, &c. If the privy is dirty, let him sweep the privy. If there is no drinkable water, let him provide drinkable water. If there is no food, let him provide food. If there is no water in the waterpot for rinsing the mouth with, let him pour water into the pot.

¹ As in the preceding clause.

² The same for North and South.

20. 'If discontent has arisen within the upagghâya's heart, let the saddhivihârika appease him¹, or cause him to be appeased (by another), or compose him by religious conversation. If indecision has arisen in the upagghâya's mind, let the saddhivihârika dispel it, or cause it to be dispelled, or compose him by religious conversation. If the upagghâya takes to a false doctrine, let the saddhivihârika discuss it, or cause another to discuss it, or compose (the upagghâya) by religious conversation.

21. 'If the upagghâya is guilty of a grave offence, and ought to be sentenced to parivâsa discipline², let the saddhivihârika take care that the Samgha sentence the upagghâya to parivâsa discipline. If the upagghâya ought to be sentenced to recommence his penal discipline, let the saddhivihârika take care that the Samgha may order the upagghâya to recommence his penal discipline. If the mânatta discipline ought to be imposed on the upagghâya, let the saddhivihârika take care that the Samgha impose the mânatta discipline on the upagghâya. If the upagghâya is to be rehabilitated (when his penal discipline has been duly undergone), let the saddhivihârika take care that the Samgha rehabilitate the upagghâya.

¹ Literally, make it (the discontentedness) clear. Buddhaghosa reads vûpakâsetabbo vûpakâsâpetabbo, which he explains thus: 'vûpakâsetabbo means, "Let (the saddhivihârika) lead him to another place;" vûpakâsâpetabbo means, "Let him tell another Bhikkhu to take the Thera and go with him elsewhere."'

² The second and third books of the Kullavagga contain a detailed explanation of parivâsa and of the other technical terms contained in this paragraph.

22. 'If the Samgha wishes to proceed against the upagghâya by the *tagganiyakamma*¹, or the nissaya, or the pabbâganiyakamma, or the paṭisâranīyakamma, or the ukkhepanīyakamma, let the saddhivihârika do what he can in order that the Samgha may not proceed against the upagghâya or may mitigate the proceeding. Or if the Samgha has instituted a proceeding against him, the tagganiyakamma, &c., or the ukkhepanīyakamma, let the saddhivihârika do what he can in order that the upagghâya may behave himself properly, live modestly, and aspire to get clear of his penance, and that the Samgha may revoke its sentence.

23. 'If the robe of the upagghâya must be washed, let the saddhivihârika wash it or take care that the upagghâya's robe is washed. If a robe must be made for the upagghâya, let the saddhivihârika make it or take care that the upagghâya's robe is made. If dye must be boiled for the upagghâya, &c. If the robe of the upagghâya must be dyed, &c. When he dyes the robe, let him dye it properly and turn it whenever required, and let him not go away before the dye has ceased to drop.

24. 'Let him not give his alms-bowl to any one without the permission of his upagghâya. Let him not accept an alms-bowl from any one else without the permission of his upagghâya. Let him not give his robe to any one else, &c. Let him not accept a robe from any one else; let him not give articles

¹ The discussion about the tagganiyakamma and the other disciplinary proceedings alluded to in this paragraph is given in the first book of the Kullavagga.

(required for a Bhikkhu) to any one else; let him not receive (such) articles from any one else; let him not shave the hair of any one else; let him not have his hair shaven by any one else; let him not wait upon any one else; let him not have done service by any one else; let him not execute commissions for any one else; let him not have commissions executed by any one else; let him not go with any one else as his attendant; let him not take any one else with him as his attendant; let him not carry any one's food received by him in alms (to the Vihâra); let him not have the food received by himself in alms carried by any one (to the Vihâra) without the permission of his upagghâya. Let him not enter the village, or go to a cemetery, or go abroad on journeys without the permission of his upagghâya. If his upagghâya is sick, let him nurse him as long as his life lasts, and wait until he has recovered.'

End of the duties towards an upagghâya.

26.

1. 'The upagghâya, O Bhikkhus, ought to observe a strict conduct towards his saddhivihârika. And these are the rules for his conduct: Let the upagghâya, O Bhikkhus, afford (spiritual) help and furtherance to the saddhivihârika by teaching, by putting questions to him, by exhortation, by instruction. If the upagghâya has an alms-bowl and the saddhivihârika has not, let the upagghâya give the alms-bowl to the saddhivihârika or take care that the saddhivihârika gets an alms-bowl. If the upagghâya has a robe and the saddhivihârika has not, let the upagghâya give the robe, &c. If the upagghâya has the articles (required for a Bhikkhu) and the saddhivihârika has not, &c.

2-6. 'If the saddhivihârika is sick, let (the upagghâya) arise betimes and give him the teeth-cleanser and water to rinse his mouth with. Then let him prepare a seat (for the saddhivihârika). If there is rice-milk (&c., as in chap. 25. 8, 9, down to :), and give it him with some water in it. When he expects: "Now he must be about to return," let him prepare a seat, get water for the washing of his feet (&c., as in chap. 25. 10-13¹, down to :). Let him offer to the saddhivihârika water to drink.

7-10. 'If the Vihâra in which the saddhivihârika dwells, is dirty (&c., as in chap. 25. 14-22).

11. 'If the robe of the saddhivihârika must be washed, let the upagghâya tell the saddhivihârika: "Thus must you wash your robe," or let him take care that the saddhivihârika's robe is washed. If a robe must be made for the saddhivihârika, let the upagghâya tell the saddhivihârika: "Thus must you make the robe," or let him take care that the saddhivihârika's robe is made. If dye must be boiled for the saddhivihârika, &c. If the robe of the saddhivihârika must be dyed, let the upagghâya tell, &c. When he dyes the robe, let him dye it properly, and turn it whenever required, and let him not go away before the dye has ceased to drop. If the saddhivihârika is sick, let him nurse him as long as his life lasts, and wait until he has recovered.'

¹ Instead of, 'Follow the upagghâya from behind' (chap. 25. 12), read here, 'Go (with the saddhivihârika).'

End of the duties towards a saddhivihârika.

27.

1. At that time the saddhivihârikas did not observe a proper conduct towards their upagghâyas. The moderate Bhikkhus¹ were annoyed, murmured, and became angry, saying, 'How can the saddhivihârikas not observe a proper conduct towards their upagghâyas?' These Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

(Then Buddha questioned the Bhikkhus): 'Is it true, O Bhikkhus, that the saddhivihârikas do not observe a proper conduct towards their upagghâyas?'

(They replied): 'It is true, Lord.'

Then the blessed Buddha rebuked those Bhikkhus: 'How can the saddhivihârikas, O Bhikkhus, not observe a proper conduct towards their upagghâyas?' Having rebuked them and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus²: 'Let a saddhivihârika, O Bhikkhus, not forbear to observe a proper conduct towards his upagghâya. He who does not observe it, is guilty of a dukkaṭa¹ offence.'

¹ We believe that the words 'The moderate Bhikkhus' are intended here and throughout the whole work as an abbreviation of the fuller phrase, 'Those Bhikkhus who were moderate, frugal, modest, conscientious, anxious for training' (chap. 25. 3).

² All this is an abbreviation of what has been given at full length in chap. 25. 4-6.

2. Notwithstanding this, they did not observe a proper conduct. They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I ordain, O Bhikkhus, to turn away (a saddhivihârika) who does not observe a proper conduct. And he ought, O Bhikkhus, to be turned away in this way: (The upagghâya is to say): "I turn you away," or, "Do not come back hither," or, "Take away your alms-bowl and robe," or, "I am not to be attended by you any more." Whether he express this by gesture, or by word, or by gesture and word, the saddhivihârika has then been turned away. If he does not express this by gesture, nor by word, nor by gesture and word, the saddhivihârika has not been turned away.'

3. At that time saddhivihârikas who had been turned away did not beg pardon (of their upagghâyas). They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that (a saddhivihârika who has been turned away) should beg pardon (of his upagghâya).'

They did not beg pardon notwithstanding. They told, &c.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that (a saddhivihârika) who has been turned away shall not forbear to beg pardon (of his upagghâya). If he does not beg pardon, it is a dukkaṭa offence.'

¹ Those slight offences which were not embodied in the Pātimokkha are called dukkaṭa offences. They range, as to their gravity, with the pāṭittiya offences of the Pātimokkha. For him who had committed a dukkaṭa offence, no further penance was required than a simple confession of his fault. See Kullavagga XI, 1, 10.

4. At that time upagghâyas, when the saddhivihârikas begged their pardon, would not forgive them. They told, &c.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, forgiving.’

Notwithstanding this they did not forgive. The saddhivihârikas went away, or returned to the world, or went over to other schools. They told, &c.

‘Let him who is asked for his pardon, not withhold it. He who does not forgive, is guilty of a dukkata offence.’

5. At that time upagghâyas turned away (a saddhivihârîka) who observed a proper conduct, and did not turn away one who did not observe it. They told, &c.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, who observes a proper conduct, be turned away. He who turns him away is guilty of a dukkata offence. And let no one, O Bhikkhus, who does not observe a proper conduct, not be turned away. (An upagghâya) who does not turn him away is guilty of a dukkata offence.

6. ‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a saddhivihârîka ought to be turned away: when he does not feel great affection for his upagghâya, nor great inclination (towards him), nor much shame, nor great reverence, nor great devotion (towards the upagghâya). In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a saddhivihârîka ought to be turned away.

‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a saddhivihârîka ought not to be turned away: when he feels great affection for his upagghâya, great inclination (towards him), &c. In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a saddhivihârîka ought not to be turned away.

7. ‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, it is right to turn away a saddhivihârîka: when he does not feel great affection, &c. In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, it is right to turn away a saddhivihârika.

‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, it is not right, &c.

8. ‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, an upagghâya who does not turn away a saddhivihârika, trespasses (against the law), and an upagghâya who turns him away, does not trespass: when he does not feel great affection, &c. In these five cases, &c.

‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, an upagghâya who turns away a saddhivihârika, trespasses (against the law), and an upagghâya who does not turn him away, does not trespass, &c.’

28.

1. At that time a certain Brâhmaṇa came to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination. The Bhikkhus were not willing to ordain him. As he did not obtain the pabbaggâ ordination from the Bhikkhus, he became emaciated, lean, discoloured, more and more livid, and the veins became visible all over his body.

And the Blessed One saw this Brâhmaṇa, who had become emaciated, &c. When he had seen him, he said to the Bhikkhus: ‘How is it, O Bhikkhus, that this Brâhmaṇa has become emaciated, &c.?’

‘This Brâhmaṇa, Lord, came to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination (&c., as above, down to:), and the veins became visible all over his body.’

2. Then the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: ‘Now, O Bhikkhus, who remembers anything about this Brâhmaṇa?’

When he had spoken thus, the venerable Sâriputta said to the Blessed One: 'I remember something, Lord, about this Brâhmaṇa.'

'And what is it you remember, Sâriputta, about this Brâhmaṇa?'

'This Brâhmaṇa, Lord, one day, when I went through Râgagaha for alms, ordered a spoonful of food to be given to me; this is what I remember, Lord, about this Brâhmaṇa.'

3. 'Good, good, Sâriputta; pious men, Sâriputta, are grateful and remember what has been done to them. Therefore, Sâriputta, confer you the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations on that Brâhmaṇa.'

'Lord, how shall I confer the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations on this Brâhmaṇa?'

Then the Blessed One on this occasion, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I abolish, O Bhikkhus, from this day the upasampadâ ordination by the threefold declaration of taking refuge¹, which I had prescribed. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you confer the upasampadâ ordination by a formal act of the Order in which the announcement (ñatti) is followed by three questions².

4. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to confer the

¹ See chap. 12 and the note on chap. 1. 1.

² The form for bringing a formal motion before the Order is the following: The mover first announces to the assembled Bhikkhus what resolution he is going to propose; this announcement is called ñatti (see, for instance, § 4). After the ñatti follows the question put to the Bhikkhus present if they approve the resolution. This question is put either once or three times; in the first case we have a ñattidutiya kamma (see, for instance, II, chap. 6); in the second case, a ñattikatuttha kamma (as in this chapter).

upasampadâ ordination in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha:

‘Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N. (i. e. with the venerable N. N. as his upagghâya). If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha confer on N. N. the upasampadâ ordination with N. N. as upagghâya. This is the ñatti.

5, 6. ‘Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N. The Samgha confers on N. N. the upasampadâ ordination with N. N. as upagghâya. Let any one of the venerable brethren who is in favour of the upasampadâ ordination of N. N. with N. N. as upagghâya, be silent, and any one who is not in favour of it, speak.

‘And for the second time I thus speak to you: Let the Samgha (&c., as before).

‘And for the third time I thus speak to you: Let the Samgha, &c.

‘N. N. has received the upasampadâ ordination from the Samgha with N. N. as upagghâya. The Samgha is in favour of it, therefore it is silent. Thus I understand¹.’

29.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu shortly after having received the upasampadâ ordination, abandoned himself to bad conduct. The Bhikkhus said to him: 'You ought not to do so, friend; it is not becoming.'

¹ With this and the following chapters should be compared the corresponding ordinance laid down in chapters 74-76.

He replied: 'I never asked you, Sirs, saying, "Confer on me the upasampadâ ordination." Why have you ordained me without your being asked?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, ordain a person unless he has been asked to do so. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you ordain only after having been asked.

2. 'And (a Bhikkhu) ought to be asked in this way: Let him who desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination, go to the Saṃgha, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet of the Bhikkhus with his head, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "I ask the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, for the upasampadâ ordination; might the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, draw me out (of the sinful world) out of compassion towards me." And for the second time, &c.; and for the third time let him ask, &c.

3. 'Then let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Saṃgha: "Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N.; N. N. asks the Saṃgha for the upasampadâ ordination with N. N. as upagghâya. If the Saṃgha is ready, &c."¹

¹ Here follows the complete formula of a ñatti atuttha kamma, as in chap. 28. 4-6. The only difference is, that here in the ñatti, as well as in the three questions, the words 'N. N. asks the Saṃgha for the upasampadâ ordination with N. N. as upagghâya' are inserted after the words 'desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N.'

30.

1. At that time an arrangement had been made at Râgagaha that the Bhikkhus were to receive excellent meals successively (in the houses of different rich upâsakas). Now (one day) a certain Brâhmana thought: 'Indeed the precepts which these Sakyaputtiya Samanas keep and the life they live are commodious; they have good meals and lie down on beds protected from the wind¹. What if I were to embrace the religious life among the Sakyaputtiya Samanas?' Then this Brâhmana went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination; the Bhikkhus conferred the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations on him.

2. When he had been ordained, the arrangement of successive meals (with the rich upâsakas) came to an end. The Bhikkhus said to him: 'Come, friend, let us now go on our rounds for alms.'

He replied: 'I have not embraced the religious life for that purpose—to going about for alms; if you give me (food), I will eat; if you do not, I will return to the world.'

(The Bhikkhus said): 'What, friend! have you indeed embraced the religious life for your belly's sake?'

'Yes, friends.'

3. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can a Bhikkhu embrace the religious life in so well-taught a doctrine and discipline for his belly's sake?'

¹ On this curious expression, compare Kullavagga IV, 4, 8. It is frequently repeated below.

These Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.
(The Buddha said): 'Is it true, O Bhikkhu, that you have embraced the religious life for your belly's sake?'

(He replied): 'It is true, Lord.'

Then the blessed Buddha rebuked that Bhikkhu: 'How can you, foolish person that you are, embrace the religious life in so well-taught a doctrine and discipline for your belly's sake? This will not do, O foolish one, for converting the unconverted and for augmenting the number of the converted.'

Having rebuked him and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus:

4. 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that he who confers the upasampadâ ordination (on a Bhikkhu), tell him the four Resources:

'The religious life has morsels of food given in alms for its resource. Thus you must endeavour to live all your life. Meals given to the Saṃgha, to certain persons, invitations, food distributed by ticket, meals given each fortnight, each uposatha day (i. e. the last day of each fortnight), or the first day of each fortnight, are extra allowances.

'The religious life has the robe made of rags taken from a dust heap for its resource. Thus you must endeavour to live all your life. Linen, cotton, silk, woollen garments, coarse cloth, hempen cloth are extra allowances.

'The religious life has dwelling at the foot of a tree for its resource. Thus you must endeavour to live all your life. Vihâras, addhayogas, storied dwellings, attics, caves¹ are extra allowances.

¹ These are the five kinds of dwellings (pañka lenâni) which are declared to be allowable, Kullavagga VI, 1, 2. The single expres-

‘The religious life has decomposing urine as medicine¹ for its resource. Thus you must endeavour to live all your life. Ghee, butter, oil, honey, and molasses are extra allowances.’

Here ends the fifth Bhānavāra, which contains the duties towards upagghāyas.

31.

1. At that time a certain youth came to the Bhikkhus and asked them to be ordained. The Bhikkhus told him the (four) Resources before his ordination. Then he said: ‘If you had told me the Resources, venerable Sirs, after my ordination, I should have persisted (in the religious life); but now, venerable Sirs, I will not be ordained; the Resources are repulsive and loathsome to me.’

The Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to tell the Resources (to the candidates) before their ordination. He who does, is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you tell the Resources (to the newly-ordained Bhikkhus) immediately after their upasampadā.’

sions are explained by Buddhaghosa in his note on Kullavagga 1.1. as follows: ‘addhayogo ’ti suvaṇṇavaṇṇageham, pāsādo ’ti dīgha-pāsādo, hammiyan ti upariākāsatale patiṭṭhitakūṭāgāro pāsādo yeva, guhā ’ti iṭṭhakaguhā silāguhā dārughā pamsuguhā,’ i.e. ‘Addha-yoga is a gold-coloured Bengal house. Pāsāda is a long storied mansion (or, the whole of an upper storey). Hammiya is a Pāsāda, which has an upper chamber placed on the topmost storey. Guhā is a hut made of bricks, or in a rock, or of wood.’

¹ Compare Mahāvagga VI, 14, 6.

2. At that time some Bhikkhus performed the upasampadâ service with a chapter of two or three Bhikkhus.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, receive the upasampadâ ordination before a chapter of less than ten Bhikkhus. He who performs the upasampadâ service (with a smaller number of Bhikkhus), is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe you, O Bhikkhus, the holding of upasampadâ services with a chapter of ten Bhikkhus or more than ten.’

3. At that time some Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadâ ordination on their saddhivihârikas one or two years after their own upasampadâ. ¹ Thus also the venerable Upasena Vaṅgantaputta conferred the upasampadâ ordination on a saddhivihârika of his one year after his own upasampadâ. When he had concluded the vassa residence, after two years from his own upasampadâ had elapsed, he went with his saddhivihârika, who had completed the first year after his upasampadâ, to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him.

4. Now it is the custom of the blessed Buddhas to exchange greeting with incoming Bhikkhus. And the Blessed One said to the venerable Upasena Vaṅgantaputta: ‘Do things go well with you, Bhikkhu? Do you get enough to support your life? Have you made your journey with not too great fatigue?’

‘Things go pretty well with us, Lord; we get

¹ This story recurs in the Gâtaka Commentary II, 449.

enough, Lord, to support our life, and we have made our journey, Lord, with not too great fatigue.'

The Tathāgatas sometimes ask about what they know; sometimes they do not ask about what they know. They understand the right time when to ask, and they understand the right time when not to ask. The Tathāgatas put questions full of sense, not void of sense; to what is void of sense the bridge is pulled down for the Tathāgatas. For two purposes the blessed Buddhas put questions to the Bhikkhus, when they intend to preach the doctrine or when they intend to institute a rule of conduct to their disciples.

5. And the Blessed One said to the venerable Upananda Vaṅgantaputta: 'How many years have you completed, O Bhikkhu, since your upasampadā?'

'Two years, Lord.'

'And how many years has this Bhikkhu completed?'

'One year, Lord.'

'In what relation does this Bhikkhu stand to you?'

'He is my saddhivihārika, Lord.'

Then the blessed Buddha rebuked him: 'This is improper, O foolish one, unbecoming, unsuitable, unworthy of a Samāṇa, unallowable, and to be avoided. How can you, O foolish one, who ought to receive exhortation and instruction from others, think yourself fit for administering exhortation and instruction to another Bhikkhu? Too quickly, O foolish one, have you abandoned yourself to the ambition of collecting followers. This will not do (&c., as in chap. 30. 3). Let no one, O Bhikkhus, confer the upasampadā ordination who has not completed ten years. He who does, is guilty of a dukkatā offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that only he who has completed ten years, or more than ten years, may confer the upasampadā ordination.'

6. At that time ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus (who said), 'We have completed ten years (since our upasampadā), we have completed ten years,' conferred the upasampadā ordination; (thus) ignorant upagghāyas were found and clever saddhivihārikas; unlearned upagghāyas were found and learned saddhivihārikas; upagghāyas were found who had small knowledge, and saddhivihārikas who had great knowledge; foolish upagghāyas were found and wise saddhivihārikas. And a certain Bhikkhu who had formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, when his upagghāya remonstrated with him (on certain offences) according to the Dhamma, brought his upagghāya (by reasoning) to silence and went back to that same Titthiya school¹.

7. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can those ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus confer the upasampadā ordination (saying), "We have completed ten years, we have completed ten years?"' (Thus) ignorant upagghāyas are found and clever saddhivihārikas (&c., down to:), foolish upagghāyas are found and wise saddhivihārikas.'

These Bhikkhus told, &c.

'Is it true, O Bhikkhus, &c.?''

'It is true, Lord.'

8. Then the blessed Buddha rebuked those Bhikkhus: 'How can these foolish persons, O Bhikkhus, confer the upasampadâ ordination (saying), "We have, &c.?" (Thus) ignorant upagghâyas are found, &c. This will not do, O Bhikkhus, for converting the unconverted and for augmenting the number of the converted.'

¹ See the conclusion of this in chapter 38.

Having rebuked those Bhikkhus and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Let no ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, confer the upasampadâ ordination. If he does, he is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that only a learned, competent Bhikkhu who has completed ten years, or more than ten years, may confer the upasampadâ ordination.'

32.

1. At that time some Bhikkhus whose upagghâyas were gone away, or had returned to the world, or had died, or were gone over to a (schismatic) faction¹, as they had no âkariyas and received no exhortation and instruction, went on their rounds for alms wearing improper under and upper garments (&c., as in chap. 25. 1-6, down to:), he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, (that young Bhikkhus choose) an âkariya².

¹ Buddhaghosa can scarcely be right in explaining pakkhasamkanta by titthiyapakkhasamkanta.

² Âkariya as well as upagghâya means 'teacher,' or 'preceptor.' It is very difficult or rather impossible to draw a sharp line of distinction between âkariya and upagghâya. The duties of an âkariya towards his antevâsika, and of an antevâsika towards his âkariya, as indicated in chaps. 32, 33 (=Kullavagga VIII, 13, 14), are exactly the same as those of an upagghâya towards his saddhivihârika and vice versa (chaps. 25, 26 = Kulavagga VIII, 11, 12). The position of an upagghâya, however, was considered as the more important of the two; at the upasampadâ service the upagghâya had a more prominent part than the âkariya, as we may infer from chaps. 28, 29, and from the explanations on the 65th pâkittiya rule which are given in the Sutta Vibhaṅga. There it is said that, if the upasampadâ ordination had been conferred, against the rule, on a person that has not yet attained his twentieth year, the upagghâya has made himself guilty of a pâkittiya offence, the âkariya and the other present Bhikkhus only of a dukkaṭa offence. We may add that the succession of Vinaya teachers from Upâli down to Mahinda, which is given in the Dīpavamsa (Bhāṇavāras IV and V), is a succession of upagghâyas and saddhivihârikas (see IV, 36, 42, 43, &c.), not of âkariyas and antevâsikas; the duty of instructing the young Bhikkhus in the holy doctrines and ordinances seems, therefore, to belong to the upagghâya rather than to the âkariya; compare also Dīpavamsa VII, 26. So among the Brāhmaṇas, on the contrary, the âkârya is estimated higher than the upādhyâya; see Manu II, 145; Yâgñavalkya I, 35. Compare also chap. 36. 1 (end of the paragraph), and Buddhaghosa’s explanation of that passage.

‘The âkariya, O Bhikkhus, ought to consider the antevâsika (i.e. disciple) as a son; the antevâsika ought to consider the âkariya as a father. Thus these two, united by mutual reverence, confidence, and communion of life, will progress, advance, and reach a high stage in this doctrine and discipline.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you live (the first) ten years in dependence (on an âkariya); he who has completed his tenth year may give a nissaya¹ himself.

¹ Nissaya (i.e. dependence) is the relation between âkariya and antevâsika. The antevâsika lives ‘nissâya’ with regard to the âkariya, i.e. dependent on him; the âkariya gives his nissaya to the antevâsika, i.e. he receives him into his protection and care. At chap. 36. 1, ‘nissaya’ is said also of the relation between upagghâya and saddhivihârika.

2. 'And let (the antevâsika), O Bhikkhus, choose his âkariya in this way: Let him adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet (of the âkariya), sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "Venerable Sir, be my âkariya, I will live in dependence on you, Sir." (This formula is repeated thrice.)

'(If the other answers): "Well" (&c., as in chap. 25. 7).

3. 'The antevâsika, O Bhikkhus, ought to observe a strict conduct towards his âkariya' (&c., as in chap. 25. 8-24).

End of the duties towards an âkariya.

33.

'The âkariya, O Bhikkhus, ought to observe a strict conduct towards his antevâsika' (&c., as in chap. 26).

End of the duties towards an antevâsika.

End of the sixth Bhânavâra.

34.

At that time the antevâsikas did not observe a proper conduct towards their âkariyas (&c., as in chap. 27. 1-8).

35.

1, 2. At that time ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus (who said), 'We have completed ten years (since our upasampadâ), we have completed ten years,' gave a nissaya (i.e. they received young Bhikkhus as their antevâsikas); (thus) ignorant âkariyas were found and clever antevâsikas; unlearned âkariyas were found and learned antevâsikas; âkariyas were found who had small knowledge, and antevâsikas who had great knowledge; foolish âkariyas were found and wise antevâsikas. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed (&c., as in chap. 31. 7, 8).

'Let no ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, give a nissaya. If he does, he is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that only a learned, competent Bhikkhu who has completed ten years, or more than ten years, may give a nissaya.'

36.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus whose âkariyas and upagghâyas were gone away, or had returned to the world, or had died, or were gone over to a (schismatic) faction, were not acquainted with (the rules about) the cessation of their nissayas¹.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'There are five cases of cessation of a nissaya, O Bhikkhus, between (saddhivihârîka and) upag-

¹ That is, 'did not know how to decide whether their nissaya was destroyed, or not.'

gghâya: When the upagghâya is gone away, or he has returned to the world, or has died, or is gone over to a (schismatic) faction; the fifth case is that of order (given by the upagghâya to the *saddhivihârika*¹). These, O Bhikkhus, are the five cases of the cessation of a nissaya between (saddhivihârika and) upagghâya.

‘There are six cases of cessation of a nissaya, O Bhikkhus, between (antevâsika and) âkariya: When the âkariya is gone away, &c.; the fifth case is that of order (given by the âkariya to the antevâsika); or (sixthly) when the âkariya and the upagghâya have come together at the same place². These, O Bhikkhus, are the six cases of cessation of a nissaya between (antevâsika and) âkariya.

2. ‘In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer the upasampadâ ordination, nor give a nissaya, nor ordain a novice³: When he does not possess full perfection in what belongs to moral practices; or does not possess full perfection in what belongs to self-concentration; or does not possess full perfection in what belongs to wisdom; or does not possess full perfection in what belongs to emancipation; or does not possess full perfection in what belongs to knowledge and insight into emancipation. In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer the upasampadâ ordination, nor give a nissaya, nor ordain a novice.

¹ This refers, according to Buddhaghosa, to the paṇāmanâ (turning away of the saddhivihârika); see chap. 27. 2.

² Buddhaghosa: ‘Coming together may be understood either by seeing or by hearing. If a saddhivihârika who lives in dependence (nissâya) on his âkariya sees his upagghâya paying homage to a sacred shrine in the same Vihâra, or going on his rounds in the same village, cessation of the nissaya (towards the âkariya) is the consequence. If he hears the voice of his upagghâya, who preaches the Dhamma or gladdens (lay-people by religious discourse), in the Vihâra or in the interior of a house, and if he recognises that it is his upagghâya’s voice, cessation of the nissaya (towards the âkariya) is the consequence.’

³ About the ordination of novices, see chap. 54. 3.

3. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer the upasampadâ ordination, give a nissaya, and ordain a novice: When he possesses full perfection in what belongs to moral practices, &c. In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may, &c.

4. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he does not possess for himself full perfection in what belongs to moral practices, and is not able to help others to full perfection in what belongs to moral practices; or does not possess for himself full perfection in what belongs to self-concentration, and is not able to help others to full perfection in what belongs to self-concentration, &c.

5. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he possesses for himself full perfection in what belongs to moral practices, and is able to help others to full perfection, &c.

6. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he is unbelieving, shameless, fearless of sinning, indolent, forgetful. In these five cases, &c.

7. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he is believing, modest, fearful of sinning, strenuous, of ready memory. In these five cases, &c.

8. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When as regards moral practices he is guilty of moral transgressions ; or when as regards the rules of conduct¹ he is guilty of transgressions in his conduct ; or when as regards belief he is guilty of heresy ; or when he is unlearned ; or when he is foolish. In these five cases, &c.

9. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When as regards moral practices he is not guilty of moral transgressions, &c.; when he is learned ; and when he is wise. In these five cases, &c.

10. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he is not able to nurse or to get nursed an antevâsika or a saddhivihârika when he is sick, to appease him or to cause him to be appeased when discontent with religious life has sprung up within him, to dispel or to cause to be dispelled according to the Dhamma doubts of conscience which have arisen in his mind ; when he does not know what is an offence ; or does not know how to atone for an offence. In these five cases, &c.

11. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he is able (&c., down to:); when he knows what is an offence ; and knows how to atone for an offence. In these five cases, &c.

12. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he is not able to train an antevâsika or a saddhivihârika in the precepts of proper conduct², to educate him in the elements of morality¹, to instruct him in what pertains to the Dhamma, to instruct him in what pertains to the Vinaya, to discuss or to make another discuss according to the Dhamma a false doctrine that might arise. In these five cases, &c.

¹ According to Buddhaghosa, moral transgression (adhisîla) is said with regard to offences against the pârâgika and samghâdisesa rules, while transgressions in conduct (agghâkâra) consist in offences against the minor rules of the Pâtimokkha. Buddhaghosa's explanation is confirmed by the Mahāvagga IV, 16, 12.

² According to Buddhaghosa, this refers to instruction in the

13. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he is able, &c.

14. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he does not know what is an offence; or does not know what is no offence; or does not know what is a light offence; or does not know what is a grave offence; when the two Pâtimokkhas are not perfectly known to him in their entirety, with all their divisions and their whole course, and with the entire discussion according to the single rules and to the single parts of each rule. In these five cases, &c.

15. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he knows, &c.

16. 'And also in other five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.: When he does not know what is an offence; or does not know what is no offence; or does not know what is a light offence; or does not know what is a grave offence;

khandhakavatta (i.e. in the rules contained in the Khandhaka texts, Mahāvagga and Kullavagga?). See also Spence Hardy, Manual, p. 492.

¹ This means instructing him in the sekhapaññatti (Buddhaghosa). We cannot say what is the accurate meaning of the last term, which apparently, as its verbal meaning seems to imply, refers to ordinances for those Bhikkhus who have entered the path of sanctification, but have not yet attained Arahatsip. Spence Hardy (Manual, p. 493) gives the term sekha-sīla, which he explains as the observance of precepts in order to become a sekha. See also Hardy's note on âdibrahmañariya-sīla, l. l. p. 492.

or when he has not completed the tenth year (after his upasampadâ). In these five cases, &c.

17. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may confer, &c.: When he knows (&c., down to:); when he has completed ten years or more than ten years (after his upasampadâ). In these five cases, &c.'

End of the sixteen times five cases concerning the admissibility of upasampadâ.

37.

'In six cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not confer, &c.¹'

End of the sixteen times² six cases concerning the admissibility of upasampadâ.

38.

1. At that time that Bhikkhu who, having formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, had (by reasoning) put to silence his upagghâya, when he remonstrated with him according to the Dhamma, and had returned to that same Titthiya school³, came back again and asked the Bhikkhus for the upasampadâ ordination. The Bhikkhus told, &c.

'That Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who having formerly

¹ Chap. 37 is exactly identical with chap. 36. 2-15, but for the sixth case, which, throughout chap. 37, is added each time at the end of the five cases given in chap. 36, 'When he has not completed the tenth year (after his upasampadâ);' and respectively, 'When he has completed ten years or more than ten years (after his upasampadâ).'

² It should be, 'Fourteen times.'

³ See chap. 31, § 6.

belonged to a Titthiya school, has put to silence his upagghâya when he remonstrated with him according to the Dhamma, and has returned to that same Titthiya school, must not receive the upasampadâ ordination, if he comes back. On other persons, O Bhikkhus, who have formerly belonged to Titthiya schools and desire to receive the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations in this doctrine and discipline, you ought to impose a parivâsa (a probation-time) of four months.

2. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to impose it in this way: Let him (who desires to receive the ordination) first cut off his hair and beard; let him put on yellow robes, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet of the Bhikkhus (with his head), and sit down squatting; then let him raise his joined hands, and tell him to say: "I take my refuge in the Buddha, I take my refuge in the Dhamma, I take my refuge in the Samgha. And for the second time, &c. And for the third time take I my refuge in the Buddha, and for the third time take I my refuge in the Dhamma, and for the third time take I my refuge in the Samgha."

3. 'Let that person, O Bhikkhus, who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, approach the Samgha, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet of the Bhikkhus (with his head), sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "I, N. N., reverend Sirs, who have formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, desire to receive the upasampadâ ordination in this doctrine and discipline, and ask the Samgha, reverend Sirs, for a parivâsa of four months." Let him ask thus a second time. Let him ask thus a third time.

‘Then let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N., who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, desires to receive the upasampadā ordination in this doctrine and discipline. He asks the Samgha for a parivāsa of four months. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha impose on N. N., who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, a parivāsa of four months. This is the ñatti.

4. “Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N., who has, &c. He asks the Samgha for a parivāsa of four months. The Samgha imposes on N. N., who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, a parivāsa of four months. Let any one of the venerable brethren who is in favour of imposing a parivāsa of four months on N. N., who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, be silent, and any one who is not in favour of it, speak. A parivāsa of four months has been imposed by the Samgha on N. N., who has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school. The Samgha is in favour of it, therefore it is silent. Thus I understand.”

5. ‘And this, O Bhikkhus, is the way in which a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, succeeds or fails in satisfying (the Bhikkhus and obtaining upasampadā when the probation-time is over).

‘What is the way, O Bhikkhus, in which a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, fails in satisfying (the Bhikkhus)?

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, enters the village too early, and comes back (to the Vihâra) too late, thus, O Bhikkhus, a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, fails in satisfying (the Bhikkhus).

‘And further, O Bhikkhus, in case the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, frequents the society of harlots, or of widows, or of adult girls, or of eunuchs, or of Bhikkhunis, thus also, O Bhikkhus, a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, fails in satisfying (the Bhikkhus).

6. ‘And further, O Bhikkhus, in case the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, does not show himself skilled in the various things his fellow Bhikkhus have to do, not diligent, not able to consider how those things are to be done, not able to do things himself, not able to give directions to others, thus also, O Bhikkhus, &c.

‘And further, O Bhikkhus, in case the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, does not show keen zeal, when the doctrine is preached to him or when questions are put, in what belongs to morality, to contemplation, and to wisdom, thus also, O Bhikkhus, &c.

7. ‘And further, O Bhikkhus, in case the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, becomes angry, displeased, and dissatisfied, when people speak against the teacher, the belief, the opinions, the persuasion, the creed of the school he formerly belonged to ; and is pleased, glad, and satisfied, when people speak against the Buddha, the Dhamma, and the Saṃgha ; or he is pleased, glad, and satisfied, when people speak in praise of the teacher, &c. ; and becomes angry, displeased, dissatisfied, when people speak in praise of the Buddha, the Dhamma, and the Samgha; this, O Bhikkhus, is a decisive moment for the failure of a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school (in obtaining admission to the Samgha).

‘Thus, O Bhikkhus, a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, fails in satisfying (the Bhikkhus). When a person comes, O Bhikkhus, that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, and has thus failed in satisfying (the Bhikkhus), the upasam-padâ ordination should not be conferred on him.

8-10. ‘And what is the way, O Bhikkhus, in which a person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, succeeds in satisfying (the Bhikkhus)?

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the person that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, does not enter the village too early (&c., point by point the contrary of the preceding).

‘When a person comes, O Bhikkhus, that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, and has thus succeeded in satisfying (the Bhikkhus), the upasam-padâ ordination ought to be conferred on him.

11. ‘If a person, O Bhikkhus, that has formerly belonged to a Titthiya school, comes (to the Bhikkhus) naked, it is incumbent on his upagghâya to get a robe for him. If he comes with unshaven hair, the Samgha’s permission ought to be asked for having his hair shaved¹.

‘If fire-worshippers and Gaṭṭilas come to you, O Bhikkhus, they are to receive the upasampadâ ordination (directly), and no parivâsa is to be imposed on them. And for what reason? These, O Bhikkhus, hold the doctrine that actions receive their reward, and that our deeds have their result (according to their moral merit).

¹ Compare chap. 48.

‘If a Sakya by birth, O Bhikkhus, who has belonged to a Titthiya school, comes to you, he is to receive the upasampadâ ordination (directly), and no parivâsa is to be imposed on him. This exceptional privilege, O Bhikkhus, I grant to my kinsmen.’

Here ends the exposition on the ordination of persons that have formerly belonged to Titthiya schools.

End of the seventh Bhânavâra.

39.

1. At that time these five diseases prevailed among the people of Magadha:—leprosy, boils, dry leprosy, consumption, and fits. The people who were affected with these five diseases went to Gîvaka Komârabhaṭṭa¹ and said: ‘Pray, doctor, cure us.’

‘I have too many duties, Sirs, and am too occupied. I have to treat the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra, and the royal seraglio, and the fraternity of Bhikkhus with the Buddha at their head. I cannot cure you.’

‘All that we possess shall be yours, doctor, and we will be your slaves; pray, doctor, cure us.’

‘I have too many duties, Sirs, &c.; I cannot cure you.’

2. Now those people thought: ‘Indeed the precepts which these Sakyaputtiya Samanas keep and the life they live are commodious; they have good meals and lie down on beds protected from the wind. What if we were to embrace the religious life among the Sakyaputtiya Samanas: then the Bhikkhus will nurse us, and Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha will cure us.'

¹ Gîvaka was physician to king Bimbisâra, and one of the chief partisans of Buddha at the court of Râgagaha. See VIII, 1, the introduction of the Sâmaññaphala Sutta, &c.

Thus these persons went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination; the Bhikkhus conferred on them the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations; and the Bhikkhus nursed them, and Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha cured them.

3. At that time the Bhikkhus, who had to nurse many sick Bhikkhus, began to solicit (lay people) with many demands and many requests: 'Give us food for the sick; give us food for the tenders of the sick; give us medicine for the sick.' And also Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha, who had to treat many sick Bhikkhus, neglected some of his duties to the king.

4. Now one day a man who was affected with the five diseases went to Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha and said: 'Pray, doctor, cure me.'

'I have too many duties, Sir, and am too occupied; I have to treat the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisāra, and the royal seraglio, and the fraternity of Bhikkhus with the Buddha at their head; I cannot cure you.'

'All that I possess shall be yours, doctor, and I will be your slave; pray doctor, cure me.'

'I have too many duties, Sir, &c.; I cannot cure you.'

5. Now that man thought: 'Indeed the precepts which these Sakyaputtiya Samanas keep (&c., down to:): then the Bhikkhus will nurse me, and Gīvaka Komārabhaṭṭha will cure me. When I have become free from sickness, then I will return to the world.'

Thus that man went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination; the Bhikkhus conferred on him the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations; and the Bhikkhus nursed him, and Gīvaka Komârabhakkā cured him. When he had become free from sickness, he returned to the world. Now Gīvaka Komârabhakkā saw this person that had returned to the world; and when he saw him he asked that person: 'Had you not embraced the religious life, Sir, among the Bhikkhus?'

'Yes, doctor.'

'And why have you adopted such a course, Sir?'

Then that man told Gīvaka Komârabhakkā the whole matter.

6. Then Gīvaka Komârabhakkā was annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the venerable brethren confer the pabbaggâ ordination on a person affected with the five diseases?'

And Gīvaka Komârabhakkā went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. Sitting near him, Gīvaka Komârabhakkā said to the Blessed One: 'Pray, Lord, let their reverences not confer the pabbaggâ ordination on persons affected with the five diseases.'

7. Then the Blessed One taught, incited, animated, and gladdened Gīvaka Komârabhakkā by religious discourse; and Gīvaka Komârabhakkā, having been taught and gladdened by the Blessed One by religious discourse, rose from his seat, respectfully saluted the Blessed One, and passing round him with his right side towards him, went away.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Let no one,

O Bhikkhus, who is affected with the five diseases, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a person), is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

40.

1. At that time the border provinces (of the kingdom) of the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra were agitated. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra gave order to the officers who were at the head of the army: 'Well now, go and search through the border provinces¹.' The officers who were at the head of the army accepted the order of the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra (by saying), 'Yes, Your Majesty.'

2. Now many distinguished warriors thought: 'We who go (to war) and find our delight in fighting, do evil and produce great demerit. Now what shall we do that we may desist from evil-doing and may do good?'

Then these warriors thought: 'These Sakyaputtiya Samāṇas lead indeed a virtuous, tranquil, holy life; they speak the truth; they keep the precepts of morality, and are endowed with all virtues. If we could obtain pabbaggâ with the Sakyaputtiya Samāṇas, we should desist from evil-doing and do good.'

Thus these warriors went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination; the Bhikkhus conferred on them the pabbaggâ and upasampadâ ordinations.

¹ On uḷḷinatha, compare the use of uḷḷheḷḷhâmi at Mahâparinibbâna Sutta I, 1 (p. 1), which Buddhaghosa rightly explains by uḷḷhindissâmi. But we think it better to adhere here to the reading uḷḷinatha, in accordance with the MSS.

3. The officers at the head of the army asked the royal soldiers: 'Why, how is it that the warriors N. N. and N. N. are nowhere to be seen?'

'The warriors N. N. and N. N., Lords, have embraced religious life among the Bhikkhus.'

Then the officers at the head of the army were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas ordain persons in the royal service?'

The officers who were at the head of the army told the thing to the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra. And the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra asked the officers of justice: 'Tell me, my good Sirs, what punishment does he deserve who ordains a person in the royal service?'

'The upagghâya, Your Majesty, should be beheaded; to him who recites (the kammavâkâ), the tongue should be torn out; to those who form the chapter, half of their ribs should be broken.'

4. Then the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. Sitting near him the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, there are unbelieving kings who are disinclined (to the faith); these might harass the Bhikkhus even on trifling occasions. Pray, Lord, let their reverences not confer the pabbaggâ ordination on persons in royal service.'

Then the Blessed One taught (&c., see chap. 39. 7, down to:), thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, who is in the royal service, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a person), is guilty of a dukkata offence.'

41.

At that time the robber Aṅgulimâla¹ had embraced religious life among the Bhikkhus. When the people saw that, they became alarmed and terrified; they fled away, went elsewhere, turned away their heads, and shut their doors. The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samānas ordain a robber who openly wears the emblems (of his deeds)?'

Some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry; these Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

The Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Let no robber, O Bhikkhus, who wears the emblems (of his deeds), receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a person), is guilty of a dukkata offence.'

¹ The robber Aṅgulimâla (i. e. he who wears a necklace of fingers), whose original name was Ahimsaka, had received this surname from his habit of cutting off the fingers of his victims and wearing them as a necklace. See Spence Hardy, Manual, p. 249 seq.

42.

1. At that time the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra had issued the following decree : ' No one is to do any harm to those who are ordained among the Sakyaputtiya Samanas ; well taught is their doctrine ; let them lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering.'

Now at that time a certain person who had committed robbery was imprisoned in the jail. He broke out of the jail, ran away, and received the pabbaggâ ordination with the Bhikkhus.

2. The people who saw him, said : ' Here is the robber who has broken out of jail ; come, let us bring him (before the authorities).'

But some people replied : ' Do not say so, Sirs. A decree has been issued by the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra : ' No one is to do any harm to those who are ordained, &c.'

People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry, thinking : ' Indeed these Sakyaputtiya Samanas are secure from anything ; it is not allowed to do any harm to them. How can they ordain a robber who has broken out of jail ?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

' Let no robber, O Bhikkhus, who has broken out of jail, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a person), is guilty of a dukkata offence.'

43.

At that time a certain person who had committed robbery had run away and had become ordained with the Bhikkhus. At the royal palace a proclamation was written: 'Wherever he is seen, he is to be killed.'

The people who saw him, said: 'Here is the proclaimed robber; come, let us kill him' (&c., as in chap. 42).

'Let no proclaimed robber, O Bhikkhus, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a robber), is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

44.

At that time a certain person who had been punished by scourging had been ordained with the Bhikkhus. People were annoyed, &c.: 'How can these Sakyaputtiya Samanas ordain a person that has been punished by scourging?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, who has been punished by scourging, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such a person), is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

45.

At that time a certain person who had been punished by branding (&c., as in chap. 44, down to the end).

46.

At that time a certain person who was in debt, ran away and was ordained with the Bhikkhus. When his creditors saw him, they said : ' There is our debtor ; come, let us lead him (to prison). ' But some people replied : ' Do not say so, Sirs. A decree has been issued by the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisâra : ' No one is to do any harm to those who are ordained with the Sakyaputtiya Samanas ; well taught is their doctrine ; let them lead a holy life for the sake of the complete extinction of suffering. '

People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry : ' Indeed these Sakyaputtiya Samanas are secure from anything ; it is not allowed to do anything to them. How can they ordain a debtor ? '

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

' Let no debtor, O Bhikkhus, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on a debtor), is guilty of a dukka \acute{t} a offence. '

47.

At that time a slave ran away and was ordained with the Bhikkhus. When his masters saw him, they said : ' There is our slave ; come, let us lead him away (back to our house), ' (&c., as in chap. 46).

' Let no slave, O Bhikkhus, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on a slave), is guilty of a dukka \acute{t} a offence. '

48.

1. At that time a certain smith¹ who was bald-headed, having had a quarrel with his father and mother, had gone to the Ârâma and received pabbaggâ with the Bhikkhus. Now the father and mother of that bald-headed smith, searching after that bald-headed smith, came to the Ârâma and asked the Bhikkhus: 'Pray, reverend Sirs, have you seen such and such a boy?'

The Bhikkhus, who did not know him, said: 'We do not know him;' having not seen him, they said: 'We have not seen him.'

2. Now the father and mother of that bald-headed smith, searching after that bald-headed smith, found him ordained with the Bhikkhus; they were annoyed, &c.: 'These Sakyaputtiya Samanas are shameless, wicked, and liars. They knew him and said: "We do not know him;" they had seen him and said: "We have not seen him." This boy has been ordained with the Bhikkhus.'

Now some Bhikkhus heard the father and mother of that bald-headed smith, who were annoyed, &c. Those Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Saṃgha's permission is asked for having (the new coming Bhikkhus) shaved.'

¹ Buddhaghosa explains kammârabhandu by tulâtaramundako (read tulâdhâram.) suvannakâraputto. At Dhammapada, v. 239, kammâra is said of a silversmith. There was probably no distinction in these early times between gold, silver, copper, and iron smiths; the same man being an artificer in all kinds of metal.

49.

1. At that time there was in Rāgagaha a company of seventeen boys, friends of each other; young Upāli¹ was first among them. Now Upāli's father and mother thought: 'How will Upāli after our death live a life of ease and without pain?' Then Upāli's father and mother said to themselves: 'If Upāli could learn writing, he would after our death live a life of ease and without pain.' But then Upāli's father and mother thought again: 'If Upāli learns writing, his fingers will become sore. But if Upāli could learn arithmetic, he would after our death live a life of ease and without pain.'

2. But then Upāli's father and mother thought again: 'If Upāli learns arithmetic, his breast will become diseased². But if Upāli could learn money-changing³, he would after our death live a life of ease and comfort, and without pain.' But then Upāli's father and mother said to themselves: 'If Upāli learns money-changing, his eyes will suffer. Now here are the Sakyaputtiya Samānas, who keep commodious precepts and live a commodious life; they have good meals and lie down on beds protected from the wind. If Upāli could be ordained with the

¹ This Upāli is different from the famous Upāli who belonged to the chief disciples of Buddha; the latter came not from Rāgagaha, but from the Sakya country.

² Buddhaghosa: 'He who learns arithmetic, must think much; therefore his breast will become diseased.'

³ We prefer this translation of rūpa to translating it by 'painting,' on account of Buddhaghosa's note: 'He who learns the rūpa-sutta must turn over and over many kārshāpānas and look at them.'

Sakyaputtiya Samāṇas, he would after our death live a life of ease and without pain.'

3. Now young Upāli heard his father and mother talking thus. Then young Upāli went to the other boys; having approached them, he said to those boys: 'Come, Sirs, let us get ordained with the Sakyaputtiya Samāṇas.' (They replied): 'If you will get ordained, Sir, we will be ordained also.' Then those boys went each to his father and mother and said to them: 'Give me your consent for leaving the world and going forth into the houseless state.' Then the parents of those boys, who thought, 'It is a good thing what all these boys are wishing so unanimously for,' gave their consent. They went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggā ordination. The Bhikkhus conferred the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations on them.

4. In the night, at dawn, they rose and began to cry: 'Give us rice-milk, give us soft food, give us hard food!' The Bhikkhus said: 'Wait, friends, till day-time. If there is rice-milk, you shall drink; if there is food, soft or hard, you shall eat; if there is no rice-milk and no food, soft or hard, you must go out for alms, and then you will eat.'

But those Bhikkhus, when they were thus spoken to by the other Bhikkhus, threw their bedding about and made it wet, calling out: 'Give us rice-milk, give us soft food, give us hard food!'

5. Then the Blessed One, having arisen in the night, at dawn, heard the noise which those boys made; hearing it he said to the venerable Ānanda: 'Now, Ānanda, what noise of boys is that?'

Then the venerable Ānanda told the thing to the Blessed One.

‘Is it true, O Bhikkhus, that the Bhikkhus knowingly confer the upasampadâ ordination on persons under twenty years of age?’

‘It is true, Lord.’

Then the Blessed One rebuked those Bhikkhus: ‘How can those foolish persons, O Bhikkhus, knowingly confer the upasampadâ ordination on persons under twenty years of age?’

6. ‘A person under twenty years, O Bhikkhus, cannot endure coldness and heat, hunger and thirst, vexation by gadflies and gnats, by storms and sun-heat, and by reptiles; (he cannot endure) abusive, offensive language; he is not able to bear bodily pains which are severe, sharp, grievous, disagreeable, unpleasant, and destructive to life; whilst a person that has twenty years of age, O Bhikkhus, can endure coldness, &c. This will not do, O Bhikkhus, for converting the unconverted and for augmenting the number of the converted.’

Having rebuked those Bhikkhus and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: ‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, knowingly confer the upasampadâ ordination on a person under twenty years of age. He who does, is to be treated according to the law¹.’

¹ The law alluded to is the 65th pâkittiya rule. Generally in the Khandhakas, which presuppose, as we have stated in our preface, the existence of the Pâtimokkha, direct repetition of the rules laid down there has been avoided. If, nevertheless, in the Khandhakas a transgression alluded to in the Pâtimokkha had to be mentioned again, then in most cases the Khandhakas, instead of directly indicating the penance incurred thereby, use of the guilty Bhikkhu the expression, ‘yathâdhammo kâretabbo,’ i.e. ‘he is to be treated according to the law.’ See H. O.’s Introduction to his edition of the Mahâvagga, p. xx note.

50.

At that time a certain family had died of pestilence¹; only a father and his son were left; they received the pabbaggâ ordination with the Bhikkhus and went together on their rounds for alms. Now that boy, when food was given to his father, ran up to him and said: 'Give some to me too, father; give some to me too, father.'

People were annoyed, &c.: 'These Sakyaputtiya Samanas live an impure life; this boy is a Bhikkhun's son.'

Some Bhikkhus heard, &c.

They told this thing to the Blessed One, &c.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, confer the pabbaggâ ordination on a boy under fifteen years of age. He who does, is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

51.

At that time a believing, pious family, who devoted themselves to the (especial) service of the venerable Ānanda, had died of pestilence. Only two boys were left; these, when seeing Bhikkhus, ran up to them according to their old custom, but the Bhikkhus turned them away. When they were turned away by the Bhikkhus, they cried. Now the venerable Ānanda thought: 'The Blessed One has forbidden us to confer the pabbaggâ ordination on a boy under fifteen years of age, and these boys are under fifteen years of age. What can be done in order that these boys may not perish ?' And the venerable Ānanda told this thing to the Blessed One.

¹ Buddhaghosa explains ahivâtakaroga by mâribyâdhi, and says: 'When this plague befalls a house, men and beasts in that house die; but he who breaks through wall or roof, or is "rogâ mâdigato (?)," may be saved.'

'Are these boys able, Ānanda, to scare crows ?'

'They are, Lord.'

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus : 'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to confer the pabbaggā ordination on crow-keeper boys even under fifteen years of age.'

52.

At that time the venerable Upananda, of the Sakya tribe, had two novices, Kandaka and Ma-haka; these committed sodomy with each other. The Bhikkhus were annoyed, &c. : 'How can novices abandon themselves to such bad conduct ?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One, &c.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, ordain two novices. He who does, is guilty of a dukkata offence¹.'

53.

1. At that time the Blessed One dwelt at Rāgagaha during the rainy season, and remained at the same place during winter and summer. The people were annoyed, &c. : 'The (four) regions are² . . . and covered by darkness to the Sakyaputtiya Samanas; they cannot discern the (four) regions.' Some Bhikkhus heard, &c.

¹ This seems very unpractical : and the rule is accordingly practically abrogated again by chapter 55.

² We must leave 'āhundarikā' untranslated ; Buddhaghosa says nothing about this obscure word.

2. Then the Blessed One said to the venerable Ānanda: 'Go, Ānanda, take a key and tell the Bhikkhus in every cell: "Friends, the Blessed One wishes to go forth to Dakkhināgiri. Let any one of the venerable brethren who thinks fit, come to him."''

The venerable Ānanda accepted this order of the Blessed One (by saying), 'Yes, Lord,' took a key, and said to the Bhikkhus in every cell: 'Friends, the Blessed One,' &c.

3. The Bhikkhus replied: 'Friend Ānanda, the Blessed One has prescribed¹ that Bhikkhus are to live (the first) ten years in dependence (on their ākariyas and upagghāyas), and that he who has completed his tenth year, may give a nissaya himself. Now if we go there, we shall be obliged to take a nissaya there; then we shall stay there for a short time, then we must go back again and take a new nissaya. If our ākariyas and upagghāyas go, we will go also; if our ākariyas and upagghāyas do not go, we will not go either. Otherwise our light-mindedness, friend Ānanda, will become manifest.'

4. Thus the Blessed One went forth to Dakkhināgiri followed only by a few Bhikkhus. And the Blessed One, after having dwelt at Dakkhināgiri as long as he thought fit, went back to Rāgagaha again.

Then the Blessed One said to the venerable Ānanda: 'How is it, Ānanda, that the perfect

¹ See chap. 32. 1.

One has gone forth to Dakkhinâgiri with so few Bhikkhus ?'

Then the venerable Ânanda told the thing to the Blessed One.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a learned, competent Bhikkhu lives five years in dependence (on his âkariya and upagghâya), an unlearned one all his life.

5. 'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not live without a nissaya (i.e. independent of âkariya and upagghâya): when he does not possess full perfection in what belongs to moral practices (&c., as in chap. 36. 2). In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu should not live without a nissaya.

'In five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may live without a nissaya: when he possesses full perfection in what belongs to moral practices (&c., as in chap. 36. 3). In these five cases, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu may live without a nissaya.

6-13. 'And also in other five cases, &c.¹'

End of the eighth Bhânavâra, which is called the Abhayûvara Bhânavâra².

54.

1. Then the Blessed One, after having resided at Râgagaha as long as he thought fit, went forth to

¹ Supply these pentads and hexads, respectively, from chaps. 36. 6, 7; 8, 9; 14, 15; 16, 17; 37. 1, 2; 5, 6; 7, 8; 13, 14.

² Abhayûvara means, 'secure from anything.' This refers to the expression used in chap. 42, § 2.

Kapilavatthu. Wandering from place to place he came to Kapilavatthu. There the Blessed One dwelt in the Sakka country, near Kapilavatthu, in the Nigrodhârâma (Banyan Grove).

And in the forenoon the Blessed One, having put on his under-robcs, took his alms-bowl and with his klvara on went to the residence of the Sakka Suddhodana (his father). Having gone there, he sat down on a seat laid out for him.

Then the princess, who was the mother of Râhula¹, said to young Râhula: 'This is your father, Râhula; go and ask him for your inheritance.'

2. Then young Râhula went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him, he stationed himself before the Blessed One (and said): 'Your shadow, Samana, is a place of bliss.'

Then the Blessed One rose from his seat and went away, and young Râhula followed the Blessed One from behind and said: 'Give me my inheritance, Samana; give me my inheritance, Samana.'

Then the Blessed One said to the venerable Sâriputta: 'Well, Sâriputta, confer the pabbaggâ ordination on young Râhula.'

(Sâriputta replied): 'How shall I confer, Lord, the pabbaggâ ordination on young Râhula?'

3. In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe,

¹ The Buddha's former wife. This is, as far as we know, the only passage in the Pâli Piṭakas which mentions this lady, and it deserves notice that her name is not mentioned. Probably this name was unknown to the Buddhists in early times, and thus we may best account for the difference of the simply invented names given to this lady by later writers. Compare Rh. D., Buddhism, p. 50 seq.

O Bhikkhus, the pabbaggâ ordination of novices by the threefold declaration of taking refuge.

‘And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to confer the pabbaggâ ordination (on a novice) in this way: Let him first have his hair and beard cut off; let him put on yellow robes, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, salute the feet of the Bhikkhus (with his head), and sit down squatting; then let him raise his joined hands and tell him to say: “I take my refuge in the Buddha, I take my refuge in the Dhamma, I take my refuge in the Samgha. And for the second time, &c. And for the third time, &c.”

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, the pabbaggâ ordination of novices by this threefold declaration of taking refuge.’

Thus the venerable Sâriputta conferred the pabbaggâ ordination on young Râhula.

4. Then the Sakka Suddhodana went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. Sitting near him the Sakka Suddhodana said to the Blessed One: ‘Lord, I ask one boon of the Blessed One.’ (The Buddha replied): ‘The perfect Ones, Gotama, are above granting boons (before they know what they are¹).’ (Suddhodana said): ‘Lord, it is a proper and unobjectionable demand.’ ‘Speak, Gotama.’

5. ‘Lord, when the Blessed One gave up the world, it was a great pain to me; so it was when Nanda¹ did the same; my pain was excessive when Râhula too did so. The love for a son, Lord, cuts into the skin; having cut into the skin, it cuts into the hide; having cut into the hide, it cuts into the flesh, . . . the ligaments, . . . the bones; having cut into the bones, it reaches the marrow and dwells in the marrow. Pray, Lord, let their reverences not confer the pabbaggâ ordination on a son without his father's and mother's permission.'

¹ Granting a boon (vara) is a constant phrase used of princes when making an open promise to give to any one whatever they should ask. See, for instance, the Gâtaka Story, No. 9, where the person to whom the boon was given laid it by for a convenient season; and then asked the king to make her son heir-apparent, in violation of all ancient law and custom.

Then the Blessed One taught the Sakka Suddhodaṇa (&c., see chap. 39. 7).

'Let no son, O Bhikkhus, receive the pabbaggâ ordination without his father's and mother's permission. He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on a son without that permission), is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

55.

Then the Blessed One, after having resided at Kapilavatthu as long as he thought fit, went forth to Sâvatthi. Wandering from place to place he came to Sâvatthi. There the Blessed One dwelt at Sâvatthi, in the Getavana, the Ârâma of Anâthapindika.

At that time a family who devoted themselves to the (especial) service of the venerable Sâriputta sent a boy to the venerable Sâriputta (with this message):

¹ Nanda was a son of Mahâpagâpatî, a half-brother of the Buddha. See the story of his conversion in Rh. D.'s Buddhist Birth Stories, p. 128 (later and fuller accounts can be seen in Hardy, Manual, p. 204 seq.; Beal, Romantic Legend, p. 369 seq.)

‘ Might the Thera confer the pabbaggâ ordination on this boy.’ Now the venerable Sâriputta thought: ‘ The Blessed One has established the rule¹ that no one may ordain two novices, and I have already one novice, Râhula. Now what am I to do ?’

He told the thing to the Blessed One.

‘ I allow, O Bhikkhus, a learned, competent Bhikkhu to ordain two novices, or to ordain as many novices as he is able to administer exhortation and instruction to.’

56.

Now the novices thought: ‘ How many precepts² are there for us, and in what (precepts) are we to exercise ourselves ?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘ I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, ten precepts for the novices, and the exercise of the novices in these (ten precepts), viz. abstinence from destroying life; abstinence from stealing; abstinence from impurity; abstinence from lying; abstinence from arrack and strong drink and intoxicating liquors, which cause indifference (to religion); abstinence from eating at forbidden times; abstinence from dancing, singing, music, and seeing spectacles; abstinence from garlands, scents, unguents, ornaments, and finery; abstinence from (the use of) high or broad beds; abstinence from accepting gold or silver. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, these ten precepts for the novices, and the exercise of the novices in these (ten precepts).'

¹ See chap. 52.

² Sikkhâpadâni, literally, ‘ Paths of Training.’ Compare chap. 60.

57.

1. At that time novices did not show reverence and confidence towards the Bhikkhus, and did not live in harmony with them. The Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the novices not show reverence and confidence towards the Bhikkhus, and not live in harmony with them?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you inflict punishment upon a novice in five cases: When he is intent on the Bhikkhus' receiving no alms; when he is intent on the Bhikkhus' meeting with misfortune; when he is intent on the Bhikkhus' finding no residence; when he abuses and reviles the Bhikkhus; when he causes divisions between Bhikkhus and Bhikkhus. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that in these five cases you inflict punishment upon a novice.'

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: 'What punishment are we to inflict?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you forbid them (certain places, for instance, their own residences).'

At that time Bhikkhus forbid novices the whole Samghârâma. The novices, who were not admitted to the Samghârâma, went away, or returned to the world, or went over to Titthiya schools.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let them not, O Bhikkhus, forbid (novices) the whole Samghârâma. He who does so, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that (the Bhikkhus) forbid (a novice) the place where he lives or which he uses to frequent.’

3. At that time Bhikkhus forbade the novices the use of (certain kinds of) food that is taken with the mouth. People, when they prepared rice-milk to drink or meals for the Samgha, said to the novices: ‘Come, reverend Sirs, drink rice-milk; come, reverend Sirs, take food.’ The novices replied: ‘It is impossible, friends; the Bhikkhus have issued a fore-warning (against us).’ The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry, thinking: ‘How can their reverences forbid novices the use of all food that is taken with the mouth?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let them not, O Bhikkhus, forbid (novices) food that is taken with the mouth. He who does so, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

End of the section about punishment (of novices).

58.

At that time the *Kḥabbaggiya*¹ Bhikkhus laid a ban upon novices without the consent of the upagghâyas (of those novices). The upagghâyas searched after them, thinking: 'How is it that our novices have disappeared?' The Bhikkhus said: 'The Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, friends, have laid a ban upon them.' The upagghāyas were annoyed, &c.: 'How can the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus lay a ban upon our novices without having obtained our consent?'

¹ Here first appear the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus (the company of the ‘six Bhikkhus’, with their attendants), the constant and indefatigable evil-doers throughout the whole Vinaya-Piṭaka. Buddhaghosa (on Kullavagga I, 1) says that Panduka and Lohitaka belonged to this company, and also Assagi and Punabbasu are mentioned as Kḥabbaggiyas (see Childers s. v. kḥabbaggiyo).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, lay a ban (upon novices) without consent of the upagghāyas. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

59.

At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus drew the novices of senior Bhikkhus over (to themselves). The Theras, who were obliged to get themselves teeth-cleansers and water to rinse their mouths with, became tired.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, draw the followers of another Bhikkhu over to himself. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

60.

At that time a novice, Kandaka by name, who was a follower of the venerable Upananda Sakya-putta, had sexual intercourse with a Bhikkhunī, Kandakā by name. The Bhikkhus were annoyed, &c.: 'How can a novice abandon himself to such conduct?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you expel a novice (from the fraternity) in the following ten cases: When he destroys life; when he commits theft; when he commits impurity; when he is a liar; when he drinks strong drinks; when he speaks against the Buddha; when he speaks against the Dhamma; when he speaks against the Samgha; when he holds false doctrines; when he has sexual intercourse with Bhikkhunis¹. In these ten cases I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you expel the novice (from the fraternity).’

61.

At that time, &c.²

‘Let a eunuch, O Bhikkhus, who has not received the upasampadâ ordination, not receive it; if he has received it, let him be expelled (from the fraternity).’

¹ The case of the novice's committing sexual intercourse with a Bhikkhunî can have found its place here only by a negligence of the redactor, as it is comprised already in the third of the ten cases (the novice's committing impurity). Buddhaghosa (who of course never admits anything like an inadvertence of the holy Theras by whom the Vinaya is compiled) says that the third case and the tenth are distinguished here, because a person that has simply committed an impurity may receive the ordination, if he is willing to refrain himself in future; whilst a bhikkhunîdûsaka cannot be ordained in any case (see chap. 67).

² Tena kho pana samayena aññataro paṇḍako bhikkhûsu pabagito hoti, so dahare dahare bhikkhû upasamkamitvâ evaṃ vadeti: etha maṃ âyasmanto dûsethâ 'ti. Bhikkhû apasâdenti: nassa paṇḍaka, vinassa paṇḍaka, ko tayâ attho 'ti. So bhikkhûhi apasâdito mahante mahante moligalle (Buddhaghosa: thûlasarîre) sâmaṇere upasamkamitvâ evaṃ vadeti: etha maṃ âvuso dûsethâ

62.

1. At that time there was a certain person of an old family, whose kinsmen had died away; he was delicately nurtured. Now this person of an old family, whose kinsmen had died away, thought: 'I am delicately nurtured; I am not able to acquire new riches or to augment the riches which I possess. What shall I do in order that I may live a life of ease and without pain?'

Then this person of an old family, whose kinsmen had died away, gave himself the following answer: 'There are the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, who keep commodious precepts and live a commodious life; they have good meals and lie down on beds protected from wind. What if I were to procure myself an alms-bowl and robes on my own account, and were to have my hair and beard cut off, to put on yellow robes, to go to the Ârâma, and to live there with the Bhikkhus.'

2. Then that person of an old family, whose kinsmen had died away, procured himself an alms-bowl and robes on his own account, had his hair and beard cut off, put on yellow robes, went to the Ârâma, and respectfully saluted the Bhikkhus. The

'ti. Sāmanerā apasādenti: nassa pandāka, vinassa pandāka, ko tayā attho 'ti. So sāmānerehi apasādito hatthibhande assabhande upasamkamitvā evam vadeti: etha mam āvuso dūsethā 'ti. Hatthibhandā assabhandā dūsesum. Te ugghāyanti khīyanti vipāṭenti: pandakā ime samanā Sakyaputtiyā, ye pi imesam na pandakā te pi pandake dūsentī, evam ime sabbeva abrahmakārinō 'ti. Assosum kho bhikkhū hatthibhandānam assabhandānam ugghāyantānam khīyantānam vipāṭentānam. Atha kho te bhikkhū bhagavato etam attham ārokesum.

Bhikkhus said to him : ‘ How many years, friend, have elapsed since your upasampadâ ?’

‘ What does that mean, friends, “ years elapsed since the upasampadâ ?” ’

‘ And who is your upagghâya, friend ?’

‘ What does that word upagghâya mean, friends ?’

The Bhikkhus said to the venerable Upâli : ‘ Pray, friend Upâli, examine this ascetic.’

3. Then that person of an old family, whose kinsmen had died away, when being examined by the venerable Upâli, told him the whole matter. The venerable Upâli told this thing to the Bhikkhus ; the Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘ Let a person, O Bhikkhus, who has furtively attached himself to the Saṃgha, if he has not received the upasampadâ ordination, not receive it ; if he has received it, let him be expelled (from the fraternity).

‘ Let a person, O Bhikkhus, who has gone over to the Tittihas’ (&c., as in chap. 61).

63.

1. At that time there was a serpent who was aggrieved at, ashamed of, and conceived aversion for his having been born as a serpent. Now this serpent thought : ‘ What am I to do in order to become released from being a serpent, and quickly to obtain human nature ?’ Then this serpent gave himself the following answer : ‘ These Sakyaputtiya Samanas lead indeed a virtuous, tranquil, holy life ; they speak the truth ; they keep the precepts of morality, and are endowed with all virtues. If

I could obtain pabbaggā with the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, I should be released from being a serpent and quickly obtain human nature.'

2. Then that serpent, in the shape of a youth, went to the Bhikkhus, and asked them for the pabbaggā ordination; the Bhikkhus conferred on him the pabbaggā and upasampadā ordinations.

At that time that serpent dwelt together with a certain Bhikkhu in the last Vihāra (near the boundary wall of the Getavana). Now that Bhikkhu, having arisen in the night, at dawn, was walking up and down in the open air. When that Bhikkhu had left (the Vihāra), that serpent, who thought himself safe (from discovery), fell asleep (in his natural shape). The whole Vihāra was filled with the snake's body; his windings jutted out of the window.

3. Then that Bhikkhu thought: 'I will go back to the Vihāra,' opened the door, and saw the whole Vihāra filled with the snake's body, the windings jutting out of the window. Seeing that he was terrified and cried out. The Bhikkhus ran up, and said to that Bhikkhu: 'Why did you cry out, friend?' 'This whole Vihāra, friends, is filled with a snake's body; the windings jut out of the window.'

Then that serpent awoke from that noise and sat down on his seat. The Bhikkhus said to him: 'Who are you, friend?' 'I am a serpent, reverend Sirs.' 'And why have you done such a thing, friend?' Then that Nāga told the whole matter to the Bhikkhus; the Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One.

4. In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, having ordered the fraternity of Bhikkhus to assemble, said to that serpent: 'You serpents are not capable of (spiritual) growth in this doctrine and discipline. However, serpent, go and observe fast on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month; thus will you be released from being a serpent and quickly obtain human nature.'

Then that serpent, who thought, 'I am not capable of (spiritual) growth in this doctrine and discipline,' became sad and sorrowful, shed tears, made an outcry, and went away.

5. Then the Blessed One said to the Bhikkhus: 'There are two occasions, O Bhikkhus, on which a serpent (who has assumed human shape) manifests his true nature: when he has sexual intercourse with a female of his species, and if he thinks himself safe (from discovery) and falls asleep. These, O Bhikkhus, are the two occasions on which a serpent manifests his true nature.

'Let an animal, O Bhikkhus, that has not received the upasampadā ordination, not receive it; if it has received it, let it be expelled (from the fraternity).'

64.

1. At that time a certain young man deprived his mother of life. He was grieved, ashamed, and loathed this sinful deed. Now this young man thought: 'What am I to do to get rid of my sinful deed?' Then this young man gave himself this answer: 'These Sakyaputtiya Samanas lead indeed a virtuous, tranquil, holy life, &c. If I could obtain pabbaggâ with the Sakyaputtiya Samanas, I might get rid of my sinful deed.'

2. Then that young man went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination. The Bhikkhus said to the venerable Upâli: 'Formerly, friend Upâli, a serpent in the shape of a youth received the pabbaggâ ordination with the Bhikkhus; pray, friend Upâli, examine this young man.' Then that young man, when examined by the venerable Upâli, told him the whole matter. The venerable Upâli told it to the Bhikkhus; the Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One.

'Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that is guilty of matricide, if he has not received the upasampadâ ordination, not receive it; if he has received it, let him be expelled (from the fraternity).'

65.

At that time a certain young man deprived his father of life (&c., as in chap. 64).

'Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that is guilty of patricide, &c.'

66.

1. At that time a number of Bhikkhus were travelling on the road from Sâketa to Sâvatthi. On the road robbers broke forth, robbed some of the Bhikkhus, and killed some of them. Then royal soldiers came from Sâvatthi and caught some of the robbers; others of them escaped. Those who had escaped, received pabbaggâ with the Bhikkhus; those who had been caught, were led to death.

2. Then those who had been ordained, saw those robbers who were being led to death ; seeing them they said : ' It is well that we have escaped ; had we been caught, we should also be killed thus.' The Bhikkhus said to them : ' Why, what have you done, friends ?' Then those (robbers) who had been ordained, told the whole matter to the Bhikkhus. The Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

' Those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, were Arahats. Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that has murdered an Arahata, if this person has not received the upasampadâ ordination, not receive it ; if he has received it, let him be expelled (from the fraternity).'

67.

At that time a number of Bhikkhunis were travelling on the road from Sâketa to Sâvatthi. On the road robbers broke forth, robbed some of the Bhikkhunis, and violated some of them. Then royal soldiers (&c., as in chap. 66).

The Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

' Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that has violated a Bhikkhuni (or, that has had sexual intercourse with a Bhikkhuni), (&c., as in chap. 66).

' Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that has caused a schism among the Saṃgha, &c.

' Let a person, O Bhikkhus, that has shed (a Buddha's) blood,' &c.

68.

At that time a certain hermaphrodite had received pabbaggā with the Bhikkhus; so karoti pi kārāpeti pi.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let a hermaphrodite, O Bhikkhus,' &c.

69.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadā ordination on a person that had no upagghāya.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, who has no upagghāya, receive the upasampadā ordination. He who confers the upasampadā ordination (on such a person), commits a dukkata offence.'

2. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadā ordination with the Saṃgha as upagghāya.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one receive the upasampadā ordination with the Saṃgha as upagghāya. He who confers the upasampadā ordination (in such a way), commits a dukkata offence.'

3. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadā ordination with a number of Bhikkhus¹ as upagghāya (&c., as before).

4. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upa-

¹ I.e. not with the whole fraternity residing at that place, but with a part of it.

sampadâ ordination with a eunuch as upagghâya, &c.; with a person that had furtively attached himself (to the Samgha) as upagghâya; with a person that was gone over to the Titthiyas as upagghâya; with an animal as upagghâya; with a person that was guilty of matricide as upagghâya; with a person that was guilty of parricide as upagghâya; with a person that had murdered an Arahât as upagghâya; with a person that had violated a Bhikkhunî as upagghâya; with a person that had caused a schism among the Samgha as upagghâya; with a person that had shed (a Buddha's) blood as upagghâya; with a hermaphrodite as upagghâya.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one,' &c. (as in the first clause).

70.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadâ ordination on persons that had no alms-bowl. They received alms with their hands. People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry, saying, 'Like the Titthiyas.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, receive the upasampadâ ordination without having an alms-bowl. He who confers the upasampadâ ordination (on a person that has not), commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

2. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadâ ordination on persons that had no robes. They went out for alms naked. People were annoyed (&c., as in § 1).

3. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upasampadâ ordination on persons that had neither alms-bowl nor robes. They went out for alms naked and (received alms) with their hands. People were annoyed (&c., as in § 1).

4. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upa-sampadâ ordination on persons that had borrowed alms-bowls. After the ordination (the owners) took their alms-bowls back ; (the Bhikkhus) received alms with their hands. People were annoyed (&c. . . . down to) : 'Like the Tittihas.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, receive the upa-sampadâ ordination who has borrowed the alms-bowl. He who confers,' &c. (as in the first clause).

5. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upa-sampadâ ordination on persons that had borrowed robes. After the ordination (the owners) took their robes back ; (the Bhikkhus) went out for alms naked. People were annoyed (&c., as in § 1 to the end).

6. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the upa-sampadâ ordination on persons that had borrowed alms-bowls and robes, &c.

Here end the twenty cases in which upasampadâ is forbidden.

71.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus conferred the pabbaggâ ordination on a person whose hands were cut off, on a person whose feet were cut off, whose hands and feet were cut off, whose ears were cut off, whose nose was cut off, whose ears and nose were cut off, whose fingers were cut off, whose thumbs were cut off, whose tendons (of the feet) were cut, who had hands like a snake's hood¹, who was a hump-back, or a dwarf, or a person that had a goitre, that had been branded, that had been scourged, on a proclaimed robber, on a person that had elephantiasis, that was afflicted with bad illness, that gave offence (by any deformity) to those who saw him, on a one-eyed person, on a person with a crooked limb, on a lame person, on a person that was paralysed on one side, on a cripple², on a person weak from age, on a blind man, on a dumb man, on a deaf man, on a blind and dumb man, on a blind and deaf man, on a deaf and dumb man, on a blind, deaf and dumb man.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no person, O Bhikkhus, whose hands are cut off, receive the pabbaggâ ordination. Let no person whose feet are cut off, receive the pabbaggâ ordination, &c. (each of the above cases being here repeated). He who confers the pabbaggâ ordination (on such persons), is guilty of a dukkatā offence.'

Here end the thirty-two cases in which pabbaggâ is forbidden.

End of the ninth Bhāṇavāra.

¹ 'Whose fingers are grown together, like bats' wings' (Buddhaghosa).

² Buddhaghosa (Berlin MS.) explains 'khinniriyâpatha' by 'pidhasappi.' We ought to read, no doubt, pîḥasappî, which is Sanskrit pîḥasarpin, a cripple that is moved on in a rolling chair.

72.

1. At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus gave a nissaya to shameless Bhikkhus.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, give a nissaya to shameless Bhikkhus. He who does, is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.’

At that time some Bhikkhus lived in dependence on shameless Bhikkhus (i. e. they received a nissaya from them, they chose them for their upaggaḥāyas or āḥariyas); ere long they became also shameless, bad Bhikkhus.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, live in dependence on shameless Bhikkhus. He who does, is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.’

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed that we shall not give a nissaya to shameless Bhikkhus, nor live in dependence on shameless Bhikkhus. Now how are we to discern modest and shameless persons?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you wait first four or five days until you have seen how a Bhikkhu behaves to the other Bhikkhus.’

73.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu was travelling on the road in the Kosala country. Now this Bhikkhu thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed that we shall not live without a nissaya (of an āḥariya and an upagga^hâya); now I want a nissaya, but I am travelling. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a travelling Bhikkhu who can get no nissaya, to live without a nissaya.’

2. At that time two Bhikkhus were travelling on the road in the Kosala country. They came to a certain residence; there one of the two Bhikkhus was taken ill. Now that sick Bhikkhu thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed that we shall not live without a nissaya; now I want a nissaya, but I am sick. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a sick Bhikkhu who can get no nissaya, to live without a nissaya.’

3. Now the other Bhikkhu, who nursed that sick Bhikkhu, thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed, &c.; now I want a nissaya, but this Bhikkhu is sick. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who is nursing a sick Bhikkhu, if he can get no nissaya and the sick asks him (to remain with him), to live without a nissaya.’

4. At that time a certain Bhikkhu lived in the forest; he had a dwelling-place where he lived pleasantly. Now this Bhikkhu thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed, &c.; now I want a nissaya, but I live in the forest and have a dwelling-place where I live pleasantly. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu living in the forest who finds a place where he may live pleasantly, and who can get (there) no nissaya, to live without a nissaya (saying to himself): "If a proper person to give me nissaya comes hither, I will take nissaya of that person."

74.

1. At that time there was a person that desired to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable Mahâkassapa. Then the venerable Mahâkassapa sent a messenger to the venerable Ânanda: 'Come, Ânanda, and recite the upasampadâ proclamation for this person.' The venerable Ânanda said: 'I cannot pronounce the Thera's (i. e. Mahâkassapa's) name; the Thera is too venerable compared with me.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to use also the family name (of the upagghâya, instead of his proper name) in the proclamation.'

2. At that time there were two persons that desired to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable Mahâkassapa. They quarrelled with each other. (One said): 'I will receive the upasampadâ ordination first.' (The other said): 'Nay, I will receive it first.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to ordain two persons by one proclamation.'

3. At that time there were persons who desired to receive the upasampadâ ordination from different Theras. They quarrelled with each other. (One said): 'I will receive the upasampadâ ordination first.' (The other said): 'Nay, I will receive it first.' The Theras said: 'Well, friends, let us ordain them altogether by one proclamation.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to ordain two or three persons by one proclamation, provided they have the same upagghâya, but not if they have different upagghâyas.'

75.

At that time the venerable Kumârakassapa had received the upasampadâ ordination when he had completed the twentieth year from his conception (but not from his birth). Now the venerable Kumârakassapa thought: 'The Blessed One has forbidden us to confer the upasampadâ ordination on persons under twenty years of age¹, and I have completed my twentieth year (only) from my conception. Have I, therefore, received the upasampadâ ordination, or have I not received it?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'When, O Bhikkhus, in the womb the first thought rises up (in the nascent being), the first consciousness manifests itself, according to this the (true) birth should be reckoned. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to confer the upasampadâ ordination on persons that have completed the twentieth year from their conception (only).'

¹ See chap. 49. 6.

76.

1. At that time ordained Bhikkhus were seen who were afflicted with leprosy, boils, dry leprosy, consumption, and fits.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that he who confers the upasampadā ordination, ask (the person to be ordained) about the Disqualifications (for receiving the ordination). And let him ask, O Bhikkhus, in this way :

‘Are you afflicted with the following diseases, leprosy, boils, dry leprosy, consumption, and fits ?

‘Are you a man ?

‘Are you a male ?

‘Are you a freeman ?

‘Have you no debts ?

‘Are you not in the royal service ?

‘Have your father and mother given their consent ?

‘Are you full twenty years old ?

‘Are your alms-bowl and your robes in due state ?

‘What is your name ?

‘What is your upagghāya’s name ?’

2. At that time the Bhikkhus asked the persons who desired to receive the upasampadā ordination about the Disqualifications, without having them instructed beforehand (how to answer). The persons that desired to be ordained, became disconcerted, perplexed, and could not answer.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you first instruct (the persons desirous of being ordained), and then ask them about the Disqualifications.’

3. Then they instructed (the candidates) in the midst of the assembly; the persons desirous of being ordained became disconcerted, perplexed, and could not answer nevertheless.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you instruct them aside, and ask them about the Disqualifications before the assembly. And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to instruct them in this way: You ought first to cause them to choose an upagghâya; when they have chosen an upagghâya, their alms-bowl and robes must be shown to them, “This is your alms-bowl, this is your samghâti, this is your upper robe, this is your under garment; come and place yourself here.”’

4. Ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus instructed them; the persons desirous of being ordained, though they had been instructed, became disconcerted, perplexed, and could not answer.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, instruct them. If they do, they commit a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a learned, competent Bhikkhu instruct them.’

5. At that time persons instructed them who were not appointed thereto.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, instruct them without being appointed thereto. He who so instructs, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that an appointed Bhikkhu is to instruct them. And (this Bhikkhu), O Bhikkhus, is to be appointed in this way: One may either appoint himself, or one may appoint another person. And how is (a Bhikkhu) to appoint himself? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. N.N. desires to receive the upasampadā ordination from the venerable N.N. If the Samgha is ready, I will instruct N.N." Thus one may appoint himself.

6. 'And how is (a Bhikkhu) to appoint another person? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, &c. N.N. desires to receive the upasampadā ordination from the venerable N.N. If the Samgha is ready, let N.N. instruct N.N." Thus one may appoint another person.

7. 'Then let that appointed Bhikkhu go to the person who desires to be ordained, and thus address him: "Do you hear, N.N.? This is the time for you to speak the truth, and to say that which is. When I ask you before the assembly about that which is, you ought, if it is so, to answer: 'It is;' if it is not so, you ought to answer: 'It is not.' Be not disconcerted, be not perplexed. I shall ask you thus: 'Are you afflicted with the following diseases, &c?'"'

8. (After the instruction, the instructor and the candidate) appeared together before the assembly.

'Let them not appear together. Let the instructor come first and proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. N.N. desires to receive the upasampadā ordination from the venerable N.N.; he has been instructed by me. If the Samgha is ready, let N.N. come." Then let him be told: "Come on." Let him be told to adjust his upper robe (&c., see chap. 29. 2), to raise his joined hands, and to ask (the Samgha) for the upasampadā ordination (by saying), "I ask the Samgha, reverend Sirs, for the upasampadâ ordination; might the Samgha, reverend Sirs, draw me out (of the sinful world) out of compassion towards me. And for the second time, reverend Sirs, I ask, &c. And for the third time, reverend Sirs, I ask, &c."

9. 'Then let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N. If the Samgha is ready, let me ask N. N. about the Disqualifications.

"Do you hear, N. N.? This is the time for you (&c., see § 7, down to:) you ought to answer: 'It is not.'"

"Are you afflicted with the following diseases, &c.?"

10. 'Then let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This person N. N. desires to receive the upasampadâ ordination from the venerable N. N.; he is free from the Disqualifications; his alms-bowl and robes are in due state. N. N. asks the Samgha for the upasampadâ ordination with N. N. as upagghâya. If the Samgha is ready, &c.¹"

End of the regulations for the upasampadâ ordination².

¹ Here follows the usual complete formula of a ñattikatuttha kamma; see chaps. 28. 4-6; 29. 3, &c.

² With these sections compare the previous chapters 12, 28 and following, 36 and following. The ñatti prescribed in this chapter, together with the Three Refuges Formula prescribed in chap. 12, § 4, the whole of chap. 77, and the Four Interdictions form together

77.

‘Then let them measure the shadow, tell (the newly-ordained Bhikkhu) what season and what date it is, tell him what part of the day it is, tell him the whole formula¹, and tell him the four Resources: “The religious life has the morsels of food given in alms for its resource (&c., as in chap. 30. 4).”’

End of the four Resources.

78.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus, after having conferred the upasampadâ ordination on a certain Bhikkhu, left him alone and went away. Afterwards, as he went alone (to the Ârâma), he met on the way his former wife. She said to him: ‘Have you now embraced the religious life?’ (He replied): ‘Yes, I have embraced the religious life.’ ‘It is difficult to persons who have embraced religious life, to obtain sexual intercourse; come, let us have intercourse.’ He practised intercourse with her, and, in consequence, came late (to the Ârâma). The Bhikkhus said: ‘How is it, friend, that you are so late?’

2. Then that Bhikkhu told the whole matter to the Bhikkhus. The Bhikkhus told it to the Blessed One.

the current ceremony of ordination (the upasampadâ-kamma-vâkâ) as now still in use in the Order. See the Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, New Series, VII, p. 1.

¹ I. e., according to Buddhaghosa, repeat to him all the data specified before together, in order that he might be able to give a correct answer when asked about his spiritual age.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you give a companion to a newly-ordained Bhikkhu, and that you tell him the four Interdictions :

“A Bhikkhu who has received the upasampadâ ordination, ought to abstain from all sexual intercourse even with an animal. A Bhikkhu who practises sexual intercourse is no Samana and no follower of the Sakyaputta. As a man whose head is cut off, cannot live any longer with his trunk alone, thus a Bhikkhu who practises sexual intercourse is no Samana and no follower of the Sakyaputta. Abstain from doing so as long as your life lasts.

3. “A Bhikkhu who has received the upasampadâ ordination, ought to abstain from taking what is not given to him, and from theft, even of a blade of grass. A Bhikkhu who takes what is not given to him, or steals it, if it is a pâda (i. e. a quarter of a kârshâpana), or of the value of a pâda, or worth more than a pâda, is no Samana and no follower of the Sakyaputta. As a sear leaf loosed from its stalk cannot become green again, thus a Bhikkhu who takes, &c. Abstain from doing so as long as your life lasts.

4. “A Bhikkhu who has received the upasampadâ ordination, ought not intentionally to destroy the life of any being down to a worm or an ant. A Bhikkhu who intentionally kills a human being, down to procuring abortion, is no Samana and no follower of the Sakyaputta. As a great stone which is broken in two, cannot be reunited, thus a Bhikkhu who intentionally, &c. Abstain from doing so as long as your life lasts.

5. “A Bhikkhu who has received the upasampadâ ordination, ought not to attribute to himself any superhuman condition, and not to say even: 'I find delight in sojourning in an empty place.' A Bhikkhu who with bad intention and out of covetousness attributes to himself a superhuman condition, which he has not, and which he is not possessed of, a state of ghâna (mystic meditation), or one of the *vimokkhas*¹, or one of the samâdhis (states of self-concentration), or one of the samâpattis (the attainment of the four ghânas and four of the eight vimokkhas), or one of the Paths (of sanctification), or one of the Fruits thereof, is no Samāna and no follower of the Sakyaputta. As a palm tree of which the top sprout has been cut off, cannot grow again, thus a Bhikkhu who with bad intention, &c. Abstain from doing so as long as your life lasts."

End of the four Interdicts.

79.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu against whom expulsion² had been pronounced for his refusal to see an offence (committed by himself), returned to the world. Afterwards he came back to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the upasampadâ ordination.

¹ The vimokkhas (literally, deliverances) are eight stages of meditation different from the four ghânas. The characteristics of the different vimokkhas are specified by Childers s. v.

² This temporary expulsion (ukkehapaniyakamma), which is pronounced against Bhikkhus who refuse to see an offence committed by themselves (âpattiyâ adassane), or to atone for such an offence (âpattiyâ appa/ikamme), or to renounce a false doctrine (pâpikâya di/hiyâ appa/inissagge), must be distinguished from the definitive and permanent expulsion (nâsanâ) which is pronounced against Bhikkhus who have committed a pârâ-gika offence, or in cases like those treated of in chapters 61 seq.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, that a Bhikkhu against whom expulsion has been pronounced for his refusal to see an offence (committed by himself), returns to the world, and afterwards comes back to the Bhikkhus and asks them for the upasampadâ ordination, let them say to him: “Will you see that offence?” If he replies: “I will see it,” let him be admitted to the pabbaggâ ordination; if he replies: “I will not see it,” let him not be admitted to the pabbaggâ ordination.

2. ‘When he has received the pabbaggâ ordination let them say to him: “Will you see that offence?” If he says: “I will see it,” let him be admitted to the upasampadâ ordination; if he says: “I will not see it,” let him not be admitted to the upasampadâ ordination.

‘When he has received the upasampadâ ordination (&c., as before). If he says: “I will see it,” let him be restored¹; if he says: “I will not see it,” let him not be restored.

‘When he has been restored, let them say to him: “Do you see that offence?” If he sees it, well and good; if he does not see it, let them expel him again, if it is possible to bring about unanimity (of the fraternity for the sentence of expulsion); if that is impossible, it is no offence to live and to dwell together (with such a Bhikkhu).

3. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, that a Bhikkhu against whom expulsion has been pronounced for his refusal to atone for an offence (committed by himself), &c.¹ When he has been restored, let them say to him : "Atone now for that offence." If he atones for it, well and good, &c.

¹ I. e. the sentence of expulsion is abolished; compare the Samanta Pâsâdikâ, ap. Minayeff, Prâtimoksha, p. 92.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, that a Bhikkhu against whom expulsion has been pronounced for his refusal to renounce a false doctrine, &c.² When he has been restored, let them say to him : "Renounce now that false doctrine." If he renounces it, well and good, &c.'

End of the first Khandhaka, which is called the Great Khandhaka³.

¹ As in §§ 1, 2. Instead of 'Will you see that offence?' and, 'I will see it,' read here : 'Will you atone for that offence?' and, 'I will atone for it.'

² As above. Read here : 'Will you renounce that false doctrine?' and, 'I will renounce it.'

³ Here follow some Slokas, probably written in Ceylon, and an elaborate Table of Contents, both of which we leave untranslated. The Slokas are introductory to the Table of Contents (uddâna) and belong to it. A similar Table of Contents is found in the MSS. nearly after all the other Khandhakas.

SECOND KHANDHAKA.

(THE UPOSATHA CEREMONY, AND THE PÂTIMOKKHA.)

1.

1. At that time the blessed Buddha dwelt near Râgagaha, on the Gigg'hakûta mountain ('the Vulture's Peak'). At that time the Paribbâgakas belonging to Titthiya schools assembled on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month¹ and recited their Dhamma. The people went to them in order to hear the Dhamma. They were filled with favour towards, and were filled with faith in, the Paribbâgakas belonging to Titthiya schools; the Paribbâgakas belonging to Titthiya schools gained adherents.

2. Now when the Mâgadha king Seniya Bimbisâra was alone, and had retired into solitude, the following consideration presented itself to his mind : 'The Paribbâgakas belonging to Titthiya schools assemble now on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month and recite their Dhamma. The people go to them in order to hear the Dhamma. They are filled with favour towards, and are filled with faith in, the Paribbâgakas who belong to Titthiya

¹ One should be inclined to understand that the Paribbâgakas assembled twice each half month, on the eighth day of the pakkha and on the fourteenth or fifteenth day, according to the different length of the pakkha. However, chap. 4 makes it probable that not two days in each pakkha are to be understood, but three. Compare, however, the remark of Buddhaghosa, quoted in the note on chap. 34. 1.

schools; the Paribbāgakas who belong to Tittiya schools gain adherents. What if the reverend ones (the Buddhist Bhikkhus) were to assemble also on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month.'

3. Then the Māgadha king Seniya Bimbisāra went to the place where the Blessed One was; having approached him and having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, he sat down near him. Sitting near him the Māgadha king Seniya Bimbisāra said to the Blessed One: 'Lord, when I was alone and had retired into solitude, the following consideration presented itself to my mind: "The Paribbāgakas, &c.; what if the reverend ones were to assemble also on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month." Well, Lord, let the reverend ones assemble also on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month.'

4. Then the Blessed One taught, incited, animated, and gladdened the Māgadha king Seniya Bimbisāra by religious discourse; and the Māgadha king Seniya Bimbisāra, having been taught . . . and gladdened by the Blessed One by religious discourse, rose from his seat, respectfully saluted the Blessed One, passed round him with his right side towards him, and went away.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you assemble on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each month.'

2.

At that time the Bhikkhus, considering that the Blessed One had ordered them to assemble on the fourteenth &c. day of each half month, assembled on the fourteenth &c. day of each half month and sat there silent. The people went to them in order to hear the Dhamma. They were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'How can the Sakya-puttiya Samanas, when they have assembled on the fourteenth &c. day of each half month, sit there silent, like the dumb, or like hogs? Ought they not to recite the Dhamma, when they have assembled?' Some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry; these Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One. In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you recite the Dhamma, when you have assembled on the fourteenth &c. day of each half month.'

3.

1. Now when the Blessed One was alone and had retired into solitude, the following consideration presented itself to his mind: 'What if I were to prescribe that the Bhikkhus recite as the Pâtimokkha¹ the precepts which I have promulgated to them; this will be their Uposatha service (service of the fast-day).'

¹ On the origin and the meaning of the title 'Pâtimokkha,' see our Introduction, p. xxvii.

2. And the Blessed One, having left the solitude in the evening, in consequence of that and on this occasion, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'When I was alone, O Bhikkhus, and had retired into solitude, the following consideration, &c., this will be their Uposatha service. I prescribe you, O Bhikkhus, to recite the Pātimokkha.

3. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to recite it in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. To-day it is Uposatha, the fifteenth (of the half month). If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha hold the Uposatha service and recite the Pātimokkha. What ought to be first done by the Samgha? Proclaim the *pārisuddhi*¹, Sirs. I will recite the Pātimokkha."

"We hear it well and fix well the mind on it all of us²."

"He who has committed an offence, may confess it; if there is no offence, you should remain silent; from your being silent I shall understand that the reverend brethren are pure (from offences). As a single person that has been asked a question, answers it, the same is the matter if before an assembly like this a question has been solemnly proclaimed three times : if a Bhikkhu, after a three-fold proclamation, does not confess an existing offence which he remembers, he commits an intentional falsehood. Now, reverend brethren, an intentional falsehood has been declared an impediment¹ by the Blessed One. Therefore, by a Bhikkhu who has committed (an offence), and remembers it, and desires to become pure, an existing offence should be confessed; for if it has been confessed, it is treated duly.”

¹ See chap. 22. If a Bhikkhu is prevented by disease from assisting to the Pātimokkha ceremony, he is to charge another Bhikkhu with his pārisuddhi, i.e. with the solemn declaration that he is pure from the offences specified in the Pātimokkha.

² These words are evidently the answer of the Bhikkhus then present to the proclamation of the *pātimokkhu*ddesaka.

4.² ‘Pâtimokkham:’ it is the beginning, it is the face (mukham), it is the principal (pamukham) of good qualities; therefore it is called ‘pâtimokkham’³.

‘Âyasmanto:’ this word ‘âyasmanto’ is an expression of friendliness, an expression of respect, an appellation that infers respectfulness and reverence.

‘Uddisissâmi:’ I will pronounce, I will show, I will proclaim, I will establish, I will unveil, I will distinguish, I will make evident, I will declare.

‘Tam’ (it): this refers to the Pâtimokkha.

‘Sabbe va santâ’ (all of us): as many as are present in that assembly, aged, young, and middle-aged (Bhikkhus), are denoted by ‘sabbe va santâ’⁴.

‘Sâdhukam sunoma’ (we hear it well): admit-

¹ See § 7.

² §§ 4-8 contain an explanation, word by word, of the formula given in § 3. This explanation is a portion of the ancient commentary on the Pâtimokkha which at the time of the redaction of the Vinaya Piṭaka has been admitted into it in its full extent (see the Introduction, p. xv seq.).

³ See p. 241, note 1.

⁴ See p. 1, note 5.

ting its authority, fixing our minds on it, we repeat the whole of it in our thoughts.

‘Manasikaroma’ (we fix our minds on it): we listen to it with concentrated, not perplexed, not confused thoughts.

5. ‘Yassa siyâ âpatti’ (he who has committed an offence): he who, whether an aged or young or middle-aged Bhikkhu, has committed some offence belonging to the five classes of offences or to the seven classes of offences¹.

‘So âvikareyya:’ he may show it, unveil it, make it evident, declare it before the Samgha (the full chapter of Bhikkhus), or before a small number, or before one person.

‘Asanti âpatti’ (a non-existing offence): an offence which has not been committed, or which has been committed and atoned for.

‘Tunhi bhavitabbam’ (he ought to remain silent): he ought to accept (the recitation of the Pâtimokkha without any answer), he ought not to utter anything.

‘Parisuddhâ’ti vedissâmi’ (I shall understand that they are pure): I shall infer, I shall know.

6. ‘Yathâ kho pana pakkekaputtassa veyyâkaranam hoti’ (as a single person that has been asked a question answers it): as a single person that has been asked a question by another one, would answer it, thus (those who are present) in that assembly ought to understand: ‘He asks me.’

¹ The five classes of offences are, the pārâgika, samghâdisesa, pâkittiya, pâidesaniya, dukkaṭa offences; the seven classes, the pārâgika, samghâdisesa, thullaṭṭaya, pâkittiya, pâidesaniya, dukkaṭa, dubbhâsita offences. See, for instance, Kullavagga IX, 3, 3.

‘Evarûpâ parisâ’ (an assembly like this): this refers to the assembly of Bhikkhus.

‘Yâvatatīyam anussâvitam hoti’ (it has been solemnly proclaimed three times): it has been solemnly proclaimed once, and the second time, and the third time.

‘Saramâno’ (remembering it): knowing it, being conscious of it.

‘Santī âpatti’ (an existing offence): an offence which has been committed, or which has been committed and not been atoned for.

‘Nâvikareyya:’ he does not show it, he does not unveil it, he does not make it evident, he does not declare it before the Samgha, or before a small chapter, or before one person.

7. ‘Sampagânamusâvâd’ assa hoti’ (he commits an intentional falsehood): what is intentional falsehood? It is a sin¹.

‘Antarâyiko dhammo vutto bhagavatâ’ (it has been declared an impediment by the Blessed One): an impediment to what? An impediment to the attainment of the first Ghâna, an impediment to the attainment of the second . . . third . . . fourth Ghâna, an impediment to the attainment of the Ghânas, *Vimokkhas*², Samâdhis (states of self-concentration), Samâpattis (the eight attainments of the four Ghânas and four of the eight Vimokkhas), ¹ The Pâli text has ‘dukka/a.’ We cannot interpret here dukka/a in the technical sense of a dukka/a offence (see the Introduction, p. xxiv), for intentional falsehood belongs to the class of the pâkittiya offences, among which it occupies the first place.

² See the note on I, 78, 5.

the states of renunciation, of escape (from the world), of seclusion, of (all) good qualities.

‘Tasmā:’ for that reason.

‘Saramānena’ (by him who remembers it): by him who knows it and is conscious of it.

‘Visuddhāpekkhena’ (by him who desires to become pure): by him who wishes to atone for it and to make himself pure of it.

8. ‘Santi āpatti’ . . . (see § 6).

‘Āvikātabbā’ (it is to be confessed): it is to be confessed before the Saṃgha, or before a small chapter, or before one person.’

‘Āvikatā hi ’ssa phāsu hoti’ (for if it has been confessed, it is treated duly): duly for what purpose? In the due way for the attainment of the first Ghāṇa (and so on, as in § 7, down to:) of (all) good qualities.

4.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus, considering that the Pātimokkha recitation had been instituted by the Blessed One, recited the Pātimokkha every day.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘The Pātimokkha, O Bhikkhus, is not to be recited every day. He who recites it (every day), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I ordain, O Bhikkhus, to recite the Pātimokkha on the Uposatha day.’

2. At that time the Bhikkhus, considering that it had been prescribed by the Blessed One to recite the Pātimokkha on the Uposatha day, recited the Pātimokkha three times each half month, on the fourteenth, fifteenth, and eighth day of each half month.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘The Pâtimokkha, O Bhikkhus, is not to be recited three times each half month. He who recites it (three times), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you recite the Pâtimokkha once each half month, on the fourteenth or on the fifteenth day.’

5.

1. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus recited the Pâtimokkha according as they lived together, every one before his own companions.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘The Pâtimokkha, O Bhikkhus, is not to be recited according as (the Bhikkhus) live together, by every one before his own companions. He who recites it (in that way), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Uposatha service is to be held by the complete fraternity.’

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed that the Uposatha service is to be held by the complete fraternity. How far does completeness extend, as far as one residence (or one district), or all over the earth?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that completeness is to extend as far as one residence.’

3. At that time the reverend Mahâ Kappina dwelt near Râgagaha, in the deer park of Madda-kukki. Now (one day) when the reverend Mahâ Kappina was alone and had retired into solitude, the following consideration presented itself to his mind: ‘Shall I go to the Uposatha service or shall I not go? Shall I go to the functions of the Order or shall I not go? Indeed I have become pure by the highest purity (i. e. I have reached Arahatsip or Nirvâna).'

4. Then the Blessed One, understanding by the power of his mind the reflection which had arisen in Mahâ Kappina's mind, disappeared from the Giggḥakûṭa mountain and appeared in the deer park of Maddakukkkhi, before the reverend Mahâ Kappina (as quickly) as a strong man might stretch his bent arm out, or draw his outstretched arm back. The Blessed One sat down on a seat laid out for him, and the reverend Mahâ Kappina, after having respectfully saluted the Blessed One, sat down also near him.

5. When the reverend Mahâ Kappina was seated near him, the Blessed One said to him: 'When you were alone, Kappina, and had retired into solitude, has not the following consideration presented itself to your mind: "Shall I go (&c., as in § 3 down to:) by the highest purity?"'

'Even so, Lord.'

'If you Brâhmaṇas do not honour, do not regard, do not revere, do not pay reverence to the Upasatha, who will then honour, regard, revere, pay reverence to the Upasatha? Go to the Upasatha, O Brâhmaṇa, do not neglect to go; go to the functions of the Order, do not neglect to go.' The reverend Mahâ Kappina promised the Blessed One to do so (by saying), 'Even so, Lord.'

6. Then, having taught, incited, animated, and gladdened the reverend Mahâ Kappina by a religious discourse, the Blessed One disappeared from the deer park of Maddakukkkhi, from the presence of the reverend Mahâ Kappina, and appeared on the Gigghakûta mountain (as quickly) as a strong man might stretch his bent arm out, or draw his out-stretched arm back.

6.

Now the Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed that completeness (of the assembled fraternity) is to extend as far as one residence¹. Now how far does one residence extend?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you determine a boundary. And it ought to be determined, O Bhikkhus, in this way: First the landmarks are to be proclaimed: a landmark consisting in a mountain, in a rock, in a wood, in a tree, in a path, in an ant-hill, in a river, in a piece of water. The landmarks having been proclaimed, let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha, as the landmarks have been proclaimed all around, by these landmarks determine the boundary for common residence and communion of Uposatha. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. The Samgha determines the boundary (&c., as above). Thus I understand."'

7.

1. At that time the Khāḍḍaggiya Bhikkhus, considering that fixing of boundaries had been prescribed by the Blessed One, fixed boundaries of excessive extension, of four yoganas, five yoganas, six yoganas. The Bhikkhus who came to the Uposatha, arrived when the Pâtimokkha was being recited, or when it had just been recited, or they were obliged to stay the night on the way.

¹ See chap. 5. 2.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, determine a boundary of excessive extension, of four, five, or six yoganas. He who determines (such a boundary), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you determine boundaries of three yoganas’ extent at most.’

2. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus determined a boundary which extended to the opposite side of a river. The Bhikkhus who came to the Uposatha, were carried down (by the river), and their alms-bowls and robes were carried away.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, determine a boundary which extends to the opposite side of a river. He who determines (such a boundary), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, if there is a regular communication by a ferry boat or a dike, at such places to determine a boundary which extends also to the opposite side of the river.’

8.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus recited the Pâtimokkha in their successive cells without appointing (a certain place for doing so). The Bhikkhus who arrived (from distant places), did not know where the Uposatha was to be held that day.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha in the successive cells without appointing a certain place for it. He who recites it (in this way), commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, the holding of Uposatha after having fixed upon an Uposatha hall, wherever the Saṃgha likes, a Vihâra, or an Addhayoga, or a storied building, or a house, or a cave¹. And you ought to appoint it in this way:

2. ‘Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Saṃgha: “Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Saṃgha is ready, let the Saṃgha appoint the Vihâra called N. N. to be our Uposatha hall. This is the ñatti. Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. The Saṃgha appoints, &c. Thus I understand.”’

3. At that time there were in a certain residence (or district) two Uposatha halls fixed upon. The Bhikkhus assembled in both places, because (some of them) thought, ‘The Uposatha will be held here;’ (and some), ‘It will be held there.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, fix upon two Uposatha halls in one district. He who does so, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I ordain, O Bhikkhus, the abolishing of one of them², and the holding of Uposatha (only) in one place.

4. ‘And you ought to abolish it, O Bhikkhus, in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, the Samgha may abolish the Uposatha hall called N.N. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha, &c. Thus I understand."

¹ See the note on I, 30, 4.

² I. e. to abolish the character of uposathâgâra, conferred on the Vihâra &c. by the act of sammuti.

9.

1. At that time in a certain district too small an Uposatha hall had been appointed. On the day of Uposatha a great assembly of Bhikkhus met together. The Bhikkhus heard the Pâtimokkha sitting outside the site fixed upon. Now those Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has promulgated the precept that Uposatha is to be held after an Uposatha hall has been fixed upon, and we have heard the Pâtimokkha sitting outside the site fixed upon. Have we therefore (duly) held Uposatha or have we not held it?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Whether (a Bhikkhu) be seated inside or outside the site fixed upon, provided he hears the Pâtimokkha, Uposatha has been duly held by him.

2. 'Therefore, O Bhikkhus, let the Samgha determine as large an uposatha-pamukha¹ as it desires. And it ought to be determined, O Bhikkhus, in this way: First the landmarks are to be proclaimed. The landmarks having been proclaimed, let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha, as the landmarks have been proclaimed all around, determine an uposathapamukha by these landmarks. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha, &c. Thus I understand."

¹ Uposatha-pamukha (literally, that which has the Uposatha at its head, or, that which is situated in front of the Uposatha) evidently means the place around the uposathâgâra, in which the Pâtimokkha recitation may be heard as well as in the uposathâgâra itself.

10.

At that time in a certain district on the day of Uposatha the young Bhikkhus, who had assembled first, thought: 'The Theras do not come yet,' and went away. The Uposatha service was held after the right time.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that on the Uposatha day the Theras ought to assemble first.'

11.

At that time there were at Râgagaha several residences (of Bhikkhus) within the same boundary. Now the Bhikkhus quarrelled: (some of them said), 'The Uposatha shall be held in our residence;' (others said), 'It shall be held in our residence.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'There are, O Bhikkhus, several (Bhikkhu) residences within the same boundary; now the Bhikkhus quarrel: (some of them say), "The Uposatha shall be held in our residence;" (others say), "It shall be held in our residence." Let those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, assemble in one place all of them and hold Uposatha there, or let them assemble where the senior Bhikkhu dwells and hold Uposatha there. But in no case is Uposatha to be held by an incomplete congregation. He who holds it (in that way), commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

12.

1. At that time the reverend Mahā Kassapa, when going to the Uposatha from Andhakavinda to Rāgagaha, and crossing a river on his way, was nearly¹ being carried away (by the river)²; and his robes got wet. The Bhikkhus said to the reverend Mahā Kassapa: 'How have your robes got wet, friend?' (He replied): 'As I was going, friends, to the Uposatha from Andhakavinda to Rāgagaha, and crossing a river on my way, I was nearly being carried away (by the river); thus my robes have become wet.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let the Saṃgha, O Bhikkhus, confer on the boundary which it has determined for common residence and for communion of Uposatha, the character of *tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa*¹.

¹ 'Manam vulho ahoṣi.' Buddhaghosa: 'īsakam appattavulhābhāvo ahoṣi.' Manam is evidently the equivalent of Sanskrit manāk.

² Buddhaghosa's note on this passage contains some details regarding the way which Mahā Kassapa went. Andhakavinda is three gāvuta distant from Rāgagaha. There were eighteen (? the MS. reads: aṭṭhāra mahāvihārā) great Vihāras around Rāgagaha included by the same boundary which Buddha himself had consecrated. The Uposatha service for this whole district was performed in the Veḷuvana monastery. The river which Mahā Kassapa crossed on his way to the Veḷuvana was the Sappinī, which rises in the Giggḥakūṭa mountain.

2. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to confer on it this character in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha confer on the boundary which the Samgha has determined for common residence and for communion of Uposatha, the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha (&c., as above). Thus I understand."'

3. At that time the Bhikkhus, considering that the Blessed One had ordained the conferring of the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa (on the boundaries), deposited their robes in a house. Those robes were lost, burnt, or eaten by rats; the Bhikkhus were badly dressed and had coarse robes. (Other) Bhikkhus said: 'How comes it that you are badly dressed, friends, and that you have coarse robes?' (They replied): 'Considering, friends, that the Blessed One had ordained the conferring (on the boundaries) of the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa, we deposited our robes in a house; the robes have been lost, burnt, or eaten by rats;

¹ Tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa means not parting with the three robes which belong to the usual 'parikkhârâ' (requisites) of a Bhikkhu. Bhikkhus were not allowed to part with their ḷivaras, excepting under special circumstances and for a limited time (see the Pâtimokkha, 29th nissaggiya dhamma). Conferring the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavâsa on a boundary means, we believe, to determine that it should be free to Bhikkhus residing within this boundary, to keep a set of robes wherever they liked within the same boundary (excepting in a village, § 3), and that such an act should not be considered as parting with the robes.

therefore we are badly dressed and have coarse robes.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let¹ the Saṃgha, O Bhikkhus, confer on the boundary which it has determined for common residence and for communion of Uposatha, the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavāsa, excepting villages and the neighbourhood of villages².

4. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to confer on it this character in this way, &c.³

5. 'Let him who determines a boundary, O Bhikkhus, first determine the boundary for common residence and for communion of Uposatha, and afterwards decree about the tiḷḷivarena avippavāsa. Let him who abolishes a boundary, O Bhikkhus, first abolish the decree about the tiḷḷivarena avippavāsa, and afterwards abolish the boundary for common residence and for communion of Uposatha.

'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to abolish the ¹ Buddhaghosa observes that this rule applies to Bhikkhus only, and not to Bhikkhunīs. For Bhikkhunīs reside only in villages; there would be no ḷivaraparihāra at all for Bhikkhunīs, if they were to use the kammavâḥā given in § 4. Buddhaghosa also observes at this occasion that the boundaries of the Bhikkhusaṃgha and of the Bhikkhunīsaṃgha are quite independent from each other, and that the rules given in chap. 13 do not refer to boundaries the one of which belongs to the Bhikkhusaṃgha, the other to the Bhikkhunīsaṃgha.

² As to the extent attributed to the 'gāmūpaḷāra' (neighbourhood of the village), see the Vibhaṅga, quoted by Minayeff, Prâtim. p. 66, l. 1.

³ This formula is identical with that given in § 2. The only difference is that after the words 'the character of tiḷḷivarena avippavāsa,' the words 'excepting villages and the neighbourhood of villages' are inserted.

ti \acute{k} ivarena avippavâsa in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha abolish the ti \acute{k} ivarena avippavâsa, which the Samgha has decreed. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha, &c."

6. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to abolish the boundary in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha abolish the boundary for common residence and for communion of Uposatha which it has determined. This is the ñatti. Let the Samgha, &c."

7. 'If there is no boundary determined nor fixed, O Bhikkhus, the village boundary of that village, or the nigama boundary of that nigama (market town) near which village or nigama (a Bhikkhu) dwells, is to be considered as boundary for common residence and for the communion of Uposatha. If (he lives), O Bhikkhus, in a forest where no villages are, community of residence and Uposatha extends to a distance of seven abbhantaras¹ all around. A river, O Bhikkhus, cannot be a boundary, a sea cannot be a boundary, a natural lake cannot be a boundary. In a river, O Bhikkhus, or in a sea, or in a natural lake, community of residence and Uposatha extends as far as an average man can spirt water all around.'

¹ 1 abbhantara=28 hattha (Buddhaghosa and Abhidhânappadî-pikâ, v. 197). See Rh. D., 'Coins and Measures,' &c., p. 15.

13.

1. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus made one boundary overlap another one (which had been determined before by other Bhikkhus).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘The act of those who have determined their boundary first is lawful, unobjectionable, and valid. The act of those who have determined their boundary afterwards is unlawful, objectionable, and invalid. Let no one, O Bhikkhus, make one boundary overlap another one. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

2. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus made one boundary encompass another one (which had been determined before by other Bhikkhus).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘The act of those, &c. (see § 1). Let no one, O Bhikkhus, make one boundary encompass another one. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that he who determines a boundary, is to determine it so as to leave an interstice¹ between the boundaries.’

14.

1. Now the Bhikkhus thought : ‘How many Upo-satha (days) are there?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

¹ Buddhaghosa prescribes to leave an interstice of one hattha, and he adds that the ancient Sinhalese commentaries differ as to the measure required for this interstice: the Kurundi requires one vidatthi, the Mahāpakkari four aṅgula.

‘There are the following two Uposatha (days), O Bhikkhus, the fourteenth and the fifteenth (of the half month); these are the two Uposatha (days), O Bhikkhus.’

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘How many Uposatha services are there?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘There are the following four Uposatha services, O Bhikkhus: the Uposatha service which is held unlawfully (by an) incomplete (congregation)¹, the Uposatha service which is held unlawfully (by a) complete (congregation), the Uposatha service which is held lawfully (by an) incomplete (congregation), the Uposatha service which is held lawfully (by a) complete (congregation).

3. ‘Now, O Bhikkhus, the Uposatha service which is held unlawfully (by an) incomplete (congregation), such an Uposatha service, O Bhikkhus, ought not to be held, nor is such an Uposatha service allowed by me. Now, O Bhikkhus, the Uposatha service which is held unlawfully (by a) complete (congregation), such an Uposatha service, O Bhikkhus, ought not to be held, nor is such an Uposatha service allowed by me. Now, O Bhikkhus, the Uposatha service which is held lawfully (by an) incomplete (congregation), such an Uposatha service, O Bhikkhus, ought not to be held, nor is such an Uposatha service allowed by me. Now, O Bhikkhus, the Uposatha service which is held lawfully (by a) complete (congregation), such an Uposatha service, O Bhikkhus, ought to be held, and such an Uposatha service is allowed by me. Therefore, O Bhikkhus, you ought to train yourselves thus : " The Uposatha service which is held lawfully (by a) complete (congregation), such an Uposatha service will we hold." "

¹ For a definition of lawfulness and unlawfulness of the official functions of the Order as well as of completeness and incompleteness of the congregation by which such acts are performed, see IX, 3.

15.

1. Now the Bhikkhus thought : ' How many ways are there of reciting the Pâtimokkha ?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

' There are the following five ways of reciting the Pâtimokkha : The introduction¹ having been recited, as to the rest, it may be proclaimed : " Such and such rules are known (to the fraternity²). " This is the first way of reciting the Pâtimokkha. The introduction having been recited, the four pâ râ-gikâ dhammâ having been recited, as to the rest, it may be proclaimed : " Such and such rules are known (to the fraternity). " This is the second way of reciting the Pâtimokkha. The introduction having been recited, the four pâ râ-gikâ dhammâ having been recited, the thirteen samghâdisesâ dhammâ having been recited, . . . the introduction having been recited, the four pâ râ-gikâ dhammâ having been recited, the thirteen samghâdisesâ dhammâ having been recited, the two aniyatâ dhammâ having been recited, as to the rest, it may be proclaimed: "Such and such rules are known (to the fraternity)." This is the fourth way of reciting the Pâtimokkha. The fifth way is (to recite it) in its full extent. These, O Bhikkhus, are the five ways of reciting the Pâtimokkha.'

¹ The introduction (nidâna) of the Pâtimokkha is the formula given above, chap. 3. 3.

² 'Avasesam sutena sâvetabbam,' i.e. it is to be proclaimed : 'The four pâ râ-gikâ dhammâ, &c., are known to the reverend brethren (literally, have been heard by the reverend brethren).'

2. At that time the Bhikkhus, considering that the Blessed One had allowed to recite the Pâtimokkha abridged, always recited the Pâtimokkha abridged.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to recite the Pâtimokkha abridged. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

3. At that time a certain residence (of Bhikkhus) in the Kosala country was menaced on the day of Uposatha by savage people. The Bhikkhus were not able to recite the Pâtimokkha in its full extent.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, in the case of danger to recite the Pâtimokkha abridged.'

4. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus recited the Pâtimokkha abridged also when there was no danger.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'You ought not to recite the Pâtimokkha abridged, O Bhikkhus, if there is no danger. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, in the case of danger only to recite the Pâtimokkha abridged. The cases of danger are the following: danger from kings, from robbers, from fire, from water, from human beings, from non-human beings, from beasts of prey, from creeping things, danger of life, danger against chastity. I ordain, O Bhikkhus, the recitation in such cases of danger of the Pâtimokkha abridged; if there is no danger, in its full extent.'

5. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus preached the Dhamma before the Samgha without being called upon (by the Thera).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, preach the Dhamma before the Samgha without being called upon. He who does, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Thera is either to preach the Dhamma himself or to call upon another (Bhikkhu to do so).'

6. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus put questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha without being appointed thereto.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, put questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha without being appointed thereto. He who so questions, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that an appointed (Bhikkhu) is to put questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha. And (this Bhikkhu) is to be appointed, O Bhikkhus, in this way: One may either appoint himself, or one may appoint another person.

7. 'And how is (a Bhikkhu) to appoint himself? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. If the Samgha is ready, I will question N. N. about the Vinaya." Thus one may appoint himself. And how is (a Bhikkhu) to appoint another person? Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, &c. If the Samgha is ready, let N. N. question N. N. about the Vinaya." Thus one may appoint another person.'

8. At that time appointed, clever Bhikkhus put questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha. The Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus conceived anger (towards those Bhikkhus), conceived discontent, and threatened them with blows.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe you, O Bhikkhus, that even he who has been appointed shall (not) put questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha (without) having looked at the assembly and weighed (with the mind each) person (present).'

9, 10. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus answered questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha without being appointed thereto.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, answer questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha without being appointed thereto. He who does, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that questions about the Vinaya are to be answered before the Samgha (only) by an appointed (Bhikkhu). And (this Bhikkhu) is to be appointed¹, &c.'

11. At that time appointed, clever Bhikkhus answered questions about the Vinaya before the Samgha. The Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus², &c.

¹ See §§ 6, 7. Read: '... I will answer the questions of N. N. about the Vinaya.' And, '... let N. N. answer the questions of N. N. about the Vinaya.'

² See § 8. Read: '... shall (not) answer questions about the Vinaya ...'

16.

1. At that time the Khābbaggiya Bhikkhus reproved for an offence a Bhikkhu who had not given them leave.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘No Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who has not given leave, may be reproved for an offence. He who reproves (such a Bhikkhu), commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you reprove (Bhikkhus) for an offence (only) after having asked for leave (by saying), “Give me leave, reverend brother, I wish to speak to you.”’

2. At that time clever Bhikkhus reproved the Khābbaggiya Bhikkhus for an offence after having asked for leave. The Khābbaggiya Bhikkhus conceived anger (towards those Bhikkhus), conceived discontent, and threatened them with blows.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you are (not) to reprove (a Bhikkhu) for an offence, even if he has given leave, (without) having weighed (with your mind) the person (concerned).’

3. At that time the Khābbaggiya Bhikkhus, who thought: ‘Otherwise clever Bhikkhus might ask us for leave (and reprove us for an offence),’ themselves asked beforehand pure Bhikkhus who had committed no offence, for leave without object and reason.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no pure Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, who have committed no offence, be asked for leave without object and reason. He who does, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you are (not) to ask for leave (without) having weighed (with your mind) the person (concerned).'

4. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus performed an unlawful official act before the Samgha.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, perform unlawful acts before the Samgha. He who does, commits a dukkata offence.'

They performed an unlawful act nevertheless.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you should protest, if an unlawful act is being performed.'

5. At that time clever Bhikkhus protested at an unlawful act being performed by the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus. The Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus conceived anger, conceived discontent, and threatened (those Bhikkhus) with blows.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to express your opinion only (instead of protesting formally).'

They expressed their opinion in the presence of the said (Bhikkhus). The Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus conceived anger, conceived discontent, and threatened (them) with blows.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that four or five persons may protest, that two or three may express their opinion, and that one person may determine (in his mind): "I do not think this right."'

6. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus, when reciting the Pâtimokkha before the Samgha, intentionally recited it so that it could not be heard.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let not him who is to recite the Pâtimokkha,

O Bhikkhus, intentionally recite it so that it cannot be heard. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

7. At that time the reverend Udāyi, who had a crow's voice, had the duty to recite the Pātimokkha before the Saṃgha. Now the reverend Udāyi thought: 'It has been prescribed by the Blessed One that he who is to recite the Pātimokkha, ought to recite it so that it may be heard; but I have a crow's voice. Well, how am I to act?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that he who is to recite the Pātimokkha may endeavour to make it audible. If he endeavours (to do so), he is free from offence.'

8. At that time Devadatta recited the Pātimokkha before an assembly in which laymen were present.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pātimokkha before an assembly in which laymen are present. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

9. At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus recited the Pātimokkha before the Saṃgha without being called upon (by the Thera).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pātimokkha before the Saṃgha without being called upon. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Thera is master of the Pātimokkha¹.'

End of the Bhānavāra of the Aññatitthiyas².

¹ I. e. of reciting the Pātimokkha himself or causing another Bhikkhu to do so.

² I. e. Samanas belonging to other schools. See chap. 1.

17.

1. Then the Blessed One, after having dwelt near Râgagaha as long as he thought fit, went forth on his pilgrimage to Kodanâvatthu. Going from place to place on his pilgrimage, he came to Kodanâvatthu. At that time there dwelt in a certain residence many Bhikkhus, the eldest of whom was an ignorant, unlearned person: he neither knew Uposatha, nor the Uposatha service, nor the Pâtimokkha, nor the recital of the Pâtimokkha.

2. Now those Bhikkhus thought: 'It has been prescribed by the Blessed One that the eldest Bhikkhu is master of the Pâtimokkha, and here the eldest of us is an ignorant, unlearned person: he neither knows Uposatha . . . nor the recital of the Pâtimokkha. Well, how are we to act?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that (in such a case) that Bhikkhu who is (most) learned and competent, is to be made master of the Pâtimokkha.'

3. At that time there dwelt in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus: they neither knew Uposatha . . . nor the recital of the Pâtimokkha. They called upon the Thera: 'May it please the Thera, reverend Sir, to recite the Pâtimokkha.' He replied: 'I am not competent to do so.' They called upon the next eldest, &c. He also replied, &c. They called upon the third eldest, &c. In this manner they called upon (all Bhikkhus) down to the youngest one: 'May it please the reverend brother to recite the Pâtimokkha.' He also replied: 'I am not competent, venerable Sirs, to do so.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

4, 5. 'When, O Bhikkhus, in a certain residence, &c.¹; in that case, O Bhikkhus, these Bhikkhus are instantly to send one Bhikkhu to the neighbouring residence (of Bhikkhus): "Go, friend, and come back when you have learnt the Pâtimokkha abridged or in its full extent."'

6. Now the Bhikkhus thought: 'By whom is (this Bhikkhu) to be sent?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Thera is to give order to a young Bhikkhu.'

The young Bhikkhus, having received that order from the Thera, did not go.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one who has been ordered by the Thera forbear to go, unless he be sick. He who does not go, commits a dukkaṭa offence.'

18.

1. Then the Blessed One, after having dwelt at Kodaṇāvatthu as long as he thought fit, went back again to Râgagaha. At that time the people asked the Bhikkhus who went about for alms: 'What day of the half month is this, reverend Sirs?' The Bhikkhus replied: 'We do not know, friends.' The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: 'Those Sakyaputtiya Samanas do not even know how to count (the days of) the half month; what good things else will they know?'

¹ Here follows an exact repetition of the story told in § 3, which is given here, of course, in the present tense.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you learn how to count (the days of) the half month.’

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘Who ought to learn to count (the days of) the half month?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you learn all of you to count (the days of) the half month.’

3. At that time the people asked the Bhikkhus who went about for alms: ‘How many Bhikkhus are there, reverend Sirs?’ The Bhikkhus replied: ‘We do not know, friends.’ The people were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: ‘Those Sakyaputtiya Samanas do not even know each other; what good things else will they know?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you count the Bhikkhus.’

4. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘At what time ought we to count the Bhikkhus?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you count (the Bhikkhus) on the day of Uposatha, either by way of (counting the single) troops (of which the assembly is composed)¹, or that you take (each of you) a ticket (and count those tickets).’

19.

At that time Bhikkhus who did not know that it was Uposatha day, went for alms to a distant village.

¹ This appears to be the meaning of ganamaggena ganetum; Buddhaghosa has no note on this passage.

They came back when the Pâtimokkha was being recited, or when it just had been recited.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you proclaim: “To-day is Uposatha.”’

Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘Who is to proclaim so?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Thera is to proclaim (the day of Uposatha) in due time.’

At that time a certain Thera did not think of it in due time.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to proclaim it also at meal time.’

(The Thera) did not think of it at meal time either.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, to proclaim it whenever (the Thera) thinks of it.’

20.

1. At that time the Uposatha hall in a certain residence was full of sweepings. The Bhikkhus who arrived there were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: ‘How can the Bhikkhus neglect to sweep the Uposatha hall?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you sweep the Uposatha hall.’

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘Well, who is to sweep the Uposatha hall?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Thera is to order a young Bhikkhu (to sweep the Uposatha hall).’

The young Bhikkhus, having received that order from the Thera, did not sweep it.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘He who has been ordered by the Thera, ought not to forbear to sweep it, unless he be sick. He who does not sweep it, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

3. At that time there were no seats prepared in the Uposatha hall. The Bhikkhus sat down on the ground. Their bodies and their robes became full of dust.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you prepare seats in the Uposatha hall.’

Now the Bhikkhus thought, &c. (see § 2).

‘He who does not prepare (seats), commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

4. At that time there was no lamp in the Uposatha hall. The Bhikkhus in the darkness trod upon (each other’s) bodies and robes.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you light a lamp in the Uposatha hall.’

Now the Bhikkhus thought, &c. (see § 2).

‘He who does not light (the lamp), commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

5. At that time the resident Bhikkhus in a certain residence did not provide drink (i.e. water), nor did they provide food. The incoming Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: ‘How can the resident Bhikkhus neglect to provide for drink and to provide for food?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you provide drink and food.’

Now the Bhikkhus thought, &c. (see § 2).

‘He who does not provide for it, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

21.

1. At that time many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus who travelled to the (four) quarters (of the world) did not ask leave of their āḷariyas and upagghāyas (when going away).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there are many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus who travel to the (four) quarters without asking leave of their āḷariyas and upagghāyas; such Bhikkhus ought to be asked by their āḷariyas and upagghāyas: “Where will you go? with whom will you go?” If those ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus name other ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus, their āḷariyas and upagghāyas ought not to allow them (to go); if they allow them, they commit a dukkaṭa offence. If those ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus go without the permission of their āḷariyas and upagghāyas, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

2. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there dwell in a certain residence many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus who neither know Uposatha, nor the Uposatha service, nor the Pātimokkha, nor the recital of the Pātimokkha: now there arrives (at that place) another Bhikkhu who is erudite, who has studied the āgamas (i. e. the collections of Suttas), who knows the Dhamma, the Vinaya, the *mâtikâ*¹, who is wise, learned, intelligent, modest, conscientious², anxious for training; let those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, kindly receive that Bhikkhu, let them show attention to him, exchange (friendly) words with him, provide him with powder, clay³, a tooth-cleanser, and water to rinse his mouth with. If they do not receive him kindly, or show no attention to him, or do not exchange (friendly) words with him, or do not provide him with powder, clay, a tooth-cleanser, and water to rinse his mouth with, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there dwell in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus who neither know Uposatha . . . nor the recital of the Pâtimokkha; let those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, instantly send one Bhikkhu to the neighbouring residence (of Bhikkhus, saying), "Go, friend, and come back when you have learnt the Pâtimokkha abridged or in its full extent." If they succeed in this way, well and good. If they do not succeed, those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, ought all to go to a residence where they (the Bhikkhus there) know Uposatha or the Uposatha service or the Pâtimokkha or the recital of the Pâtimokkha.

¹ Enumerations of terms indicating the different cases that come under a Vinaya rule or a dogmatical proposition are called mâtikâ; for instance, in discussing the first pârâgika rule the Vibhaṅga gives the following mâtikâpadâni: tisso itthiyo manussitthi amanussitthi tirakkhânagatiṭṭhi, tayo ubhatovyañṅanakâ manussubhatovyañṅanako amanussubh. tirakkhânagatubh., &c. Most of the works belonging to the Abhidhamma Piṭaka are based on and opened by such mâtikâ lists.

² Or 'scrupulous,' in good sense.

³ See I, 25, 12, with our note.

If they do not go, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, many ignorant, unlearned Bhikkhus keep vassa¹ in a certain residence who neither know, &c.² If they succeed in this way, well and good. If they do not succeed, they ought to send away one Bhikkhu for seven days' time (saying), "Go, friend, and come back when you have learnt the Pātimokkha abridged or in its full extent." If they succeed in this way, well and good. If they do not succeed, those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, ought not to keep vassa in that residence. If they do, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.'

22.

1. Then the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Assemble, O Bhikkhus, the Saṃgha will hold Uposatha.' When he had spoken thus, a certain Bhikkhu said to the Blessed One: 'There is a sick Bhikkhu, Lord, who is not present.'

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a sick Bhikkhu is to declare (lit. to give) his pārisuddhi³. And let it be declared, O Bhikkhus, in this way: Let that sick Bhikkhu go to one Bhikkhu, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "I declare my pārisuddhi, take my pārisuddhi, proclaim my pārisuddhi (before the fraternity)." Whether he express this by gesture (lit. by his body), or by word, or by gesture and word, the pârisuddhi has been declared. If he does not express this by gesture, &c., the pârisuddhi has not been declared.

¹ See III, 1 seq.

² See § 3.

³ Pārisuddhi, literally, means purity. He declares that he is pure from the offences specified in the Pātimokkha, and charges another Bhikkhu with proclaiming his declaration before the assembled chapter.

2. 'If (the sick Bhikkhu) succeeds in doing so, well and good. If he does not succeed, let them take that sick Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, on his bed or his chair to the assembly, and (then) let them hold Uposatha. If, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who are nursing the sick, think: "If we move this sick person from his place, the sickness will increase, or he will die," let them not move the sick, O Bhikkhus, from his place; let the Saṃgha go there and hold there Uposatha. But in no case are they to hold Uposatha with an incomplete congregation. If (a Bhikkhu) does so, he commits a dukkaṭa offence.

3. 'If he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi, O Bhikkhus, leaves the place at once¹, after the pârisuddhi has been entrusted (to him), the pârisuddhi ought to be declared to another. If he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi, O Bhikkhus, after the pârisuddhi has been entrusted to him, returns to the world² at once¹; or dies; or admits that he is a sâmaṇera; or that he has abandoned the precepts³; or that he has become

¹ Literally, on the spot, i. e. without setting out on his way to the assembly.

² We have no doubt that this is the correct translation of vibbhamati (see I, 39, 5). The difference between vibbhamati (he returns to the world) and sikkham paṭṭakkhâti (he abandons the precepts) seems to be that the former is an informal, and the latter a formal, renunciation of the Order.

³ The precepts are abandoned (sikkhâ paṭṭakkhâtâ hoti) by declaring that one abandons the Buddha, or the Dhamma, or the guilty of an extreme offence¹; or that he is mad; or that his mind is unhinged; or that he suffers (bodily) pain; or that expulsion has been pronounced against him for his refusal to see an offence (committed by himself); or to atone for such an offence; or to renounce a false doctrine; or that he is a eunuch; or that he has furtively attached himself (to the Samgha); or that he is gone over to the Titthiyas; or that he is an animal²; or that he is guilty of matricide; or that he is guilty of parricide; or that he has murdered an Arahat; or that he has violated a Bhikkhant; or that he has caused a schism among the Samgha; or that he has shed (a Buddha's) blood; or that he is a hermaphrodite: (in these cases) the pârisuddhi ought to be entrusted to another one.

4. 'If he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi, O Bhikkhus, after the pârisuddhi has been entrusted to him, and whilst he is on his way (to the assembly), leaves the place, or returns to the world, or dies, or admits that he is a sāmanera, &c., or admits that he is a hermaphrodite, the pârisuddhi has not been conveyed (to the Samgha). If he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi, O Bhikkhus, after the pârisuddhi has been entrusted to him, having arrived with the fraternity, leaves the place, or dies, &c., the pârisuddhi has Samgha, or the Vinaya, &c. By such a declaration a Bhikkhu who wishes to return to a layman's life, or to go over to a Titthiya sect, gives up his character as a member of the Buddhist fraternity. The rules about the sikkhâpakkakkhâna are given in the Vibhaṅga, in the explanation of the first pârâgika rule (chap. 8, § 2).

¹ Most probably antimavattthu refers to the pârâgika offences which require excommunication.

² See the story given in I, 63.

been conveyed. If he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi, O Bhikkhus, after the pârisuddhi has been entrusted to him, though he reaches the assembly, does not proclaim (the pârisuddhi he is charged with) because he falls asleep, or by carelessness, or because he attains (meditation), the pârisuddhi has been conveyed, and there is no offence on the part of him who has been charged with the pârisuddhi. If he who has been charged, &c., intentionally omits to proclaim (the pârisuddhi), the pârisuddhi has been conveyed, but he who has been charged with the pârisuddhi is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.'

23.

Then the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Assemble, O Bhikkhus, the Saṃgha will perform an (official) act.' When he had spoken thus, a certain Bhikkhu said to the Blessed One: 'There is a sick Bhikkhu, Lord, who is not present.'

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a sick Bhikkhu is to declare (lit. to give) his consent (to the act to be performed), &c.¹ I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that on the day of Uposatha he who declares his pârisuddhi is to declare his consent (to official acts to be performed eventually) also, for (both declarations) are required for the Saṃgha (and for the validity of its acts).

¹ The rules given here regarding the kāṇḍa (declaration of consent of an absentee) that is required for the performance of official acts are word for word the same as those set out in chap. 22. 1-4, regarding the pârisuddhi required at the Uposatha service.

24.

1. At that time relations of a certain Bhikkhu seized him on the day of Uposatha.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a certain Bhikkhu is seized on the day of Uposatha by relations of his, let the Bhikkhus say to those relations: “Pray, friends, let this Bhikkhu free for a moment until this Bhikkhu has held Uposatha.”

2. ‘If they succeed in this way, well and good. If they do not succeed, let the Bhikkhus say to those relations: “Pray, friends, stand apart for a moment, until this Bhikkhu has declared his pârissuddhi.” If they succeed, well and good. If they do not succeed, let the Bhikkhus say to those relations: “Pray, friends, take this Bhikkhu for a moment outside the boundary, until the Samgha has held Uposatha.” If they succeed, well and good. If they do not succeed, in no case is Uposatha to be held by an assembly that is incomplete. Should it be so held, (each Bhikkhu in the assembly) is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.

3. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a certain Bhikkhu is seized on the day of Uposatha by kings, by robbers, by rascals, by hostile Bhikkhus, &c.¹

25.

1. Then the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: ‘Assemble, O Bhikkhus, the Samgha

¹ See §§ 1, 2.

has duties (official acts) to perform.' When he had spoken thus, a certain Bhikkhu said to the Blessed One: 'There is a mad Bhikkhu, Lord, called Gagga, who is not present.' 'There are, O Bhikkhus, two sorts of madmen: There is one mad Bhikkhu who now remembers the Uposatha, now does not remember it, who now remembers official acts (of the Order), now does not remember them, (and) there is (another mad Bhikkhu) who does not remember them; one who now goes to Uposatha, now does not go, who now goes to official acts, now does not go, (and another) who does not go.

2. 'Now, O Bhikkhus, that madman that now remembers, &c., that now goes to, &c., to such a madman I prescribe that you grant ummattakasammuti (i. e. the madman's leave).

3. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to grant it in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Gagga, a mad Bhikkhu, now remembers the Uposatha, now does not remember, &c., now goes to, &c.; if the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha grant ummattakasammuti to the mad Bhikkhu Gagga: let the Bhikkhu Gagga remember or not remember Uposatha, remember or not remember official acts (of the Order), let him go to Uposatha or not go, let him go to official acts or not go: (in every case) it may be free to the Samgha to hold Uposatha and to perform official acts with Gagga as well as without Gagga. This is the ñatti.

4. "'Let the Samgha, &c. Gagga, a mad Bhikkhu, &c.; the Samgha grants, &c. Thus I understand.'"

26.

1. At that time four Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain residence (of Bhikkhus) on the day of Uposatha. Now these Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed the holding of Uposatha, and we are (only) four persons¹. Well, how are we to hold Uposatha?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that four (Bhikkhus) may recite the Pâtimokkha.'

2. At that time three Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain residence (of Bhikkhus) at the day of Uposatha. Now these Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed to four (Bhikkhus) the reciting of the Pâtimokkha, and we are (only) three persons,' &c.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that three Bhikkhus may hold pârisuddhi-uposatha².

3. 'And it ought to be held in this way: Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before those Bhikkhus: "Let the reverend brethren hear me. To-day is Uposatha, the fifteenth (day of the half month). If the reverend brethren are ready, let us hold pârisuddhi-uposatha with each other." Let the senior Bhikkhu adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say to those Bhikkhus: "I am pure, friends, understand that I am pure, &c."³

4. 'Let (each) younger Bhikkhu (in his turn) adjust

¹ The quorum for several official acts of the Order was five or more Bhikkhus; see IX, 4.

² Uposatha by mutual declaration of purity from the offences specified in the Pâtimokkha; see § 3 seq.

³ The same phrase is repeated twice more.

his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say to those Bhikkhus: "I am pure, reverend Sirs, &c."

5. At that time two Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha. Now these Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed to four (Bhikkhus) the reciting of the Pâtimokkha, to three (Bhikkhus) the holding of pârisuddhi-uposatha, and we are (only) two persons,' &c.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that two persons may hold pârisuddhi-uposatha.'

6, 7. 'And it ought to be held in this way: Let the senior Bhikkhu, &c.¹'

8. At that time there dwelt a single Bhikkhu in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha. Now this Bhikkhu thought, &c.

9. 'In case there dwell, O Bhikkhus, in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha a single Bhikkhu; let that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, sweep the place which the Bhikkhus used to frequent, the refectory, or hall, or place at the foot of a tree; let him (then) provide water and food, prepare seats, put a lamp there, and sit down. If other Bhikkhus come, let him hold Uposatha with them; if they do not come, let him fix his mind upon the thought: "To-day is my Uposatha." If he does not fix his mind upon this thought, he commits a dukkaṭa offence.

10. 'Now, O Bhikkhus, where four Bhikkhus dwell (together), they must not convey the pârisuddhi² of one (to their assembly), and recite the ¹ See §§ 3, 4. The ñatti prescribed in the preceding case does not apply to this case.

² See chap. 22.

Pâtimokkha by three. If they do, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

‘Now, O Bhikkhus, where three Bhikkhus dwell (together), they must not convey the pârisuddhi of one (to their assembly), and hold pârisuddhi-uposatha by two. If they do, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

‘Now, O Bhikkhus, where two Bhikkhus dwell, one of them must not convey the pârisuddhi of the other one, and fix (only) his thoughts (upon the Uposatha). If he does, he commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

27.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu was guilty of an offence on the day of Uposatha. Now this Bhikkhu thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed: “Uposatha is not to be held by a Bhikkhu who is guilty of an offence¹.” Now I am guilty of an offence. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a certain Bhikkhu be guilty of an offence on the day of Uposatha; let that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, go to one Bhikkhu, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: “I have committed, friend, such and such an offence; I confess that offence.” Let the other say: “Do you see it?” “Yes, I see it.” “Refrain from it in future.”

2. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there be a Bhikkhu on the day of Uposatha who feels doubt with regard to an offence; let this Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, go to one Bhikkhu, &c. (§ 1), and say: "I feel doubt, friend, with regard to such and such an offence. When I shall feel no doubt, then I will atone for that offence." Having spoken thus, let him hold Uposatha and hear the Pâtimokkha. But in no case must there be any hindrance to holding Uposatha from such a cause.'

¹ See Kullavagga IX, 2.

3. At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus confessed in common an offence (shared by them all).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to confess an offence in common. He who does so, commits a dukkata offence.'

At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus accepted the common confession of an offence (shared by several Bhikkhus).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to accept the common confession of an offence. He who does so, commits a dukkata offence.'

4. At that time a certain Bhikkhu remembered an offence, while Pâtimokkha was being recited. Now this Bhikkhu thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed: "Uposatha is not to be held by (a Bhikkhu) who is guilty of an offence." Now I am guilty of an offence. What am I to do?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, there be a Bhikkhu who remembers an offence, while Pâtimokkha is being recited; let this Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, say to his neighbour Bhikkhu: "I have committed such and such an offence, friend; when I have arisen from this (assembly), I will atone for that offence." Having spoken thus, &c. (§ 2).

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there be a Bhikkhu who feels doubt with regard to an offence, while Pâtimokkha is being recited, &c. (§§ 2, 4).'

6. At that time the whole Samgha in a certain residence was guilty of a common offence on the day of Uposatha. Now these Bhikkhus thought: 'The Blessed One has prescribed that offences (shared by many Bhikkhus) are not to be confessed in common, and that the common confession of such offences is not to be accepted. Now this whole Samgha is guilty of a common offence. What are we to do?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, the whole Samgha in a certain residence is guilty of a common offence on the day of Uposatha; let those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, send instantly one Bhikkhu to the neighbouring residence of Bhikkhus (saying), "Go, friend, and come back when you have atoned for that offence (for yourself); we will (then) atone for the offence before you."

7. 'If they succeed in this way, well and good. If they do not succeed, let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This whole Samgha is guilty of a common offence. When it shall see another pure, guiltless Bhikkhu, it will atone for the offence before him." (One of the Bhikkhus) having spoken thus, let them hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha. But in no case must there be any hindrance to holding Uposatha from such a cause.

8. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the whole Samgha in a certain residence feels doubt with regard to a common offence on the day of Uposatha; (in this case) let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. This whole Samgha feels doubt with regard to a common offence. When it will feel no doubt, it will atone for that offence." (One of the Bhikkhus) having spoken thus, &c.

9. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, in a certain residence the Samgha that has entered (there) upon vassa is guilty of a common offence. Those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, are instantly, &c. (§§ 6, 7). If they do not succeed, let them send away one Bhikkhu for seven days' time: "Go, friend, and come back when you have atoned for that offence (for yourself); we will (then) atone for the offence before you."'

10. At that time the whole Samgha in a certain residence was guilty of a common offence, and did not know the name nor the class to which that offence belonged. Now there arrived (at that place) another Bhikkhu, &c. (see chap. 21. 2), anxious for training. To that Bhikkhu one of the Bhikkhus went, and having gone to him, he said to him: 'He who does such and such a thing, friend, what sort of offence does he commit?'

11. He replied: 'He who does such and such a thing, friend, commits such and such an offence. If you have committed such an offence, friend, atone for that offence.' The other replied: 'Not I myself alone, friend, am guilty of that offence; this whole Samgha is guilty of that offence.' He said: 'What is it to you, friend, whether another is guilty or guiltless? Come, friend, atone for your own offence.'

12. Now this Bhikkhu, after having atoned for that offence by the advice of that Bhikkhu, went to those Bhikkhus (to his brethren who shared in the same offence); having gone to them, he said to those Bhikkhus: 'He who does such and such a thing, friends, commits such and such an offence. As you have committed such an offence, friends, atone for that offence.' Now those Bhikkhus refused to atone for that offence by that Bhikkhu's advice.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

13, 14. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the whole Samgha in a certain residence is guilty of a common offence, &c. (§§ 10, 11)—

15. 'If this Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, after having atoned for that offence by the advice of that Bhikkhu, goes to those Bhikkhus, and having gone to them, says to those Bhikkhus: "He who does, &c.," and if those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, atone for that offence by that Bhikkhu's advice, well and good; if they do not atone for it, that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, need not say anything (further) to those Bhikkhus, if he does not like.'

End of the Bhâṇavâra on Kodanâvatthu.

28.

1. At that time there assembled in a certain residence (of Bhikkhus) at the day of Uposatha a number of resident Bhikkhus, four or more. They did not know that there were other resident Bhikkhus absent. Intending to act according to Dhamma and Vinaya, thinking themselves to be complete while (really) incomplete, they held Uposatha and recited the Pâtimokkha. While they were reciting the Pâtimokkha, other resident Bhikkhus, a greater number (than the first ones), arrived.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble in a certain residence at the day of Uposatha, &c. (§ 1); while they are reciting the Pâtimokkha, other resident Bhikkhus, a greater number, arrive; let those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha again; they who have recited it, are free from guilt.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; while they are reciting the Pâtimokkha, other resident Bhikkhus, exactly the same number (as the first ones), arrive; in that case (the part of the Pâtimokkha) that has been recited, has been correctly recited; let those (who have arrived late), hear the rest; they who have recited it, are free from guilt.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; while they are reciting the Pâtimokkha, other resident Bhikkhus, a smaller number, arrive, &c.¹

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; when they have just finished the recital of the Pâtimokkha, other resident Bhikkhus, &c.²

¹ The decision given for the case of a smaller number of Bhikkhus arriving late, is here, and invariably throughout the following exposition, identical with the decision of the case of the number of Bhikkhus being equal on the two sides.

² The same three cases are distinguished here as in §§ 2, 3, according as the number of Bhikkhus who are late, is greater, the same, or smaller than that of the other Bhikkhus. The first case is decided by Buddha as above; in the decision of the second and third cases, instead of 'let those (who have arrived late) hear the rest,' read: 'let those (who have arrived late) proclaim their pârissuddhi in the presence (of the other brethren).'

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; when they have just finished the recital of the Pâtimokkha, and the assembly has not yet risen, other resident Bhikkhus, &c.¹

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; when they have just finished the recital of the Pâtimokkha, and a part of the assembly has risen, &c.¹

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; when they have just finished the recital of the Pâtimokkha, and the whole assembly has risen, &c.¹

End of the fifteen cases in which there is no offence.

29.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha a number of resident Bhikkhus, four or more; they know that there are other resident Bhikkhus absent; intending to act according to Dhamma and Vinaya, incomplete, conscious of their incompleteness, they hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha, &c.²

End of the fifteen cases of the incompletely assembled Bhikkhus who are conscious of their incompleteness.

¹ The three triads of §§ 5, 6, 7 agree exactly with the triad of § 4.

² Here follow fifteen cases which are arranged exactly as in chap. 28. Instead of 'they who have recited it, are free from guilt,' read: 'they who have recited it, have committed a dukkaṭṭa offence.'

30.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; they know that there are other resident Bhikkhus absent. Feeling doubt as to whether they are competent to hold Uposatha or not competent, they hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha, &c.’¹

End of the fifteen cases of the Bhikkhus who feel doubt.

31.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; they know that there are other resident Bhikkhus absent. (Thinking): “We are competent to hold Uposatha, we are not incompetent,” they abandon themselves to misbehaviour, hold Uposatha, and recite the Pâtimokkha, &c.’¹

End of the fifteen cases of the Bhikkhus abandoning themselves to misbehaviour.

32.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble, &c.; they know that there are other resident Bhikkhus absent. They perish and become ruined², saying, “What are those people to us?” and risking a schism

¹ The decision of these fifteen cases is the same as in chap. 29.

² I. e. they destroy their own welfare by their wickedness.

(among the fraternity), they hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha, &c.¹

End of the fifteen cases of the Bhikkhus risking a schism.

End of the seventy-five² cases.

33.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, there assemble in a certain residence on the day of Uposatha a number of resident Bhikkhus, four or more; they know that other resident Bhikkhus are about to enter the boundary. They know that other resident Bhikkhus have entered within the boundary. They see other resident Bhikkhus who are about to enter, &c., who have entered within the boundary. They hear that other resident Bhikkhus are about to enter, &c., have entered within the boundary.’

Thus³ a hundred and seventy-five systems of triads are produced which refer to resident and resident

¹ The decisions as in chap. 29; only read instead of ‘dukka/a offence,’ ‘thullaṅkāya offence’ (grave sin).

² Five times fifteen cases, in chaps. 28–32.

³ Remarks like this, which indicate the rules for supplying abbreviated passages, do not belong, strictly speaking, to the text of the Vinaya itself, but form a posterior addition, as is shown also by grammatical peculiarities. In chaps. 28–32 we have seventy-five cases, or twenty-five triads; all of these triads contain the words: ‘They know that there are other resident Bhikkhus absent.’ By successively varying these words six times, as is indicated in chap. 33, we obtain a hundred and seventy-five triads.

Bhikkhus¹. (Then follow the same cases with regard to) resident and incoming Bhikkhus, incoming and resident Bhikkhus, incoming and incoming Bhikkhus. By putting these words (successively) into the peyyâla², seven hundred triads are produced.

34.

1. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus count the day as the fourteenth (of the pakkha), the incoming Bhikkhus as the fifteenth³; if the number of the resident Bhikkhus is greater, the incoming Bhikkhus ought to accommodate themselves to the resident Bhikkhus. If their number is equal, the incoming Bhikkhus ought to accommodate themselves to the resident Bhikkhus. If the number of the incoming Bhikkhus is greater, the resident Bhikkhus ought to accommodate themselves to the incoming Bhikkhus.

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus count the day as the fifteenth, the incoming Bhikkhus as the fourteenth; if, &c. (§ 1).

¹ I. e. the assembled Bhikkhus as well as the incoming reside in the same âvâsa.

² 'Peyyâla' is identical in meaning and, we believe, etymologically with 'pariyâya.' See Childers s.v.; H. O.'s remarks in Kuhn's Zeitschrift für vergleichende Sprachforschung, vol. xxv, 324; Trenckner, Pali Miscellany, p. 66.

³ Buddhaghosa: 'They who count the day as the fifteenth, arrive from a distant kingdom, or they have held the preceding Uposatha on the fourteenth.' It seems to follow from this remark of Buddhaghosa that after an Uposatha on the fourteenth invariably an Uposatha on the fifteenth must follow, i. e. the Uposatha may not be held on the fourteenth ad libitum, but only in the second pakkha of the short months. Compare chap. 4 and the note on chap. I. 1.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus count the day as the first (of the pakkha), the incoming Bhikkhus as the fifteenth (of the preceding pakkha); if the number of the resident Bhikkhus is greater, the resident Bhikkhus need not, if they do not like, admit the incoming ones to their communion; let the incoming Bhikkhus go outside the boundary and hold (there) Uposatha. If their number is equal, &c. (as in the preceding case). 'If the number of the incoming Bhikkhus is greater, let the resident Bhikkhus either admit the incoming ones to their communion or go outside the boundary.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus count the day as the fifteenth, the incoming Bhikkhus as the first (of the following pakkha); if the number of the resident Bhikkhus is greater, let the incoming Bhikkhus either admit the resident Bhikkhus to their communion or go outside the boundary. If their number is equal, &c. (as in the preceding case). If the number of the incoming Bhikkhus is greater, the incoming Bhikkhus need not, if they do not like, admit the resident Bhikkhus to their communion; let the resident Bhikkhus go outside the boundary and hold Uposatha (there).

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the incoming Bhikkhus see the signs, the tokens, the marks, the characteristics of (the presence of) resident Bhikkhus, well prepared beds and chairs and mats and pillows, food and water well provided for, well swept cells; seeing this, they begin to doubt: "Are there here any resident Bhikkhus or are there not?"—

6. 'Being doubtful they do not search, having not searched they hold Uposatha: this is a dukkaṭa offence. Being doubtful they search, searching they do not see them, not seeing them they hold Uposatha : (in this case) they are free from offence. Being doubtful they search, searching they see them, seeing them they hold Uposatha together : (in this case) they are free from offence. Being doubtful they search, searching they see them, seeing them they hold Uposatha apart : this is a dukkaṭṭa offence. Being doubtful they search, searching they see them, seeing them they perish and become ruined¹, saying, "What are those people to us?" and risking a schism, they hold Uposatha : this is a thullakkaya (grave) offence.

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the incoming Bhikkhus hear the signs &c. of (the presence of) resident Bhikkhus, the sound of their footsteps when they are walking, the sound of their rehearsal (of the Dhamma), of their clearing the throat and sneezing; hearing this they begin to doubt, &c. (§§ 5, 6).

8. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus see the signs &c. of (the presence of) incoming Bhikkhus, unknown bowls, unknown robes, unknown seats, (the traces of) foot-washing, water sprinkled about; seeing this they begin to doubt, &c.

9. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus hear the signs &c. of (the presence of) incoming Bhikkhus, the sound of their footsteps when they are arriving, the sound of their shaking out their shoes, clearing the throat, and sneezing; hearing this, &c.

10. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the incoming Bhikkhus see resident Bhikkhus belonging to a different district; they take them as belonging to the same district; taking them as belonging to the same district they do not ask; having not asked, they hold Uposatha together: (in this case) they are free from offence. They ask; having asked, they do not go through the matter; having not gone through the matter, they hold Uposatha together: this is a dukkaṭa offence. They ask, &c. (as in the last case), they hold Uposatha apart: (in this case) they are free from offence.

¹ See chap. 32.

11. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the incoming Bhikkhus see resident Bhikkhus belonging to the same district. They take them as belonging to a different district; taking them, &c. they do not ask; having not asked, they hold Uposatha together: this is a dukkaṭa offence. They ask; having asked, they go through the matter; having gone through the matter, they hold Uposatha apart: this is a dukkaṭa offence. They ask, &c. (as in the last case), they hold Uposatha together: (in this case) they are free from offence.

12. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus see incoming Bhikkhus belonging to a different district, &c. (see § 10).

13. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the resident Bhikkhus see incoming Bhikkhus belonging to the same district, &c. (see § 11).'

35.

1. 'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence in which no Bhikkhus are, except with a Saṃgha¹ or in a case of danger². You ought not,

¹ I.e. with a number of Bhikkhus sufficient for holding Uposatha.

² See chap. 15. 4.

O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a non-residence in which no Bhikkhus are, except, &c. You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence or non-residence¹ in which no Bhikkhus are, except, &c.

2. 'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a non-residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence, &c., to a non-residence, &c., to a residence or non-residence in which no Bhikkhus are, except, &c.

3. 'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a residence or non-residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence, &c., to a non-residence, &c., to a residence or non-residence in which no Bhikkhus are, except, &c.

4. 'You ought not, O Bhikkhus, to go on the day of Uposatha from a residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence in which Bhikkhus are, if these Bhikkhus belong to a different district, except, &c.²

5. 'You may go, O Bhikkhus, on the day of Uposatha from a residence in which Bhikkhus are, to a residence in which Bhikkhus are, if these Bhikkhus belong to the same district, and if you know: "I can attain that place to-day." You may, &c.²'

36.

1. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha in a seated assembly (of Bhikkhus) before a Bhikkhuni. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence. Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha in a seated assembly (of Bhikkhus) before a sikkhamânâ¹, a sâma~~n~~era, a sâma~~n~~erî, one who has abandoned the precepts², one who is guilty of an extreme offence². He who does, commits a dukka~~t~~a offence.

¹ Probably this means a place the quality of which, whether residence or non-residence, is doubtful.

² Nine cases are distinguished here quite as in §§ 1-3.

2. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha in a seated assembly (of Bhikkhus) before a (Bhikkhu) against whom expulsion has been pronounced for his refusal to see an offence (committed by himself), before a (Bhikkhu) against whom expulsion has been pronounced for his refusal to atone for such an offence, or for his refusal to renounce a false doctrine. He who does, is to be treated according to the law³.

3. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, recite the Pâtimokkha in a seated assembly (of Bhikkhus) before a eunuch, before one who has furtively attached himself (to the Sa~~m~~gha), &c. (see chap. 22. 3), before a hermaphrodite. He who does, commits a dukka~~t~~a offence.

¹ In the Bhikkhunîkhandhaka (Kullav. X, 1, 4) we are told that Buddha, when admitting women to the Order of mendicants, prescribed for them a probationary course of instruction, which should last two years, after which time they were to ask for the upasa~~m~~padâ ordination. During these two years the candidates were called sikkhamânâs. Childers (Dict. s.v. sikkhati) has misunderstood the Mahâvamsa (p. 37), when he states that in the case of Asoka's daughter Sa~~m~~ghamittâ the training prescribed for the sikkhamânâs was absolved in a single day.

² See the note on chap. 22. 3.

³ The law alluded to most probably is the 69th Pâkittiya rule, which expressly treats only of the conduct towards Bhikkhus refusing to renounce false doctrines, but it may be extended by analogy also to the two other categories of Bhikkhus mentioned in our passage.

4. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Uposatha by (accepting) the pârisuddhi declaration¹ of a pâri-vâsika², except if the assembly has not yet risen (at the time when the pârisuddhi is declared). And let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Uposatha on another day than the Uposatha day, except for the sake of (declaring the re-establishment of) concord among the Samgha ³.'

End of the third Bhânavâra in the Uposatha-khandhaka.

¹ See chap. 22.

² I.e. a Bhikkhu subject to the penal discipline of parivâsa, the rules of which are discussed at length in the second and third books of the Kullavagga.

³ If a schism among the fraternity has been composed, the reconciled parties hold Uposatha together (X, 5, 14).

THIRD KHANDHAKA.

(RESIDENCE DURING THE RAINY SEASON, VASSA.)

1.

1. At that time the Blessed One dwelt at Râga-gaha, in the Veḷuvana, in the Kalandakanivâpa¹. At that time the retreat during the rainy season had not yet been instituted by the Blessed One for the Bhikkhus. Thus the Bhikkhus went on their travels alike during winter, summer, and the rainy season.

2. People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry, saying, 'How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas go on their travels alike during winter, summer, and the rainy season? They crush the green herbs, they hurt vegetable life², they destroy the life of many small living things. Shall the ascetics who belong to Titthiya schools, whose doctrine is ill preached, retire during the rainy season and arrange places for themselves to live in³? shall the birds make their nests on the summits of the trees, and retire during the rainy season, and arrange themselves places to live in; and yet the Sakyaputtiya Samanas go on their travels alike during winter, summer, and the rainy season, crushing the green herbs, hurting vegetable life, and destroying the life of many small things?’

¹ See the note on I, 22, 17. About the name of Kalandakanivâpa (seeds of Kalandaka? feeding ground for squirrels?), see the story related in Beal, Romantic Legend, &c., p. 315, where this place is said to be the gift of a merchant named Kalandaka. A different account is given by Spence Hardy, Manual, p. 194.

² Literally, living creatures which have but one organ of sense; that is, which have only the organ of feeling, viz. the outward form (kāya).

³ Samkâpayissanti = samkappayissanti? Buddhaghosa: appossukka-nibaddha-vâsam vasissanti.

3. Now some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry.

These Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus:

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you enter upon Vassa¹.’

2.

1. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘When are we to enter upon Vassa?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you enter upon Vassa in the rainy season.’

2. Then the Bhikkhus thought: ‘How many periods are there for entering upon Vassa?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘There are two periods, O Bhikkhus, for entering upon Vassa, the earlier and the later. The earlier time for entering (upon Vassa) is the day after the

¹ I. e. enter upon the retreat prescribed for the rainy season. Buddhaghosa: ‘They are to look after their Vihâra (if it is in a proper state), to provide food and water for themselves, to fulfil all due ceremonies, such as paying reverence to sacred shrines, &c., and to say loudly once, or twice, or thrice: ‘I enter upon Vassa in this Vihâra for these three months.’ Thus they are to enter upon Vassa.’

full moon of Āsāḥa (June–July); the later, a month after the full moon of *Āsāḥa*¹. These, O Bhikkhus, are the two periods for entering upon Vassa.’

3.

1. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, having entered upon Vassa, went on their travels during the period of Vassa. People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), ‘How can the Sakyaputtiya Samanas go on their travels alike during winter, summer, and the rainy season, . . . (&c., as in chap. 1. 2, down to :) and destroy the life of many small living things?’

2. Now some Bhikkhus heard those people that were annoyed, murmured, and had become angry. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), ‘How can the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, having entered upon Vassa, go on their travels during the period of Vassa?’

These Bhikkhus told this thing to the Blessed One.

¹ Very probably this double period stands in connection with the double period prescribed in the Brāhmaṇas and Sūtras for most of the Vedic festivals. Thus the sacrifice of the varuṇapraghāsās, with which the Brahmans began the rainy season, was to be held either on the full moon day of Āshāḍha or on the full moon day of the following month, Srāvaṇa, quite in accordance with the Buddhistical rules about the vassupanāyikā. The Brāhmaṇa texts begin the year with the full moon day of the (uttarā) Phālgunī; the Sūtras mention, besides the Phālgunī, another new-year’s day, the Kaitrī paurnamāsī, which falls one month later. It was in connection with this dislocation of the beginning of the year that the annual festivals could be postponed accordingly. See Weber, Die vedischen Nachrichten von den Naxatra, II, p. 329 seq.

In consequence of that and on this occasion the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus :

‘ Let no one, O Bhikkhus, who has entered upon Vassa, go on his travels before he has kept Vassa during the earlier or during the later three months. He who does so, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

4.

1. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus were not willing to enter upon Vassa.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘ Let no one, O Bhikkhus, forbear to enter upon Vassa. He who does not enter upon Vassa, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

2. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus, who were not willing to enter upon Vassa on the prescribed day, purposely left the district (where they were living).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘ Let no one, O Bhikkhus, purposely leave the district (where he is living), because he is not willing to enter upon Vassa on the prescribed day. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

3. At that time the Magadha king Seniya Bimbisāra, who wished that the Vassa period might be postponed, sent a messenger to the Bhikkhus: ‘ What if their reverences were to enter upon Vassa on the next full moon day ?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘ I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you obey kings.’

5.

1. And the Blessed One, after having resided at Rāgagaha as long as he thought fit, went forth to Sāvatti. Wandering from place to place he came to Sāvatti. There, at Sāvatti, the Blessed One dwelt in the Getavana, the garden of Anāthapindika.

At that time an upāsaka (lay devotee) named Udena, in the Kosala country, had a Vihāra built for the Samgha. He sent a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), 'Might their reverences come hither; I desire to bestow gifts (on the Samgha) and to hear the Dhamma and to see the Bhikkhus.'

2. The Bhikkhus replied: 'The Blessed One has prescribed, friend, that no one who has entered upon Vassa, may go on a journey before he has kept Vassa during the earlier or during the later three months. Let the upāsaka Udena wait so long as the Bhikkhus keep their Vassa residence; when they have finished Vassa, they will go. But if there is any urgent necessity, let him dedicate the Vihāra in presence of the Bhikkhus who reside there.'

3. The upāsaka Udena was annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), 'How can their reverences, when I send for them, refuse to come? I am a giver and a doer (of good works), and do service to the fraternity.' Some Bhikkhus heard the upāsaka Udena, who was annoyed, &c.

These Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

4. In consequence of that the Blessed One, after having delivered a religious discourse, thus addressed the Bhikkhus:

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go (even during the rainy season), if the affair for which you go can be accomplished in seven days, and if you are sent for, but not if you are not sent for, by a person of one of the following seven classes: Bhikkhus, Bhikkhuns, sikkhamânâs¹, sâmañeras, sâmañeris, lay devotees, female lay devotees. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go, if the thing (you go for) can be accomplished in seven days, and if you are sent for, but not if you are not sent for, by a person of one of these seven classes. Within seven days you ought to return.

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upâsaka has built a Vihâra for the Samgha. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "Might their reverences come hither; I desire to bestow gifts (on them) and to hear the Dhamma and to see the Bhikkhus," you ought to go, O Bhikkhus, if the affair for which you go can be accomplished in seven days, and if he sends for you, but not if he does not send for you. Within seven days you ought to return.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upâsaka has built for the Samgha an *addhayoga*², has built a storied house, has built an attic, has constructed a cave, a cell, a store-room, a refectory, a fire-room, a warehouse³, a privy, a place to walk in, a house to walk in, a well, a well house, a *gantâghara*⁴, a gantâghara room⁵, a lotus-pond, a pavilion, a park, or

¹ See the note on II, 36, 1.

² See the note on I, 30, 4.

³ This translation of kappiyaku/î is merely conjectural; comp. kappiyabhûmi VI, 33.

⁴ See the note on I, 25, 12.

⁵ See Kullavagga V, 16, 1.

has prepared the site for a park. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus, (&c., as in § 5, down to the end of the section).

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upāsaka has built for a number of Bhikkhus an addhayoga (&c., as in § 6 to the end of the section), for one Bhikkhu a Vihāra, an addhayoga, a storied house (&c., as in § 6 to the end).

8. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upāsaka has built for the sisterhood of Bhikkhunts, &c., for a number of Bhikkhunts, for one Bhikkhant, for a number of sikkhamānās, for one sikkhamānā, for a number of sāmāneras, for one sāmānera, for a number of sāmānerīs, for one sāmānerī a Vihāra, &c.¹ If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus, &c.

9. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upāsaka has built for his own use a residence, a sleeping room, a stable², a tower, a one-peaked building³, a shop, a boutique, a storied house, an attic, a cave, a cell, a store-room, a refectory, a fire-room, a kitchen, a privy, a place to walk in, a house to walk in, a well, a well house, a gantāghara, a gantāghara room, a lotus-pond, a pavilion, a park, or has prepared the site for a park; or that his son is to choose a consort; or that his daughter is to choose a consort; or that he is sick; or that he knows how to recite a celebrated suttanta. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "Might their reverences come and learn this suttanta; otherwise this suttanta will fall into oblivion;"—or if he has any other business or any work to be done; and if he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "Might their reverences come hither" (&c.) then you ought to go (&c., as in § 5, down to:) you ought to return.

¹ The enumeration of edifices is identical with that given in § 6, but in the cases beginning with that of the sisterhood of Bhikkhunts (according to Buddhaghosa; we believe that the two cases referring to sāmāneras ought to be excepted) three of the edifices are left out, viz. the privy, the gantāghara, and the gantāghara room, the use of which is forbidden to nuns; see Kullavagga X, 27, 3, 4.

² See Abhidhānapp. v. 213, and compare assabhaṇḍa, hatthibhaṇḍa (Mahāvagga I, 61, 1).

³ See Abhidhānapp. v. 209.

10-12. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, an upâsikâ has built a Vihâra for the Samgha (&c., as in §§ 5-9¹).

13. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has built, &c., a Bhikkhunî, a sikkhamânâ, a sâmanera, a sâmaneri has built for the Samgha, for a number of Bhikkhus, for one Bhikkhu, for the sisterhood of Bhikkhunis, for one sâmaneri, for his own use, a Vihâra (&c., as in § 8).'

6.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu was sick. He sent a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), 'I am sick; might the Bhikkhus come to me; I long for the Bhikkhus' coming.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go (even during the rainy season), if the affair for which you go can be accomplished in seven days, even if you are not sent for, and much more if you are sent for, by a person of one of the following five classes: Bhikkhus, Bhikkhuns, sikkhamânâs, sâmaṇeras, and sâmaṇeris. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go, if the affair for which you go can be accomplished in seven days, even if you are not sent for, and much more if you are sent for, by a person of one of these five classes. Within seven days you ought to return.

¹ Only it is said here of the Bhikkhus, ayyâ, 'the noble ones,' instead of bhaddantâ, 'their reverences.'

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu is sick. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "I am sick; might the Bhikkhus come to me; I long for the Bhikkhus' coming," you ought to go, O Bhikkhus, if the thing can be accomplished in seven days, even if he had not sent for you, much more when he has sent (saying to yourselves): "I will try to get food for the sick, or food for the tender of the sick, or medicine for the sick, or I will ask him (questions referring to the Dhamma), or nurse him." Within seven days you ought to return.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, inward struggles have befallen a Bhikkhu. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus: "Inward struggles have befallen me; might the Bhikkhus come to me; I long for the Bhikkhus' coming," you ought to go . . . (&c., as in § 2, down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will try to appease those struggles, or cause them to be appeased (by another), or compose him by religious conversation." Within seven days you ought to return.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu in whose mind doubts of conscience have arisen sends . . . (&c., as in § 3, down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will try to dispel those doubts, or cause them to be dispelled, or compose him by religious conversation." Within seven days you ought to return.

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu takes to a false doctrine. If he sends . . . (&c., down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will discuss that false doctrine, or cause another to discuss it, or compose (that Bhikkhu) by religious conversation." Within seven days you ought to return.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu is guilty of a grave offence and ought to be sentenced to parivâsa discipline. If he sends . . . (&c., down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will take care that he may be sentenced to parivâsa discipline, or I will propose the resolution (to the assembly), or I will help to complete the quorum (required for passing the sentence of parivâsa)." Within seven days you ought to return.

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu ought to be sentenced to recommence penal discipline. If he sends . . . (&c., as in § 6, down to the end of the section).

8. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu ought to have the mânatta discipline imposed upon him. If he sends . . . (&c., as in § 6, down to the end of the section).

9. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu (having duly undergone penal discipline) ought to be rehabilitated. If he sends . . . (&c., as in § 6).

10. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the Samgha is going to proceed against a Bhikkhu by the tagganiyakamma, or the nissaya, or the pabbâganiyakamma, or the patisâranīyakamma, or the ukkhepanīyakamma. If that Bhikkhu sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "The Samgha is going to proceed against me ; might the Bhikkhus come to me ; I long for the Bhikkhus' coming," you ought to go (&c., as in § 2, down to): (saying to yourselves): "What can be done in order that the Samgha may not proceed (against that Bhikkhu) or may mitigate the proceeding?" Within seven days you ought to return.

11. 'Or the Samgha has instituted a proceeding against him, the tagganiyakamma (&c., down to): or the ukkhepaniyakamma ; if he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus: "The Samgha has instituted a proceeding against me ; might the Bhikkhus come to me ; I long for the Bhikkhus' coming," you ought to go (&c., as in § 3, down to): (saying to yourselves): "What can be done in order that this Bhikkhu may behave himself properly, live modestly, and aspire to get clear of his penance, and that the Samgha may revoke its sentence?" Within seven days you ought to return.

12-15. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhunī is sick, &c.¹

16. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhunī is guilty of a grave offence and ought to be sentenced to mānatta discipline². If she sends (as in § 3, down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will take care that she may be sentenced to mānatta discipline³." Within seven days you ought to return.

¹ See §§ 2-5. Read here and in all cases where the messenger is sent by a woman: 'Might the noble ones (ayyā) come to me ; I long for the noble ones' coming.'

² There is no parivāsa discipline for the Bhikkhunīs. When a Bhikkhunī has committed a Samghādisesa offence, no matter whether she has concealed it or not, she is sentenced to mānatta discipline for a fortnight. See Kullavagga X, 1, 4 ; 25, 3.

³ The phrases, 'Or I will propose the resolution to the assembly,

17. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhunī ought to be sentenced to recommence penal discipline . . . (&c., as in § 7).

18. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhunī who is to be rehabilitated . . . (&c., as in § 9).

19. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the Saṃgha is going to proceed against a Bhikkhunī by the taggaṇi-yakamma . . . (&c., as in § 10).

20. 'Or the Saṃgha has instituted a proceeding against her . . . (&c., as in § 11).

21, 22. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sikkhamānā is sick (&c., see §§ 2-5).

'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sikkhamānā has violated¹ the precepts (in which she is trained). If she sends . . . (&c., as in § 3, down to): (saying to yourselves): "I will take care that she may take upon herself the precepts (again)." Within seven days you ought to return.

23. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sikkhamānā desires to receive the upasampadā ordination. If she sends, &c., . . . you ought to go (saying to yourselves): "I will take care that she may receive the upasampadā ordination, or I will proclaim the formula (of ordination before the assembly), or I will help to complete the quorum." Within seven days you ought to return.

24, 25. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sāmānera is sick (&c., as in §§ 2-5) . . . , a sāmānera desires or I will help to complete the quorum' (see § 6 seq.), of course are omitted here, because, if the proceeding is directed against a Bhikkhunī, this is to be done by a Bhikkhunī and not by a Bhikkhu. See Kullavagga X, 6, 3.

¹ This translation of sikkhā kupitā hoti is merely conjectural; Buddhaghosa has no note here. Comp. kuppa and akuppa.

to ask concerning Vassa¹. If he sends (saying to yourselves): "I will ask him or I will tell it to him." Within seven days you ought to return.

26. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sāmaṇera who desires to receive the upasampadā ordination (&c., see § 23).

27, 28. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sāmaṇerī is sick (&c., see §§ 24-25).

29. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a sāmaṇerī desires to take upon herself the precepts. If she sends &c., you should go (saying to yourselves): "I will take care that she may take upon herself the precepts." Within seven days you ought to return.'

7.

1. At that time the mother of a Bhikkhu was sick. She sent a messenger to her son (saying), 'I am sick; might my son come to me; I long for my son's coming.' Now that Bhikkhu thought: 'The Blessed One has allowed (a Bhikkhu) to go, if the affair for which he goes can be accomplished within seven days, and if he is sent for, but not if he is not sent for, by a person of any one of the seven classes; (and he has also allowed to go), if the thing he goes for can be accomplished within seven days, even if he is not sent for, and much more if he is sent for, by a person of any one of the five classes. Now my mother is sick; she is not a lay-devotee (upasikā). What am I, therefore, to do?'

¹ The technical meaning of vassam pukkhitum (to ask after Vassa?) is unknown to us.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

2. 'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go (even during the rainy season), if the thing you go for can be accomplished within seven days, even if you are not sent for, and much more if you are sent for, by a person of any one of the following seven classes: Bhikkhus, Bhikkhunis, sikkhamânâs, sâmaṇeras, sâmaṇeris, the mother, and the father. I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go, if the thing you go for can be accomplished within seven days, even if you are not sent for, and much more if you are sent for, by a person of any one of these seven classes. Within seven days you ought to return.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu's mother is sick. If she sends a messenger to her son (saying), "I am sick; might my son come to me; I long for my son's coming (&c., see chap. 6. 2)."

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu's father is sick (&c., as in § 3).

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu's brother is sick. If he sends a messenger to his brother (saying), "I am sick; might my brother come to me; I long for my brother's coming," he ought to go, O Bhikkhus, if the affair can be accomplished within seven days, and if he sends for him, but not if he does not send for him. Within seven days he ought to return.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu's sister is sick (&c., see § 5).

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a relation of a Bhikkhu is sick. If he sends a messenger to that Bhikkhu (saying), "I am sick; might his reverence come to me" (&c., as in § 5).

8. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a person that used to live with the Bhikkhus¹ is sick. If he sends a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), "I am sick; might the Bhikkhus come to me" . . . (&c., as in § 5).'

8.

At that time a Vihâra belonging to the Saṃgha went to ruin. A certain upâsaka had a quantity of wood cut in the forest. He sent a messenger to the Bhikkhus (saying), 'If their reverences will fetch that wood, I will give it to them.'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go out on the Saṃgha's business. Within seven days you ought to return.'

End of the first Bhāṇavâra about the Vassa residence.

9.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus of a certain district in the Kosala country who had entered upon Vassa, were troubled² by beasts of prey; the beasts carried them off and killed them.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are troubled by beasts of prey, and the beasts carry them off and kill them: this is to be considered as a case of danger, and they ought to leave that residence. They are not guilty of interruption of Vassa.

¹ Buddhaghosa: bhikkhugatika is a person that dwells in the same Vihâra with the Bhikkhus.

² Compare Gâtaka I, 300.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are infested by snakes; they bite them and kill them. This is to be considered as a case of danger, . . . (&c., as in § 1 down to) . . . Vassa.

2. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are troubled by robbers; the robbers plunder them and beat them. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are troubled by demons; the demons enter into them and take their power from them. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

3. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the village near which the Bhikkhus have entered upon Vassa, is destroyed by fire; the Bhikkhus suffer from want of food. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the places of rest of the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are destroyed by fire; the Bhikkhus suffer from having no place of rest. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1), . . . Vassa.

4. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the village near which the Bhikkhus have entered upon Vassa, is destroyed by water; the Bhikkhus suffer from want of food, . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the places of rest of the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, are destroyed by water; the Bhikkhus suffer from having no place of rest, . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.’

10.

At that time the village near which the Bhikkhus of a certain district had entered upon Vassa, was transferred to another place through (fear of) robbers.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you go where the village is.’

The village (people) divided themselves in two parts.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you go where the greater part is.’

The greater part were unbelieving, unconverted people.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you go where the believing, converted people are.’

11.

1. At that time the Bhikkhus of a certain district in the Kosala country who had entered upon Vassa, could get (there) neither coarse nor fine food sufficiently as required.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, can get neither coarse nor fine food sufficiently as required. This is to be considered as a case of danger, and they ought to leave that residence. They are not guilty of interruption of Vassa.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, get food coarse or fine sufficiently as required, but they cannot get sustaining food. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus who have entered upon Vassa, get food coarse or fine sufficiently as required, they get sustaining food, but they cannot get proper medicine. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, the Bhikkhus . . . (&c., as § 1, down to) . . . sustaining food, and they can get profitable medicine, but they cannot find suitable laymen to do service to them. This is to be considered . . . (&c., as in § 1) . . . Vassa.

3. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, to a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, a woman makes an offer (in these words): "Come, venerable Sir, I give you gold, or I give you bullion¹, or I give you a field, or I give you a site (for a house or a garden), or I give you an ox, or I give you a cow, or I give you a slave, or I give you a female slave, or I give you my daughter as your wife, or I will be your wife, or I get another wife for you." In that case, if the Bhikkhu thinks: "The Blessed One has said that the mind of men is easily changeable; danger might arise to the purity of my life," he ought to go away from that place. He is not guilty of interruption of Vassa.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, to a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, a harlot makes an offer, &c., an adult girl makes an offer, &c., a eunuch makes an offer, &c., relations make an offer, &c., kings make an offer, &c., robbers make an offer, &c., rascals make an offer (in these words): "Come, venerable Sir, we give you gold, . . . (&c., down to) . . . or we give you our daughter as your wife, or we get another wife for you." In that case, . . . (&c., as in § 3) . . . Vassa.

¹ See Rh. D.'s 'Ancient Coins and Measures of Ceylon,' p. 5 ('Numismata Orientalia,' vol. i).

'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, finds an ownerless treasure. In that case, . . . (&c., as in § 3, down to) . . . Vassa.

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, sees a number of Bhikkhus who strive to cause divisions in the Samgha. In that case, if that Bhikkhu thinks: "The Blessed One has said that it is a grievous sin to cause divisions in the Samgha; may no division arise in the Samgha in my presence," let him go away. He is not guilty of interruption of Vassa.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: "A number of Bhikkhus are striving to cause divisions in the Samgha." In that case, . . . (&c., as in § 5, down to) . . . Vassa.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: "In such and such a district a number of Bhikkhus are striving to cause divisions in the Samgha." If that Bhikkhu thinks: "Those Bhikkhus are friends of mine; I will say to them: 'The Blessed One, my friends, has said that it is a grievous sin to cause divisions in the Samgha; let not divisions in the Samgha please you, Sirs;' then they will do what I say, they will obey me and give ear," in that case let him go (to that place). He is not guilty of interruption of Vassa.

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: "In such and such a district a number of Bhikkhus are striving to cause divisions in the Samgha.” If that Bhikkhu thinks: “Those Bhikkhus are not friends of mine, but their friends are friends of mine; to these I will say, and they will say to their friends: ‘The Blessed One, . . . (&c.,’ as in § 6, down to) . . . Vassa.

8. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: “In such and such a district divisions in the Samgha have been caused by a number of Bhikkhus.” If that Bhikkhu . . . (&c., as in § 6, down to) . . . Vassa.

9. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: “In such and such a district divisions in the Samgha have been caused by a number of Bhikkhus.” If that Bhikkhu . . . (&c., as in § 7) . . . Vassa.

10-13. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu who has entered upon Vassa, hears: “In such and such a district a number of Bhikkhuns strive to cause divisions in the Samgha . . . (&c.¹)”’

12.

1. At that time a Bhikkhu desired to enter upon Vassa in a cattle-pen.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to enter upon Vassa in a cattle-pen.’

The cattle-pen was moved from its place.

¹ See §§ 6-9. Instead of ‘A number of Bhikkhus’ in these paragraphs, the subject is ‘A number of Bhikkhuns.’ Instead of ‘Friends’ or ‘Sirs,’ the address is ‘Sisters.’ In §§ 11, 13 read: ‘Those Bhikkhuns are not friends of mine, but their (female) friends are friends of mine, &c.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to go with the cattle-pen.’

2. At that time a Bhikkhu, when the time for entering upon Vassa approached, desired to go on a journey with a caravan.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to enter upon Vassa in a caravan.’

At that time a Bhikkhu, when the time for entering upon Vassa approached, desired to go on a journey in a ship.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to enter upon Vassa in a ship.’

3. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa in a hollow tree. People were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: ‘(These Bhikkhus behave) like goblins¹.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa in a hollow tree. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

4. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa on a branch of a tree. People were annoyed, &c.: ‘(These Bhikkhus behave) like huntsmen.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa on a branch of a tree. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

5. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa in the open air. When it began to rain, they ran up to the foot of a tree, or to the hollow of a Nimba tree.

¹ This must be about the sense of pisāṭṭillika (comp. Kullavagga V, 10, 2; 27, 5), although we are not sure how -illika ought to be explained.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa in the open air. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

6. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa without having a place of rest. They suffered from coldness and heat.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa without having a place of rest. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

7. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa in a house for keeping dead bodies in. People were annoyed, &c. : ‘(These Bhikkhus are) like those who burn corpses.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa in a house for keeping dead bodies. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

8. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa under a sun-shade. People were annoyed, &c. : ‘Like cowherds.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa under a sun-shade. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

9. At that time some Bhikkhus entered upon Vassa under an earthenware vessel. People were annoyed, &c. : ‘Like Tithiyas.’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, enter upon Vassa under an earthenware vessel. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

13.

1. At that time the Samgha at Sâvatthi had made an agreement that nobody should receive the pabbaggâ ordination during the rainy season. A grandson of *Visâkhâ Migâramâtâ*¹ went to the Bhikkhus and asked them for the pabbaggâ ordination. The Bhikkhus said to him: 'The Samgha, friend, has made an agreement that nobody shall receive the pabbaggâ ordination during the rainy season. Wait, friend, as long as the Bhikkhus keep Vassa; when they have concluded the Vassa residence, they will confer on you the pabbaggâ ordination.'

When those Bhikkhus had concluded the Vassa residence, they said to the grandson of Visâkhâ Migâramâtâ: 'Come now, friend, you may receive the pabbaggâ ordination.' He replied: 'If I had received the pabbaggâ ordination before, reverend Sirs, I should remain (in the religious life), but now, reverend Sirs, I will not receive the pabbaggâ ordination.'

2. Visâkhâ Migâramâtâ was annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), 'How can the noble ones make such an agreement that nobody shall receive the pabbaggâ ordination during the rainy season? At what time ought the duties of the Dhamma not to be performed?'

Some Bhikkhus heard Visâkhâ Migâramâtâ, who was annoyed, murmured, and had become angry.

¹ Visâkhâ was the most distinguished among the upâsikâs, and occupied a place among them similar to that which Anâthapindika, with whom she is frequently mentioned together, did among the upâsakas. See Dhammapada Aṭṭhak. p. 78, &c.

Those Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

‘Such an agreement, O Bhikkhus, ought not to be made—that nobody shall receive the pabbaggâ ordination during the rainy season. He who makes (an agreement like this), commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

14.

1. At that time the venerable Upananda Sakyaputta had promised to king Pasenadi of Kosala to take up his Vassa residence (with him) at the earlier period¹. When he was going to the district (where he had consented to go to), he saw on his way two districts in which there were plenty of robes, and he thought: ‘What if I were to keep Vassa in these two districts; thus shall I obtain many robes.’ And he kept Vassa in those two districts.

King Pasenadi of Kosala was annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), ‘How can the noble Upananda Sakyaputta, after he has promised us to take up his Vassa residence (with us), break his word? Has not falsehood been reproved, and abstinence from falsehood been praised by the Blessed One in many ways?’

2. Some Bhikkhus heard king Pasenadi of Kosala, who was annoyed, &c. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry (saying), ‘How can the venerable Upananda Sakyaputta, after he has promised to king Pasenadi of Kosala, &c.? Has not falsehood . . . (&c., as in § 1)?’

3. Those Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

¹ See chap. 2, § 2.

In consequence of that, the Blessed One, after having ordered the fraternity of Bhikkhus to assemble, asked the venerable Upananda Sakyaputta : 'Is it true, Upananda, that you have broken your word, having promised to king Pasenadi of Kosala to take up your Vassa residence (with him)?'

'It is true, Lord?'

Then the blessed Buddha rebuked him : 'How can you, O foolish one, break your word, having promised, &c.? Has not falsehood, O foolish one, been reproved, and abstinence from falsehood been praised by me in many ways? This will not do, O foolish one, for converting the unconverted, and for augmenting the number of the converted, but it will result, O foolish one, in the unconverted being repulsed (from the faith) and many of the converted being estranged.'

Having reproved him and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus :

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised (to a lay-devotee) to take up his Vassa residence (with him) at the earlier period, and when he goes to that district, he sees on his way two districts in which there are plenty of robes, and he thinks : "What if I were to keep Vassa in these two districts ; thus shall I obtain many robes ;" and he keeps Vassa in those two districts. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa), O Bhikkhus, (at the) earlier period is not valid, and as to his promise he has committed a dukkaṭa offence.

5. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised (to a lay-devotee) to take up his Vassa residence (with him) at the earlier period, and when going to that district, he holds Uposatha outside (on the last day of the half month), and on the first day (of the next half month) he goes to the Vihâra, prepares himself a place of rest, gets (water to) drink and food, sweeps the cell, and goes away that same day without having any business. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa) . . . (&c., as in § 4, down to) . . . offence.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised (&c., as in the preceding case, down to :) and goes away that same day having business. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa) . . . (&c., as in § 4, down to) . . . offence.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised, &c., and having resided there two or three days, he goes away without having any business, &c.; he goes away having business. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa) . . . (&c., as in § 4, down to) . . . offence.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised, &c., and having resided there two or three days, he goes away having a business which can be accomplished within seven days¹; he is absent above those seven days. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa) . . . (&c., as in § 4, down to) . . . offence.

'In case, O Bhikkhus, &c., he returns within those seven days. This Bhikkhu's (entering upon Vassa), O Bhikkhus, (at the) earlier period is valid, and as to his promise he has committed no offence.

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised, &c., and goes away seven days before the Pavâra² having business. No matter, O Bhikkhus, whether that Bhikkhu comes back to that district or does not come back, this Bhikkhu's entering, &c., is valid, and as to his promise he has committed no offence.

¹ See chap. 5 seq.

² I. e. before the concluding ceremony of Vassa ; see IV, 1, 13.

8-10. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised, &c., and having gone to that district, he holds Uposatha there (on the last day of the half month), and on the first day (of the next half month) he goes to the Vihāra, &c.¹

11. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu has promised (to a lay-devotee) to take up his Vassa residence (with him) at the later period, and when going to that district, he holds Uposatha outside, &c.²'

End of the third Khandhaka, which treats of entering upon Vassa.

¹ Here follows an exact repetition of all the cases given in §§ 5-7; the only difference is, that in the former cases it was said: 'When going to that district, he holds Uposatha outside,' instead of which it is said now: 'Having gone to that district, he holds Uposatha there.'

² The cases given in §§ 5-10 are repeated here; instead of 'Earlier period,' it is said here 'Later period;' instead of 'Before the Pavāraṇā' (§ 7), 'Before the komudî kâtumâsinî.' The komudî kâtumâsinî is the full moon day in the month Kattika, which is frequently called Kaumuda in the Epic literature; the epithet kâtumâsinî refers to the Vedic Kâturmâsya festival, which falls upon that day (Kâtyâyana, Srautasûtra V, 6, 1). For those who entered upon Vassa at the later period (in the Srāvana month), the end of Vassa fell on the Komudî day.

FOURTH KHANDHAKA.

(THE PAVÂRANÂ CEREMONY AT THE END OF THE RAINY SEASON, VASSA).

1.

1. At that time the blessed Buddha dwelt at Sâvatthi, in the Getavana, the garden of Anâthapindika. At that time a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, entered upon Vassa in a certain district of the Kosala country. Now those Bhikkhus thought: 'What shall we do in order that we may keep Vassa well, in unity, and in concord, and without quarrel, and that we may not suffer from want of food?'

2. Then those Bhikkhus thought: 'If we do not speak to or converse with each other, if he who comes back first from the village, from his alms-pilgrimage, prepares seats, gets water for washing the feet, a foot-stool, and a towel¹, cleans the slop-basin and gets it ready, and puts there (water to) drink and food,—

3. 'And if he who comes back last from the village, from his alms-pilgrimage, eats, if there is any food left (from the dinner of the other Bhikkhus) and if he desires to do so; and if he does not desire (to eat), throws it away at a place free from grass, or pours it away into water in which no living things are; puts away the water for washing the feet, the foot-stool, and the towel¹; cleans the slop-basin and

¹ See the note on I, 6, 11.

puts it away, puts the water and the food away, and sweeps the dining-room,—

4. 'And if he who sees a water-pot, or a bowl for food, or a vessel for evacuations, empty and void, puts it (into its proper place), and if he is not able to do so single-handed, calls some one else and puts it away with their united effort¹ without uttering a word on that account,—thus shall we keep Vassa well, in unity, and in concord, and without quarrel, and not suffer from want of food².'

5-7. And those Bhikkhus did not speak to or converse with each other. He who came back from the village from his alms-pilgrimage first, prepared seats (&c., as above, § 4, down to) . . . without uttering a word on that account.

8. Now it is the custom of the Bhikkhus who have finished their Vassa residence, to go to see the Blessed One. Thus those Bhikkhus, when they had finished their Vassa residence, and when the three months (of Vassa) had elapsed, set their places of rest in order, took their alms-bowls and robes, and went on their way to Sāvatti. Wandering from place to place, they came to Sāvatti, to the Getavana, the garden of Anāthapindika, to the Blessed One; having approached the Blessed One and respectfully saluted him, they sat down near him.

9. Now it is the custom of the blessed Buddhas

¹ We are not quite sure of the meaning of the compounds hattha-vikārena and hattha-vilaṅghakena. Buddhaghosa says merely hatthavilaṅghakenā 'ti hatthukkhepakena.

² For this whole passage, compare Kullavagga VIII, 5, 3. The single actions which these Bhikkhus do, are quite correct, except that they keep silence during the whole time of Vassa, and especially at the end of it, for which time Buddha, on this occasion, prescribes the Pavāraṇā ceremony.

to exchange greeting with incoming Bhikkhus. And the Blessed One said to those Bhikkhus : ‘ Do things go well with you, O Bhikkhus ? Do you get enough to support yourselves with ? Have you kept Vassa well, in unity, and in concord, and without quarrel ? and have you not suffered from want of food ?’

‘ Things go tolerably well with us, Lord ; we get enough, Lord, wherewith to support ourselves ; we have kept Vassa well, in unity, in concord, and without quarrel ; and have not suffered from want of food.’

10. The Tathâgatas sometimes ask about what they know ; sometimes they do not ask about what they know. They understand the right time when to ask, and they understand the right time when not to ask. The Tathâgatas put questions full of sense, not void of sense ; to what is void of sense the bridge is pulled down for the Tathâgatas. For two purposes the blessed Buddhas put questions to the Bhikkhus, when they intend to preach the doctrine, or when they intend to institute a rule of conduct to their disciples.

11. And the Blessed One said to those Bhikkhus : ‘ In what way, O Bhikkhus, have you kept Vassa well, in unity, and in concord, and without quarrel, and not suffered from want of food ?’

‘ We have entered upon Vassa, Lord, a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, in a certain district of the Kosala country. Now, Lord, we thought : “ What shall we do (&c., as in § 1) ?” Then we thought, Lord : “ If we do not speak (&c., as in §§ 2-4).” Thus, Lord, we did not speak to or converse with each other (&c., down to :) without uttering a word on that account. In that way, Lord, we have kept Vassa well, in unity, and in concord, and without quarrel; and have not suffered from want of food.'

12. Then the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Indeed, O Bhikkhus, these foolish men who profess to have kept Vassa well, have kept it badly; indeed, O Bhikkhus, these foolish men who profess to have kept Vassa well, have kept it like a herd of cattle; indeed . . . have kept it like a herd of rams; indeed . . . have kept it like a company of indolent people. How can these foolish persons, O Bhikkhus, take upon themselves the vow of silence, as the Titthiyas do?

13. 'This will not do, O Bhikkhus, for converting the unconverted (&c., as in Book III, chapter 14, § 3).'

And when he had rebuked them and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus:

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, take upon himself the vow of silence, as the Titthiyas do. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that the Bhikkhus, when they have finished their Vassa residence, hold Pavāraṇā with each other¹ in these three ways: by what has been seen, or by what has been heard, or by what is suspected. Hence it will result that you live in accord with each other, that you atone for the offences (you have committed), and that you keep the rules of discipline before your eyes.

14. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to hold Pavāraṇā in this way:

¹ Literally, invite each other; i. e. every Bhikkhu present invites his companions to tell him if they believe him guilty of an offence, having seen that offence, or having heard of it, or suspecting it.

‘Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: “Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. To-day is the Pavâranâ day. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha hold Pavâranâ.”

‘Then let the senior Bhikkhu adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: “I pronounce my Pavâranâ, friends, before the Samgha, by what has been seen, or by what has been heard, or by what is suspected¹; may you speak to me, Sirs, out of compassion towards me; if I see (an offence), I will atone for it. And for the second time, &c. And for the third time I pronounce my Pavâranâ.... (&c., down to) . . . if I see (an offence), I will atone for it.”

‘Then let (each) younger Bhikkhu adjust his upper robe . . . (&c.)²’

2.

1. At that time the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus, while the senior Bhikkhus were crouching down and were performing their Pavâranâ, remained on their seats. The moderate Bhikkhus were annoyed, murmured, and became angry: ‘How can the Khabbaggiya Bhikkhus remain on their seats, while the senior

¹ I. e. I invite the Samgha to charge me with any offence they think me guilty of, which they have seen, or heard of, or which they suspect.

² As in the preceding sentence, except that the younger Bhikkhus do not address the Samgha, ‘Friends,’ but, ‘Reverend Sirs.’

Bhikkhus crouch down, and perform their Pavâranâ?’

Those Bhikkhus told the thing to the Blessed One.

‘Is it true, O Bhikkhus, that the Khaggaggiya Bhikkhus, &c.?’

‘It is true, O Lord.’

Then the blessed Buddha rebuked them: ‘How can these foolish men, O Bhikkhus, remain on their seats (&c., as above)? This will not do, O Bhikkhus, for converting the unconverted (&c., as in chap. 1, § 13).’

Having rebuked them and delivered a religious discourse, he thus addressed the Bhikkhus: ‘Let no one, O Bhikkhus, remain on his seat, while the senior Bhikkhus crouch down, and perform their Pavâranâ. He who does, commits a dukkata offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that all of you crouch down while Pavâranâ is being performed.’

2. At that time a certain Bhikkhu weak from age, who waited crouching till all had finished their Pavâranâ, fell down fainting.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that (every Bhikkhu) crouches down the whole while till he has performed his Pavâranâ, and sits down on his seat when he has performed it.’

3.

1. Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘How many Pavâranâ (days) are there?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘There are the two following Pavâranâ (days),

O Bhikkhus: the fourteenth and the fifteenth (of the half month)¹; these are the two Pavâranâ (days), O Bhikkhus.'

2. Now the Bhikkhus thought: 'How many Pavâranâ services are there?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'There are the four following Pavâranâ services, O Bhikkhus, &c.'²

3. Then the Blessed One thus addressed the Bhikkhus: 'Assemble, O Bhikkhus, the Samgha will hold Pavâranâ.' When he had spoken thus, a certain Bhikkhu said to the Blessed One: 'There is a sick Bhikkhu, Lord, who is not present.'

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that a sick Bhikkhu shall declare (lit. give) his Pavâranâ. And let him declare it, O Bhikkhus, in this way: Let that sick Bhikkhu go to some Bhikkhu, adjust his upper robe so as to cover one shoulder, sit down squatting, raise his joined hands, and say: "I declare my Pavâranâ, take my Pavâranâ, perform the Pavâranâ for me." If he expresses this by gesture, or by word, or by gesture and word, the Pavâranâ has been declared. If he does not express this by gesture, &c., the Pavâranâ has not been declared.

4-5. 'If (the sick Bhikkhu) succeeds in doing so, well and good. If he does not succeed, let them take that sick Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, on his bed or his chair to the assembly, &c.'³

¹ Comp. II, 14, 1, and the note on II, 34, 1.

² This passage is exactly identical with II, 14, 2. 3, replacing 'Upasatha service' by 'Pavâranâ service.'

³ This passage is a repetition of II, 22, 2-4, the words, 'Hold Upasatha,' 'Declare the Pârisuddhi,' &c., being replaced respectively by 'Hold Pavâranâ,' 'Declare the Pavâranâ,' &c.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that on the day of Pavâraṇā he who declares his Pavâraṇā, is to declare also his consent¹ (to acts to be performed eventually by the Order), for (both declarations) are required for the Saṃgha (and for the validity of its acts)².’

4.

At that time relations of a certain Bhikkhu kept him back on the day of Pavâraṇā, &c.³

5.

1. At that time five Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain district (or, in a certain residence of Bhikkhus) on the day of Pavâraṇā.

Now these Bhikkhus thought : ‘The Blessed One has prescribed the holding of Pavâraṇā by the Saṃgha, and we are (only) five persons⁴. Well, how are we to hold Pavâraṇā?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that five Bhikkhus should hold Pavâraṇā in a (regular) chapter⁵.’

2. At that time four Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain

¹ See II, 23.

² Comp. the finishing clause of II, 23.

³ This is a repetition of II, 24, but instead of ‘Uposatha’ and ‘Pârisuddhi’ read ‘Pavâraṇā.’

⁴ As a general rule five Bhikkhus were sufficient to form the quorum; but for the performance of several among the official acts of the Order the presence of more than five members was required; see IX, 4, 1 seq.

⁵ See IX, 4, 1.

district on the day of Pavâranâ. Now these Bhikkhus thought : ' The Blessed One has prescribed that five Bhikkhus shall hold Pavâranâ in a (regular) chapter, and we are (only) four persons. Well, how are we to hold Pavâranâ ?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

' I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that four Bhikkhus should hold Pavâranâ with each other.

3. ' And let them hold Pavâranâ, O Bhikkhus, in this way : Let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before those Bhikkhus : " Hear me, Sirs. To-day is Pavâranâ day. If you are ready, Sirs, let us hold Pavâranâ with each other."

' Then let the senior Bhikkhu adjust his upper robe, &c., and say to those Bhikkhus : " I pronounce my Pavâranâ, friends, before you, by what has been seen, or by what has been heard, or by what is suspected ; may you speak to me, Sirs, out of compassion towards me ; if I see (an offence), I will atone for it. And for the second time, &c.; and for the third time, &c."

' Then let each younger Bhikkhu, &c.'

4. At that time three Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain district on the day of Pavâranâ. Now these Bhikkhus thought : ' The Blessed One has prescribed that five Bhikkhus shall hold Pavâranâ in a (regular) chapter, that four Bhikkhus shall hold Pavâranâ with each other, and we are (only) three persons. Well, how are we to hold Pavâranâ ?'

' I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that three Bhikkhus should hold Pavâranâ with each other. And let them hold Pavâranâ (&c., see § 3).'

5. At that time two Bhikkhus dwelt in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā. Now these Bhikkhus thought : ‘ The Blessed One has prescribed that five Bhikkhus, &c., that four Bhikkhus, &c., that three Bhikkhus, &c., and we are (only) two persons. Well, how are we to hold Pavâraṇā ?’

‘ I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that two Bhikkhus should hold Pavâraṇā with each other.

6. ‘ And let them hold Pavâraṇā, O Bhikkhus, in this way : Let the senior Bhikkhu adjust his upper robe, &c., and say to the junior Bhikkhu : “ I pronounce my Pavâraṇā, friend, &c.”

‘ Then let the junior Bhikkhu, &c.’

7. At that time there dwelt a single Bhikkhu in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā. Now this Bhikkhu thought : ‘ The Blessed One has prescribed that five Bhikkhus, &c., &c., and I am only one person. Well, how am I to hold Pavâraṇā ?’

8. ‘ In case there dwell, O Bhikkhus, in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā, a single Bhikkhu : Let that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, sweep the place which the Bhikkhus use to frequent,—the refectory, or hall, or place at the foot of a tree ; let him (then) provide water and food, prepare seats, put a lamp there, and sit down. If other Bhikkhus come, let him hold Pavâraṇā with them ; if they do not come, let him fix his mind upon the thought : “ To-day is my Pavâraṇā.” If he does not fix his mind upon this thought, he commits a dukkaṭa offence.

9. ‘ Now, O Bhikkhus, where five Bhikkhus dwell (together), they must not convey the Pavâraṇā¹ of one (to their assembly) and hold Pavâraṇā by four (as) in a (regular) chapter. If they do, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

¹ See chap. 3, § 3. Compare II, chap. 22, and chap. 26, § 10.

‘Now, O Bhikkhus, where four Bhikkhus dwell (together), they must not convey the Pavâranâ of one (to their assembly) and hold Pavâranâ with each other by three. If they do, they commit a dukkaṭa offence.

‘Now, O Bhikkhus, where three Bhikkhus (&c., as in the last clause).

‘Now, O Bhikkhus, where two Bhikkhus dwell, one of them must not convey the Pavâranâ of the other one, and fix (only) his thoughts (upon the Pavâranâ). If he does, he commits a dukkaṭa offence.’

6.

1. At that time a certain Bhikkhu was guilty of an offence on the day of Pavâranâ. Now this Bhikkhu thought: ‘The Blessed One has prescribed: “Pavâranâ is not to be held by a Bhikkhu who is guilty of an offence¹.” Now I am guilty of an offence. What am I to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a certain Bhikkhu be guilty of an offence on the day of Pavâranâ (&c., as in II, 27. 1, 2, down to:): “When I shall feel no doubt, then I will atone for that offence.” Having spoken thus, let him hold Pavâranâ. But in no case must there any hindrance arise to holding Pavâranâ from such a cause.’

2-3. At that time a certain Bhikkhu remembered an offence, while Pavâranâ was being held (&c., see II, 27. 4-8).

¹ See chap. 16, § 1.

End of the first Bhānavāra.

7-13.

7. 1. At that time there assembled in a certain residence (or district) on the day of Pavâranâ a number of resident Bhikkhus, five or more. They did not know that there were other resident Bhikkhus absent. Intending to act according to Dhamma and Vinaya, thinking themselves to be complete while (really) incomplete, they held Pavâranâ. While they were holding Pavâranâ, other resident Bhikkhus, a greater number (than the first ones), arrived.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

2. 'In case there assemble, O Bhikkhus, in a certain residence on the day of Pavâranâ (&c., as in § 1, down to) they hold Pavâranâ. While they are holding Pavâranâ, other resident Bhikkhus, a greater number, arrive. Let (all) those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâranâ again; they who have held Pavâranâ, are free from guilt.

3. 'In case there assemble, &c. . . . While they are holding Pavâranâ, other resident Bhikkhus, exactly the same number (as the first ones), arrive. Those who have held Pavâranâ, have held it correctly; let the other ones hold Pavâranâ; they who have held Pavâranâ, are free from guilt.'

.

¹

¹ The following paragraphs and chapters exactly follow the course indicated by II, 28-35. The alterations to be made are 14.

1-3. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâranâ in a seated assembly (of Bhikkhus) before a Bhikkhunî, . . . (&c.¹)

4. 'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâranâ by (accepting) the Pavâranâ declaration of a pârivâsika², except if the assembly has not yet risen (at the time when the Pavâranâ is declared). And let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâranâ on another day than the Pavâranâ day, except for the sake of (preserving) concord among the Samgha³.'

15.

1. At that time a certain residence (of Bhikkhus) in the Kosala country was menaced on the day of Pavâranâ by savage people. The Bhikkhus were not able to perform Pavâranâ with the threefold formula.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

obvious and sufficiently indicated by §§ 1-3; instead of, 'Let them proclaim their Pârisuddhi' (II, 28, 4, &c.), read here, 'Let them pronounce their Pavâranâ.'

¹ See II, 36, 1-3.

² Comp. II, 36, 4, with the note.

³ See, for instance, the cases in chap. 17. Buddhaghosa's explanation is different; he says: 'Concord among the Samgha is to be understood of such cases as that of Kosambî.' It is said in the account of the schism of Kosambî that, if concord has been re-established, the reconciled parties hold Uposatha together (X, 5, 14; comp. II, 36, 4); Buddhaghosa apparently extends this to holding Pavâranâ also.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to perform Pavâraṇā with the twofold formula¹.’

The danger from savage people became still more urgent. The Bhikkhus were not able to perform Pavâraṇā with the twofold formula.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow you, O Bhikkhus, to perform Pavâraṇā with the onefold formula¹.’

The danger from savage people became still more urgent. The Bhikkhus were not able to perform Pavâraṇā with the onefold formula.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

‘I allow, O Bhikkhus, that all the Bhikkhus who have kept Vassa together, perform Pavâraṇā (by one common declaration).’

2. At that time in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā the greater part of the night had passed away while (lay-)people were offering gifts (to the Bhikkhus). Now the Bhikkhus thought: ‘The greater part of the night has passed away while the people were offering gifts. If the Saṃgha performs Pavâraṇā with the threefold formula, it will not have finished the Pavâraṇā when day breaks. Well, what are we to do?’

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

3. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā the greater part of the night has passed away while people were offering gifts (to the Bhikkhus). Now if those Bhikkhus think: “The greater part (&c., down to :) when day breaks,” let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. While people were offering gifts, the greater part of the night has passed away. If the Samgha performs Pavâranâ with the threefold formula, it will not have finished the Pavâranâ when day breaks. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha hold Pavâranâ with the twofold formula, or with the onefold formula, or by common declaration of all the Bhikkhus who have kept Vassa together."

¹ This means apparently that the Bhikkhus were not obliged to pronounce the formula of Pavâraṇā (chap. 1, 14) thrice, but twice or once respectively.

4. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, in a certain district on the day of Pavâranâ the greater part of the night has passed away while the Bhikkhus were in confusion: the Bhikkhus were reciting the Dhamma, those versed in the Suttantas were propounding the Suttantas, those versed in the Vinaya were discussing the Vinaya, the Dhamma preachers were talking about the Dhamma. Now if those Bhikkhus think: "The greater part of the night has passed away while the Bhikkhus were in confusion. If the Samgha performs Pavâranâ with the threefold formula, it will not have finished the Pavâranâ when day breaks," let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, &c. The greater part of the night has passed away while the Bhikkhus were in confusion. If the Samgha performs Pavâranâ (&c. as in § 3)."

5. At that time in a certain district in the Kosala country a great assembly of Bhikkhus had come together on the day of Pavâranâ, and there was but a small place protected from rain, and a great cloud was in the sky. Now the Bhikkhus thought: 'A great assembly of Bhikkhus has come together here, and there is but a small place protected from rain, and a great cloud is in the sky. If the Samgha performs Pavâraṇā with the threefold formula, it will not have finished the Pavâraṇā when this cloud will begin to rain. Well, what are we to do ?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, in a certain district a great assembly of Bhikkhus has come together on the day of Pavâraṇā, and there is but a small place protected from rain, and a great cloud is in the sky. Now if those Bhikkhus think (&c., as in § 3 to the end).

7. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, in a certain district on the day of Pavâraṇā danger arises from kings, danger from robbers, danger from fire, danger from water, danger from human beings, danger from non-human beings, danger from beasts of prey, danger from creeping things, danger of life, danger against chastity. Now if those Bhikkhus think : "Here is danger for our chastity. If the Samgha performs Pavâraṇā with the threefold formula, it will not have finished the Pavâraṇā when this danger for chastity will arise," let a learned, competent Bhikkhu' (&c., as in § 3 to the end).

16.

1. At that time the Kḥabbaggiya Bhikkhus held Pavâraṇā being guilty of an offence.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâraṇā who is guilty of an offence. He who does, commits a dukkatā offence. I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you ask a Bhikkhu who holds Pavâranâ being guilty of an offence, for his leave¹ and reprove him for that offence.'

2. At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus, when asked for leave, were not willing to give leave (to Bhikkhus who were going to reprove them for an offence).

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that you inhibit the Pavâranâ of a Bhikkhu who does not give leave. And you ought to inhibit it, O Bhikkhus, in this way: Let (a Bhikkhu) say on the day of Pavâranâ, on the fourteenth or on the fifteenth day (of the half month), in presence of that person, before the assembled Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Such and such a person is guilty of an offence; I inhibit his Pavâranâ; Pavâranâ must not be held in his presence." Thus his Pavâranâ is inhibited.'

3. At that time the *Kh*abbaggiya Bhikkhus, who thought: 'Otherwise good Bhikkhus might inhibit our Pavâranâ,' themselves inhibited beforehand, without object and reason, the Pavâranâ of pure Bhikkhus who had committed no offence, and they also inhibited the Pavâranâ of Bhikkhus who had already performed their Pavâranâ.

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

'Let no one, O Bhikkhus, inhibit, without object and reason, the Pavâranâ of pure Bhikkhus who have committed no offence. He who does, commits a dukkatā offence. And further, O Bhikkhus, let no one inhibit the Pavâraṇā of Bhikkhus who have already performed their Pavâraṇā. He who does, commits a dukkaṭa offence.

¹ Comp. II, 16, 1.

4. 'And thus, O Bhikkhus, (you may discern whether) the Pavâraṇā is (duly) inhibited or not inhibited.

'In what cases is the Pavâraṇā, O Bhikkhus, not inhibited? When Pavâraṇā, O Bhikkhus, is pronounced, declared, and finished with the threefold formula, and if (a Bhikkhu then) inhibits the Pavâraṇā (of another Bhikkhu), the Pavâraṇā is not inhibited. When Pavâraṇā, O Bhikkhus, is pronounced, declared, and finished with the twofold formula, with the onefold formula, by common declaration of all Bhikkhus who have kept Vassa together, and if (a Bhikkhu then) inhibits, . . . (&c., as before). In these cases, O Bhikkhus, the Pavâraṇā is not inhibited.

5. 'And in what cases, O Bhikkhus, is the Pavâraṇā inhibited? When Pavâraṇā, O Bhikkhus, is pronounced, declared, but not finished¹ with the threefold formula, and if (a Bhikkhu then) inhibits the Pavâraṇā (of another Bhikkhu), the Pavâraṇā is inhibited, . . . (&c.²). In these cases, O Bhikkhus, the Pavâraṇā is inhibited.

6. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, one Bhikkhu, on the day of Pavâraṇā, inhibits the Pavâraṇā of another Bhikkhu: then if the other Bhikkhus know with regard to that (inhibiting) Bhikkhu: "This venerable brother is not of a pure conduct in his deeds, nor in his words, nor as regards his means of livelihood, he is ignorant, unlearned, unable to give explanation when he is questioned," (let them say to him): "Nay, friend, let not quarrel arise, nor strife, nor discord, nor dispute," and having thus put him to silence, let the Samgha hold Pavâranâ.

¹ Correct in the Pāli text pariyositāya into apariyositāya.

² The paragraph is repeated with the phrases, 'With the twofold formula,' 'with the onefold formula,' and 'by common declaration of all the Bhikkhus who have kept Vassa together,' respectively, instead of 'with the threefold formula.'

7-9. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, &c.¹

10. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, one Bhikkhu on the day of Pavâranâ inhibits the Pavâranâ of another Bhikkhu: then if the other Bhikkhus know with regard to that (inhibiting) Bhikkhu: "This venerable brother is of a pure conduct in his deeds and in his words and with regard to his means of livelihood, he is clever, learned, and able to give explanation when he is questioned," let them say to him: "If you inhibit, friend, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu, on what account do you inhibit it, on account of a moral transgression, or on account of a transgression against the rules of conduct, or on account of heresy?"

11. 'If he replies: "I inhibit it on account of a moral transgression, I inhibit it on account of a transgression against the rules of conduct, I inhibit it on account of heresy," let them say to him: "Well, do you know, Sir, what a moral transgression is, what a transgression against the rules of conduct is, what heresy is?" If he replies, "I know, friends, what a moral transgression is, &c.," let them say to him: "And what is, friend, a moral transgression, &c.?"

¹ As in § 6. But instead of 'Not of a pure conduct in his deeds, nor in his words, nor as regards his means of livelihood,' read respectively, 'Of a pure conduct in his deeds, but not in his words, nor as regards his means of livelihood' (§ 7); 'Of a pure conduct in his deeds and in his words, but not with regard to his means of livelihood' (§ 8); 'Of a pure conduct in his deeds and in his words and with regard to his means of livelihood' (§ 9).

12. 'If he replies: "The four pârâgika offences and the thirteen saṃghâdisesa offences are the moral transgressions; thullakkaya offences, pâkittiya offences, pâtidesanīya offences, dukkata offences, and wicked language are the transgressions against the rules of conduct; false doctrine and . . . doctrine¹ are heresy," let them say to him: "If you inhibit, friend, the Pavâraṇâ of this Bhikkhu, do you inhibit it on account of what you have seen, or of what you have heard, or of what you suspect?"

13. 'If he replies: "I inhibit it on account of what I have seen, or on account of what I have heard, or on account of what I suspect," let them say to him: "If you inhibit, friend, the Pavâraṇâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what you have seen, what have you seen? What is it that you have seen? When have you seen it? Where have you seen it? Have you seen him committing a pârâgika offence? Have you seen him committing a saṃghâdisesa offence? Have you seen him committing a thullakkaya offence, a pâkittiya offence, a pâtidesanīya offence, a dukkata offence, or making himself guilty of wicked language? And where were you? And where was this Bhikkhu? And what did you do? And what did this Bhikkhu do?"

¹ The meaning of antaggâhikâ diṭṭhi (Sanskrit ântagrahikâ drishṭi? ântagrahikâ drishṭi?) is unknown to us; Buddhaghosa gives no explanation. Perhaps it may mean doctrine partly false and partly correct (eclectic).

14. 'If he then replies: "I do not inhibit, friends, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what I have seen, but I inhibit it on account of what I have heard," let them say to him: "If you inhibit, friend, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what you have heard, what have you heard? What is it that you have heard? When have you heard it? Where have you heard it? Have you heard that he has committed a pâ râgika offence, . . . (&c., down to) . . . or that he has made himself guilty of wicked language? Have you heard it from a Bhikkhu? Have you heard it from a Bhikkhunî? Have you heard it from a sikkhamânâ, from a sâmanera, from a sâmaneri, from an upâsaka, from an upâsikâ, from kings, from royal officers, from Tithiyas, from Tithiya disciples?"

15. 'If he then replies: "I do not inhibit, friends, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what I have heard, but I inhibit it on account of what I suspect," let them say to him: "If you inhibit, friend, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what you suspect, what do you suspect? What is it that you suspect? When do you suspect it? Where do you suspect it? Do you suspect that he has committed a pâ râgika offence, . . . (&c., down to) . . . wicked language? Does your suspicion come from what you have heard from a Bhikkhu, . . . (&c., down to) . . . from Tithiya disciples?"

16. 'If he then replies: "I do not inhibit, friends, the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu on account of what I suspect; I do not know the reason why I inhibit the Pavâranâ of this Bhikkhu," and if that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who reproves (the other one), being questioned by intelligent fellow Bhikkhus, is not able to convince their minds, you are right in saying that in such case the Bhikkhu who has been reproved is blameless. But if that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who reproves (the other one), being questioned by intelligent fellow Bhikkhus, is able to convince their minds, you are right in saying that in such case the Bhikkhu who has been reproved is blamable.

17. 'If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who reproves (another one), admits that he has charged him unfoundedly with a pârâgika offence, let the Samgha enter upon the saṃghâdisesa proceedings¹ (against the accuser) and then hold Pavâraṇâ.

'If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who reproves (another one), admits that he has charged him unfoundedly with a saṃghâdisesa offence, let the Samgha treat (the accuser) according to the law² and then hold Pavâraṇâ.

'If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who reproves (another one), admits that he has charged him unfoundedly with a thullaṅkaya offence, or with a pâkittiya offence, or with a pâtidesanīya offence, or with a dukkaṭa offence, or with having used wicked language, let the Samgha treat (the accuser) according to the law³ and then hold Pavâraṇâ.

18. 'If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, who has been reproved, admits that he has committed a pârâgika offence, let the Samgha expel him and then hold Pavâraṇâ.

'If that Bhikkhu, &c., admits that he has committed a samghâdisesa offence, let the Samgha enter upon the samghâdisesa proceedings (against him) and then hold Pavâranâ.

¹ See the 8th Samghâdisesa rule.

² See the 76th Pâkittiya rule.

³ According to Buddhaghosa, the Bhikkhu who brings such an unfounded charge against a fellow Bhikkhu, is guilty of a dukkaṭa offence.

‘If that Bhikkhu, &c., admits that he has committed a thullakkaya offence, or a pâkittiya offence, . . . (&c., down to) . . . wicked language, let the Samgha treat him according to the law and then hold Pavâranâ.

19. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu on the day of Pavâranâ is guilty of a thullakkaya offence. Some Bhikkhus believe that it is a thullakkaya offence, other Bhikkhus believe that it is a samghâdisesa offence. In that case, O Bhikkhus, let those Bhikkhus who take it for a thullakkaya offence, take that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, aside, treat him according to the law, go back to the Samgha, and say: “The offence, friends, which this Bhikkhu has committed, he has atoned for according to the law. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha hold Pavâranâ.”

20. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu on the day of Pavâranâ is guilty of a thullakkaya offence. Some Bhikkhus believe that it is a thullakkaya offence, other Bhikkhus believe that it is a pâkittiya offence. Some Bhikkhus believe that it is a thullakkaya offence, other Bhikkhus believe that it is a pâtidesanīya offence; a thullakkaya offence; a dukkata offence; a thullakkaya offence, an offence by wicked language. In that case (&c., as in § 19, down to the end).

21, 22. ‘In case, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu on the day of Pavâranâ is guilty of a pâkittiya offence, of a pâtidesanīya offence, of a dukkata offence, of an offence by wicked language. Some Bhikkhus believe that it is an offence by wicked language, other Bhikkhus believe that it is a saṃghādisesa offence, &c. Some Bhikkhus believe that it is an offence by wicked language, other Bhikkhus believe that it is a dukkaṭṭa offence. In that case, O Bhikkhus, let those Bhikkhus who take it for an offence by wicked language, take that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, aside (&c., see § 19).

23. 'If, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu speaks thus before the assembly on the day of Pavāraṇā: "Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Here this deed is known (to me), but not the (guilty) person. If the Saṃgha is ready, let the Saṃgha hold Pavāraṇā excluding this deed," (the Bhikkhus) ought to reply: "The Blessed One, friend, has prescribed that they who hold Pavāraṇā, ought to be pure. If a deed is known, but not the (guilty) person, report it (to us) now."

24. 'If, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu speaks thus before the assembly on the day of Pavāraṇā: "Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Here a person is known (to me as guilty), but not his deed. If the Saṃgha is ready, let the Saṃgha hold Pavāraṇā excluding this person," (the Bhikkhus) ought to reply: "The Blessed One, friend, has prescribed that they who hold Pavāraṇā, ought to be complete. If a person is known to you (as guilty), but not his deed, report it (to us) now."

25. 'If, O Bhikkhus, a Bhikkhu speaks thus before the assembly on the day of Pavāraṇā: "Let the Saṃgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Here a deed is known (to me) as well as the (guilty) person. If the Saṃgha is ready, let the Saṃgha hold Pavāraṇā excluding this deed and this person," (the Bhikkhus) ought to reply: "The Blessed One, friend, has prescribed that they who hold Pavâranâ, ought to be pure as well as complete. If the deed and the (guilty) person are known to you, report it (to us) now."

26. 'If, O Bhikkhus, a deed becomes known before the Pavâranâ, and the (guilty) person afterwards (i. e. after the Pavâranâ), it is right to bring it forward (then)¹.

'If, O Bhikkhus, the (guilty) person becomes known before the Pavâranâ, and his deed afterwards, it is right to bring it forward (then).

'If, O Bhikkhus, the deed as well as the (guilty) person becomes known before the Pavâranâ, and if (a Bhikkhu) raises up that matter again after the Pavâranâ, he makes himself guilty of a pâkittiya offence for raising up (a matter that has been settled)².'

17.

1. At that time a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, entered upon Vassa in a certain district of the Kosala country. In their neighbourhood other Bhikkhus, litigious, contentious, quarrelsome, disputatious persons, who used to raise questions before the Samgha, entered upon Vassa with the intention of inhibiting, on the Pavâranâ day, the Pavâranâ of those Bhikkhus when

¹ 'Because it had not been possible to decide the matter at the Pavâranâ' (Buddhaghosa).

² See the 63rd Pâkittiya rule.

they should have finished their Vassa residence. Now those Bhikkhus heard: 'In our neighbourhood other Bhikkhus, &c. Well, what are we to do?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, enter upon Vassa in a certain district. In their neighbourhood other Bhikkhus, . . . (&c., § 1). I prescribe, O Bhikkhus, that those Bhikkhus hold Uposatha twice or thrice on the fourteenth day (of the half-month)¹ in order that they may be able to hold Pavâraṇâ before those (other) Bhikkhus. If those litigious, contentious, . . . (&c., § 1) Bhikkhus approach that district, let the resident Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, quickly assemble and hold Pavâraṇâ; having held Pavâraṇâ, let them say to them: "We have held our Pavâraṇâ, friends; do you do, Sirs, as you think fit."

3. 'If those litigious, . . . (&c., § 1) Bhikkhus come to that residence unexpectedly, let the resident Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, prepare seats (for them), get water for the washing of their feet, foot-stools, and towels², then let them go to meet them, take their bowls and their robes, and offer them (water) to drink; having thus looked after those Bhikkhus, let them go outside the boundary and hold Pavâraṇâ; having held Pavâraṇâ, let them say: "We have held our Pavâranâ, friends, do you do, Sirs, as you think fit."

¹ In this way, when the inimical Bhikkhus are arriving about the time of Pavâraṇâ, the resident Bhikkhus count the day which is the thirteenth or fourteenth to the other Bhikkhus, as the fifteenth, and thus they are enabled to finish their Pavâraṇâ before they can be prevented.

² See I, 6, 11.

4. 'If they succeed in this way, well and good; if they do not succeed, let a learned, competent, resident Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the resident Bhikkhus: "Let the resident Bhikkhus hear me, Sirs. If you are ready, Sirs, let us now hold Uposatha and recite the Pâtimokkha, and let us hold Pavâranâ on the next new-moon day." If, O Bhikkhus, the litigious, . . . (&c., § 1) Bhikkhus say to those Bhikkhus: "Well, friends, hold Pavâranâ with us now," let them reply: "You are not masters, friends, of our Pavâranâ; we will not hold Pavâranâ now."

5. 'If, O Bhikkhus, those litigious, . . . (&c., § 1) Bhikkhus stay there till that new-moon day, let a learned, competent, resident Bhikkhu, . . .¹

6. 'If, O Bhikkhus, those litigious, . . . (&c., § 1) Bhikkhus stay there still till that full-moon day, those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, ought to hold Pavâranâ all of them, no matter whether they like it or not, on the next full-moon day, on the day of the komudî kâtumâsini².

7. 'If those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavâranâ, and a sick Bhikkhu inhibits the Pavâranâ of a healthy Bhikkhu, let them say (to the inhibiting Bhikkhu): "You are sick, Sir, and the Blessed One has said that a sick person cannot endure being questioned. Wait, friend, until you have recovered; having recovered, you may reprove him, if you like." If they speak to him thus, and he reproves (that Bhikkhu) notwithstanding, he makes himself guilty of the pāṭittiya offence of disregard¹.

¹ As in § 4, down to the end of the paragraph; instead of, 'On the next new-moon day,' it is to be read here, 'On the next full-moon day.'

² See the note on III, 14, 11.

8. 'If those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavāranā, and a healthy Bhikkhu inhibits the Pavāranā of a sick Bhikkhu, let them say (to the inhibiting Bhikkhu): "This Bhikkhu is sick, friend, and the Blessed One has said that a sick person cannot endure being questioned. Wait, friend, until this Bhikkhu has recovered; when he has recovered you may reprove him, if you like." If they speak to him thus, . . . (&c., as in § 7).

9. 'If those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavāranā, and a sick Bhikkhu inhibits the Pavāranā of another sick Bhikkhu, let them say (to the inhibiting Bhikkhu): "You are sick, Sirs, and the Blessed One has said that a sick person cannot endure being questioned. Wait, friend, until you have recovered; when he has recovered² you may reprove him, if you like." If they speak to him thus, . . . (&c., as in § 7).

10. 'If those Bhikkhus, O Bhikkhus, hold Pavāranā, and a healthy Bhikkhu inhibits the Pavāranā of another healthy Bhikkhu, let the Samgha question and examine them both and treat them according to the law, and then hold Pavāranā.'

¹ See the 54th Pāṭittiya rule.

² Probably we should read in the Pāli text, 'ārogo ārogam ākaṅkhamāno kodessasīti.' Then the translation would be: 'When you have recovered and he has recovered, &c.'

18.

1. At that time a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, entered upon Vassa in a certain district of the Kosala country. These Bhikkhus, living in unity, and concord, and without quarrel, had found a comfortable place to dwell in. Now those Bhikkhus thought: 'Living in unity, &c., we have found a comfortable place to dwell in. If we hold Pavâranâ now, (other Bhikkhus) might come on a journey, having held their Pavâranâ, (and might occupy this place); thus we should lose this place which is comfortable to dwell in. Well, what are we to do?'

They told this thing to the Blessed One.

2. 'In case, O Bhikkhus, a number of Bhikkhus, companions and friends of each other, have entered upon Vassa in a certain district. These Bhikkhus, . . . (&c., § 1).

'If these Bhikkhus think: "Living in unity, . . . (&c., § 1, down to:) thus we should lose this place which is comfortable to dwell in," I allow, O Bhikkhus, these Bhikkhus to agree upon pavâranâ-samgaha¹.

3. 'And you ought, O Bhikkhus, to agree upon it in this way: Let them all assemble together. When they have assembled, let a learned, competent Bhikkhu proclaim the following ñatti before the Samgha: "Let the Samgha, reverend Sirs, hear me. Living in unity, . . . (&c., § 1, down to :) thus we should lose this place which is comfortable to dwell in. If the Samgha is ready, let the Samgha agree upon pavâraṇâsamgaha; let it now hold Upasatha and recite the Pâtimokkha, and let the Samgha hold Pavâraṇâ on the next komudî kâtumâsini day. This is the ñatti."

¹ Literally this word means, we believe, 'Keeping back one's own Pavâranâ.' Buddhaghosa says: 'When the decree of pavâranâsamgaha has been issued, the Bhikkhus (who have issued it) ought to live as in the rainy season. Incoming Bhikkhus are not allowed to take possession of their places of rest. On the other side, they ought not to interrupt their Vassa residence.'

4. "Let the Samgha, &c.¹"

5. 'If, O Bhikkhus, after those Bhikkhus have agreed upon pavâraṇâsamgaha, a Bhikkhu should say: "I wish, friends, to go on my travels through the country; I have a business in the country," let them reply to him: "Good, friend, hold Pavâraṇâ and go." If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, when holding Pavâraṇâ inhibits the Pavâraṇâ of another Bhikkhu, let (that other Bhikkhu) say to him: "You are not master of my Pavâraṇâ, friend; I will not hold Pavâraṇâ now."

'If, O Bhikkhus, when that Bhikkhu holds Pavâraṇâ, another Bhikkhu inhibits his Pavâraṇâ, let the Samgha question and examine them both and treat them according to the law.

6. 'If that Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, has finished that business in the country and comes back to that district before the day of komudî kâtumâsini, and if a Bhikkhu, O Bhikkhus, when the Bhikkhus hold Pavâraṇâ, inhibits the Pavâraṇâ of that Bhikkhu (who has been absent), let him say (to the inhibiting Bhikkhu): "You are not master of my Pavâraṇâ, friend; I have held my Pavâraṇâ."

¹ Here follows the usual formula of a ñattidutiya kamma as in Book II, chap. 6. Comp. the note on Book I, chap. 28, § 3.

‘If, O Bhikkhus, when the Bhikkhus hold Pavâranâ, this Bhikkhu inhibits the Pavâranâ of another Bhikkhu, let the Samgha question and examine them both and treat them according to the law, and then hold Pavâranâ.’

End of the Pavâraṇâ-Khandhaka.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.
	II Class.	III Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	क	𐬕	𐬕	ک	ک	𐤀	k
2 " aspirata	kh	ख	𐬕𐬌	𐬕𐬌	کھ	کھ	𐤁	kh
3 Media	g	ग	𐬕𐬎	𐬕𐬎	گ	گ	𐤂	...
4 " aspirata	gh	घ	𐬕𐬎𐬌	𐬕𐬎𐬌	گھ	گھ	𐤃	...
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	ङ	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	ق	ق	𐤄	...
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	ङ	{ 𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎 } { 𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎 }
7 Spiritus asper	h	ह	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	ه	ه	𐤅	h, hs
8 " lenis	,	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎
9 " asper faucalis	'h	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎
10 " lenis faucalis	'h	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎
11 " asper fricatus	'h	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎
12 " lenis fricatus	'h	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	च	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	چ	چ	𐤆	k
14 " aspirata	kh	छ	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	چھ	چھ	𐤇	kh
15 Media	g	ज	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	ج	ج	𐤈	...
16 " aspirata	gh	झ	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	چھ	چھ	𐤉	...
17 " Nasalis	ñ	ञ	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎	𐬕𐬎𐬌𐬎

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.				Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y				य	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper		(y)
20 " lenis		(y)
21 " asper assibilatus		s			श	𐬯	𐬯	𐬯	ش	ש
22 " lenis assibilatus		z									z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t				त	𐬔	𐬔	𐬔	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th				थ	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	تھ	תה	th
25 " assibilata				TH
26 Media	d				द	𐬌	𐬌	𐬌	د	ד
27 " aspirata	dh
28 " assibilata				DH
29 Nasalis	n				न	𐬨	𐬨	𐬨	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l				ल	𐬌	𐬌	𐬌	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1		l
32 " mollis 2			L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s				स	𐬰	𐬰	𐬰	س	ס	s
34 " asper 2		s (ʃ)
35 " lenis	z
36 " asperimus 1		z (ʒ)									z
37 " asperimus 2		z (ʒ)									z

Dentales modificatae (linguales, &c.)
38 Tenuis	t
39 " aspirata	th
40 Media	d
41 " aspirata	dh
42 Nasalis	n
43 Semivocalis	r
44 " fricata	f
45 " diacritica	r
46 Spiritus asper	sh
47 " lenis	zh
Labiales.
48 Tenuis	p
49 " aspirata	ph
50 Media	b
51 " aspirata	bh
52 Tenuissima.	p
53 Nasalis	m
54 Semivocalis	w
55 " aspirata	hw
56 Spiritus asper	f
57 " lenis	v
58 Anusvāra.	m
59 Visarga.	h

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	0	ə
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē	ā
3 " labialis	ō	ā
4 Gutturalis brevis	a	.	.	अ	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀	ا	א	ā
5 " longa	ā	(a)	.	आ	𐬁	𐬁	𐬁	آ	א	ā
6 Palatalis brevis	i	.	.	इ	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂	ي	י	i
7 " longa	ī	(i)	.	ई	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃	י	י	ī
8 Dentalis brevis	ē	.	.	ए	.	.	.	ه	.	.
9 " longa	ā	.	.	ऐ	.	.	.	ه	.	.
10 Lingualis brevis	ri	.	.	र
11 " longa	rī	.	.	र
12 Labialis brevis	u	.	.	उ	.	.	.	و	.	u
13 " longa	ū	(u)	.	ऊ	𐬌	𐬌	𐬌	و	ו	ū
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e	.	.	ए	𐬍	𐬍	𐬍	ه	.	e
15 " longa	ē (ai)	(e)	.	ऐ	𐬎	𐬎	𐬎	ه	.	āi
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)	.	आ	𐬏	𐬏	𐬏	ه	.	āi
17 " " " "	ei (ēi)	.	.	इ	𐬐	𐬐	𐬐	ه	.	ei, ēi
18 " " " "	oi (ōu)	.	.	उ	𐬑	𐬑	𐬑	و	.	o
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o	.	.	ओ	𐬒	𐬒	𐬒	و	ו	āu
20 " longa	ō (au)	(o)	.	आ	𐬓	𐬓	𐬓	و	.	āu
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	(au)	.	आ	𐬔	𐬔	𐬔	و	.	āu
22 " " " "	eu (ēu)	.	.	इ	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	و	.	.
23 " " " "	ou (ōu)	.	.	उ	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	و	.	.
24 Gutturals fracta	ā	.	.	अ
25 Palatalis fracta	ī	.	.	इ
26 Labialis fracta	ū	.	.	उ	ū
27 " " " "	ō	.	.	ओ

14 DAY USE
RETURN TO DESK FROM WHICH BORROWED

LOAN DEPT.

This book is due on the last date stamped below, or on the date to which renewed.
Renewed books are subject to immediate recall.

UNIT

This

LIBRARY

FEB 2

76 Fe

FEB 9 19

LIBRARY

MAR 12

28 Mar 1966

MAY 4 1966

LD 21-106

REC'D LD

JUL 15 '65 -1 PM

SEP 25 1977

REC. CIR. AUG 25 '77

APR 1 1996

RECEIVED

MAR 05 1996

CIRCULATION DEPT.

LD 21A-60m-4,'64
(E4555s10)476B

General Library
University of California
Berkeley

2D

D

2

2DT
LD

1962
5DP

YC 54595

U. C. BERKELEY LIBRARIES

C056079365

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 021 315

REESE LIBRARY
OF THE
UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA.

Received July 1883.

Accessions No. 22325

Shelf No. 689
M916
v. 14

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London
HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE
7 PATERNOSTER ROW

THE
SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XIV

xford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1882

[All rights reserved]

THE SACRED LAWS OF THE ÂRYAS

AS TAUGHT IN THE SCHOOLS OF

ÂPASTAMBA, GAUTAMA, VÂSISHTHA, AND BAUDHÂYANA

TRANSLATED BY

GEORG BÜHLER

VASISHTHA AND BAUDHÂYANA

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1882

[All rights reserved]

22325

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION TO VASISHTHA	xi
INTRODUCTION TO BAUDHĀYANA	xxix

VĀSISHTHA DHARMASĀSTRA.

General Rules	1
✓ Four Castes	9
✓ Lawful Occupations	11
Duty of Studying the Veda	17
Definitions	19
Purification	21
✓ Origin of Castes	25
Impurity	27
Women	31
Rule of Conduct	34
Studentship	40
Householder	42
Hermit	45
Ascetic	46
Guests	49
Srāddhas	51
Sacrifices	56
Initiation	57
Snātaka	59
Study of the Veda	63
Saluting	67
Lawful and Forbidden Food	69
✓ Adoption	75
✓ Excommunication	77
Legal Procedure	79-

Prepared - 2011

	PAGE
✓ Inheritance	84
✓ Mixed Castes	93
Duties of a King	96
Penances	102
Secret Penances	124
Gifts	136

BAUDHÂYANA DHARMASÂSTRA.

Sources of the Law	143
Different Customs	146
Studentship	149
Snâtaka	158
Waterpot	160
Purification	164
Lawful Livelihood	175
Impurity	177
Inheritance	178
Impurity	180
Forbidden Food	184
Sacrifices	186
✓ Castes	196
The King	199
✓ Criminal Law	201
Witnesses	202
Marriage	205
Veda-Study	208
Penances	211
✓ Inheritance	224
Women	231
Householder	237
Snâtaka	238
The Twilight Devotions	245
Bathing	249
Tarpana	252
Mahâyagñas	256

	PAGE
✓ The Four Orders	258
The Offering to the Vital Airs	262
Eating	264
Srâddhas	266
The Procreation of Sons	271
Ascetic	273
Ways of Living for Householders	284
Hermits	291
Penances for a Student	294
Aghamarshana	296
Prasritiyâvaka	297
Kûshmândas	300
Kândrâyana	303
Anamatpârâyana	307
Penances	310
Secret Penances	320
Rites securing Success	322
Parisishṭa on Adoption	334
INDEX TO PARTS I AND II (Vols. II and XIV)	337
Additions and Corrections	355

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East	357

INTRODUCTION

TO VASISHTHA.

THE Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra is, like that of Gautama, the last remnant of the Sūtras of a Vedic school, which, as far as our knowledge goes at present, has perished, together with the greater part of its writings. We owe the preservation of its Dharma-sūtra probably to the special law schools of India, which, attracted as it would seem by its title and the legend connecting it with Vasishtha Maitrāvaruṇi, one of the most famous Rishis of the Rig-veda and a redoubtable champion of Brāhmanism, made it one of their standard authorities. The early existence of a legend according to which the Vāsishtha Dharma-sūtra was considered either to be a work composed by the Rishi Vasishtha, or at least to contain the sum of his teaching on the duty of man, is indicated by several passages of the work itself. For the Dharma-sūtra names Vasishtha, or appeals to his authority on no less than three occasions. First, we find a rule on lawful interest, which is emphatically ascribed to *Vasishtha*¹. 'Learn the interest for a money lender,' the Sūtra says, 'declared by the word of Vasishtha; five māshas (may be taken) for twenty (kārshāpanas every month).' Again, at the end of a long string of rules² which contain the observances to be kept by sinners who undergo Krikkhra penances, Vasishtha's name is brought forward as the authority for them, and the last words are, 'Thus speaks the divine Vasishtha.' Finally, the concluding Sūtra of the whole work³ gives

¹ Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra II, 51.

² Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra XXIV, 5.

³ Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra XXX, 11. Similar invocations of teachers at the end of Sūtras occur frequently, e.g. Āsvalāyana Srauta-sūtra XII, 15, 14; Rig-vidhāna V, 3, 4; Yāska, Nirukta, Roth, p. 216.

expression to the devotion felt by the author for the Rīshi, 'Adoration to Vasishṭha, Satayātu, the son of Mitra and Varuṇa and of Urvasī.' The epithets used in this last passage conclusively show that the Vasishṭha after whom the Dharma-sūtra is named, is the individual who, according to the Brāhmanical tradition, is the Rīshi of a large portion of the seventh Mandala of the Rig-veda and the progenitor of the Vāsishṭha clan of Brāhmins, and who in some hymns of the Rig-veda appears as the purohita or domestic priest of king Sudās and the rival of Viśvāmitra, and in other Sūktas as a half mythical being. For the verses Rig-veda VII, 33, 11–14 trace the origin of this Vasishṭha to the two sons of Aditi, Mitra and Varuṇa, and to the Apsaras Urvasī, and contain the outline of the curious, but disgusting story of his marvellous birth, which Sāyana narrates more circumstantially in the commentary on verse 11. Moreover, the word Satayātu, which in the Dharma-sūtra is used as an epithet of Vasishṭha, occurs Rig-veda VII, 18, 21 in close connexion with the Rīshi's name. Sāyana explains it in his commentary on the latter passage as 'the destroyer of many demons,' or, 'he whom many demons seek to destroy,' and takes it as an epithet of the sage Parāśara, who is named together with Vasishṭha. It would, however, seem that, if the verse is construed on strictly philological principles, neither Sāyana's interpretation, nor that suggested by the Dharma-sūtra can be accepted, and that Satayātu has to be taken as a proper name¹. But, however that may be, it is not doubtful that we may safely infer from the expressions used in the last sentence of the Dharma-sūtra, that the Vasishṭha to whom the invocation is addressed and the composition of the work is ascribed, either immediately or through the medium of pupils, is the individual named in the Rig-veda. The connexion of the Dharma-sūtra with one of the Rīshis of the Rig-veda which is thus established, possesses a particular interest and importance, because it corroborates the statement of Govindasvāmin, the commentator of Baudhāyana, that the Institutes of Vasishṭha were originally studied by and authoritative for the Bahvrikas, the Rigvedins alone, and afterwards became an authority for all *Brāhmins*¹. In the introduction to Gautama it has been shown that a similar assertion which Govinda makes with regard to the Gautama Dharma-sūtra can be corroborated by a considerable amount of external and internal evidence. It has been pointed out that not only the fact that the spiritual pedigrees of the Khandoga schools enumerate several Gautamas, but also the partiality for texts of the Sāma-veda, which the Institutes of Gautama show on several occasions, strongly support the tradition that the Gautamiya Dharmaśāstra originally was the exclusive property of a school of Sāmavedins. In the case of the Vāsishtā Dharmaśāstra indications of the latter kind are, if not entirely wanting, at least very faint. The number of Vedic passages quoted is, no doubt, large; but few among them belong to the class of Mantras which are recited during the performance of gr̥hya rites, and must be taken from the particular recension of the Veda to which the performer belongs. Besides, the texts of this description which actually occur, do not bear the mark of a particular Veda or Sākhā. The numerous texts, on the other hand, which are quoted in support or explanation of the rules, are taken impartially from all the three ancient Vedas. For this reason it would be dangerous to use the references to a dozen Rikas in chapters XVII and XXVI, as well as to the legend of Sunaśepa, which is told only in works belonging to the Rig- veda, as a proof that the Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra is the work of a Rigvedin. Under these circumstances the three passages, mentioning Vasishtha's name, and especially the last which identifies him with the Rishi of the Rig-veda, have a particularly great importance, as they are the only pieces of internal evidence which can be brought forward in favour of Govindasvāmin's valuable statement. But the latter is, even without any further corroboration, credible enough, because no reason is apparent why Govinda should have invented such a story, and because his assertion fully agrees with the well-established facts known about the other existing Dharma-sūtras, which all were composed not for the benefit of the Āryans in general, but in order to regulate the conduct of particular sections of the Brāhmanical community.

¹ See Petersburg Dictionary, s. v. satayātu.

¹ See Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xlix, note 2. As Govindasvāmin's statements possess a considerable importance, I give here the whole commentary on Baudhāyana I, 1, 2, 6, according to my two MSS., C. I. and C. T. : ननु किमिति व्यवस्था यावता मूलश्रुतिरेषामविशेषेण कल्प्यते यथा होलिक्कादीनां यथा वा बोधायनीयं धर्मशास्त्रं कैश्चिदेव पठ्यमानं सर्वोधिकारं भवति तथा गोतमीयगोभिलीये छन्दोगैरेव पठ्यते [पठ्यते C. I.; पठ्यते C. T.] वासिष्ठं तु बह्वचैः [1] अथ च सर्वोधिकाराणि [1] यथा वा गृह्यशास्त्राणि सर्वोधिकाराणि तद्वदनुपनीतेन सह भोजनादीन्यपि समानानि [असमानि C. I.; असमानि C. T.] भवन्तीत्याशङ्क्याह ॥ तत्र तत्र देशप्रामाण्यमेव स्यात् ॥ ६ ॥ एवं व्यवस्थितविषयैव मूलश्रुतिः । किं त्विदमनुपपत्तिं न कल्पयतीत्यभिप्रायः । तस्माद् व्यवस्थितविषयमेवानुष्ठानं तद्वर्जनं च ॥

There is, however, one point in Govindasvāmin's statement which requires further elucidation. He says that the Bahvrikas, i.e. the Rigvedins in general, formerly studied the Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra. It might, therefore, be inferred that the work possessed equal authority among the Āsvalāyanīyas, the Sāṅkhāyanīyas, the Māṇḍūkāyanas, and all the other schools of the Rig-veda, and that it belonged to the most ancient heirlooms of its adherents. That is, however, improbable for several reasons. For, first, neither the Āsvalāyanīyas nor the Sāṅkhāyanīyas of the present day study or attach any special importance to the Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra. Secondly, if the Vāsishtha Dharmaśāstra had ever been the common authority on Dharma in all the different schools of the Rig-veda, it would be necessary to ascribe to it an antiquity which it clearly does not possess. All Sūtras were originally composed for a single school only. Where we find that the same Sūtra is adopted by several Karanas, as is the case with the Dharma-sūtra, which both the Āpastambīyas and the Hairanyakesas study, and with the Kayana-sūtra, which the Bhāradvāgas and the Hairanyakesas have in common, it is evident that the later school did not care to compose a treatise of its own on a certain subject, but preferred to take over the composition of an earlier teacher. If, now, a Sūtra on a certain subject were acknowledged by all the schools of one Veda, it would follow that it must belong to the most ancient books of that Veda, and must have been adopted successively by all its later schools. In such a case the Sûtra must certainly show signs of its great antiquity. But if we look for the latter in the Vâsishṭha Dharma-sûtra, the trouble will be in vain. Though that work contains a good deal that is archaic, yet, as will be shown presently, its numerous quotations from Vedic writings and older Dharma-sûtras clearly prove that it does not belong to the oldest productions of its class, but takes even among the still existing Institutes of the Sacred Law only a secondary rank. Under these circumstances the correct interpretation of Govindasvâmin's words will be, that according to the Brâhmanical tradition, known to him, some school of Rîgvedins, the name of which he did not know, or did not care to give, originally possessed the Vâsishṭha Dharma-sâstra as its exclusive property, and that the work later, through the action of the special law schools, acquired general authority for all Brâhmins. It is a pity that no authentic information regarding the name of that school of Rîgvedins has been handed down. But, considering the fact that Vedic schools are frequently named after Vedic Rîshis, it seems not improbable that it was called after the Vasishṭha whose authority the Dharma-sûtra invokes, and that we may assume the former existence of a Vâsishṭha school, a Sûtra-karana, of the *Rig-veda*¹, founded perhaps by a teacher of the Vâsishṭha gotra. This conjecture, which, it must be confessed, is not supported by any corroborative evidence from the Brâhmanical tradition, will explain why the title-pages of this and of the first part speak of a school of Vâsishṭha.

The position of the Vâsishṭha Dharma-sûtra in Vedic literature can be defined, to a certain extent, by an analysis of its numerous quotations from the Samhitās, Brāhmaṇas, and the older Sūtras. By this means it will become evident that the work belongs to a period when the chief schools of the three ancient Vedas had been formed and some of the still existing Dharma-sūtras had been composed. Faint indications will be found which make it probable that the home of the school to which it belonged, lay in the northern half of India, north of the Narmadā and of the Vindhya. As regards the quotations from the Sruti, the revealed texts of the Hindus, they are chiefly taken from the Rig-veda and from three recensions of the Yagur-veda. Passages from the Rig-veda-samhitā are quoted IV, 21; XVII, 3-4; and XXVI, 5-7. With respect to the quotations in the latter chapter it must, however, be noted that its genuineness is, as will be shown in the sequel, not above suspicion. A Brāhmaṇa of the Rig-veda seems to be referred to in XVII, 2, 32, 35. But the extracts, given there, agree only in part with the text of the Aitareya, and it is probable that they are taken from some lost composition of the same class. A curious Sūtra, II, 35, shows a great resemblance to the explanations of Vedic passages given by Yāska in the *Nirukta*¹. The passage points either to a connexion of the author with the school of the Nairuktas or, at least, to an acquaintance with its principles. Among the schools of the Yagur-veda, that of the Kāthas is twice referred to by name, XII, 29; XXX, 5. But Professor Weber, who kindly looked for the quotations in the Berlin MS. of the Kāthaka, has not been able to find them. A third passage, I, 37, said to be taken from the Kāturmāsyas, i.e. the portion of a Samhitā which treats of the Kāturmāsyas sacrifices, actually occurs in the Kāthaka. But, as it is likewise found in the Kāturmāsyas-kāṇḍa of the Maitrāyaṇīyas, it must remain uncertain from which of the two recensions of the Black Yagur-veda it has been quoted. The chapter on the duties of women, vers. 6-8, contains a long quotation which, in spite of some small discrepancies, seems to have been taken from the Taittirīya-saṃhitā of the Black Yagur-veda. Passages of the Taittirīya Āraṇyaka are quoted or referred to X, 35 and XXIII, 23. The White Yagur-veda is mentioned several times as the Vāgasaneyi-sākhā or the Vāgasaneyaka. The former expression occurs III, 19 and XXIII, 13. The quotations, marked as taken from the Vāgasaneyaka, XII, 31, XIV, 46 are found in the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa, and another passage of the same work is quoted I, 45, without a specification of the source. A very clear proof that the author of the Dharma-sūtra knew the Vāgasaneyi-saṃhitā is furnished by the Mantra, given II, 34. The text, quoted there, occurs in three different Sākhās, that of the Vāgasaneyins, that of the Taittirīyas and the Atharva-veda, and in each shows a few variae lectiones. Its wording in the Vāgasaneyi-saṃhitā literally agrees with the version, given in the Sūtra. The Sāma-veda is referred to III, 19, and particular Sāmāns are mentioned in the borrowed chapter XXII, 9. A passage from the Nidāna, probably a work on Stomas and metres, which belonged to the Bhāllavins, an ancient school of Sāmavedins, occurs I, 14-16. An Upaniṣad, connected with the Atharva-veda, the Atharvasīras, is mentioned in the borrowed chapter XXII, 9, and the existence of the Atharva-veda is pre-supposed, also, by 'the vows called Siras,' which are alluded to in the suspicious chapter XXVI, 11, and are said to be peculiar to the Atharvavedins¹. The chapters, which are undoubtedly genuine, contain no allusion to the fourth Veda.

¹ A school of Vâsishṭhas, belonging to the Sâma-veda, certainly existed in ancient times. I have formerly put forward a conjecture that the Vâsishṭha Dharma-sâstra might belong to that school (Digest of Hindu Law Cases, p. xxii, first edition). But Govindasvâmin's explicit statement makes it evident that it has to be abandoned.

¹ This resemblance has not escaped Krishnapandita, who says in his commentary, निरुक्तमप्यस्य मन्त्रस्य दर्शयति ॥ लान्नलमितादि ॥ श्रुत्यनुक्तमपि निरुक्तकृतसंगृह्णाति ॥

As regards the older works on Dharma, the author of the Institutes of Vasishṭha certainly knew and used a treatise, attributed to Yama, the Dharma-sūtras of Manu, Hārīta and Gautama, and perhaps that of Baudhāyana. With respect to two verses, which, as the Sūtra says, were proclaimed by Pragāpati, XIV, 24, 30, it is somewhat doubtful, if it is meant that they have been taken from a work, attributed to Pragāpati, or that they are merely utterances, supposed to have been made by that deity for the benefit of mankind. The latter view seems, however, the more likely one, as it is customary in the Smṛitis to ascribe the revelation of social institutions, ceremonies, and penances to Pragâpati, who, in the older works, occupies much the same position as Brahmâ, the creator, in the later religious systems. It is not impossible that some of the references to Yama, e. g. XI, 20, have to be explained in the same manner. But other passages, attributed to Yama, e. g. XVIII, 13-16, seem to have been taken from a work which was considered the production of the Dharmarâga. Of course, none of the Yamasmṛitis, which exist in the present day, can be meant. The quotations from Manu are numerous¹. They have all been taken from a book attributed to a Manu, and possess a very high interest for the history of the present metrical Manusmṛiti. For the prose passage from the Mânava, given IV, 5, furnishes the proof that the author of the Vâsishtha Dharmasâstra quotes from a Dharma-sûtra attributed to a Manu, while other quotations show that the Mânava Dharma-sûtra contained, also, verses, some of which, e. g. XIX, 37, were Trishubhs, and that a large proportion of these verses has been embodied in Bhṛigu's version of the Manusmṛiti. Fifteen years ago² I first called attention to Vasishtha's prose quotation from the Mânava, and pointed out that, if the MSS. of the Vâsishtha Dharmasâstra were to be trusted, a small piece of the lost Mânava Dharma-sûtra, on which the present Manusmṛiti is based, had been found. The incorrectness and the defective state of the materials which I then had at my disposal did not allow me to go further. Since that time several, comparatively speaking, good MSS. of the Institutes of Vasishtha and many inferior ones have been found, and all, at least all those which I have examined, give the quotation in prose exactly in the same form. The fact that Vasishtha gives, in IV, 5, a prose quotation from Manu may, therefore, be considered as certain³. Moreover several of the best MSS.

¹ See Baudhāyana Dharma-sūtra II, 8, 14, 2, note.

¹ They occur Vâsishtha Dharmasâstra I, 17; III, 2; IV, 5-8; XI, 23; XII, 16; XIII, 16; XIX, 37; XX, 18; XXIII, 43; XXVI, 8.

² Digest of Hindu Law Cases, p. xxxi, note, first edition.

³ Such, I suppose, will be the opinion of all European scholars. Those Hindus show, by adding the particle 'iti' at the end of Sûtra 8, that the quotation from the Mânava is not finished with Sûtra 5, but includes the two verses given in Sûtras 6 and 7 and the second prose passage in Sûtra 8. Among the verses the first is found entire in the metrical Manusmṛiti, and the second has likewise a representative in that work, though its concluding portion has been altered in such a manner that the permission to slaughter animals at sacrifices has been converted into an absolute prohibition to take animal life. Sûtra 8, which again is in prose, has no counterpart in the metrical Manusmṛiti, as might be expected from its allowing 'a full-grown ox' or 'a full-grown he-goat' to be killed in honour of a distinguished Brâhmana or Kshatriya guest. A closely corresponding passage is found in the Satapatha-brâhmana, and a verse expressing the same opinion in the Yâgñavalkya Smṛiti, the versification of a Dharma-sûtra of the White Yagur-veda. As the last part of the quotation resembles the text of the Brâhmana and its language is very archaic, it is quite possible that, though belonging to the passage from the Mânava-sûtra, it contains a Vedic text, taken from some hitherto unknown Brâhmana which Manu adduced in support of his opinion. On this supposition the arrangement of the whole quotation would be as follows. Sûtra 5 would give the original rule of the author of the Mânava in an aphoristic form; Sûtras 6-7 would repeat the same opinion in verse, the latter being probably Slokas current among the Brâhmanical community; and Sûtra 8 would give the Vedic authority for the preceding sentences. This arrangement would be in strict conformity with the plan usually followed by the authors of Dharma-sûtras. But whether Sûtra 8 contains a second original aphorism of the Mânava Dharma-sûtra or a Vedic passage, it seems indisputable that the author of the Vâsishtha Dharma-sûtra knew a treatise attributed to a teacher called Manu, which, like all other Dharma-sûtras, was partly written in apho-who allow their religious convictions to get the better of their reason, will perhaps prefer Krishnapandita's ingenious, but unsound explanation of the words iti mânavam, by iti manumatam, 'such is the opinion of Manu.'

ristic prose and partly in verse. The passage furnishes, therefore, the proof for Professor Max Müller's conjecture that our metrical Manusmṛiti, like all the older works of the same class, is based on the Dharma-sûtra of a Vedic Sûtra-karana. In connexion with this subject it may be mentioned that the Institutes of Vasishṭha contain, besides the above-mentioned passages, no less than thirty-nine verses¹, which are not marked as quotations, but occur in Bhrigu's metrical Manusamhitâ. Some of them present more or less important variae lectiones. Moreover, there are four verses which, though Vasishṭha attributes them to Hârîta and Yama², are included in our Manusmṛiti and treated as utterances of the father of mankind. The bearing of both these facts on the history of the Manusmṛiti is obvious. But the frequency of the references to or quotations from Manu which Vasishṭha makes, teaches another important lesson. Like the fact that Manu is the only individual author to whom Gautama refers³, it shows that in ancient times Manu's name had as great a charm for the Brâhman teachers as it has for those of the present day, and that the old Mânava Dharma-sûtra was one of the leading works on the subject, or, perhaps, even held that dominant position which the metrical Manusmṛiti actually occupied in the Middle Ages and theoretically occupies in our days. It is interesting to observe that precisely the same inference can be drawn from the early Sanskrit inscriptions. If these speak of individual authors of Smṛitis, they invariably place Manu's name first⁴.

Vasishṭha gives only one quotation from Hârîta, II, 6. Hârîta was one of the ancient Sûtrakâras of the Black Yagur-veda, who is known also to Baudhâyana. From a passage which Krishnapandita quotes in elucidation of

¹ Vâsishṭha Dharmasâstra I, 22; II, 3, 10, 27, 48; III, 5, 11, 60; V, 2; VI, 6, 8, 11, 13, 19; VIII, 7, 15; X, 21-22; XI, 27-28, 32, 35; XIII, 48; XIV, 13, 16, 18; XVI, 18, 33-34; XVII, 5, 8; XVIII, 14, 15; XIX, 48; XX, 18; XXV, 4-5, 7; XXVII, 3.

² Vâsishṭha Dharmasâstra II, 6; XVIII, 14-15; XIX, 48.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. lvii.

⁴ See e.g. the grant of Dhruvasena I, dated Samvat, i.e. Guptasamvat 207, Pl. i, l. 7; Ind. Ant., vol. iv, p. 105.

Vasishtha XXIV, 6, I conclude that Hârîta was a Maitrâyaṇīya¹. The relation of the Vâsishtha Dharma-sûtra to Gautama and Baudhâyaṇa has already been discussed in the introduction to the translation of the former work². To the remarks on its connexion with Baudhâyaṇa it must be added that the third Prasna of the Baudhâyaṇa Dharma-sûtra, from which Vasishtha's twenty-second chapter seems to have been borrowed, perhaps does not belong to the original work, but is a later, though presumably a very ancient, addition to the composition of the founder of the Baudhâyaṇa school. The reasons for this opinion will be given below. If Baudhâyaṇa's third Prasna is not genuine, but has been added by a later teacher of that school, the interval between Baudhâyaṇa and the author of the Vâsishtha Dharma-sâstra must be a very considerable one. I have, however, to point out that the inference regarding the priority of Baudhâyaṇa to Vasishtha is permissible only on the supposition that Vasishtha's twenty-second chapter is not a later addition to the latter work, and that, though it is found in all our MSS., this fact is not sufficient to silence all doubts which might be raised with respect to its genuineness; for we shall see presently that other chapters in the section on penances have been tampered with by a later hand. It will, therefore, be advisable not to insist too strongly on the certainty of the conclusion that Vasishtha knew and used Baudhâyaṇa's work.

In the introduction to his translation of the Vishnusmṛiti³, Professor Jolly has pointed out two passages of Vasishtha which, as he thinks, have been borrowed from Vishnu, and prove the posteriority of the Vâsishtha Dharma-sâstra, if not to the Vishnusmṛiti, at least to its original, the Kâthaka Dharma-sûtra. He contends that the passage Vasishtha XXVIII, 10-15 is a versification of the Sûtras of Vishnu LVI, which, besides being clumsy, shows a number of corruptions and grammatical mistakes, and that Vasishṭha XXVIII, 18–22 has been borrowed from Vishṇu LXXXVII. Professor Jolly's assertion regarding the second passage involves, however, a little mistake. For the first two Slokas, Vasishṭha XXVIII, 18–19, describe not the gift of the skin of a black antelope, which is mentioned in the first six Sūtras of Vishṇu LXXXVII, but the rite of feeding Brāhmins with honey and sesamum grains, which occurs Vishṇu XC, 10. The three verses, Vasishṭha XXVIII, 20–22, on the other hand, really are the same as those given by Vishṇu LXXXVII, 8–10. It is, however, expressly stated in the Vishṇusmṛiti that they contain a quotation, and are not the original composition of the author of the Dharma-sūtra. Hence no inference can be drawn from the recurrence of the same stanzas in the Vāsisṭha Dharma-sūtra. As regards the other passage, Vasishṭha XXVIII, 10–15, Professor Jolly is quite right in saying that it is a clumsy versification of Vishṇu's Sūtras, and it is not at all improbable that Vasishṭha's verses may have been immediately derived from the Kāthaka. The further inference as to the priority of the ancient Kāthaka-sūtra to Vasishṭha, which Professor Jolly draws from the comparison of the two passages, would also be unimpeachable, if the genuineness of Vasishṭha's twenty-eighth chapter were certain. But that is unfortunately not the case. Not only that chapter, but the preceding ones, XXV–XXVII, in fact the whole section on secret penances, are, in my opinion, not only suspicious, but certainly betray the hand of a later restorer and corrector. Everybody who carefully reads the Sanskrit text of the Dharma-sūtra will be struck by the change of the style and the difference in the language which the four chapters on secret penances show, as compared with the preceding and following sections. Throughout the whole of the first twenty-four chapters and in the last two chapters we find a mixture of prose and verse. With one exception in the sixth chapter, where thirty-one verses form the beginning of the section on the rule of conduct, the author follows always one and the same plan in arranging his materials. His own rules are given first in the form of aphorisms, and after these follow the authorities for his doctrines, which consist either of Vedic passages or of verses, the latter being partly quotations taken from individual authors or works, partly specimens of the versified maxims current among the Brāhmins, and sometimes memorial verses composed by the author himself. But chapters XXV–XXVIII contain not a single Sūtra. They are made up entirely of Anushūbh Slokas, and the phrases¹ ‘I will now declare,’ ‘Listen to my words,’ which are so characteristic of the style of the later metrical Smṛitis and of the Purāṇas, occur more frequently than is absolutely necessary. Again, in the first twenty-four and the last two chapters the language is archaic Sanskrit, interspersed here and there with Vedic anomalous forms. But in the four chapters on secret penances we have the common Sanskrit of the metrical Smṛitis and Purāṇas, with its incorrect forms, adopted in order to fit inconvenient words into the metre. Nor is this all. The contents of a portion of this suspicious section are merely useless repetitions of matters dealt with already in the preceding chapters, while some verses contain fragmentary rules on a subject which is treated more fully further on. Thus the description of the Krikkhṛa and Kāndrāyana penances, which has been given XXI, 20 and XXIV, 45, is repeated XXVII, 16, 21. Further, the enumeration of the purificatory texts XXVIII, 10–15 is merely an enlargement of XXII, 9. Finally, the verses XXVIII, 16–22 contain detached rules on gifts, and in the next chapter, XXIX, the subject is begun once more and treated at considerable length. Though it would be unwise to assume that all genuine productions of the old Sūtrakāras must, throughout, show regularity and consistency, the differences between the four chapters and the remainder of the work, just pointed out, are, it seems to me, sufficient to warrant the conclusion that they do not belong to the author of the Institutes. Under these circumstances it might be assumed that the whole section is simply an interpolation. But that would be going too far. For, as other Dharma-sūtras show, one or even several chapters on secret penances belonged to such works.

¹ He says: तथा च हारीतः। तदेतद्वाक्यः पुत्राय [°] नो नापुत्राय [°] नाशिष्याय नासमाप्तिकाय नासंवत्सरोषिताय नाविदितकुलशीलाचाराय दद्यादित्याह भगवानयोनिजो रश्मिसंभवो मित्पुत्रो [°] मैत्रायणिरिति ॥

² Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. liii-lv.

³ Sacred Books of the East, vol. vii, p. xviii.

¹ See XXV, 1; XXVII, 10; XXVIII, 10, 20.

Moreover, in the section on women, Vasishṭha V, 3-4, the author makes a cross-reference to the rahasyas, the section on secret penances, and quotes by anticipation half a Sloka which is actually found in chapter XXVIII. The inference to be drawn from these facts is, that the section on secret penances is not simply a later addition intended to supply an omission of the first writer, but that, for some reason or other, it has been remodelled. The answer to the question why this was done is suggested, it seems to me, partly by the state of the MSS. of the Vāsishṭha Dharmasāstra, and partly by the facts connected with the treatment of ancient works by the Pandīts, which my examination of the libraries of Northern India has brought to light¹. MSS. of the Vāsishṭha Dharmasāstra are very rare, and among those found only three are complete. Some stop with chapter X, others with chapter XXI, and a few in the middle of the thirtieth Adhyāya. Moreover, most of them are very corrupt, and even the best exhibit some Sūtras which are hopeless. These circumstances show clearly that after the extinction of the Vedic school, with which the work originated, the Sūtra was for some time neglected, and existed in a few copies only, perhaps even in a single MS. The materials on which the ancient Hindus wrote, the birch bark and the palm leaves, are so frail that especially the first and last leaves of a Pothī are easily lost or badly damaged. Instances of this kind are common enough in the Gaina and Kasmīr libraries, where the beginning and still more frequently the end of many works have been irretrievably lost. The fate of the Vāsishṭha Dharmasāstra, it would seem, has been similar. The facts related above make it probable that the MS. or MSS. which came into the hands of the Pandīts of the special law schools, who revived the study of the work, was defective. Pieces of the last leaves which remained, probably showed the extent of the damage done, and the Pandīts set to work at the restoration of the lost portions, just as the Kasmīrian Sāhebrām Pandīt restored the Nīlamata-purāna for Mahārāga Ranavīrasimha. They, of course, used the verses which they still found on the fragments, and cleverly supplied the remainder from their knowledge of Manu and other Smṛitis, of the Mahābhārata and the Purāṇas. This theory, I think, explains all the difficulties which the present state of the section on secret penances raises. Perhaps it may be used also to account for some incongruities observable in chapter XXX. The last two verses, XXX, 9-10, are common-places which are frequently quoted in the Mahābhārata, the Harivaṃsa, the Pañkatantra, and modern anthologies. With their baldness of expression and sentiment they present a strong contrast to the preceding solemn passages from the Veda, and look very much like an unlucky attempt at filling up a break at the end of the MS. In connexion with this subject it ought, however, to be mentioned that this restoration of the last part of the Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstra must have happened in early times, at least more than a thousand years ago. For the oldest commentators and compilers of digests on law, such as *Vigñāneśvara*¹, who lived at the end of the eleventh century A. D., quote passages from the section on secret penances as the genuine utterances of Vasishṭha. These details will suffice to show why I differ from Professor Jolly with respect to his conclusion from the agreement of the verses of Vasishṭha XXVIII, 10-15 with the Sūtras of Vishṇu LVI.

¹ See Report on a Tour in Kasmīr, Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, vol. xii, p. 33.

With the exception of the quotations, the Vāsishṭha Dharmaśāstra contains no data which could be used either to define its relative position in Sanskrit literature or to connect it with the historical period of India. The occurrence of the word Romaka, XVIII, 4, in some MSS., as the name of a degraded caste of mixed origin, proves nothing, as other MSS. read Rāmaka, and tribes called Rāma and Rāmatha are mentioned in the Purāṇas. It would be wrong to assert on such evidence that the Sūtra belonged to the time when the Romans, or rather the Byzantines (Rōmaioi), had political relations with India. Nor will it be advisable to adduce the fact that Vasishṭha

¹ Thus Vasishṭha XXVIII, 7 is quoted in the Mitāksharā on Yāgñavalkya III, 298; XXVIII, 10-15 on Yāgñavalkya III, 309; and XXVIII, 18-19, 22 on Yāgñavalkya III, 310.

XVI, 10, 14, 15 mentions written documents as a means of legal proof, in order to establish the 'comparatively late' date of the Sûtra. For though the other Dharma-sûtras do not give any hint that the art of writing was known or in common use in their times, still the state of society which they describe is so advanced that people could not have got on without writing, and the proofs for the antiquity of the Indian alphabets are now much stronger than they were even a short time ago. The silence of Âpastamba and the other Sûtrakâras regarding written documents is probably due to their strict adherence to a general principle underlying the composition of the Dharma-sûtras. Those points only fall primarily within the scope of the Dharma-sûtras which have some immediate, close connexion with the Dharma, the acquisition of spiritual merit. Hence it sufficed for them to give some general maxims for the fulfilment of the gunadharmas of kings, the impartial administration of justice, and to give fuller rules regarding the half-religious ceremony of the swearing in and the examination of witnesses. Judicial technicalities, like the determination of the legal value of written documents, had less importance in their eyes, and were left either to the desakâra, the custom of the country, or to the Niti and Artha-sâstras, the Institutes of Polity and of the Arts of common life. It would, also, be easy to rebut attempts at assigning the Vâsishtha Dharma-sûtra to what is usually 'a comparatively late period' by other pieces of so-called internal evidence tending to show that it is an ancient work. Some of the doctrines of the Sûtra undoubtedly belong to an ancient order of ideas. This is particularly observable in the rules regarding the subsidiary sons, which place the offspring even of illicit unions in the class of heirs and members of the family, while adopted sons are relegated to the division of members of the family excluded from inheritance. The same remark applies to the exclusion of all females, with the exception of putrikâs or appointed daughters, from the succession to the property of males, to the permission to re-marry infant widows, and to the law of the Niyoga or the appointment of adult widows, which Vasiṣṭha allows without hesitation, and even extends to the wives of emigrants. But as most of these opinions occur also in some of the decidedly later metrical Smṛitis, and disputes on these subjects seem to have existed among the various Brāhmanical schools down to a late period, it would be hazardous to use them as arguments for the antiquity of the Sūtra.

The following points bear on the question where the original home of the Vedic school, which produced the Dharma-sūtra, was situated. First, the author declares India north of the Vindhya, and especially those portions now included in the North-western Provinces, to be the country where holy men and pure customs are to be found, I, 8-16. Secondly, he shows a predilection for those redactions of the Veda and those Sūtras which belong to the northern half of India, viz. for the Kāthaka, the Vāgasaneyi-sākhā, and the Sūtras of Manu and Hārīta. Faint as these indications are, I think, they permit us to conclude that the Sūtra belongs to a Karana settled in the north.

As regards the materials on which the subjoined translation is based, I have chiefly relied on the Benares edition of the text, with the commentary of Kṛishnapandita Dharmādhikārī, and on a rough edition with the varietas lectionum from the two MSS. of the Bombay Government Collection of 1874-75¹, B. no. 29 and Bh. no. 30, a MS. of the Elphinstone College Collection of 1867-68, E. no. 23 of Class VI, and an imperfect apograph F. in my own collection, which was made in 1864 at Bombay. The rough edition was prepared under my superintendence by Vāmanākārya Ghalkikar, now teacher of Sanskrit in the Dekhan College, Pune. When I wrote the translation, the Bombay Government MSS. were not accessible to me. I could only use my own MS. and, thanks to the kindness of Dr. Rost, Colebrooke's MS., I. O. no. 913, from which the now worthless Calcutta editions have been derived either immediately or mediately. These materials belong to two groups. The Bombay MS. B., which comes from Benares, closely agrees with Kṛishnapandita's text; and E., though purchased at Puna, does not differ much from the two. Bh., which comes from Bhuj in Kakh, and my own MS. F. form a second group, towards which Colebrooke's MS., I. O. no. 913, also leans. Ultimately both groups are derived from one codex archetypus.

¹ See Report on Sanskrit MSS. 1874-75, p. 11.

The first group of MSS. gives a fuller and in general a correcter text than the second. But it seems to me that the text of B., and still more Krishnapandita's, has in many places been conjecturally restored, and that the real difficulties have been rather veiled than solved. I have, therefore, frequently preferred the readings offered by the second group, or based on them my conjectural emendations, which have all been given in the notes. To give a translation without having recourse to conjectural emendations was impossible, as a European philologist is unable to avail himself of those wonderful tricks of interpretation which permit an Indian Pandit to extract some kind of meaning from the most desperate passages. In a few cases, where even the best MSS. contain nothing but a conglomerate of meaningless syllables or unconnected words, I have thought it advisable to refrain from all attempts at a restoration of the text, and at a translation. A critical edition of the Vāsishtā Dharmaśāstra is very desirable, and I trust that Dr. A. Führer, of St. Xavier's College, Bombay, will soon supply this want. Krishnapandita's commentary, for which he had not the aid of older vr̥ttis, shows considerable learning, and has been of great value to me. I have followed him mostly in the division of the Sūtras, and have frequently given his opinions in the notes, both in cases where I agree with him and in those where I differ from him, but think his opinion worthy of consideration.

In conclusion, I have to thank Professors R. von Roth, Weber, and Jolly, as well as Dr. L. von Schröder, for the verification of a number of Vedic quotations, which they kindly undertook for me, as I was unable to use my own books of reference during the translation of the work.

INTRODUCTION

TO

BAUDHÂYANA.

THE case of the Baudhâyana Dharma-sûtra is in many respects analogous to that of the Institutes of the Sacred Law, current in the schools of Âpastamba and Hiranyakesin. Like the latter, it is the work of a teacher of the Black Yagur-veda, who composed manuals on all the various subdivisions of the Kalpa, and founded a Sûtra-karana, which is said to exist to the present day¹. The Brâhmanical tradition, too, acknowledges these facts, and, instead of surrounding Baudhâyana's work with a halo of myths, simply states that it was originally studied by and authoritative for the followers of the Taittirîya-veda alone, and later only became one of the sources of the Sacred Law for all Brâhmans². Moreover, the position of Baudhâyana among the teachers of the Yagur-veda is well defined, and his home, or at least the home of his school, is known. But here the resemblance stops. For while the Sûtras of Âpastamba and Hiranyakesin have been preserved in carefully and methodically arranged collections, where a certain place is assigned to each section of the Kalpa, no complete set of the Sûtras of Baudhâyana's school has, as yet, been found, and the original position of the detached portions which are obtainable is not quite certain. Again, while the works of Âpastamba and Hiranyakesin seem to have been kept free from extensive interpolations, several parts of

¹ I must here state that during my residence in India I have never met with a follower of Baudhâyana's school, and cannot personally vouch for its existence. But many Pandits have assured me that many Baudhâyantyas are to be found among the Telingana and Karnâṭaka Brâhmans.

² See Govinda's statement, quoted above, p. xiii.

Baudhāyana's Sūtras have clearly received considerable additions from later hands.

According to the researches of Dr. A. Burnell¹, whose long residence in Southern India and intimate acquaintance with its Brāhmanical libraries have made him the first authority on the literature of the schools of the Taittirīya-veda, the Sūtras of Baudhāyana consist of six sections, viz. 1. the Srauta-sūtras, probably in nineteen Prasnas; 2. The Karmānta-sūtra in twenty Adhyāyas; 3. The Dvaidha-sūtra in four Prasnas; 4. The Grīhya-sūtra in four Prasnas; 5. The Dharma-sūtra in four Prasnas; 6. The Sulva-sūtra in three Adhyāyas. The results of the search for Sanskrit MSS. in other parts of India, and especially in Western India, do not differ materially from those obtained by Dr. Burnell. The Grīhya-sūtra, which in Western India occasionally bears the title Smārta-sūtra², contains, however, nine instead of four Prasnas. The MSS. of the Baudhāyana-sūtras, which contain the text alone, are all incomplete, mostly very corrupt and in bad order, and rarely give more than a small number of Prasnas on detached subjects. The copies in which the text is accompanied by a commentary are in a better condition. Thus the Kalpavivarana of Bhavasvāmin³ extends over the whole of the Srauta-sūtra, and over the Karmānta and the Dvaidha-sūtras. It shows the proper sequence of the Prasnas on Srauta sacrifices, and that probably the Karmānta and the Dvaidha immediately followed the Srauta-sūtra. But there is no hint in the MSS. or in the commentaries how the Grīhya, Dharma, and Sulva-sūtras were originally placed. With respect to these sections, it is only possible to judge from the analogy of the other extant sets of Kalpa-sūtras and from internal evidence. On these grounds it may be shown that the order, adopted by Dr. Burnell, is probably the correct one. For the beginning of the *Gṛīhya-sūtra*¹ shows by its wording that it was not a separate treatise, but was immediately connected with some preceding Prasna. The analogy of the collections of the Āpastambīyas, the Hairanyakesas, the Kāthas, and other schools permits us to infer that it stood after the Srauta-sūtra. It is further clear that, in its turn, it was succeeded by the Dharma-sūtra. For two passages of the latter work, I, 2, 3, 15, and II, 8, 15, 9, clearly contain references to the Gṛīhya-sūtra. In the former, the author gives the rule regarding the length of the staff to be carried by a student, as well as the general principle that the staff must be cut from a tree fit for sacrificial purposes. With respect to the latter clause he adds that 'the details have been given above.' As the Dharma-sūtra contains nothing more on this subject, it follows that the expression 'above' must refer to Gṛīhya-sūtra II, 7, where the usual detailed rules regarding the employment of particular woods for the several varṇas are given. In the second passage Baudhāyana says that the rules for the performance of funeral sacrifices have been fully explained in the section on the Ashṭakāhoma, which occurs Gṛīhya-sūtra II, 17-18. It is, therefore, perfectly certain that Baudhāyana, just like Āpastamba, placed the Prasnas on the Sacred Law after those on the domestic ceremonies, and that the Dharma-sūtra was not a separate work. Under these circumstances it becomes highly probable that the Sulva-sūtra formed, as is the case in other sets of Kalpa-sūtras, the conclusion of the whole. Thus the only treatise, whose position remains doubtful, is the Pravarakhanda, the list of the Brāhmanical gotras and of their deified ancestors². Possibly it may have stood at the end of the Srauta-sūtra.

¹ See Burnell, Catalogue of a Collection of Sanskrit MS., pp. 24-26, 28, 34-35, and Tanjore Catalogue, pp. 18a-20b, and especially his remarks at pp. 18b and 20a.

² This title is found in the best copy known to me, Elphinstone College Collection of 1867-68, Class B. I, no. 5, which has been prepared from the MS. of Mr. Limaye at Ash'te. The other copies of the work, found in Western India, e. g. no. 4 of the same collection and my own copy, are in a bad state, as they are derived from a MS. the leaves of which were out of order.

³ Burnell, Catalogue of a Collection of Sanskrit MSS., no. LXXXVIII, and Tanjore Catalogue, no. CXVII.

¹ According to the Elph. Coll. MS., Cl. I, B. 5, and my copy, it runs thus:
यथो यतद्धुतः प्रहुत आहुतः शूलगवो बलिहरणं प्रत्यवरोहणमष्टकाहोम इति
सप्त पाकयज्ञसंस्था इति ॥१॥ ता अनुव्याख्यास्यामः ॥२॥

² Burnell, Catalogue of a Collection of Sanskrit MSS., no. CXVIII.

The destruction of the continuity of Baudhāyana's Kalpa-sūtra has had the consequence which is commonly observable in other dismembered works, that several of its detached portions have received considerable additions from later and, as it would seem, from several hands. There can be no doubt that a small portion only of the nine Prasnas, found in the Western copies of the Gṛihya-sūtra, really belongs to Baudhāyana. For the description of the Gṛihya rites, which strictly follows the general plan laid down in the first Sūtra, is completed in two or three Prasnas¹. Next follows a Prasna on the anukṛitis, rites resembling those comprised in the subdivisions treated before, and then a Prasna on prāyaścittas, or expiations of mistakes committed during, and of the neglect of, the performance of the Gṛihya-karmāṇi. The remaining Prasnas are filled with a medley of paribhāṣās, general rules, and of full descriptions of ceremonies, some of which have been given before, while others are added afresh. Many of the newly-added rites do not belong to the ancient Brāhmanical worship, but to the Paurāṇic religions, the service of Siva, Skanda, Nārāyaṇa, and other deities, and some show an admixture of Tāntric elements. In some of the later Prasnas, especially IV and V, the language closely resembles that of the first three, and shows the same stereotyped phrases and the same Vedic anomalous forms. But in other sections, particularly VI–IX, we find, instead of Sūtras, the common Anuṣṭubh Sloka throughout, and expressions peculiar to the metrical Smṛitis and the Purāṇas. At the end of most Adhyāyas we read the phrase, ity āha Baudhāyanaḥ, or bhagavān Baudhāyanaḥ, 'thus speaks Baudhāyana, or the divine Baudhāyana.' Finally, while the first three Prasnas are divided into Kandikās or Khandas, the following ones consist of Adhyāyas or chapters. These differences, as well as the fact that the most important Gṛihya rites, arranged according to a special plan, are done with in the first three Prasnas, necessarily lead to the conclusion that the whole remainder does not belong to Baudhâya, but consists of so-called Parisishṭas, which were composed by the adherents of his school. Further, the fact that the last six Prasnas do not show everywhere the same style and language, makes it probable that the additions were made at different times and by different persons.

¹ Elphinstone College Collection, no. 5, according to which all quotations have been made, gives three Prasnas, my own MS. two Prasnas. The number of the Khandas is, however, the same.

The Dharma-sūtra seems to have undergone exactly the same fate as the Gr̥hya-sūtra. It will be obvious even to the readers of the translation that its fourth Prasna is a later addition. It consists of two parts. The first, which ends with the fourth Adhyâya, treats of penances, both public and secret ones. The second, Adhyâyas 5-8, describes the means of obtaining siddhi, the fulfilment of one's desires, and recommends for this purpose the offering of the Gaṇahomas after a previous sanctification of the worshipper by means of a course of austerities. The first part is perfectly superfluous, as the subject of penances has already been discussed in the first sections of the second Prasna, and again in chapters 4-10 of the third Prasna. Its rules sometimes contradict those given before, and in other cases, e.g. IV, 2, 10-12, are mere repetitions of previous statements. The introduction of the means of gaining siddhi, on the other hand, is without a parallel in other Dharma-sūtras, and the subject is entirely foreign to the scope of such works. Its treatment, too, shows that chapters 5-8 do not belong to the author of the bulk of the Dharma-sūtra. For the description of the preparatory 'restraints' or austerities contains somewhat more detailed rules for a number of penances, e.g. the Kṛikkhras and the Kândrâyana, which have already been described in the preceding Prasnas. Moreover, the style and the language of the whole fourth Prasna are very different from those of the three preceding ones, and the differences observable are exactly the same as those between the first five and the last four Prasnas of the Gr̥hya-sūtra. The epic Sloka nearly throughout replaces the aphoristic prose, and the common slipshod Sanskrit of the Purāṇas appears instead of the archaic forms. Finally, the fourth Prasna is divided into Adhyāyas, not into the Kandīkās or Khandas and Adhyāyas which are found in the first two Prasnas.

This latter peculiarity is also observable in the third Prasna, and raises a suspicion against the genuineness of that part also. For, though the third Prasna in style and language resembles the first two, it is hard to believe that the author should, for no apparent reason, suddenly have changed the manner of dividing his work towards its end. This suspicion is further strengthened by two other circumstances. First, Prasnas I–II really exhaust the discussion of the whole Dharma, and the third offers supplementary information only on some points which have been touched upon previously. Secondly, several Adhyāyas of Prasna III seem to have been borrowed from other works, or to be abstracts from them. Thus the tenth chapter has certainly been taken from the Gautamīya Dharmaśāstra, the sixth bears a very close and suspicious resemblance to *Vishnu XLVIII*¹, and the third looks very much like a short summary of the doctrine of Vikhanas, whose lost Sūtra contained the original rule of the order of the Vaikhānasas or hermits, living in the forest. These circumstances justify, it seems to me, the assumption that Baudhāyana's original Dharma-sūtra consisted, like Āpastamba's, of two Prasnas only, and that it received, through followers of his school, two separate additions, first in very ancient times Prasna III, where the style of the master is strictly followed, and later Prasna IV, where the language and phraseology of the metrical Smṛitis are adopted. It ought to be noted that Govindasvāmin, too, does not take the whole of the four Prasnas for Baudhāyana's composition. With respect to several passages² where Baudhāyana's name is introduced in order to give weight to the rules, he says that the Sūtras may belong to 'a pupil.' I do not think that the criterion which he uses can be relied on in every case, because oriental authors without doubt occasionally speak of themselves as of third persons. But the fact that the commentator, though an orthodox Hindu, had misgivings as to the genuineness of portions of the work, is not without significance. It seems also that even the first two Prasnas are not quite free from interpolations. Thus the Kaṇḍikās on the *Tarpana*¹ are certainly much enlarged by additions, the verse at I, 5, 11, 36, a repetition of I, 5, 9, 5, and some prose quotations which are introduced by the words athāpy udāharanti, 'now they quote also,' standing usually before verses only, are at least suspicious. That the genuineness of many single passages should be doubtful, is no more than might be expected, not only on account of the separation of the Dharma-sūtra from the other parts of the Kalpa, but also because the work, as we shall see further on, remained for a long time without the protection of a commentary. The practical conclusion to be drawn from this state of things is that the greatest caution must be observed in using the Baudhāyana Dharma-sūtra for historical purposes, and that it will be advisable to draw no inferences regarding Baudhāyana's relation to other teachers and schools from the last two Prasnas, and not to trust too much to historical inferences drawn from single passages of the first two.

¹ See also Jolly, Sacred Books of the East, vol. vii, p. xix.

² E. g. Dharma-sūtra III, 5, 7.

The position which Baudhāyana occupies among the teachers of the Taittirīya-veda has already been discussed in the Introduction to Āpastamba. It has been shown that according to the Brāhmanical tradition preserved by Mahādeva, the commentator of the Hiranyakesi-sūtras, he composed the first Sūtra for the followers of his Sākhā. Internal and external evidence has also been adduced, proving that he certainly was more ancient than Āpastamba and Hiranyakesin. It is now possible to bring forward some further facts bearing on these points. First, in the section on the Tarpana, the libations of water offered to various deities, Rīshis, and the manes, II, 5, 9, 14, Kāṇva Baudhāyana receives his share immediately after the Rīshis of the Veda and before Āpastamba, the Sūtrakāra, and ¹ Baudhāyana Dharma-sūtra II, 5, 8-9.

Satyâshâdha Hiranyakesin. The same order is observed in the distribution of the offerings at the Sarpabali, described in the *Grihya-sûtra*¹, where the following teachers of the Yagur-veda are specially named, viz. Vaisampâyaṇa, Phulīṅgu, Tittiri, Ukha, Aukhya, Âtreya the author of the Pada-text, Kaundînya the author of the commentary, Kâṇva Baudhâyana the author of the Pravakana, Âpastamba the author of the Sûtra, and Satyâshâdha Hiranyakesin. Neither of these two passages belongs to Baudhâyana. They are both clearly interpolations. But they show that Mahâdeva's statement, which makes Baudhâyana the first expounder of the Kalpa among the Taittirîyavedins, agrees with the tradition of the Baudhâyanîyas themselves. For not only the place allotted to Baudhâyana's name, but still more the title Pravakanakâra which he receives, show that the followers of his school placed him before and above all other teachers of the ritual. The term pravakana, which literally means 'proclaiming or recitation,' has frequently the technical sense of 'oral instruction,' and is applied both to the traditional lore contained in the Brâhmanas, and to the more systematic teaching of the *Ângas*². If, therefore, a teacher is called the author of the Pravakana of a Sâkhâ, that can only mean that he is something more than a common Sûtrakâra, and is considered to be the originator of the whole system of instruction among its followers. The epithet Kâṇva, which Baudhâyana receives in both the passages quoted above, indicates that he belonged to the Vedic Gotra of the Kaṇvas. It deserves to be noted that Govindasvâmin, too, on I, 3, 5, 13, explains the name Baudhâyana by *Kâṇvâyana*³.

¹ Baudhâyana Grihya-sûtra IV, 8 (fol. 29, B. 5, Elph. Coll. copy, no. 5), दक्षिणतः प्राचीनाधीतो नो (?) वैशंपायनाय पुलिङ्गवे तित्तिरय उखायौख्याया-
स्त्रेयाय पदकाराय कौण्डिन्याय वृत्तिकाराय काण्वाय चौधायनाय प्रवचनकारा-
यापस्तम्बाय सूत्रकाराय सत्याषाढाय हिरण्यकेशाय (?) आचार्येभ्य ऊर्ध्वरेतोभ्यो वैश्वस्येभ्य एकपत्नीभ्यः कल्पयामीति ॥ See also Weber, Hist. Ind. Lit., p. 91 note; Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 223; Burnell, Catalogue of a Collection of Sanskrit MSS., p. 14, no. LIII.

² See Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 109.

³ The discovery that Baudhâyana bore also the name Kâṇva makes it possible

The style of Baudhâyana's works furnishes, as Dr. Burnell has pointed out¹, another argument for their high antiquity. Compared with the Sûtras of Âpastamba and Hiraṇyakesin they are much simpler in their arrangement, and the complete absence of that anxiety to save 'half a vowel' which characterises the fully developed Sûtra-style is very remarkable. The last point has been noticed by Govindasvâmin also. In commenting on I, 2, 3, 17-18, where Baudhâyana first permits students to beg food of men of all castes, and afterwards explains that he means Âryans who follow their lawful occupations, he says², '(If anybody should ask), "Why give two Sûtras, while one Sûtra, ('A student shall ask) Âryans who follow their lawful occupations,' would have sufficed?" (his objection will be) correct. For this teacher is not particularly anxious to make his book short.' In other cases we find a certain awkwardness in the distribution of the subject matter, which probably finds its explanation through the fact that Baudhâyana first attempted to bring the teaching of the Taittirîyas on the Dharma into a systematic form. Thus the rules on the law of inheritance are given without any apparent necessity and against the custom of the other Sûtrakâras in two different chapters, I, 5, 11, 9-16 and II, 2, 3, 1-44. The section on purification, too, is divided into two separate portions, I, 4, 6-10 and I, 6, 13-15, and the second, which treats of the purification of the vessels at sacrifices, properly ought to have been placed into the Srauta-sûtra, not into the Dharma-sûtra. Again, the discussion of several topics is repeatedly interrupted by the introduction of rules belonging to different subjects, and Govindasvâmin's ingenuity is often taxed to the utmost in order to find the reason why certain Sûtras which appa-to refer Âpastamba's quotation of an opinion of a Kâṇva, I, 6, 19, 7, to Baudhâyana, instead of to a teacher of the White Yagur-veda, Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxvi.

¹ Tanjore Catalogue, p. 20 b.

² ननु द्विजातिषु स्वकर्मस्येष्विति सूत्रयितव्ये किमिति सूत्रद्वयारम्भः । सत्यम् ।
अयं स्नाचार्यो नातीव ग्रन्थलाघवाभिप्रायो भवति ॥

rently are unconnected with the main subject have been inserted. A third argument for the great antiquity of Baudhāyana's Sūtras, derived from the archaic character of some of his doctrines, has been discussed in the Introduction to Āpastamba¹. The number of instances where Baudhāyana's rules are based on a more ancient order of ideas than Āpastamba's might be increased very considerably. But, as now the comparison of the two works is open to all students, I omit the cases contained in the two Dharma-sūtras, and content myself with adducing one more from the less accessible Gṛihya-sūtras. It is a well-known fact that the ancient Vedic ritual in certain cases admitted Sūdras, and particularly the Rathakāra or carpenter, who, according to all accounts, has Sūdra blood in his veins, to a participation in the Srauta rites. The Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa even gives certain Mantras to be recited by the Rathakāra at the Agnyādhāna sacrifice². Now Baudhāyana, who, Dh. S. I, 9, 17, 6, derives the origin of the Rathakāras from a Vaisya male and Sūdra female, apparently reckons him amongst the twice-born, and explicitly allows him to receive the sacrament of the initiation. He says, Gṛihya-sūtra II, 5, 8-9, 'Let him initiate a Brāhmaṇa in spring, a Kshatriya in summer, a Vaisya in autumn, a Rathakāra in the rainy season; or all of them in spring³.' But Āpastamba, who shows great hostility against the mixed castes, and emphatically denies the right of Sūdras to be initiated, gives the same rule regarding the seasons for the initiation both in his Gṛihya and *Dharma-sūtras*⁴. He, however, omits the Rathakāra in both cases. There can be no doubt that Āpastamba's exclusion of the carpenter, which agrees with the sentiments prevailing in modern Brāhmanical society, is an offshoot of a later doctrine, and as both he and Baudhāyana

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, pp. xviii-xx.

² See Weber, Indische Studien X, 12.

³ वसन्ते ब्राह्मणमुपनयति ग्रीष्मे राजन्यं शरदि वैश्यं वषासु रथकारमिति ॥८॥ belong to the same vidyāvamsa, or spiritual family, this difference may be used as an argument for his posteriority to Baudhâyana. In connexion with this rule of Baudhâyana's it ought to be mentioned that even in the present day certain subdivisions of the modern Sutârs or carpenters actually wear the Brâhmanical thread, and, in spite of the adverse teaching of the Sâstras, find Brâhmins willing to perform the ceremony of investiture for them.
सर्वानेव वा वसन्ते ॥९॥

⁴ Gṛihya-sūtra II, 4, 10, 5; Dharma-sūtra I, 1, 1, 18.

While it thus appears not incredible that Baudhâyana really was the first Sûtrakâra of the Taittirîyas, the numerous quotations which his works contain, permit us to form an idea of the extent of the Vedic and profane literature known to him. Among the Vedic works which he adduces as authorities, or otherwise refers to, the three sections of the Taittirîya-veda, the Samhitâ, the Brâhmaṇa, and the Âranyaka, naturally take the first place. For the Âranyaka he seems to have used the Ândhra version, as Dh. S. II, 10, 18, 7, 11 references to the seventy-first Anuvâka of the tenth Prapâthaka occur. Two long passages, Dh. S. I, 2, 4, 3-8; II, 6, 11, 1-8, which apparently have been taken from the Satapatha-brâhmaṇa, testify to his acquaintance with the White Yagur-veda. Baudhâyana does not say expressly that he quotes from the Brâhmaṇa of the Vâgasaneyins, but Govinda has no hesitation in pointing to the Satapatha as their source. It is remarkable that the fact noticeable in Âpastamba's quotation from the Satapatha reappears here, and that the wording of the two quotations does not fully agree with the printed text of the Brâhmaṇa. The differences in the first passage are, no doubt, partly owing to corruptions and interpolations in Baudhâyana's text; but that cannot be said of the second¹. References to the Sâma-veda and the Sâmans occur repeatedly, and the passage from the Nidâna of Bhâllavins regarding the geographical extent of true Brâh-manical learning, which Vasishṭha adduces, is given I, 1, 2, 11-12. From the Rig-veda a few expiatory hymns and verses, such as the Aghamarshaṇa and the Taratsamandis, are quoted. The Atharva-veda is not referred to by name, but the existence of Ātharvāna schools may be inferred from the mention made of the vows called Siras, II, 8, 14, 2. Among the authorities on the Sacred Law, mentioned in the Dharma-sūtra, Kātya I, 2, 3, 46, Maudgalya II, 2, 4, 8, and Aupagandhani II, 2, 3, 33, do not occur in other works of the same class¹. Hārīta, who is mentioned II, 1, 2, 21, and who probably was a teacher of the Maitrāyaṇīya school, is named by Vasishṭha and Āpastamba also. The Gautama who is quoted I, 1, 2, 7 and II, 2, 4, 17, is, as has been shown in the Introduction to Gautama, most probably the author of the still existing Institutes of Gautama. To the arguments for the latter view, adduced there, I may add that two other passages of the Dharma-sūtra, II, 6, 11, 15 and 26, point to a close connexion between Baudhāyana's and Gautama's works. The former of the two Sūtras contains, with the exception of one small clause in the beginning, exactly the same description of the duties of a hermit in the forest as that given by Gautama III, 26-35. The second Sūtra states, just as Gautama's rule III, 36, that the venerable teacher (Ātāryāṭ) prescribes one order only, that of the householders. The reason given for this opinion differs, however, according to Baudhāyana, from that adduced in Gautama's text. The almost literal identity of the first long passage makes it not improbable that Baudhāyana borrowed in this instance also from Gautama without noting the source from which he drew. On the other hand, the argument drawn from the fact that the tenth Adhyāya of Prasna III has been taken from Gautama's Sūtra loses its force since, as I have shown above, it is improbable that the third Prasna formed part of Baudhā-yana's original work. A metrical work on the Sacred Law seems to be quoted II, 2, 4, 14-15. For, as the second verse, adduced there, says that the penance for one who violated his Guru's bed has been declared above, it seems impossible to assume that the two Slokas belonged to the versified maxims of the Dharma current among the learned Brāhmans. If this quotation is not an interpolation, it proves that, side by side with the Dharma-sûtras, metrical treatises on the Sacred Law existed in very early times¹. One quotation, finally, which gives a verse from the dialogue of the daughters of Usanas and Vṛishaparvan seems to have been taken from an epic poem. The verse is actually found in the Mahābhārata I, 78, 10, and again 34, where the altercation between Sarmishthā and Devayānī forms part of the Yayātyupākhyāna. Considering what has been said above regarding the state of the text of the Dharma-sûtra, and our imperfect knowledge of the history of the Mahābhārata, it would be hazardous to assert that the verse proves Baudhāyana's acquaintance with Vyāsa's great epic. It will be safer to wait for further proofs that it was known to the Sûtrakāras, before one bases far-going speculations on this hitherto solitary quotation.

¹ Professor Eggeling has lately discussed the question of the discrepancies between Âpastamba's quotations from the Brâhmaṇa of the Vâgasaneyins and the existing text. I can only agree with him that we must wait for a comparison of all those quoted, with both the recensions of the Satapatha, before we draw further inferences from the fact. See Sacred Books of the East, vol. xii, p. xl.

¹ Possibly Kāśyapa, whose name occurs in a Sloka, I, 11, 21, 2, may also be an ancient teacher to whom Baudhāyana refers. In the Grihya-sūtra a teacher called Sālīki is repeatedly quoted, and once, I, 11 (end), his opinion is contrasted with that of Baudhāyana and of Ātārya, i.e. Baudhāyana's teacher. The Grihya-sūtra refers also to Ātreya, Kāsakritsna, and Bādari.

The arguments which may be brought forward to show that Baudhāyana's home lay in Southern India are not as strong as those which permit us to determine the native country of Āpastamba. The portions of the Sûtras, known to me, contain no direct mention of the south except in the desa-nirṇaya or disquisition on the countries, Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 2, where certain peculiar customs of the southern Brāhmans are enumerated, and some districts of Southern India, e.g. Kalinga, are referred to as barbarous countries which must not be visited by Āryans. These utterances show an acquaintance with the south, but by no means prove that Baudhāyana lived there. A more significant fact is that Baudhāyana declares, I, 1, 2, 4, 'going to sea' to be a custom prevailing among the northern Brāhmans, and afterwards, II, 1, 22, places that act at the head of the Patanīyas, the more serious offences causing loss of caste. It is probable that by the latter rule he wished to show his standpoint as a southerner. But the most conclusive argument in favour of the southern origin of the Baudhāyanīyas is that they, like the Āpastambīyas and all other adherents of the Taittirīya schools, are entirely confined to the Dekhan, and are not found among the indigenous subdivisions of the Brāhmanas in Central and Northern India. This fact is, if not explicitly stated, at least implied by the passage of the Mahārṇava quoted in the Introduction to Āpastamba¹. It is proved by the present state of things, and by the evidence of the land grants of the southern dynasties, several of which have been made in favour of Baudhāyanīyas. Thus we find a grant of Bukkarāya, the well-known ruler of Viṅḡayana-gara², dated Sakasamvat 1276 or 1354-5 A.D., in which a Brāhmaṇa, studying the Baudhāyanīya-sūtra, is mentioned as the donee of a village in Maisūr. Again, in an inscription of Nandivarman Pallavamalla, which its editor, the Rev. Mr. Foulkes, places in the ninth century A.D.³, a considerable number of Brāhmaṇas of the Pravaṇana-sūtra are named as recipients of the royal bounty, together with some followers of the Āpastambha⁴ school. As we have seen that Baudhāyana is called in the Grihya-sūtra the Pravaṇanakāra, it is not doubtful that the Pravaṇana-sūtra of this inscription is the Sūtra of his school. The villages which the grantees received from Nandivarman were situated on the Pālār river in the Kittūr districts of the Madras Presidency. Besides, the interesting tradition which asserts that Mādhava-Sāyana, the great commentator of the Vedas, was a Baudhāyanīya⁵ is another point which may be brought forward as evidence for the location of the school in Southern India. Further,

¹ See also West and Bühler, Digest of Hindu Law Cases, p. xxvii, 2nd ed.

¹ Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. xxx; see also L. von Schröder, Maitrāyanīya Samhitā, p. xxvii.

² Journal of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, XII, 349-351.

³ Indian Antiquary, VIII, 273-284.

⁴ As all the older inscriptions hitherto published give Āpastambha instead of Āpastamba, I am now inclined to consider the former as the original form of the name.

⁵ Burnell, Tanjore Catalogue, p. 20 b, remarks on no. CCXXVI.

it must not be forgotten that most and the best MSS. of Baudhâyana's Sûtras are found in Southern India. There are also some faint indications that the Āndhra country is the particular district to which Baudhâyana belonged. For his repeated references to voyages by sea and his rule regarding the duty payable on goods imported by sea show that he must have lived in a coast district where sea-borne trade flourished, and the fact that he uses the Āndhra recension of the Taittirîya Âraṇyaka makes it probable that he was an inhabitant of the eastern coast.

My estimate of the distance between Baudhâyana and Âpastamba and of that between the latter and the historical period of India has been given in the Introduction to Âpastamba, pp. xxii and xliii, and I have nothing further to add on that subject. The oldest witness for the existence of the Srauta-sûtra of Baudhâyana is its commentator Bhavasvâmin, whom Dr. Burnell places in the eighth century A. D. The Dharma-sûtra is first quoted by Vignânesvara, circiter 1080–1100 A. D. Several of the passages adduced by him are, however, not traceable in the MSS.

As regards the materials on which the translation is based, I had at my disposal six MSS. of the text and two copies of Govindasvâmin's commentary, the Bodhâyanîya-dharmavivaraṇa¹, one of which (C. I.) gives the text also. These MSS. belong to two chief groups, a northern and a southern one. The northern group contains two subdivisions. The first comprises (1) D., a MS. bought by me for the Government of Bombay at Ahmadâbâd (no. 6 of the Dekhan College collection of 1868–69), and about one hundred or one hundred and fifty years old; (2) P., an old MS. of my own collection, bought in 1865 at Puna; (3, 4) B. and Bh., two modern transcripts, made for me in Baroda and Bombay. Among these, D. alone is of real value, as P., B., and Bh. faithfully reproduce all its clerical errors and add a good many new ones. The second subdivision of the northern group is represented by K., a modern transcript, made for the Government of Bombay at Kolhâpur in the southern Marâṭha country (Elphinstone College collection of 1867-68, Class VI, no. 2). The MSS. of the northern group, which give the vulgata current since the times of Nīlakanṭha (1650 A.D.) and Mitramisra (c. 1700 A.D.) in Western and Central India, can be easily recognised by the omission of the third Adhyâya of Prasna IV, and by their placing IV, 5, 1 b-25 after IV, 7, 7. One of the chief differences between K. and the other MSS. of the northern group is the omission of II, 5, 8, 4-II, 6, 11, 15 in the latter. The southern group of MSS. is formed by M., a slovenly Devanâgarī transcript of a Grantha MS., no. $\frac{610}{1928}$ of the Madras Government collection¹, and by the text of C. I., a Devanâgarī copy of the MS. of Govindasvâmin's commentary, presented by Dr. Burnell to the India Office library². The second copy of the commentary, C. T., a Telugu paper MS. from Tanjore, I owe to the kindness of Dr. Burnell.

¹ It ought to be noted that in the south of India the forms Bodhâyana and Bodhâyanîya are invariably used for Baudhâyana and Baudhâyanîya. But it seems to me that the southerners are in error, as the affix âyana requires vridhhi in the first syllable.

As might be expected, on account of the southern origin of the Baudhâyanīya school, M. gives on the whole the best form of the text. It also carefully marks the *Kandikâs*³ in the first two Prasnas, ignoring the Adhyâyas altogether, and contains at the end of each Prasna the first words of each Kandikâ, beginning with the last and ending with the first, after the fashion which prevails in the MSS. of the Taittirīya Samhitâ, Brâhmaṇa, and Âranyaka. Very close to M. comes Govinda's copy, where, however, as in most northern MSS., the Adhyâyas alone are marked. It is, however, perfectly certain that in some very difficult passages, which are disfigured by ancient corruptions, he corrected the text conjecturally⁴. In a certain number of cases the northern MSS. present better and older readings than M. and C. I.⁵ Under these ¹ Taylor, Catalogue Raisonné (I), I, p. 190. The clerical errors in my transcript are exceedingly numerous, and mostly owing to the faulty rendering of the value of the Grantha characters, which seem not to have been familiar to the copyist. There are also some small lacunae, and the last leaf has been lost.

² See Burnell, Catalogue of a Collection of MSS., p. 35, no. CXVII.

³ I alone am responsible for the title Kandikâ, given to the small sections. M. marks only the figures. D. and the better northern MSS. show only breaks at the end of the Kandikâs and their first words at the end of the Prasnas.

⁴ See e.g. Dharma-sûtra I, 2, 3, 35, note.

⁵ See e.g. Dharma-sûtra I, 5, 11, 35; II, 1, 2, 36; II, 2, 3, 3; II, 2, 4, 10; II, 3, 6, 3; II, 7, 12, 5; III, 9, 2.

circumstances it has not been possible to follow the commentary or M. throughout. Though they had to be made the basis, they had in many passages to be set aside in favour of readings of the northern group. In some cases I have also been obliged to make conjectural emendations, which have all been mentioned in the notes. Three Sûtras, I, 8, 16, 13-15, have been left untranslated, because the MSS. offer no safe basis for a conjectural restoration, and the commentary is defective.

Govinda, who, as Dr. Burnell informs me, is said to be a modern writer, seems to have composed his vivarana without the aid of older vṛttis. Though he apparently was well acquainted with the writings belonging to the Taittirīya-veda, with the ritual and with the common law-books, he has not succeeded in explaining all the really difficult passages. Sometimes he is clearly mistaken, and frequently he passes by in silence words or whole Sûtras, the sense or the general bearing of which is by no means certain. Though it would be ungrateful on my part to underrate the importance of his work for my translation, I cannot place him in the same rank with Haradatta, the commentator of Āpastamba and Gautama, and can only regret that no older commentary based on the living tradition of the Baudhāyānīyas has been available. If such a work were found, better readings and better explanations of many difficult passages would probably come to light. With the materials at my disposal the translation has been a work of some difficulty, and in trying to settle the text I have often experienced the feeling of insecurity which comes over the decipherer of a difficult inscription when the facsimiles are bad. The short Adhyāya on adoption, given in the appendix to the Dharma-sûtra, has been taken from the Smārta or Gr̥hya-sûtra. It does not belong to Baudhāyana, but is frequently quoted by the writers on civil law, who wrote in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries of our era.

VASISHTHA.

VAŚISHṬHA.

CHAPTER I.

1. Now, therefore, the desire to know the sacred law for their welfare (should arise) in (initiated) men.
 2. He who knows and follows the (sacred law is called) a righteous man.
 3. He becomes most worthy of praise in this world and after death gains heaven.
 4. The sacred law has been settled by the revealed texts and by the tradition (of the sages).
 5. On failure of (rules given in) these (two sources) the practice of the Śishṭas (has) authority.
 6. But he whose heart is free from desire (is called) a Śishṭa.
 7. (Acts sanctioned by) the sacred law (are those) for which no (worldly) cause is perceptible.
-

I. 1. The word 'now' serves, in this as in analogous cases, various purposes. It marks the beginning of the book, serves as an auspicious invocation (maṅgala), and indicates that something else, the initiation, must precede the study of the sacred law. 'Therefore' means 'because, after initiation, the neophyte is to be taught the prescribed rules regarding personal purification.'—Kṛishṇapandita. For the wording of the Sūtra compare the beginning of Gaimini's Mīmāṃsā-sūtras.

3-6. Gautama I, 1-4; XXVIII, 48.

7. The Sūtra contains a limitation of Sūtra 5. It indicates that the customs of the Śishṭas, for which worldly motives are perceptible, have no authority, and are not to be followed. The principle enunciated is one inculcated by the Mīmāṃsakas (P. M. S.).

8. The country of the Âryas (Âryāvarta) lies to the east of the region where (the river Sarasvatî) disappears, to the west of the Black-forest, to the north of the Pâripâtra (mountains), to the south of the Himâlaya.

9. (According to others it lies to the south of the Himâlaya) and to the north of the Vindhya range (being limited east and west by the two oceans).

10. Acts productive of spiritual merit, and customs which (are approved of) in that country, must be everywhere acknowledged (as authoritative);

11. But not different ones, (i.e. those) of (countries where) laws opposed (to those of Âryāvarta prevail).

I, 3, 3-4). See also Âpastamba I, 1, 4, 5-10; I, 4, 12, 8; and Introduction, p. xxvii. Krishnapandita has misunderstood the Sûtra. He reads, against the MSS., agrihyamânakârano 'dharmaḥ, 'unlawful acts are those for which no motive, i.e. no sacred source such as the Vedas, is perceptible.'

8. The region where the river Sarasvatî disappears is the Pat-tiâlâ district in the Pañgâb. The Pâripâtra mountains belong to the great Vindhya range, and are probably the hills in Mâlva. The position of the Kâlakavana or Black-forest is not accurately known. But it must probably be sought in Bihâr. All the MSS. as well as Krishnapandita read in this Sûtra prâgâdarsanât instead of prâ-gadarsanât, 'to the east of the region where the river Sarasvatî disappears.' This circumstance gains some importance by the fact that the Mahâbhâshya on Pânini II, 4, 10, quotes the same definition of the Âryāvarta, giving, however, instead of adarsanât prâ-gâdarsât, 'to the east of Âdarsa, i.e. the Âdarsa mountains.' It seems to me not improbable that our Sûtra, too, had originally prâgâdarsât, and that some Pandit who knew nothing about the Âdarsa hills, but remembered Manu II, 21, and Baudhâyana I, 1, 25, where the word vinasanât, 'the disappearance of the Sarasvatî,' undoubtedly occurs, added the syllable na and forgot to correct the â, after prâg.

9. The translation follows Krishnapandita's commentary, which recommends itself on account of the analogous definition of Âryāvarta given by Manu II, 22.

11. My translation follows the text given by Krishnapandita and

12. Some (declare the country of the Âryas to be situated) between the (rivers) Gaṅgâ and Yamunâ.

13. Others (state as) an alternative, that spiritual pre-eminence (is found) as far as the black antelope grazes.

14. Now the Bhâllavins quote also (the following) verse in the Nidâna :

15. 'In the west the boundary-river, in the east

B., and the explanation of the former, because it seems to me that the general sense which they give, is the correct one. I feel, however, not certain that the word pratilomakadharmânâm, 'of those countries where opposite laws prevail,' is more than a careless correction. The majority of the MSS. read pratilomakakshadharmânâh (kalpadharmânâh), which by itself is difficult of explanation. But, as the text of the next Sûtra contains an apparently superfluous phrase, I fear, we shall have to admit that the text is here disfigured by corruptions, which with our present MSS. it is impossible to remove with certainty.

12. Kṛishnapandita reads this Sûtra 'etad âryâvartam ityâkashate gaṅgâyamunayor antaretyeke,' and takes it as one sentence, the subject of which is 'eke.' I feel no doubt that this explanation is utterly untenable, and that the first four words have nothing to do with this Sûtra, the second part of which occurs also in the Bauddhâyana Dharma-sûtra I, 1, 27. My opinion is that they originally belonged to Sûtra 11, though the state of the MSS. at my disposal does not allow me to say how Sûtra 11 has to be corrected. The general sense of Sûtra 12 is, however, perfectly certain.

13. Manu II, 23; Yâgyñavalkya I, 2. It deserves to be noted that the black antelope (black-buck), Oryx cervicapra, selects for its home the well-cultivated, rich plains of India only, and is entirely wanting in the sandy, mountainous or forest districts, which are now, just as in ancient times, the portion of the aboriginal tribes.

14. Regarding the Bhâllavins, see Max Müller, History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 193, 364. Kṛishnapandita thinks that Nidâna means desanirnaya, 'the disquisition on the countries,' which is the title of a section which occurs in most modern compilations on law. But it will be safer to take it as the name of a Vedic work, identical with or similar to that quoted in Saunaka's Brâhaddevatâ, Weber, Hist. Ind. Lit., p. 81.

15. Sindhur vidhârâni or vidharâni, as B. reads, cannot be the region where the sun rises,—as far as the black antelope wanders (between these two limits), so far spiritual pre-eminence (is found).’

16. ‘Those religious acts which men, deeply versed in the knowledge of the three Vedas and acquainted with the sacred law, declare to be lawful, (are efficient) for purifying oneself and others.’

17. Manu has declared that the (peculiar) laws of countries, castes, and families (may be followed) in the absence of (rules of) the revealed texts.

18. Sinful men are, he who sleeps at sunrise or at sunset, he who has deformed nails or black teeth, he whose younger brother was married first, he who married before his elder brother, the husband of a younger sister married before the elder, the husband of an elder sister whose younger sister was married first, he who extinguishes the sacred fires, (and) he who forgets the Veda through neglect of the daily recitation.

taken with Kṛishṇapandita, as ‘the ocean,’ because in the latter sense sindhu is a masculine. It must be a boundary-river, probably the Sarasvatī. By sūryasyodana, ‘the region where the sun rises,’ the udayagiri or ‘mountain of the east’ may possibly be meant.

16. This verse, too, is marked as a quotation by the concluding word iti, though it is not necessary that it should be taken as a quotation from the Nidāna. Here, and in the sequel verses ending in iti are marked as quotations by hyphens.

17. Manu VII, 203 ; VIII, 41 ; Gautama XI, 20. Gāti, ‘castes,’ which sometimes, and perhaps as appropriately, has been translated by ‘tribes,’ denotes in my opinion those numerous subdivisions of the four great varṇas, which we now find all over India, and which can be shown to have existed for a very long time. Usually the word ‘caste’ is also applied to them.

18. Kṛishṇapandita explains virahā, ‘he who extinguishes the sacred fires,’ by ‘the destroyer of his sons or of his spiritual clients’

19. They state that there are five mortal sins (mahâpâtaka),

20. (Viz. violating) a Guru's bed, drinking (the spirituous liquor called) surâ, slaying a learned Brâhmana, stealing the gold of a Brâhmana, and associating with outcasts,

21. Either by (entering into) spiritual or matrimonial (connexion with them).

22. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He who during a year associates with an outcast becomes (likewise) an outcast; not by sacrificing for him, by teaching him or by (forming) a matrimonial (alliance with him), but by using the same carriage or seat.'

23. A minor offence causing loss of caste (upa-pâtaka, is committed by him) who (after beginning an Agnihotra sacrifice) forsakes the sacred fires, and by him who offends a Guru, by an atheist, by him who takes his livelihood from atheists, and by him who sells the Soma (plant).

24. Three wives (are permitted) to a Brâhmana according to the order of the castes, two to a Kshatriya, one to a Vaisya and to a Sûdra.

(yagamâna); but the rules given below, XX, 11, and XXI, 27, in the section on penances, confirm the explanation given above.

20. Vishnu XXXV, 1-2. Guru means here the father, see below, XX, 15.

21. Vishnu XXXV, 3-5. Spiritual connexion, i.e. becoming the teacher or priest of an outcast, or his pupil or spiritual client (yagamâna).

22. Identical with Manu XI, 181. It must be understood that spiritual or matrimonial connexion with an outcast causes immediate degradation, as Vishnu states expressly.

23. Vishnu XXXVII, 6, 31; Gautama XXI, 11. Regarding the precise meaning of pratigahnuyât, 'offends,' see below, XXI, 27.

24-25. Manu III, 13; Yâgñavalkya I, 57; Pâraskara Grîhyasûtra I, 4, 8-11.

25. Some declare (that twice-born men may marry) even a female of the Sûdra caste, like those (other wives), without (the recitation of) Vedic texts.

26. Let him not act thus.

27. For in consequence of such (a marriage) the degradation of the family certainly ensues, and after death the loss of heaven.

28. There are six marriage-rites,

29. (Viz.) that of Brahman (brâhma), that of the gods (daiva), that of the Rishis (ârsha), that of the Gandharvas (gândharva), that of the Kshatriyas (kshâtra), and that of men (mânusha).

30. If the father, pouring out a libation of water, gives his (daughter) to a suitor, that (is called) the Brâhma-rite.

31. If (the father) gives his daughter, decking her with ornaments, to an officiating priest, whilst a sacrifice is being performed, that is called the Daiva-rite.

32. And (if the father gives his daughter) for a cow and a bull, (that is called) the Ârsha-rite.

33. If a lover takes a loving female of equal caste, that (is called) the Gândharva-rite.

34. If they forcibly abduct (a damsel), destroying (her relatives) by strength (of arms), that (is called) the Kshâtra-rite.

35. If, after making a bargain (with the father, a 26-27. Manu III, 14-19. 28. Âpastamba II, 5, 11, 17-20.

30. Vishnu XXIV, 19; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 1.

31. Vishnu XXIV, 20; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 2.

32. Vishnu XXIV, 21; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 3.

33. Vishnu XXIV, 23; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 5.

34. Vishnu XXIV, 25; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 8.

35. Vishnu XXIV, 24; Âsvalâyana Grihya-sûtra I, 6, 6.

suitor) marries (a damsel) purchased for money, that (is called) the Mânusha-rite.

36. The purchase (of a wife) is mentioned in the following passage of the Veda, 'Therefore one hundred (cows) besides a chariot should be given to the father of the bride.'

37. (It is stated) in (the following passage of) the Kâturmâsyas, 'She (forsooth) who has been bought by her husband (commits sin, as) afterwards she unites herself with strangers.'

38. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Lost learning comes back ; when the family is lost all is lost. Even a horse becomes estimable on account of its pedigree ; therefore men marry wives descended from an (unblemished) family.'

39. The three (lower) castes shall live according to the teaching of the Brâhmana.

36. Sâṅkhâya Grîhya-sûtra I, 14 ; Pâraskara Grîhya-sûtra I, 8, 18 ; Âpastamba II, 6, 13, 12. Though Vasishṭha's quotation is less complete than Âpastamba's, still the following Sûtras show that he knew the conclusion of the passage, and does not take it as an authority for the sale of a daughter.

37. Kṛishṇapandita makes a mistake by connecting the word 'kâturmâsyeshu' with the next Sûtra. He is right in saying that 'the Kâturmâsyas' is the name of a book. It is, however, not a separate work, but the kânda or section of a Vedic work treating of the Kâturmâsya sacrifices (see Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 355). The particular work from which our quotation has been taken, is either the Maitrâyâṇiya Samhitâ, or the Kâṭhaka. For, as Dr. von Schroeder informs me, Maitrâyâṇiya Samhitâ I, 10, 11 reads 'anṛitam vâ eshâ karoti yâ patyuh krîtâ satyathânyais karati,' and the title of the kânda is Kâturmâsyâni. Professor Weber, Ind. Stud. V, 407, has found the same words in the Kâturmâsya section of the Kâṭhaka XXXVI, 5. In the translation I have added the beginning of the passage which Vasishṭha omits, according to the Maitrâyâṇiya Samhitâ.

39-41. Gautama XI, 25-27.

40. The Brâhmana shall declare their duties,
 41. And the king shall govern them accordingly.
 42. But a king who rules in accordance with the sacred law, may take the sixth part of the wealth (of his subjects),
 43. Except from Brâhmanas.
 44. It has been declared in the Veda, 'But he obtains the sixth part of (the merit which Brâhmanas gain by) sacrifices and charitable works.'
 45. (It is further stated in the Veda), 'The Brâhmana makes the Veda rich; the Brâhmana saves from misfortune; therefore the Brâhmana shall not be made a source of subsistence. Soma is his king.'
 46. Further (another passage says), 'After death bliss (awaits the king who does not oppress Brâhmanas).'

42. Vishnu III, 22-25. Though the ambiguous word dhana, 'wealth,' is used in the text, it seems not doubtful that Vasishtha alludes to the land-tax, which generally consists of one sixth of the produce.

43. Vishnu III, 26.

44. Vishnu III, 27-28. Pûrta, 'the merit gained by charitable works,' i. e. by planting trees, digging wells, and so forth. The words 'iti ha,' placed at the end of the Sûtra, indicate that it is a quotation, and that vigñâyate, 'it is declared in the Veda,' has to be understood from Sûtra 46. Gautama XI, 11, too, alleges that the rule is based on a Vedic passage.

45. Satapatha-brâhmana V, 4, 2, 3. Krishnapandita's division of the quotation into several Sûtras is unnecessary. His explanation of anâdya, which he takes to mean 'the first of all,' is wrong. He asserts that the Brâhmana is said 'to make the Veda rich,' because by sacrificing and so forth he fulfils its object and protects it. But the phrase is probably corrupt. If it is said that Soma is the king of the Brâhmanas, the object is to indicate that an earthly king is not their master, see Gautama XI, 1.

CHAPTER II.

1. There are four castes (varṇa), Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sûdras.

2. Three castes, Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas, (are called) twice-born.

3. Their first birth is from their mother; the second from the investiture with the sacred girdle. In that (second birth) the Sâvitṛī is the mother, but the teacher is said to be the father.

4. They call the teacher father, because he gives instruction in the Veda.

5. They quote also (the following passage from the Veda) to the same (effect): 'Of two kinds, forsooth, is the virile energy of a man learned in the Vedas, that which (resides) above the navel and the other which below (the navel) descends downwards. Through that which (resides) above the navel, his offspring is produced, when he initiates Brâhmanas, when he teaches them, when he causes them to offer oblations, when he makes them holy. By that which resides below the navel the children of his body are produced. Therefore they never say to a Srotṛiya, who teaches the Veda, "Thou art destitute of offspring."'

II. 1-2. Vishṇu II, 1-2; Manu X, 4.

3. Identical with Manu II, 169^a, 170^a, and Vishṇu XXVIII, 37-38. The Sâvitṛī or the verse addressed to Savitṛī is found Rig-veda III, 62, 10.

4. Gautama I, 10; Manu II, 171.

5. The reading tathâpyudâharanti, which several of my MSS. give, seems to me preferable to Krishnapandita's udâharati. Krishnapandita explains sâdhu karoti, 'makes them holy,' by adhyâtmam upadisati, 'teaches them transcendental knowledge.'

6. Hârta also quotes (the following verse): 'No religious rite can be performed by a (child) before he has been girt with the sacred girdle, since he is on a level with a Sûdra before his (new) birth from the Vêda.'

7. (The above prohibition refers to all rites) except those connected with libations of water, (the exclamation) Svadhâ, and the manes.

8. Sacred learning approached a Brâhmana (and said to him), 'Preserve me, I am thy treasure, reveal me not to a scorner, nor to a wicked man, nor to one of uncontrolled passions: so (preserved) I shall become strong.'

9. 'Reveal me, O Brâhmana, as to the keeper of thy treasure, to him whom thou shalt know to be pure, attentive, intelligent, and chaste, who will not offend thee nor revile thee.'

10. '(That man) who fills his ears with truth, who frees him from pain and confers immortality upon him, (the pupil) shall consider as his father and mother; him he must never grieve nor revile.'

11. 'As those Brâhmanas who, after receiving instruction, do not honour their teacher by their speech, in their hearts or by their acts, will not be profitable to their teacher, even so that sacred learning (which they acquired) will not profit them.'

6. Vishnu XXVIII, 40. Instead of Krishnapandita's 'yâvadvedo na gâyate,' 'yâvadvede na gâyate,' which occurs in several MSS. and in the parallel passages of Manu II, 172 and other Smritis, must be read.

7. Gautama II, 5. The rites referred to are the funeral rites.

8-9. Vishnu XXIX, 9-10, and introduction, p. xxiii; Nirukta II, 4.

10. Vishnu XXX, 47.

12. 'As fire consumes dry grass, even so the Veda, asked for, (but) not honoured, (destroys the enquirer). Let him not proclaim the Veda to that man, who does not show him honour according to his ability.'

13. The (lawful) occupations of a Brâhmana are six,

14. Studying the Veda, teaching, sacrificing for himself, sacrificing for others, giving alms, and accepting gifts.

15. (The lawful occupations) of a Kshatriya are three,

16. Studying, sacrificing for himself, and bestowing gifts ;

17. And his peculiar duty is to protect the people with his weapons ; let him gain his livelihood thereby.

18. (The lawful occupations) of a Vaisya are the same (as those mentioned above, Sûtra 16),

19. Besides, agriculture, trading, tending cattle, and lending money at interest,

20. To serve those (superior castes) has been fixed (as the means of livelihood for a Sûdra.

21. (Men of) all (castes) may wear their hair arranged according to the customs fixed (for their family), or allow it to hang down excepting the lock on the crown of the head.

13. Krishnapandita wrongly connects the word brâhmanasya with the next Sûtra. For this and the next seven Sûtras, compare Vishnu II, 4-14.

14. Krishnapandita by mistake leaves out the word 'dânam.'

20. I read 'teshâm parikaryâ,' with the majority of the MSS., instead of Krishnapandita's 'teshâm ka parikaryâ.'

21. In illustration of this Sûtra Krishnapandita quotes a verse of Laugâkshi, which states that Brâhmanas belonging to the Vasishtha family wore the top-lock on the right side of the head, and the members of the Atri family allowed it to hang down on

22. Those who are unable to live by their own lawful occupation may adopt (that of) the next inferior (caste),
23. But never (that of a) higher (caste).
24. (A Brâhmaṇa and a Kshatriya) who have resorted to a Vaisya's mode of living and maintain themselves by trade (shall not sell) stones, salt, hempen (cloth), silk, linen (cloth), and skins,
25. Nor any kind of dyed cloth,
26. Nor prepared food, flowers, fruit, roots, perfumes, substances (used for) flavouring (food); nor water, the juice extracted from plants; nor Soma, weapons, poison; nor flesh, nor milk, nor preparations from it, iron, tin, lac, and lead,
27. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'By (selling) flesh, lac, and salt a Brâhmaṇa at once becomes an outcast; by selling milk he becomes (equal to) a Sûdra after three days.'
28. Among tame animals those with uncloven hoofs, and those that have an abundance of hair, (must not be sold), nor any wild animals, (nor) birds, nor beasts that have tusks (or fangs).
29. Among the various kinds of grain they mention sesamum (as forbidden).

both sides, while the Bhrîguś shaved their heads, and the Âṅgirasas wore five locks (kûṇḍā) on the crown of the head. Cf. Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., p. 53.

22. Vishṇu II, 15.

24. For this and the following four Sûtras, see Gautama VII, 8-21.

26. Rasâḥ, 'substances used for flavouring,' i. e. 'molasses, sugar-cane, sugar, and the like.'—Kṛishnapandita. See also note on Gautama VII, 9.

27. Identical with Manu X, 92.

29. Vishṇu LIV, 18; Âpastamba I, 7, 20, 13. Kṛishnapandita wrongly connects this Sûtra with the preceding one.

30. Now they quote also (the following verse) :
 ' If he applies sesamum to any other purpose, but food, anointing, and charitable gifts, he will be born again as a worm and, together with his ancestors, be plunged into his own ordure.'

31. Or, at pleasure, they may sell (sesamum), if they themselves have produced it by tillage.

32. For that purpose he shall plough before breakfast with two bulls whose noses have not been pierced.

33. (If he ploughs) in the hot season, he shall water (his beasts even in the morning).

34. The plough is attended by strong males, provided with a useful share and with a handle (to be held) by the drinker of Soma ; that raises (for him) a cow, a sheep, a stout damsel, and a swift horse for the chariot.

35. The plough is attended by strong males, i. e. is attended by strong men and bullocks, provided with a useful share—for its share is useful (because) with the share it raises, i. e. pierces deep—and provided with a handle for the drinker of Soma,—for Soma reaches him,—possessing a handle for him. That raises a cow, a sheep, goats, horses, mules, donkeys and camels, and a stout damsel, i. e. a beautiful, useful maiden in the flower of her youth.

36. For how could the plough raise (anything for him) if he did not sell grain ?

30. Manu X, 91.

31. Manu X, 90.

34. Vâgasaneyi-samhitâ XII, 71. The translation follows the explanation given in the next Sûtra as closely as possible, though the latter is without doubt erroneous. The purpose for which Vasishtha introduces it, is to show that a Vedic text permits agriculture to a Brâhmana who offers Soma-sacrifices.

37. Substances used for flavouring may be bartered for (other) substances of the same kind, be it for one more valuable or for one worth less.

38. But salt must never (be exchanged) for (other) substances used for flavouring (food).

39. It is permitted to barter sesamum, rice, cooked food, learning, and slaves (each for its own kind and the one for the other).

✓ 40. A Brâhmaṇa and a Kshatriya shall not lend (anything at interest acting like) usurers.

41. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'He who acquiring property cheap, gives it for a high price, is called a usurer and blamed among those who recite the Veda.'

42. '(Brahman) weighed in the scales the crime of killing a learned Brâhmaṇa against (the crime of) usury; the slayer of the Brâhmaṇa remained at the top, the usurer sank downwards.'

43. Or, at pleasure, they may lend to a person who entirely neglects his sacred duties, and is exceedingly wicked,

44. Gold (taking) double (its value on repayment, and) grain trebling (the original price).

37-39. Gautama VII, 16-21.

40. Manu X, 117. Krishnapandita reads with MS. B., vârdhushim na dadyâtâm, and explains it by vridddhim naiva prayogayetâm, 'they shall not take interest.' I read with the other MSS. vârdhushî, and translate that term by 'usurers.' Below, Sûtra 42, vârdhushi is used likewise in this its usual sense.

43. Manu X, 117.

44-47. Vishnu VI, 11-17; Colebrooke I, Dig. LXVI, where 'silver and gems' have been added after gold, and rasâḥ, 'flavouring substances,' been translated by 'fluids.' The translation differs also in other respects, because there the Sûtras stand by themselves, while here the nouns in Sûtras 44 and 47 are governed by the preceding dadyâtâm, 'they may lend.' They, i. e. a Brâhmaṇa

45. (The case of) flavouring substances has been explained by (the rule regarding) grain,

46. As well as (the case of) flowers, roots, and fruit.

47. (They may lend) what is sold by weight, (taking) eight times (the original value on repayment).

48. Now they quote also (the following verses):
'Two in the hundred, three and four and five, as has been declared in the Smṛiti, he may take as interest by the month according to the order of the castes.'

49. 'But the king's death shall stop the interest on money (lent);'

50. 'And after the coronation of (a new) king the capital grows again.'

and a Kshatriya. The rule, of course, refers to other castes also, and to those cases where no periodical interest is taken, but the loan returned in kind.

47. The Ratnākara quoted by Colebrooke loc. cit. takes 'what is sold by weight' to be 'camphor and the like.' Kṛishnapandita thinks that 'clarified butter, honey, spirituous liquor, oil, molasses, and salt' are meant. But most of these substances fall under the term rasâḥ, 'flavouring substances.' The proper explanation of the words seems to be, 'any other substance not included among those mentioned previously, which is sold by weight.'

48. Vishṇu VI, 2, and especially Manu VIII, 142. The lowest rate of interest is to be taken from the highest caste, and it becomes greater with decreasing respectability. According to Kṛishnapandita and the commentators on the parallel passage of Vishṇu, Manu, and other Smṛitis, this rule applies only to loans for which no security is given—a statement which is doubtlessly correct.

49-50. Both the reading and the sense of this verse, which in some MSS. is wanting, are somewhat doubtful. I read with my best MSS.,

râgâ tu mṛitabhâvena dravyavṛiddhim vinâsayet ।

punâ râgâbhishekena dravyamûlam ka vardhate ॥ and consider that it gives a rule, ordering all money transactions to be stopped during the period which intervenes between the death of a king and the coronation of his successor. I am, however, unable to point out any parallel passages confirming this

51. 'Hear the interest for a money-lender declared by the words of Vasishtha, five mîshâs for twenty (kârshâpanas may be taken every month); thus the law is not violated.'

CHAPTER III.

1. (Brâhmanas) who neither study nor teach the Veda nor keep sacred fires become equal to Sûdras;

2. And they quote a verse of Manu on this (subject), 'A twice-born man, who not having studied the Veda applies himself to other (and worldly study), soon falls, even while living, to the condition of a Sûdra, and his descendants after him.'

3. '(A twice-born man) who does not know the view. Krishnapandita's text shows two important various readings, 'bhrâtibhâvena' and 'râgâbhîshikena,' which I think are merely conjectures, unsupported by the authority of MSS. He explains the verse as follows: 'The king shall destroy, i. e. himself not take, the interest on money by giving [it away] as a salary. But, after thus giving away interest received, he may increase his capital by [an extra tax imposed on] the cultivators, i. e. take from them the highest rate, consisting of one-fourth of the produce.'

51. Gautama XII, 29; Colebrooke I, Dig. XXIV. The rule given in this Sûtra refers, as Krishnapandita correctly states, to loans, for which security is given. The rate is $1\frac{1}{4}$ per cent for the month, or 15 per annum; see the note to Gautama loc. cit. Manu, VIII, 140, especially mentions that this rate is prescribed by Vasishtha.

III. 1. I read Sûdrasadharmânâh, 'equal to Sûdras,' instead of sûdrakarmânâh, which occurs in MS. B. only. Krishnapandita explains the latter reading by sûdravat karma yeshu te sûdravatte-shvâkaranîyamityarthaâh, 'shall be treated like Sûdras.' But the verses quoted in the following Sûtras show that the former reading is the better one.

2. Identical with Manu II, 168.

3. This and the following nine verses are, as the word 'iti,' which the best MSS. give at the end of Sûtra 12, quotations.

Veda (can)not be (called) a Brâhmaṇa, nor he who lives by trade, nor he who (lives as) an actor, nor he who obeys a Sûdra's commands, nor (he who like) a thief (takes the property of others), nor he who makes his living by the practice of medicine.'

4. 'The king shall punish that village where Brâhmaṇas, unobservant of their sacred duties and ignorant of the Veda, subsist by begging; for it feeds robbers.'

5. 'Many thousands (of Brâhmaṇas) cannot form a (legal) assembly (for declaring the sacred law), if they have not fulfilled their sacred duties, are unacquainted with the Veda, and subsist only by the name of their caste.'

6. 'That sin which dunces, perplexed by ignorance and unacquainted with the sacred law, declare (to be duty) shall fall, increased a hundredfold, on those who propound it.'

7. 'What four or (even) three (Brâhmaṇas) who have completely studied the Vedas proclaim, that must be distinctly recognised as the sacred law, not (the decision) of a thousand fools.'

8. 'Offerings to the gods and to the manes must always be given to a Srotriya alone. For gifts

Anṛik, 'who does not know the Veda,' means, literally, 'unacquainted with the Rig-veda.'

5. This verse, which is identical with Manu XII, 114, and the next two are intended to show that a Brâhmaṇa who neglects the study of the Veda, is unfit to decide points of the sacred law, which are not settled either by the Smṛiti or the Sruti, and become a member of a parishad or 'Pañik.'

6. The verse contains a better version of Manu XII, 115.

7. Regarding the term Vedapârâga, see Gautama V, 20, note. Itareshâm, 'fools,' means literally, 'different from (those who have mastered the Vedas).'

bestowed on a man unacquainted with the Veda, reach neither the ancestors nor the gods.'

9. 'If a fool lives even in one's house and a (Brâhmana) deeply learned in the Veda lives at a great distance, the learned man shall receive the gift. The sin of neglecting (a Brâhmana is not incurred) in (the case of) a fool.'

10. 'The offence of neglecting a Brâhmana cannot be committed against a twice-born man who is ignorant of the Veda. For (in offering sacrifices) one does not pass by a brilliant fire and throw the oblations into ashes.'

11. 'An elephant made of wood, an antelope made of leather, and a Brâhmana ignorant of the Veda, those three have nothing but the name (of their kind).'

12. 'Those kingdoms, where ignorant men eat the food of the learned, will be visited by drought; or (some other) great evil will befall (them).'

13. If anybody finds treasure (the owner of) which is not known, the king shall take it, giving one sixth to the finder.

14. If a Brâhmana who follows the six (lawful) occupations, finds it, the king shall not take it.

9-10. Regarding the crime of 'neglecting a Brâhmana,' see Manu VIII, 392-393, where fines are prescribed for neglecting to invite to dinner worthy neighbours and Srotriyas.

10. A learned Brâhmana resembles a sacrificial fire, see e.g. below, XXX, 2-3; Âpastamba I, 1, 3, 44.

11. Manu II, 157. Krishnapandita and MS. B. give the ungrammatical construction which occurs in Manu and other Dharmaśāstras, while the other MSS. read more correctly, 'yastā kâśh/kamayo h. yastā karmamayo m.' &c.

13-14. This rule agrees exactly with Gautama X, 45; see also Vishnu III, 56-61. The matter is introduced here in order to show the prerogative of a learned Brâhmana. Regarding the six lawful occupations, see above, II, 13-14.

15. They declare that the slayer commits no crime by killing an assassin.

16. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'An incendiary, likewise a poisoner, one who holds a weapon in his hand (ready to kill), a robber, he who takes away land, and he who abducts (another man's) wife, these six are called assassins (âtatâyin).'

17. 'He may slay an assassin who comes with the intention of slaying, even though he knows the whole Veda together with the Upanishads; by that (act) he (does) not (incur the guilt of) the slayer of a Brâhmana.'

18. 'He who slays an assassin learned in the Veda and belonging to a noble family, does not incur by that act the guilt of the murderer of a learned Brâhmana; (in) that (case) fury recoils upon fury.'

19. Persons who sanctify the company are, a Tri-nâkiketa, one who keeps five fires, a Trisuparna, one who (knows the texts required for) the four sacrifices (called Asvamedha, Purushamedha, Sarvamedha, and Pitrimedha), one who knows the Vâgasaneyi-sâkhâ of the White Yagur-veda, one who knows the six Ângas, the son of a female married according to the Brâhma-rite, one who knows the first part of the Sâma-veda Samhitâ, one who sings the Gyeshtha-sâman, one who knows the Samhitâ and the Brâhmana, one who studies (the treatises on) the sacred law, one whose ancestors to the ninth degree, both

15. Vishnu V, 189-192. The connexion of this subject with the main topic consists therein that it furnishes an instance where learning does not protect a Brâhmana.

17. I read with the majority of the MSS., 'api vedântapâragam,' instead of 'vedântagam rane,' as Krishnapandita has.

19. For the explanations of the terms left untranslated, see the on the mother's and on the father's side, are distinctly known to have been Srotriyas, and learned men and Snâtakas.

20. (Four students of) the four Vedas, one who knows the Mîmâmsâ, one who knows the Aṅgas, a teacher of the sacred law, and three eminent men who are in three (different) orders, (compose) a (legal) assembly consisting at least of ten (members).

21. He who initiates (a pupil) and teaches him the whole Veda is called the teacher (âkârya).

22. But he who (teaches) a portion (of the Veda only is called) the sub-teacher (upâdhyâya);

23. So is he who (teaches) the Aṅgas of the Veda.

24. A Brâhmana and a Vaisya may take up arms in self-defence, and in (order to prevent) a confusion of the castes.

25. But that (trade of arms) is the constant (duty) of a Kshatriya, because he is appointed to protect (the people).

26. Having washed his feet and his hands up to note on Âpastamba II, 8, 17, 22; Gautama XV, 28; and the notes on Vishnu LXXXIII, 2-21. Regarding the meaning of Khandoga, 'one who knows the first part of the Sâma-veda Samhitâ,' see Weber, Hist. Ind. Lit., p. 63, note 59. 'One who knows the Samhitâ and the Brâhmana, i. e. of the Rig-veda.'—Krishnapandita. Regarding the various classes of Snâtakas, see Âpastamba I, 11, 30, 1-3.

20. Manu XII, 111. Krishnapandita reads kâturvidyas trikalpî ka, 'one who knows the four Vedas and one who knows three different Kalpa-sûtras.' My translation follows the reading of the MSS., kâturvidyam vikalpî ka, which is corroborated by the parallel passage of Baudhâyana I, 1, 8, 'kâturvidyam vikalpî ka.' The explanation of the latter word is derived from Govindasvâmin. 'Men who are in three orders, i. e. a student, a householder, and ascetic,' see Gautama XXVIII, 49.

21-23. Vishnu XXIX, 1-2.

24. Gautama VII, 25.

25. Vishnu II, 6.

26-34. Vishnu LXII, 1-9.

the wrist, and sitting with his face turned towards the east or towards the north, he shall thrice sip water out of the Tīrtha sacred to Brahman, (i.e.) the part of the hand above the root of the thumb, without uttering any sound;

27. He shall twice wipe (his mouth with the root of the thumb);

28. He shall touch the cavities (of the head) with water;

29. He shall pour water on his head and on the left hand;

30. He shall not sip water while walking, standing, lying down or bending forward.

31. A Brāhmaṇa (becomes pure) by (sipping) water, free from bubbles and foam, that reaches his heart,

32. But a Kshatriya by (sipping water) that reaches his throat,

33. A Vaisya by (sipping water) that wets his palate,

34. A woman and a Sūdra by merely touching water (with the lips).

35. Water (for sipping may) even (be taken) out of a hole in the ground, if it is fit to slake the thirst of cows.

36. (He shall not purify himself with water) which has been defiled with colours, perfumes, or flavouring substances, nor with such as is collected in unclean places.

30. Krishnapandita is probably right in thinking that the word vâ, 'or,' inserted before 'bending forward,' is intended to forbid other improper acts, gestures or postures, which are reprehended in other Smritis.

35. Vishnu XXIII, 43; Manu V, 128.

36. 'Collected in unclean places, e.g. in a burial-ground.'—Krishnapandita.

37. Drops (of saliva) falling from the mouth, which do not touch a limb of the body, do not make (a man) impure.

38. If, after having sipped water, he sleeps, eats, sneezes, drinks, weeps or bathes, or puts on a dress, he must again sip water,

39. Likewise, if he touches (that part of) the lips on which no hair grows.

40. No defilement is caused by the hair of the moustache (entering the mouth).

41. If (remnants of food) adhere to the teeth, (they are pure) like the teeth, and he is purified by swallowing those which (become detached) in the mouth.

42. He is not defiled by the drops which fall on his feet, while somebody gives to others water for sipping; they are stated to be equally (clean) as the ground.

43. If, while occupied with eatables, he touches any impure substance, then he shall place that thing (which he holds in his hand) on the ground, sip water and afterwards again use it.

44. Let him sprinkle with water all objects (the purity of) which may be doubtful.

45. 'Both wild animals killed by dogs, and fruit thrown by birds (from the tree), what has been spoilt by children, and what has been handled by women,'

37. Gautama I, 41.

38. Gautama I, 37.

39. Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 10.

40. Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 11.

41. Gautama I, 38-40.

42. Manu V, 142.

43. Vishnu XXIII, 55. 'Occupied with eatables,' i.e. 'eating.'—Krishnapanâta.

45. Vishnu XXIII, 50. This and the following two Sûtras are a quotation, as appears from the use of the particle iti at the end of Sûtra 47.

46. 'A vendible commodity tendered for sale and what is not dirtied by gnats and flies that have settled on it,'

47. 'Likewise water collected on the ground that quenches the thirst of cows,—enumerating all these things, the Lord of created beings has declared them to be pure.'

48. Anything defiled by unclean (substances) becomes pure when the stains and the smell have been removed by water and earth.

49. (Objects) made of metal must be scoured with ashes, those made of clay should be thoroughly heated by fire, those made of wood should be planed, and (cloth) made of thread should be washed.

50. Stones and gems (should be treated) like objects made of metal,

51. Conch-shells and pearl-shells like gems,

52. (Objects made of) bone like wood,

53. Ropes, chips (of bamboo), and leather become pure (if treated) like clothes,

54. (Objects) made of fruits, (if rubbed) with (a brush of) cow-hair,

55. Linen cloth, (if smeared) with a paste of yellow mustard (and washed afterwards with water).

46. Manu V, 129.

47. Vishnu XXIII, 43.

48. Gautama I, 42. For the explanation of the term amedhya, 'unclean substances,' see Manu V, 135, and the passage from Devala translated in Professor Jolly's note on Vishnu XXIII, 38.

49. Gautama I, 29; Vishnu XXIII, 26, 33, 27, 18.

50-51. Gautama I, 30.

52. Gautama I, 31 and note; Vishnu XXIII, 4.

53. Gautama I, 33.

54. Vishnu XXIII, 28. Cups and bottles made of the shell of the cocoa-nut or of the Bilva (Bel) fruit and of bottle-gourds are meant.

55. Vishnu XXIII, 22.

56. But land becomes pure, according to the degree of defilement, by sweeping (the defiled spot), by smearing it with cowdung, by scraping it, by sprinkling (water) or by heaping (pure earth) on (it).

57. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Land is purified by these four methods, by digging, burning, scraping, being trodden on by cows, and fifthly by being smeared with cowdung.'

58. 'A woman is purified by her monthly discharge, a river by its current, brass by (being scoured with) ashes, and an earthen pot by another burning.'

59. 'But an earthen vessel which has been defiled by spirituous liquor, urine, ordure, phlegm, pus, tears, or blood cannot be purified even by another burning.'

60. 'The body is purified by water, the internal organ by truth, the soul by sacred learning and austerities, and the understanding by knowledge.'

61. Gold is purified by water alone,

62. Likewise silver,

56. Vishnu XXIII, 56-57. Krishnapandita takes upakarana, 'heaping (pure earth) on (the defiled spot),' to mean 'lighting a fire on it' or 'digging it up.' The translation given above rests on the parallel passages of Gautama I, 32, and of Baudhâya I, 5, 52, bhûmes tu sammârganaprokshanopalepanâvastaranopalekhanair-yathâsthânâṃ doshaviśeshât prâyatyaṃ, 'land becomes pure, according to the degree of the defilement, by sweeping the (defiled) spot, by sprinkling it, by smearing it with cowdung, by scattering (pure earth) on it, or by scraping it.' Bhûmi, 'land,' includes also the mud-floor of a house or of a verandah.

57. Some MSS. have instead of gharshât, 'by scraping,' varshât, 'by rain;' see also note on Gautama I, 32.

58. Vishnu XXII, 91.

59. Vishnu XXIII, 5.

60. Identical with Manu V, 109, and Vishnu XXII, 92.

61-62. Vishnu XXIII, 7. Krishnapandita points out that these

63. Copper is cleansed by acids.
64. The Tīrtha sacred to the Gods lies at the root of the little finger,
65. That sacred to the Rishis in the middle of the fingers,
66. That sacred to Men at the tips of the fingers,
67. That sacred to Agni (fire) in the middle of the hand,
68. That sacred to the Manes between the forefinger and the thumb.
69. He shall honour (his food at) the evening and morning meals (saying), 'It pleases me,'
70. At meals in honour of the Manes (saying), 'I have dined well,'
71. At (a dinner given on the occasion of) rites procuring prosperity (saying), 'It is perfect.'

CHAPTER IV.

1. The four castes are distinguished by their origin and by particular sacraments.
2. There is also the following passage of the Veda, 'The Brāhmaṇa was his mouth, the Kshatriya formed his arms, the Vaisya his thighs; the Sūdra was born from his feet.'
3. It has been declared in (the following passage two rules and that given in the next Sūtra refer to cases in which gold, silver, and copper have not been stained by impure substances.

63. Vishṇu XXIII, 25.

64-68. Vishṇu LXII, 1-4; Āpastamba II, 2, 3, 11.

69. Vishṇu LXVIII, 42. The Sūtra is also intended to prescribe that the number of the daily meals is two only.

70. Manu III, 251.

71. The rites referred to are, according to Krishṇapandita, marriages, feeding Brāhmaṇas, Nāndīśrāddhas, and the like.

IV. 1. Manu I, 87.

2. Rig-veda X, 90, 12.

of) the Veda that (a Sûdra) shall not receive the sacraments, 'He created the Brâhmana with the Gâyatrî (metre), the Kshatriya with the Trishûbh, the Vaisya with the Gagatî, the Sûdra without any metre.'

4. Truthfulness, suppression of anger, liberality, abstention from injuring living beings, and the procreation of offspring (are duties common to) all (castes).

5. The Mânava (Sûtra states), 'Only when he worships the manes and the gods, or honours guests, he may certainly do injury to animals.'

6. 'On offering a Madhuparka (to a guest), at a sacrifice, and at the rites in honour of the manes, but on these occasions only may an animal be slain ; that (rule) Manu proclaimed.'

4. Vishnu II, 17.

5. Mânavam, 'the Mânava (Sûtra),' means literally 'a work proclaimed by Manu' (manunâ proktam). It is probable that the work referred to by Vasishtha is the lost Dharma-sûtra of the Mânava Sâkhâ, which is a subdivision of the Maitrâyanîyas, and on which the famous metrical Mânava Dharmaśāstra is based. The words of the Sûtra may either be a direct quotation or a summary of the opinion given in the Mânava-sûtra. I think the former supposition the more probable one, and believe that not only Sûtra 5, but also Sûtras 6-8 have been taken bodily from the ancient Dharma-sûtra. For Sûtra 6 agrees literally with a verse of the metrical Manusmṛiti, and at the end of Sûtra 8 several MSS. have the word iti, the characteristic mark that a quotation is finished, while the language of Sûtra 8 is more antiquated than Vasishtha's usual style. If my view is correct, it follows that the lost Mânava Dharma-sûtra consisted, like nearly all the known works of this class, partly of prose and partly of verse.

6. Identical with Manu V, 41; Vishnu LI, 64; and Sâṅkhâ-yana Grihya-sûtra II, 16, 1. I take pitṛdaivata, against Kulûka's and Krishṇapandita's view, as a bahuvrîhi compound, and dissolve it by pitaro daivatam yasmimstat, literally 'such (a rite) where the manes are the deities.' The other explanation, '(rites)

7. 'Meat can never be obtained without injuring living beings, and to injure living beings does not procure heavenly bliss; therefore the (sages declare) the slaughter (of beasts) at a sacrifice not to be slaughter (in the ordinary sense of the word).'

8. 'Now he may also cook a full-grown ox or a full-grown he-goat for a Brâhmaṇa or Kshatriya guest; in this manner they offer hospitality to such (a man).'

9. Libations of water (must be poured out) for all (deceased relatives) who completed the second year and (their death causes) impurity.

10. Some declare that (this rule applies also to children) that died after teething.

11. After having burnt the body (of the deceased, the relatives) enter the water without looking at (the place of cremation),

12. Facing the south, they shall pour out water with both hands on (those days of the period of impurity) which are marked by odd numbers.

to the manes or to the gods,' which is also grammatically correct, recommends itself less, because the rites to the gods are already included by the word yagñe, 'at a sacrifice.' As to the Madhuparka, see Āpastamba II, 4, 8, 8-9, and below XI, 1.

7. Manu V, 48, and Vishṇu LI, 71, where, however, the conclusion of the verse has been altered to suit the ahimsâ-doctrines of the compilers of the metrical Smṛitis. The reason why slaughter at a sacrifice is not slaughter in the ordinary sense may be gathered from Vishṇu LI, 61, 63.

8. Satapatha-brâhmaṇa III, 4, 1, 2; Yâgñavalkya I, 109.

9-10. Vishṇu XIX, 7; Manu V, 58. Regarding the length of the period of impurity, see below, Sûtras 16, 26-29.

11. Vishṇu XIX, 6.

12. Vishṇu XIX, 7; Gautama XIV, 40. 'On those days of the period of impurity which are marked by odd numbers,' i. e. 'on the first, third, fifth, seventh, and ninth, as has been declared by Gautama.'—Kṛishṇapandita.

13. The south, forsooth, is the region sacred to the manes.

14. After they have gone home, they shall sit during three days on mats, fasting.

15. If they are unable (to fast so long), they shall subsist on food bought in the market or given unasked.

16. It is ordered that impurity caused by a death shall last ten days in the case of Sapinda relations.

17. It has been declared in the Veda that Sapinda relationship extends to the seventh person (in the ascending or descending line).

18. It has been declared in the Veda that for married females it extends to the third person (in the ascending or descending line).

19. Others (than the blood-relations) shall perform (the obsequies) of married females,

20. (The rule regarding impurity) should be exactly the same on the birth of a child for those men who desire complete purity,

21. Or for the mother and the father (of the child alone); some (declare that it applies) to the

14. Vishnu XIX, 16; Gautama XIV, 37.

15. Vishnu XIX, 14.

17. Vishnu XXII, 5.

19. Gautama XIV, 36; Pâraskara Grîhya-sûtra III, 10, 42. 'Others than the blood-relations,' i. e. 'the husband and his relatives.' The MSS. have another Sûtra following this, which Kṛishnapandita leaves out. Tâskâ teshâm, 'and they (the married females shall perform the obsequies) of those (i. e. their husbands and his Sapindas).' It seems to me very probable that the passage is genuine, especially as Pâraskara, Grîhya-sûtra III, 10, 43, has the same words.

20. Vishnu XXII, 1.

21. Gautama XIV, 15-16. The Sûtra ought to have been divided into two.

mother (only), because she is the immediate cause of that (event).

22. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'On the birth (of a child) the male does not become impure if he does not touch (the female); on that (occasion) the menstrual excretion must be known to be impure, and that is not found in males.'

23. If during (a period of impurity) another (death or birth) happens, (the relatives) shall be pure after (the expiration of) the remainder of that (first period);

24. (But) if one night (and day only of the first period of impurity) remain, (they shall be pure) after two (days and nights);

25. (If the second death or birth happens) on the morning (of the day on which the first period of impurity expires, they shall be purified) after three (days and nights).

26. A Brâhmana is freed from impurity (caused by a death or a birth) after ten days,

27. A Kshatriya after fifteen days,

28. A Vaisya after twenty days,

29. A Sûdra after a month.

30. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'But (a twice-born man) who has eaten (the food) of a Sûdra during impurity caused by a death or a

23. Vishnu XXII, 35.

24. Vishnu XXII, 36.

25. Vishnu XXII, 37. Kṛishnapandita explains prabhâte, 'on the morning (of the day on which the first period of impurity expires),' in accordance with Nandapandita's explanation of Vishnu's text by 'during the last watch (of the last night of the period of impurity).' See also the slightly different explanation of the identical words by Haradatta, Gautama XIV, 8.

26. Vishnu XXII, 1.

29. Vishnu XXII, 4.

birth, will suffer dreadful (punishment in) hell and be born again in the womb of an animal.'

31. 'A twice-born man who eats by appointment in the house of a stranger whose ten days of impurity, caused by a death, have not expired, after death will become a worm and feed on the ordure of that (man who fed him).'

32. It has been declared in the Veda, '(Such a sinner) becomes pure by reciting the Samhitâ of the Veda for twelve months or for twelve half-months while fasting.'

33. On the death of a child of less than two years or on a miscarriage, the impurity of the Sapindas lasts three (days and) nights.

34. Gautama (declares that on the former occasion they become) pure at once.

35. If (a person) dies in a foreign country and (his Sapindas) hear (of his death) after ten days (or a longer period), the impurity lasts for one (day and) night.

36. Gautama (declares that) if a person who has kindled the sacred fire dies on a journey, (his Sapindas shall) again celebrate his obsequies, (burning a dummy made of leaves or straw), and remain impure (during ten days) as if (they had actually buried) his corpse.

37. When he has touched a sacrificial post, a pyre, a burial-ground, a menstruating or a lately confined woman, impure men or (Kândâlas and so forth), he shall bathe, submerging both his body and his head.

32. Regarding the penance prescribed here, the so-called anatsnâpârâyana, see below XX, 46, and Baudhâyana III, 9.

33. Vishnu XXII, 27-30.

34. Gautama XIV, 44, and introduction to Gautama, p. liii.

36. Introduction to Gautama, pp. liii and liv.

37. Vishnu XXII, 69. Krishnapandita and MS. B. read pâtya,

CHAPTER V.

1. A woman is not independent, the males are her masters. It has been declared in the Veda, 'A female who neither goes naked nor is temporarily unclean is paradise.'

2. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Their fathers protect them in childhood, their husbands protect them in youth, and their sons protect them in age; a woman is never fit for independence.'

3. The penance (to be performed) by a (wife) for being unfaithful to her husband has been declared in the (section on) secret penances.

'pus,' instead of yûpa, 'a sacrificial post.' The reading is, however, wrong, because the parallel passages of most Smritis enjoin that a man who has touched a sacrificial post shall bathe. The cause of the mistake is probably a mere clerical error. The MSS. repeat the last word of this chapter, apa ityapaḥ. The reason is not, as Krishnapandita imagines, that the author wishes to indicate the necessity of bathing when one touches a person who has touched some impure thing or person. It is the universal practice of the ancient authors to repeat the last word of a chapter in order to mark its end, see e.g. Gautama note on I, 61. If it is neglected in the earlier chapters of the Vâsishtâ Dharma-sûtra, the badness of the MSS. is the cause.

V. 1. Vishnu XXV, 12. The second clause ought to have been given as a separate Sûtra. 'A female who no longer goes naked,' i. e. one who has reached the age of puberty. Amritam, 'is paradise,' i. e. procures bliss in this life and heaven after death through her children.

2. Vishnu XXV, 13. Identical with Manu IX, 3.

3. 'The penance which has been ordained in case a wife is unfaithful to her husband, i. e. goes to a lover and so forth, must be performed in secret, i. e. in solitary places.'—Krishnapandita. The explanation is clearly erroneous. Rahasyeshu cannot mean 'in secret' or 'in secret places.' It might refer either to a work or works called Rahasyâni or to the rahasyâni prâyasâttâni. As

4. For month by month the menstrual excretion takes away her sins.

5. A woman in her courses is impure during three (days and) nights.

6. (During that period) she shall not apply collyrium to her eyes, nor anoint (her body), nor bathe in water; she shall sleep on the ground; she shall not sleep in the day-time, nor touch the fire, nor make a rope, nor clean her teeth, nor eat meat, nor look at the planets, nor smile, nor busy herself with (household affairs), nor run; she shall drink out of a large vessel, or out of her joined hands, or out of a copper vessel.

7. For it has been declared in the Veda, 'When Indra had slain (Vṛitra) the three-headed son of Tvashtṛi, he was seized by Sin, and he considered himself to be tainted with exceedingly great guilt. All beings cried out against him (saying to him), the next Sûtra contains a half-verse taken from the section on secret penances, XXVIII, 4, it is evident that Vasishṭha here makes a cross-reference. Similar cross-references occur further on.

4. Yâgñavalkya I, 72, and below, XXVIII, 4.

5. Vishṇu XXII, 72.

6. Taitt. Samh. II, 5, 1, 6-7. I read with the majority of the MSS., grahâna nirīksheta instead of grīhāna nirīksheta, which latter phrase Kṛishṇapandita renders by 'she shall not look out of the house.' My reading is confirmed by his quotation from the Smṛitimañgarī, where grahānām nirīkshanam, 'looking at the planets, i. e. the sun, moon,' &c., is forbidden. 'A large vessel,' i. e. an earthen jar.—Kṛishṇapandita.

7. Taitt. Samh. II, 5, 1, 2-5. The name 'slayer of a learned Brāhmaṇa' is applied to Indra, because Vṛitra is said to have been deeply versed in the Vedas. Regarding the 'proper season of women,' see Manu III, 46-48. In the clause 'That guilt of Brāhmaṇa-murder appears,' &c., I read āvir bhavati with the majority of the MSS. For the prohibition to accept food from a ragasvalā, see Vishṇu LI, 16-17.

'O thou slayer of a learned Brâhmana! O thou slayer of a learned Brâhmana!' He ran to the women for protection (and said to them), 'Take upon yourselves the third part of this my guilt (caused by) the murder of a learned Brâhmana.' They answered, 'What shall we have (for doing thy wish)?' He replied, 'Choose a boon.' They said, 'Let us obtain offspring (if our husbands approach us) during the proper season, at pleasure let us dwell (with our husbands) until (our children) are born.' He answered, 'So be it.' (Then) they took upon themselves (the third part of his guilt). That guilt of Brâhmana-murder appears every month as the menstrual flow. Therefore let him not eat the food of a woman in her courses; (for) such a one has put on the shape of the guilt of Brâhmana-murder.

8. (Those who recite the Veda) proclaim the following (rule): 'Collyrium and ointment must not be accepted from her; for that is the food of women. Therefore they feel a loathing for her (while she is) in that (condition, saying), "She shall not approach."'

9. 'Those (Brâhmanas in) whose (houses) menstruating women sit, those who keep no sacred fire,

8. Taitt. Samh. II, 5, 1; 6. I read the text of this Sûtra as follows: 'Tadâhu^z—aṅganâbhyañganam evâsyâ na pratigrâhyam taddhi striyâ annam iti—tasmât tasyai ka tatra ka bîbhatsante meyam upâgâd iti.' The MSS. give the following readings in the second clause: tasmât tasmai ka (B. Bh. E. F.), tatra na (F.), medhamupâgâd (Bh. F.), medha upâgâd (E.), seyamupâgâd (B.) Krishnapandita follows as usually MS. B. His explanation of the whole Sûtra is erroneous. 'That is the food of women,' i. e. that is as necessary to women as their food, because to beautify themselves is one of their duties.

9. The meaning of the Sûtra is that a Brâhmanical beggar must not accept any alms from Brâhmanas whose wives are in their and those in whose family there is no Srotriya,—all these are equal to Sûdras.'

CHAPTER VI.

1. (To live according to) the rule of conduct is doubtlessly the highest duty of all men. He whose soul is defiled by vile conduct perishes in this world and in the next.

2. Neither austerities, nor (the study of) the Veda, nor (the performance of) the Agnihotra, nor lavish liberality can ever save him whose conduct is vile and who has strayed from this (path of duty).

3. The Vedas do not purify him who is deficient in good conduct, though he may have learnt them all together with the six Aṅgas; the sacred texts depart from such a man at death, even as birds, when full-fledged, leave their nest.

4. As the beauty of a wife causes no joy to a blind man, even so all the four Vedas together with the six Aṅgas and sacrifices give no happiness to him who is deficient in good conduct.

courses, who keep no sacred fire, and do not attend to the duty of Veda-study. Regarding sinners of the latter two kinds, see also Âpastamba I, 6, 18, 32-33.

VI. 1. Manu IV, 155. The word âkâra, which has been variously translated by 'conduct,' 'rule of conduct,' and 'good conduct,' includes the observance of all the various rules for every-day life, taught in the Smṛitis, and the performance of the prescribed ceremonies and rites.

4. I read with MSS. Bh. and E., shadāṅgāstvakhilâḥ sayagñâḥ. The reading of MS. B., which Kṛishnapandita adopts, shadāṅgâḥ sakhilâḥ means, 'together with the six Aṅgas, (and) the Khila (spurious) portions of the Veda.'

5. The sacred texts do not save from sin the deceitful man who behaves deceitfully. But that Veda, two syllables of which are studied in the right manner, purifies, just as the clouds (give beneficent rain) in the month of Isha.

6. A man of bad conduct is blamed among men, evils befall him constantly, he is afflicted with disease and short-lived.

7. Through good conduct man gains spiritual merit, through good conduct he gains wealth, through good conduct he obtains beauty, good conduct obviates the effect of evil marks.

8. A man who follows the rule of conduct established among the virtuous, who has faith and is free from envy, lives a hundred years, though he be destitute of all auspicious marks.

5. Isha is another name for Âsvina, the month September–October. Though the rainy season, properly so called, is over in September, still heavy rain falls in many parts of India, chiefly under the influence of the beginning north-east monsoon, and is particularly important for the Rabi or winter crops. I think, therefore, that it is not advisable to take, as Krishnapandita does, yathâ ishe 'bdâh both with the first and the second halves of the verse, and to translate, 'As the clouds (in general remain barren) in the month of Isha, even so the texts of the Veda do not save from evil the deceitful man who behaves deceitfully. But that Veda, two syllables of which have been studied in the right manner, sanctifies, just as the clouds in the month of Isha, (which shed a few drops of rain on the day of the Svâti conjunction, produce pearls).' 'In the right manner,' i. e. with the due observance of the rules of studentship.

6. Identical with Manu IV, 157.

7. Manu IV, 156. By the 'inauspicious marks' mentioned in this verse, and the 'auspicious marks' occurring in the next, the various lines on the hands and feet &c. are meant, the explanation of which forms the subject of the Sâmdrika Sâstra.

8. Identical with Manu IV, 158; Vishnu LXXI, 92.

9. But a man who knows the sacred law shall perform in secret all acts connected with eating, the natural evacuations and dalliance with (his wife); business to be accomplished by speech or intellect, likewise austerities, wealth, and age, must be most carefully concealed.

10. And a man shall void both urine and fæces, facing the north, in the day-time, but at night he shall do it turning towards the south; for (if he acts) thus, his life will not be injured.

11. The intellect of that man perishes who voids urine against a fire, the sun, a cow, a Brâhmaṇa, the moon, water, and the morning or evening twilights.

12. Let him not void urine in a river, nor on a path, nor on ashes, nor on cowdung, nor on a ploughed field, nor on one which has been sown, nor on a grass-plot, nor in the shade (of trees) that afford protection (to travellers).

13. Standing in the shade (of houses, clouds, and so forth), when it is quite dark, and when he fears for his life, a Brâhmaṇa may void urine, by day and by night, in any position he pleases.

14. (Afterwards) he shall perform the necessary (purification) with water fetched for the purpose (from a tank or river, and with earth).

15. For a bath water not fetched for the purpose (may also be used).

16. (For the purpose of purification) a Brâhmaṇa

10. Vishṇu LX, 2. I read with the majority of the MSS., na rishyati.

11. Identical with Manu IV, 52.

12. Vishṇu LX, 3-22.

13. Identical with Manu IV, 51.

14. Vishṇu LX, 24.

15. I. e. one may bathe also in a tank or river.

shall take earth that is mixed with gravel, from the bank (of a river).

17. Five kinds of earth must not be used, viz. such as is covered by water, such as lies in a temple, on an ant-hill, on a hillock thrown up by rats, and that which has been left by one who cleaned himself.

18. The organ (must be cleaned by) one (application of) earth, the (right) hand by three, but both (feet) by two, the anus by five, the one (i.e. the left hand) by ten, and both (hands and feet) by seven (applications of earth).

19. Such is the purification ordained for householders; it is double for students, treble for hermits, but quadruple for ascetics.

20. Eight mouthfuls are the meal of an ascetic, sixteen that of a hermit, but thirty-two that of a householder, and an unlimited quantity that of a student.

21. An Agnihotrin, a draught-ox, and a student, those three can do their work only if they eat (well); without eating (much), they cannot do it.

22. (The above rule regarding limited allowances of food holds good) in the case of penances, of self-imposed restraint, of sacrifices, of the recitation of the Veda, and of (the performance of other) sacred duties.

18. Vishnu LX, 25.

19. Identical with Vishnu LX, 26, and Manu V, 137.

20-21. Identical with Âpastamba II, 5, 9, 13, and S. 21, with Sâṅkhâya Grîhya-sûtra II, 16, 5.

22. 'Penances (vrata), i.e. the Krikkhras and the rest; self-imposed restraint (niyama), i.e. eating certain food in accordance with a vow, and so forth, during a month or any other fixed period . . . sacred duties (dharma), i.e. giving gifts and the like.'—Krishnapandita.

23. The qualities by which a (true) Brâhmana may be recognised are, the concentration of the mind, austerities, the subjugation of the senses, liberality, truthfulness, purity, sacred learning, compassion, worldly learning, intelligence, and the belief (in the existence of the deity and of a future life).

24. One may know that bearing grudges, envy, speaking untruths, speaking evil of Brâhmanas, backbiting, and cruelty are the characteristics of a Sûdra.

25. Those Brâhmanas can save (from evil) who are free from passion, and patient of austerities, whose ears have been filled with the texts of the Veda, who have subdued the organs of sensation and action, who have ceased to injure animated beings, and who close their hands when gifts are offered.

26. Some become worthy receptacles of gifts through sacred learning, and some through the practice of austerities. But that Brâhmana whose stomach does not contain the food of a Sûdra, is even the worthiest receptacle of all.

27. If a Brâhmana dies with the food of a Sûdra in his stomach, he will become a village pig (in his next life) or be born in the family of that (Sûdra).

28. For though a (Brâhmana) whose body is nourished by the essence of a Sûdra's food may

24. Krîṣṇapandita connects brâhmanadûṣhanam, translated above by 'speaking evil of Brâhmanas,' with sûdralakshanam, and renders the two words thus, 'the characteristics of a Sûdra which degrade a Brâhmana.'

25. 'Close their hands,' i. e. are reluctant to accept.

26. Krîṣṇapandita takes kimkit, translated by 'some,' to mean 'somewhat,' 'to a certain degree,' i. e. neither very distinguished nor very despicable.

daily recite the Veda, though he may offer (an Agnihotra) or mutter (prayers, nevertheless) he will not find the path that leads upwards.

29. But if, after eating the food of a Sûdra, he has conjugal intercourse, his sons will belong to the giver of the food, and he shall not ascend to heaven.

30. They declare that he is worthy to receive gifts, who (daily) rises to recite the Veda, who is of good family, and perfectly free from passion, who constantly offers sacrifices in the three sacred fires, who fears sin, and knows much, who is beloved among the females (of his family), who is righteous, protects cows, and reduces himself by austerities.

31. Just as milk, sour milk, clarified butter, and honey poured into an unburnt earthen vessel, perish, owing to the weakness of the vessel, and neither the vessel nor those liquids (remain),

32. Even so a man destitute of sacred learning, who accepts cows or gold, clothes, a horse, land, (or) sesamum, becomes ashes, as (if he were dry) wood.

33. He shall not make his joints or his nails crack,

34. Nor shall he make a vessel ring with his nails.

35. Let him not drink water out of his joined hands.

36. Let him not strike the water with his foot or his hand,

37. Nor (pour) water into (other) water.

38. Let him not gather fruit by throwing brick-bats,

39. Nor by throwing another fruit at it.

40. He shall not become a hypocrite or deceitful.

32. Manu IV, 188. Read in the text 'evam gâ vâ' instead of 'evam gâvo.'

33. Gautama IX, 51.

35. Gautama IX, 9.

40. Manu IV, 177.

41. Let him not learn a language spoken by barbarians.

42. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'The opinion of the Sishṭas is, that a man shall not be uselessly active, neither with his hands and his feet, nor with his eyes, nor with his tongue and his body.'

43. 'Those Brāhmaṇas, in whose families the study of the Veda and of its supplements is hereditary, and who are able to adduce proofs perceptible by the senses from the revealed texts, must be known to be Sishṭas.'

44. 'He is a (true) Brāhmaṇa regarding whom no one knows if he be good or bad, if he be ignorant or deeply learned, if he be of good or of bad conduct.'

CHAPTER VII.

1. There are four orders,

2. Viz. (that of) the student, (that of) the householder, (that of) the hermit, and (that of) the ascetic.

3. A man who has studied one, two, or three Vedas without violating the rules of studentship, may enter any of these (orders), whichever he pleases.

4. A (professed) student shall serve his teacher until death;

5. And in case the teacher dies, he shall serve the sacred fire.

42. Manu IV, 177; Gautama IX, 50-51.

43. Manu XII, 109.

VII. 1-2. Gautama III, 2.

3. Gautama III, 1.

4. Vishṇu XXVIII, 43.

5. Vishṇu XXVIII, 46. I agree with Kṛishṇapandita in thinking that the apparently purposeless particle 'and,' which is used in

6. For it has been declared in the Veda, 'The fire is thy teacher.'

7. (A student, whether professed or temporary), shall bridle his tongue ;

8. He shall eat in the fourth, sixth, or eighth hour of the day.

9. He shall go out in order to beg.

10. He shall obey his teacher.

11. He either (may wear all his hair) tied in a knot or (keep merely) a lock on the crown of his head tied in a knot, (shaving the other parts of the head.)

12. If the teacher walks, he shall attend him walking after him ; if the teacher is seated, standing ; if the teacher lies down, seated.

13. He shall study after having been called (by the teacher, and not request the latter to begin the lesson).

14. Let him announce (to the teacher) all that he has received (when begging), and eat after permission (has been given to him).

this Sûtra, indicates Vasishtha's approval of the rules given in other Smritis, according to which the student, on the death of the teacher, shall serve the teacher's son, a fellow-student, or the teacher's wife, and the service of the sacred fire is the last resource only. See Vishnu XXVIII, 44-45 ; Gautama III, 7-8.

6. These words form part of one of the Mantras which the teacher recites at the initiation of the student ; see e. g. Sâṅkhâ-yana Grîhya-sûtra.

7. Gautama II, 13, 22.

8. According to Krishnapandita a kâla, 'hour,' is the eighth part of a day.

9. Vishnu XXVIII, 9.

10. Vishnu XXVIII, 7.

11. Gautama I, 27 ; Vishnu XXVIII, 41.

12. Vishnu XXVIII, 18-22.

13. Vishnu XXVIII, 6.

14. Vishnu XXVIII, 10 ; Âpastamba I, 1, 3, 25.

15. Let him avoid to sleep on a cot, to clean his teeth, to wash (his body for pleasure), to apply collyrium (to his eyes), to anoint (his body), and to wear shoes or a parasol.

16. (While reciting his prayers) he shall stand in the day-time and sit down at night.

17. Let him bathe three times a day.

CHAPTER VIII.

1. (A student who desires to become) a householder shall bathe, free from anger and elation, with the permission of his teacher, and take for a wife a young female of his own caste, who does neither belong to the same Gotra nor has the same Pravara, who has not had intercourse (with another man),

2. Who is not related within four degrees on the mother's side, nor within six degrees on the father's side.

3. Let him kindle the nuptial fire.

15. Gautama II, 13.

16. Vishnu XXVIII, 2-3. The prayers intended are the so-called Sandhyâs, which are recited at daybreak and in the evening.

17. Gautama II, 8. 'Three times a day,' i.e. morning, noon, and evening. Krishnapandita thinks that he shall perform three ablutions at midday.

VIII. 1. Vishnu XXIV, 9; Gautama IV, 1-2. Regarding the bath at the end of the studentship, see Vishnu XXVIII, 42, and Professor Jolly's note.

2. Vishnu XXIV, 10; Gautama IV, 2.

3. Vishnu LIX, 1, and Professor Jolly's note. The fire intended is the grîhya or smârta, the sacred household fire, which according to this Sûtra must be kindled on the occasion of the marriage ceremony, while other Smrîtis permit of its being lighted on the division of the paternal estate.

4. Let him not turn away a guest who comes in the evening.

5. (A guest) shall not dwell in his house without receiving food.

6. If a Brāhmaṇa who has come for shelter to the house of a (householder) receives no food, on departure he will take with him all the spiritual merit of that (churlish host).

7. But a Brāhmaṇa who stays for one night only is called a guest. For (the etymological import of the word) atithi (a guest) is 'he who stays for a short while only.'

8. A Brāhmaṇa who lives in the same village (with his host) and a visitor on business or pleasure (are) not (called) guests. But a guest, whether he arrives at the moment (of dinner) or at an inopportune time, must not stay in the house of a (householder) without receiving food.

9. (A householder) who has faith, is free from covetousness, and (possesses wealth) sufficient for (performing) the Agnyâdheya-sacrifice, must become an Agnihotrin.

10. He (who possesses wealth) sufficient for (the expenses of) a Soma-sacrifice shall not abstain from offering it.

4. Vishṇu LXVII, 28-29.

5. Vishṇu LXVII, 30.

6. Vishṇu LXVII, 33.

7. Identical with Vishṇu LXVII, 34; Manu III, 102.

8. Vishṇu LXVII, 35; Manu III, 105.

9. Vishṇu LIX, 2. The Agnihotra which is here intended is, of course, the Srauta Agnihotra, to be performed with three fires. The Agnyâdheya is one of the Haviryagñas with which the Srautâgnihotrin has to begin his rites.

10. Vishṇu LIX, 8.

11. (A householder) shall be industrious in reciting the Veda, offering sacrifices, begetting children, and (performing his other duties).

12. Let him honour visitors (who come) to his house by rising to meet them, by (offering them) seats, by speaking to them kindly and extolling their virtues,

13. And all creatures by (giving them) food according to his ability.

14. A householder alone performs sacrifices, a householder alone performs austerities, and (therefore) the order of householders is the most distinguished among the four.

15. As all rivers, both great and small, find a resting-place in the ocean, even so men of all orders find protection with householders.

16. As all creatures exist through the protection afforded by their mothers, even so all mendicants subsist through the protection afforded by householders.

17. A Brâhmana who always carries water (in his gourd), who always wears the sacred thread, who daily recites the Veda, who avoids the food of outcasts, who approaches (his wife) in the proper season, and offers sacrifices in accordance with the

11. I agree with Krishnapañāta that the word 'and' used in this enumeration serves the purpose of calling to mind that there are other minor duties. The three named specially are the so-called 'three debts'; see below, XI, 48.

12. Vishnu LXVII, 45; Gautama V, 38-41.

13. Vishnu LXVII, 26.

14-17. Vishnu LIX, 27-30; Manu VI, 89.

15. Identical with Manu VI, 90.

17. 'Who always carries water (in his gourd)' (nityodakt) may also be translated, 'who always keeps water (in his house)'; see Âpastamba II, 1, 1, 15. 'Who always wears the sacred thread' rules (of the Veda, after death) never falls from Brahman's heaven.

CHAPTER IX.

1. A hermit shall wear (his hair in) braids, and dress (in garments made of) bark and skins;
2. And he shall not enter a village.
3. He shall not step on ploughed (land).
4. He shall gather wild growing roots and fruit (only).
5. He shall remain chaste.
6. His heart shall be full of meekness.
7. He shall honour guests coming to his hermitage with alms (consisting of) roots and fruit.
8. He shall only give, not receive (presents).
9. He shall bathe at morn, noon, and eve.
10. Kindling a fire according to the (rule of the) Srâmanaka (Sûtra), he shall offer the Agnihotra.
11. After (living in this manner during) six months, may also mean 'who always wears his upper in the manner required at a sacrifice,' i.e. passes it over the left and under the right arm.

IX. 1. Vishnu XCIV, 8-9; Gautama III, 34. Krishnapandita takes kîra, 'bark,' to mean '(made of) grass,' e.g. of Muṅga or Balvaga.

2. Gautama III, 33. The particle 'and' probably indicates that the hermit is not to enter any other inhabited place.

3. Gautama III, 32.

4. Vishnu XCV, 5.

5. Vishnu XCV, 7.

6. Manu VI, 8.

7. Gautama III, 30.

9. Vishnu XCV, 10.

10. Gautama III, 27. Krishnapandita and MSS. B. F. read srâvanakena, and the rest âvarnakena. I read srâmanakena, 'according to the rule of the Srâmanaka Sûtra,' in accordance with Gautama's text. Baudhâyana, too, uses the same word.

11. Manu VI, 25.

he shall dwell at the root of a tree, keeping no fire and having no house.

12. He (who in this manner) gives (their due) to gods, manes, and men, will attain endless (bliss in) heaven.

CHAPTER X.

1. Let an ascetic depart from his house, giving a promise of safety from injury to all animated beings.

2. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'That ascetic who wanders about at peace with all creatures, forsooth, has nothing to fear from any living being.'

3. 'But he who becomes an ascetic and does not promise safety from injury to all beings, destroys the born and the unborn; and (so does an ascetic) who accepts presents.'

4. 'Let him discontinue the performance of all religious ceremonies, but let him never discontinue the recitation of the Veda. By neglecting the Veda he becomes a Sûdra; therefore he shall not neglect it.'

5. '(To pronounce) the one syllable (Om) is the best (mode of reciting the) Veda, to suppress the breath is the highest (form of) austerity; (to subsist on) alms is better than fasting; compassion is preferable to liberality.'

6. (Let the ascetic) shave (his head); let him have no property and no home.

X. 1. Manu VI, 39; Yâgñavalkya III, 61.

2. Manu VI, 40.

3. 'The born and the unborn,' i.e. his ancestors who lose heaven, and his descendants who lose their caste.

4. Manu VI, 39.

5. Manu II, 83.

6. Gautama III, 11, 22. The term parigraha, 'home,' includes the wife, the family, attendants, and a house.

7. Let him beg food at seven houses which he has not selected (beforehand),

8. (At the time) when the smoke (of the kitchen-fire) has ceased and the pestle lies motionless.

9. Let him wear a single garment,

10. Or cover his body with a skin or with grass that has been nibbled at by a cow.

11. Let him sleep on the bare ground.

12. Let him frequently change his residence,

13. (Dwelling) at the extremity of the village, in a temple, or in an empty house, or at the root of a tree.

14. Let him (constantly) seek in his heart the knowledge (of the universal soul).

15. (An ascetic) who lives constantly in the forest,

16. Shall not wander about within sight of the village-cattle.

17. 'Freedom from future births is certain for him who constantly dwells in the forest, who has subdued his organs of sensation and action, who has renounced all sensual gratification, whose mind is fixed in meditation on the Supreme Spirit, and who is (wholly) indifferent (to pleasure and pain).'

18. (Let him) not (wear) any visible mark (of his order), nor (follow) any visible rule of conduct.

19. Let him, though not mad, appear like one out of his mind.

20. Now they quote also (the following verses) :
'There is no salvation for him who is addicted to

7. Vishnu XCVI, 3.

8. Vishnu XCVI, 6 ; Manu VI, 56.

9. Vishnu XCVI, 13. It is very probable that the single garment mentioned in the Sûtra is, as Kṛishṇapāṇḍita thinks, a small strip of cloth to cover the ascetic's nakedness.

12-13. Vishnu XCVI, 10-12.

14. Manu VI, 43, 65.

20. I read 'ramyâvasathapriyasya,' with the majority of the MSS.

the pursuit of the science of words, nor for him who rejoices in captivating men, nor for him who is fond of (good) eating and (fine) clothing, nor for him who loves a pleasant dwelling.'

21. 'Neither by (explaining) prodigies and omens, nor by skill in astrology and palmistry, nor by casuistry and expositions (of the Sâstras), let him ever seek to obtain alms.'

22. 'Let him not be dejected when he obtains nothing, nor glad when he receives something. Let him only seek as much as will sustain life, without caring for household property.'

23. 'But he, forsooth, knows (the road to) salvation who cares neither for a hut, nor for water, nor for clothes, nor for the three Pushkaras' (holy tanks), nor for a house, nor for a seat, nor for food.'

24. In the morning and in the evening he may eat as much (food) as he obtains in the house of one Brâhmaṇa, excepting honey and meat,

25. And he shall not (eat so much that he is quite) satiated.

26. At his option (an ascetic) may (also) dwell in a village.

27. Let him not be crooked (in his ways); (let him) not (observe the rules of) impurity on account

21. Identical with Manu VI, 50.

22. Vishṇu XCVI, 4. Identical with Manu VI, 57.

23. There are three Tirthas called Pushkara; see Professor Jolly's note on Vishṇu LXXXV, 1.

24. Kṛishṇapāṇḍita thinks that this rule is a concession to those ascetics who are unable to subsist on one meal a day, as Manu VI, 55 prescribes.

25. Manu VI, 59.

26. Manu VI, 94-95.

27. The text is here probably corrupt. But I follow Kṛishṇapāṇḍita. Several MSS. read asatho, 'he shall not be a rogue,' for asavo, 'he shall not observe the rules of impurity.'

of deaths (or births); let him not have a house; let him be of concentrated mind.

28. Let him not enjoy any object of sensual gratification.

29. Let him be (utterly) indifferent, avoiding to do injury or to show kindness to any living being.

30. To avoid backbiting, jealousy, pride, self-consciousness, unbelief, dishonesty, self-praise, blaming others, deceit, covetousness, delusion, anger, and envy is considered to be the duty of (men of) all orders.

31. A Brâhmana who wears the sacred thread, who holds in his hand a gourd filled with water, who is pure and avoids the food of Sûdras will not fail (to gain) the world of Brahman.

CHAPTER XI.

1. Six persons are (particularly) worthy to receive the honey-mixture (madhuparka),

2. (Viz.) an officiating priest, the bridegroom of one's daughter, a king, a paternal uncle, a Snâtaka, a maternal uncle, as well as (others enumerated elsewhere).

3. (A householder) shall offer, both at the morning and the evening (meals, a portion) of the prepared (food) to the Visve Devas in the (sacred) domestic fire.

30. Vishnu II, 16-17.

31. Krishnapandita believes that this Sûtra again refers to ascetics. But that is hardly possible, as ascetics are not allowed to wear a sacrificial thread (see above, Sûtra 18). I think that it is meant to emphatically assert that a Brâhmana who is free from the shortcomings enumerated in the preceding Sûtra, and who follows the rule of conduct, will obtain salvation, whether he passes through the order of Saṃnyāsins or not.

XI. 1-2. Gautama V, 27-30. The persons enumerated elsewhere are the teacher, the father-in-law, and so forth. Regarding the Snâtaka, see Āpastamba I, 11, 30, 1-4.

3. Vishnu LXVII, 1-3.

4. Let him give a Bali-offering to the (guardian) deities of the house,

5. (Thereafter) let him give a portion, one Pala in weight, to a Srottriya or to a student, (and afterwards an offering) to the manes.

6. Next let him feed his guests in due order, the worthiest first,

7. (Thereafter) the maidens, the infants, the aged, the half-grown members of his family, and pradâtās,

8. Then the other members of his family.

9. (Outside the house) he shall throw (some food) on the ground for the dogs, Kândâlas, outcasts, and crows.

10. He may give to a Sûdra either the fragments (of the meal) or (a portion of) fresh (food).

11. The master of the house and his wife may eat what remains.

4. Vishnu LXVII, 4-22.

5. Vishnu LIX, 14; LXVII, 23, 27. Krishnapandita does not take 'agrabhâga' as a technical term, but explains it by 'a first portion, sufficient for a dinner, or as much as one is able to spare.'

6. Vishnu LXVII, 28, 36-38.

7. Vishnu LXVII, 39. The majority of the MSS. read bâlavrid-dhatarunapradâtās [tato]. Krishnapandita corrects the last word to pradâtâ, while the editor of the Calcutta edition writes prabhritîms [tato]. Both conjectures are inadmissible. As the same phrase occurs once more, below, XIX, 23 (where Krishnapandita writes pradâtârah), I think that it is not permissible to change the text. Pradâtâh must be the correct reading, and a technical name for a class of female relatives. Etymologically it may mean 'those who have been perfectly cleansed.' But I am unable to trace its precise technical import, and have left it untranslated.

8. Vishnu LXVII, 41.

9. Vishnu LXVII, 26.

10. Gautama V, 25, and note. 'A Sûdra, i. e. one who is his servant.'—Krishnapandita. It is, however, possible, that a visitor of the Sûdra caste is meant; see Âpastamba II, 2, 4, 19-20.

11. Vishnu LXVII, 41.

12. A fresh meal for which all (the same materials as for the first) are used (may be prepared), if a guest comes after the Vaisvadeva has been offered. For such a (guest) he shall cause to be prepared food (of a) particularly (good quality).

13. For it has been declared in the Veda, 'A Brâhmaṇa guest enters the house resembling the Vaisvânara fire. Through him they obtain rain, and food through rain. Therefore people know that the (hospitable reception of a guest) is a ceremony averting evil.'

14. Having fed the (guest), he shall honour him.

15. He shall accompany him to the boundary (of the village) or until he receives permission (to return).

16. Let him present (funeral offerings) to the manes during the dark half of the month (on any day) after the fourth.

17. After issuing an invitation on the day preceding (the Srâddha, he shall feed on that occasion) three ascetics or three virtuous householders, who are Srotriyas, who are not very aged, who do not follow forbidden occupations, and neither (have been his) pupils, nor are (living as) pupils in his house.

18. He may also feed pupils who are endowed with good qualities.

19. Let him avoid men neglecting their duties,

12. Âpastamba II, 3, 6, 16; Gautama V, 32, 33. A guest, i. e. one to whom the definition given above, VIII, 6, 7, applies. I read according to my MSS. punaḥpâko instead of punaḥpâke.

14-15. Gautama V, 38.

16. Vishṇu LXXVI, 1-2; Gautama XV, 3.

17. Vishṇu LXXXIII, 1; LXXXII, 2-4; LXXXIII, 5, 19; Gautama XV, 10; Âpastamba II, 7, 17, 4.

18. Âpastamba II, 7, 17, 6.

19. Gautama XV, 16, 18. The explanation of the word nagna, those afflicted with white leprosy, eunuchs, blind men, those who have black teeth, those who suffer from black leprosy, (and) those who have deformed nails.

20. Now they quote also (the following verses) : 'Now, if a (Brâhmana) versed in the Vedas is afflicted with bodily (defects) which exclude him from the company, Yama declares him to be irreproachable. Such (a man) sanctifies the company.'

21. 'At a funeral sacrifice the fragments (of the meal) must not be swept away until the end of the day. For streams of nectar flow (from them, and the manes of) those who have received no libations of water drink (them).'

22. 'But let him not sweep up the fragments (of the meal) before the sun has set. Thence issue rich streams of milk for those who obtain a share with difficulty.'

23. 'Manu declares that both the remainder (in the vessels) and the fragments (of the meal) certainly are the portion of those members of the family who died before receiving the sacraments.'

24. 'Let him give the fragments that have fallen on the ground and the portion scattered (on the blades of Kusa grass), which consists of the wipings

'neglecting their duties,' is doubtful. I have followed Kṛishṇa-pañḍita, who quotes the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa in support of his view. The word occurs in the same connexion, Vishṇu LXXXII, 27, where it is rendered by 'naked.' Possibly it may refer to ascetics who go entirely naked.

20. The Sūtra gives an exception to the preceding rule.

21. I read 'śkyotante hi' instead of 'śkyotante vai.'

22. 'Those who receive a share with difficulty,' i. e. the manes of uninitiated children, mentioned in the next verses.

23-24. Vishṇu LXXXII, 22; Manu III, 245-246. These rules, however, do not fully agree with the teaching of our Manu-smṛiti, and water, as their food, to the manes of those who died without offspring and of those who died young.'

25. 'The malevolent Asuras seek an opportunity (to snatch away) that food intended for the manes, which is not supported with both hands;'

26. 'Therefore let him not offer it (to the Brâhmaṇas) without holding (a spoon) in his hand; or let him stand, holding the dish (with both hands, until) leavings of both kinds (have been produced).'

27. 'He shall feed two (Brâhmaṇas) at the offering to the gods, and three at the offering to the manes, or a single man on either occasion; even a very wealthy man shall not be anxious (to entertain) a large company.'

28. 'A large company destroys these five (advantages), the respectful treatment (of the invited guests, the propriety of) time and place, purity and (the selection of) virtuous Brâhmaṇa (guests); therefore he shall not (invite a large number).'

29. 'Or he may entertain (at a Srâddha) even a single Brâhmaṇa who has studied the whole Veda, who is distinguished by learning and virtue, and is free from all evil marks (on his body).'

as the latter assigns the fragments on the ground to honest and upright servants. Sûtra 24 I read with the majority of the MSS. 'lepanodakam' for 'lepamodakam,' and 'annaṃ preteshu' for 'anupreteshu.'

25. Manu III, 225.

26. Manu III, 224. The meaning of the last clause seems to be that the sacrificer shall stand before the Brâhmaṇas until they have done eating.

27. Identical with Manu III, 125; see also Vishṇu LXXIII, 3. The offering to the gods is the Vaisvadeva offering which precedes the Srâddha.

28. Identical with Manu III, 126.

29. Manu III, 129.

30. '(But) how can the oblation to the gods be made if he feeds a single Brâhmana at a funeral sacrifice? Let him take (a portion) of each (kind of) food that has been prepared (and put it) into a vessel;'

31. 'Let him place it in the sanctuary of a god and afterwards continue (the performance of) the funeral sacrifice. Let him offer that food in the fire or give it (as alms) to a student.'

32. 'As long as the food continues warm, as long as they eat in silence, as long as the qualities of the food are not declared (by them), so long the manes feast on it.'

33. 'The qualities of the food must not be declared as long as the (Brâhmanas who represent the) manes are not satiated. Afterwards when they are satisfied, they may say, "Beautiful is the sacrificial food."'

34. 'But an ascetic who, invited to dine at a sacrifice of the manes or of the gods, rejects meat, shall go to hell for as many years as the slaughtered beast has hairs.'

35. 'Three (things are held to) sanctify a funeral sacrifice, a daughter's son, the midday, and sesamum grains; and they recommend three (other things) for it, purity, freedom from anger and from precipitation.'

36. 'The eighth division of the day, during which the sun's (progress in the heavens) becomes slow, one must know to be midday; what is (then) given to the manes lasts (them) for a very long time.'

37. 'The ancestors of that man who has inter-

32. Identical with Vishnu LXXXII, 20, and Manu III, 237.

34. Manu V, 35.

35. Identical with Manu III, 235.

37. Vishnu LXIX, 2-4.

course with a woman after offering or having dined at a Srâddha, feed during a month from that (day) on his semen.'

38. 'A child that is born from (intercourse immediately) after offering a Srâddha or partaking of a funeral repast, is unable to acquire sacred learning and becomes short-lived.'

39. 'The father and the grandfather, likewise the great-grandfather, beset a descendant who is born to them, just as birds (fly to) a fig tree;'

40. '(Saying), "He will offer to us funeral repasts with honey and meat, with vegetables, with milk and with messes made of milk, both in the rainy season and under the constellation Maghâḥ."'

41. 'The ancestors always rejoice at a descendant who lengthens the line, who is zealous in performing funeral sacrifices, and who is rich in (images of the) gods and (virtuous) Brâhmaṇa (guests).'

42. 'The manes consider him to be their (true) descendant who offers (to them) food at Gayâ, and (by the virtue of that gift) they grant him (blessings), just as husbandmen (produce grain) on well-ploughed (fields).'

43. He shall offer (a Srâddha) both on the full moon days of the months Srâvâṇa and Âgrahâyaṇa and on the Anvashṭakî.

39-40. Vishṇu LXXVIII, 51-53.

41. 'Who lengthens the line,' i. e. who himself begets sons. Read instead of nuyantam pitṛīkarmāni (v. l. muyantam and trīpantāḥ), 'udyatam.'

42. Vishṇu LXXXV, 4, 66-67.

43. Srâvâṇa, i. e. July-August; Âgrahâyaṇa, i. e. Mârgasīrsha or November-December. Anvashṭakî means the day following the Ashṭakâ, or eighth day, i. e. the ninth day of the dark halves of Mârgasīrsha, Pausha, Mâgha, and Phâlguna. The form of the word is usually anvashṭakâ.

44. There is no restriction as to time, if (particularly suitable) materials and (particularly holy) Brâhmanas are at hand, or (if the sacrificer is) near (a particularly sacred) place.

45. A Brâhmana must necessarily kindle the three sacred fires.

46. He shall offer (in them) the full and new moon sacrifices, the (half-yearly) Âgrayana Ishî, the Kâturmâsya-sacrifice, the (half-yearly) sacrifices at which animals are slain, and the (annual) Soma-sacrifices.

47. For all this is (particularly) enjoined (in the Veda), and called by way of laudation 'a debt.'

48. For it is declared in the Veda, 'A Brâhmana is born, loaded with three debts,' (and further, 'He owes) sacrifices to the gods, a son to the manes, the study of the Veda to the Rîshis; therefore he is free from debt who has offered sacrifices, who has begotten a son, and who has lived as a student (with a teacher).'

49. Let him (ordinarily) initiate a Brâhmana in the eighth (year) after conception,

50. A Kshatriya in the eleventh year after conception,

51. A Vaisya in the twelfth year after conception.

52. The staff of a Brâhmana (student may) optionally (be made) of Palâsa wood, 44. Gautama XV, 5.

45. Vishnu LIX, 2.

46. Vishnu LIX, 4-9.

47. Manu IV, 257. I read rinasamstutam with MS. E.

48. Taitt. Samh. VI, 3, 10, 5; Satapatha-brâhmana I, 7, 2, 11.

49-51. Vishnu XXVII, 15-17.

52-54. Vishnu XXVII, 29. Regarding other kinds of sticks, see Gautama I, 22-24.

53. (That) of a Kshatriya optionally of the wood of the Banyan tree,

54. (That) of a Vaisya optionally of Udumbara wood.

55. (The staff) of a Brāhmaṇa shall (be of such a length as to) reach the hair,

56. (That) of a Kshatriya the forehead,

57. (That) of a Vaisya the (tip of the) nose.

58. The girdle of a Brāhmaṇa shall be made of Muñga grass,

59. A bowstring (shall be that) of a Kshatriya,

60. (That) of a Vaisya shall be made of hempen threads.

61. The upper garment of a Brāhmaṇa (shall be) the skin of a black antelope,

62. (That) of a Kshatriya the skin of a spotted deer,

63. (That) of a Vaisya a cow-skin or the hide of a he-goat.

64. The (lower) garment of a Brāhmaṇa (shall be) white (and) unblemished,

65. (That) of a Kshatriya dyed with madder,

66. (That) of a Vaisya dyed with turmeric, or made of (raw) silk;

67. Or (a dress made of) undyed (cotton) cloth may be worn by (students of) all (castes).

68. A Brāhmaṇa shall ask for alms placing (the word) 'Lady' first,

55-57. Vishṇu XXVII, 22.

58-60. Vishṇu XXVII, 18.

61-63. Vishṇu XXVII, 20.

64-67. Vishṇu XXVII, 19; Gautama I, 17-21. 'Unblemished,' i. e. new, without holes and seams.

68-70. Vishṇu XXVII, 25. I. e. 'Lady, give alms;' 'Give, O lady, alms;' and 'Give alms, lady.'

69. A Kshatriya placing (the word) 'Lady' in the middle,

70. A Vaisya placing (the word) 'Lady' at the end (of the formula).

71. The time (for the initiation) of a Brâhmaṇa has not passed until the completion of the sixteenth year,

72. (For that) of a Kshatriya until the completion of the twenty-second,

73. (For that) of a Vaisya until the completion of the twenty-fourth.

74. After that they become 'men whose Sâvitṛi has been neglected.'

75. Let him not initiate such men, nor teach them, nor sacrifice for them; let them not form matrimonial alliances (with such outcasts).

76. A man whose Sâvitṛi has not been performed, may undergo the Uddâlaka-penance.

77. Let him subsist during two months on barley-gruel, during one month on milk, during half a month on curds of two-milk whey, during eight days on clarified butter, during six days on alms given without asking, (and) during three days on water, and let him fast for one day and one night.

78. (Or) he may go to bathe (with the priests) at the end of an Asvamedha (horse-sacrifice).

79. Or he may offer a Vrâtya-stoma.

71-73. Vishṇu XXVII, 26.

74. Vishṇu XXVII, 27. Sâvitṛi, literally 'the Rik sacred to Savitṛi' (Rig-veda III, 62, 10), means here 'the initiation,' see Gautama I, 12 note.

75. Âpastamba I, 1, 1, 28. The plural vivâhayeyuḥ, 'let them (not) form matrimonial alliances,' indicates that orthodox Brâhmaṇas must neither give their daughters to Patitasâvitṛikas nor take the daughters of such persons.

78. Gautama XIX, 9.

79. Gautama XIX, 8.

CHAPTER XII.

1. Now, therefore, the duties of a Snâtaka (will be explained).

2. Let him not beg from anybody except from a king and a pupil.

3. But let him ask, if pressed by hunger, for some (small gift) only, a cultivated or uncultivated field, a cow, a goat or a sheep, (or) at the last extremity, for gold, grain or food.

4. But the injunction (given by those who know the law) is, 'A Snâtaka shall not be faint with hunger.'

5. Let him not dwell together with a person whose clothes are foul;

6. (Let him not cohabit) with a woman during her courses,

7. Nor with an unfit one.

8. Let him not be a stay-at-home.

XII. 1. 'Now' marks the beginning of a new topic. 'Therefore,' i. e. because the duties of a Snâtaka have to be taught after those of a student.

2. Manu IV, 33; Gautama IX, 63.

3. Manu X, 113-114. 4. Manu IV, 34; Vishnu III, 79.

5. Krishnapandita, whom I have followed in the translation of this Sûtra, thinks that it indicates the obligation of wearing clean clothes, see e. g. Vishnu LXXI, 9. It seems to me, however, probable that its real sense is, 'Let him not cohabit with a woman during her courses,' and that the next Sûtra has to be read nâragasvalayâ, 'Nor with one of immature age.'

7. 'An unfit one,' i. e. 'one of low caste' (hinâ).—Krishnapandita. Probably a sick wife is meant, Gautama IX, 28.

8. Gautama IX, 53. Krishnapandita gives besides the above interpretation of the Sûtra from Haradatta's Gautamiyâ Mitâksharâ, another one, according to which it means, 'Let him not forsake his own family and enter another one (by adoption and so forth).' A third

9. Let him not step over a stretched rope to which a calf (or cow) is tied.

10. Let him not look at the sun when he rises or sets.

11. Let him not void excrements or urine in water,

12. Nor spit into it.

13. Let him ease himself, after wrapping up his head and covering the ground with grass that is not fit to be used at a sacrifice, and turning towards the north in the day-time, turning towards the south at night, sitting with his face towards the north in the twilight.

14. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'But Snâtakas shall always wear a lower garment and an upper one, two sacrificial threads, (shall carry) a staff and a vessel filled with water.'

15. 'It is declared, that (a vessel becomes) pure (if cleaned) with water, or with the hand, or with a stick, or with fire. Therefore he shall clean (his) vessel with water and with his (right) hand.'

16. 'For Manu, the lord of created beings, calls (this mode of cleaning) encircling it with fire.'

17. 'He who is perfectly acquainted with (the rules of) purification shall sip water (out of this vessel), after he has relieved the necessities of nature.'

18. Let him eat his food facing the east.

explanation is given by Nârâyana on Sâṅkhâya Gr̥hya-sûtra IV, 12, 11, who takes it to mean, 'Let him not go from one house to the other.'

9. Gautama IX, 52; Vishṇu LXIII, 42.

10. Vishṇu LXXI, 17-18.

11-12. Vishṇu LXXI, 35.

13. Gautama IX, 37-38, 41-43; Vishṇu LX, 2-3.

14. Vishṇu LXXI, 13-15.

18. Vishṇu LXVIII, 40.

19. Silently let him swallow the entire mouthful, (introducing it into the mouth) with the four fingers and with the thumb ;

20. And let him not make a noise (while eating).

21. Let him approach his wife in the proper season, except on the Parva days.

22. Let him not commit a crime against nature (with her).

23. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The ancestors of a man who commits an unnatural crime with a wedded wife, feed during that month on his semen. All unnatural intercourse is against the sacred law.'

24. It is also declared in the Kâṭhaka, '(When) the women (asked) Indra, "May even those among us, who are soon to be mothers, (be allowed to) cohabit with their husbands," he granted that wish.'

25. Let him not ascend a tree.

26. Let him not descend into a well.

27. Let him not blow the fire with his mouth.

28. Let him not pass between a fire and a Brâhmana,

29. Nor between two fires ;

30. Nor between two Brâhmanas ; or (he may do it) after having asked for permission.

31. Let him not dine together with his wife. For it is declared in the Vâgasaneyaka, 'His children will be destitute of manly vigour.'

19. Krishnapandita thinks that this rule refers to the first five mouthfuls only.

21. Vishnu LXIX, 1. The Parva days are the eighth, fourteenth, and fifteenth of each half-month.

25-27. Gautama IX, 32.

28. Āpastamba II, 5, 12, 6.

30. Āpastamba II, 5, 12, 7-8.

31. Satapatha-brâhmana X, 5, 2, 9 ; Vishnu LXVIII, 46.

32. Let him not point out (a rainbow calling it) by (its proper) name, 'Indra's bow.'

33. Let him call it 'the jewelled bow' (manidhanuḥ).

34. Let him avoid seats, clogs, sticks for cleaning the teeth, (and other implements) made of Palāsa wood.

35. Let him not eat (food placed) in his lap.

36. Let him not eat (food placed) on a chair.

37. Let him carry a staff of bamboo,

38. And (wear) two golden earrings.

39. Let him not wear any visible wreath excepting a golden one;

40. And let him disdain assemblies and crowds.

41. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'To deny the authority of the Vedas, to carp at the teaching of the Rīshis, to waver with respect to any (matter of duty), that is to destroy one's soul.'

42. Let him not go to a sacrifice except if he is chosen (to be an officiating priest. But) if he goes, he must, on returning home, turn his right hand (towards the place).

43. Let him not set out on a journey when the sun stands over the trees.

32-33. Gautama IX, 22.

34. Gautama IX, 44.

35. Vishṇu LXVIII, 21.

36. Gautama IX, 32.

37. Vishṇu LXXI, 13.

38. Vishṇu LXXI, 16.

39. Gautama IX, 32.

40. I read sabhāsamavâyâmskâvagayeta. The corrupt readings of Bh. samavâyâska gaviyan and of F. samavâyâmska vakshīyanna point to this version, the sense of which agrees with the parallel passages of other Smṛitis, see e. g. Āpastamba I, 11, 32, 19.

41. Vishṇu LXXI, 83.

42. Gautama IX, 54-55, 66.

43. Vishṇu LXIII, 9. According to Kṛishṇapandita the time intended is midday.

44. Let him not ascend an unsafe boat, or (any unsafe conveyance).

45. Let him not cross a river, swimming.

46. When he has risen in the last watch (of the night) and has recited (the Veda) he shall not lie down again.

47. In the Muhūrta sacred to Pragâpati a Brâhmana shall fulfil some sacred duties.

CHAPTER XIII.

1. Now, therefore, the Upâkarman (or the rite preparatory to the study) of the Veda (must be performed) on the full moon day of the month Srâvana or Praush/hapada.

2. Having kindled the sacred fire, he offers (therein) unground (rice) grains,

3. To the gods, to the Rîshis, and to the Khandas.

4. Let them begin to study the Vedas, after having made Brâhmanas (invited for the purpose) wish 'welfare' (svasti), and after having fed them with sour milk,

5. (And continue the Veda-study) during four

44. Vishnu LXIII, 47.

45. Vishnu LXIII, 46. Krishnapandita omits this Sûtra which is found in the majority of the MSS.

46. Âpastamba I, 11, 32, 15; Vishnu XXX, 27.

47. Manu IV, 92; Vishnu LX, 1. The Muhūrta sacred to Pragâpati is the same as the Brâhma-muhūrta, and falls in the last watch of the night.

XIII. 1. Vishnu XXX, 1. Srâvana, July-August. Praush/hapada, i. e. Bhâdrapada, August-September. Krishnapandita improperly combines this Sûtra with the next.

5. Gautama XVI, 2.

months and a half or during five months and a half.

6. After (the expiration of) that (period), he may study (the Vedas) during the bright half of each month,

7. But the supplementary treatises (Aṅgas) of the Veda at pleasure (both during the bright and the dark halves of each month).

8. Interruptions of the (Veda-study shall take place),

9. If it thunders during the twilight,

10. During (both) the twilights (of each day),

11. In towns where a corpse (lies) or Kāṇḍālas (stay).

12. At pleasure (he may study seated) in (a place) which has been smeared with cowdung and around which a line has been drawn.

13. (Let him not study) near a burial-ground,

14. (Nor) lying down,

15. Nor when he has eaten or received a gift at a funeral sacrifice ;

16. And with reference to this (subject) they quote a verse of Manu, 'Be it fruit, or water, or

6-7. Manu IV, 98.

9. Āpastamba I, 3, 9, 20.

10. Gautama XVI, 12.

11. Gautama XVI, 19; Vishṇu XXX, 10. The above translation follows Kṛishṇapāṇḍita's gloss. But the Sūtra may also be taken differently : 'In (villages) where a corpse lies or a Kāṇḍāla stays (and) in towns.' For the prohibition to study in towns is mentioned by Gautama XVI, 45; Manu IV, 116; and Āpastamba I, 3, 9, 4.

12. Āpastamba I, 3, 9, 5. The rule refers to places, such as high-roads, where studying is ordinarily forbidden.

13. Vishṇu XXX, 15; Āpastamba I, 3, 9, 6.

14. Gautama XVI, 17.

15. Gautama XVI, 34.

16. Manu IV, 117 somewhat resembles the verse quoted. But sesamum, or food, or whatever be the (gift) at a Srâddha, let him not, having just accepted it, recite the Veda; for it is declared in the Smṛiti, that the hand of a Brâhmaṇa is his mouth.'

17. (Let him not recite the Veda) while he runs, (nor) while a foul smell and the like (are perceptible, nor) on barren ground,

18. (Nor) when he has ascended a tree,

19. (Nor) in a boat or in a camp,

20. Nor after meals while his hands are moist,

21. (Nor) while the sound of a Vâṇa (is heard),

22. (Nor) on the fourteenth day (of each half-month, nor) on the new moon day, (nor) on the eighth day (of each half-month, nor) on an Ashṭakâ,

23. (Nor) while he stretches his feet out, (nor) while he makes a lap, (nor) while he leans against (something), nor (in any other unbecoming posture),

24. (Nor) close to his Gurus,

25. (Nor) during that night in which he has had conjugal intercourse,

26. (Nor) dressed in that garment which he had on during conjugal intercourse, except if it has been washed, its altered form shows clearly that the Mânava Dharmaśāstra known to Vasishṭha differed from the work which at present goes by that name. Compare also Sāṅkhâyaṇa Grîhya-sûtra IV, 7, 55.

17. Yâgyavalkya I, 150; Gautama XVI, 19; Manu IV, 120.

18. Āpastamba I, 3, 11, 16.

19. Vishṇu XXX, 18; Manu IV, 121.

20. Āpastamba I, 3, 10, 25.

21. Gautama XVI, 7, and note.

22. Vishṇu XXX, 4; Gautama XVI, 37-38. The Ashṭakâs are the eighth days of the dark halves of the winter months, Mârgaśīrsha, Pausha, Mâgha, and Phâlguna.

23. Vishṇu XXX, 17; Manu IV, 112.

26. Manu IV, 116.

27. (Nor) at the extremity of a village,
28. (Nor) after (an attack of) vomiting,
29. (Nor) while voiding urine or fæces.
30. (Let him not recite) the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, and (the Atharva-veda) while the sound of the Sâman melodies (is audible), nor (the Sâman while the other Vedas are being recited).
31. (Let him not study) before (his food is) digested,
32. (Nor) when a thunderbolt falls,
33. (Nor) when an earthquake happens,
34. Nor when the sun and the moon are eclipsed.
35. When a preternaturally loud sound is heard in the sky, when a mountain falls, (and) when showers of stones, blood or sand (fall from the sky, the Veda must not be read) during the twenty-four hours (immediately succeeding the event).
36. If meteors and lightning appear together, (the interruption shall last) three (days and) nights.
37. A meteor (alone and) a flash of lightning (alone cause an interruption lasting) as long as the sun shines (on that or the next day).
38. (If rain or other celestial phenomena come) out of season, (the Veda must not be read) during the twenty-four hours (immediately succeeding the event).

- | | |
|---|---------------------|
| 27. Gautama XVI, 18. | 28. Vishnu XXX, 19. |
| 29. Gautama XVI, 11. Krishnapandita improperly divides the Sûtra into two. | |
| 30. Vishnu XXX, 26. | 31. Vishnu XXX, 21. |
| 32-34. Vishnu XXX, 5; Gautama XVI, 22. | |
| 35. Gautama XVI, 22; Manu IV, 105, 115. Krishnapandita mentions digdâha, 'when the sky appears preternaturally red,' as a various reading for 'dignâda.' | |
| 38. Âpastamba I, 3, 11, 29. | |

39. If the teacher has died, (he shall not study the Veda) during three (days and) nights.

40. If the teacher's son, a pupil, or a wife (have died, he shall not study) during a day and a night.

41. Let him honour an officiating priest, a father-in-law, paternal and maternal uncles, (though they may be) younger than himself, by rising and saluting them,

42. Likewise the wives of those persons whose feet must be embraced, and the teacher's (wives),

43. And his parents.

44. Let him say to one acquainted with (the meaning of) a salute, 'I N. N. ho! (salute thee);'

45. But him who does not know it (he shall address with the same formula, omitting his name).

46. When a salute is returned, the last vowel (of the noun standing) in the vocative is produced to the length of three moras, and if it is a diphthong (e or o) changeable according to the Sandhi rules, it becomes ây or âv, e. g. bho, bhâv.

47. A father who has committed a crime causing loss of caste must be cast off. But a mother does not become an outcast for her son.

48. Now they quote also (the following verses):

39. Âpastamba I, 3, 10, 2-4.

40. Vishnu XXXII, 4.

42. The persons intended are, the teacher and so forth. See Âpastamba I, 4, 14, 7, note.

44. Gautama VI, 5.

45. Âpastamba I, 4, 14, 23. Krishnapandita combines this Sûtra with the preceding.

46. Âpastamba I, 2, 5, 18. In returning a salute, the name of the person addressed is pronounced, and if it ends in a, the vowel is made pluta, while e and o are changed to âya and âva, e. g. Hare to Harâya.

47. Gautama XX, 1; XXI, 15; Âpastamba I, 10, 28, 9.

48. Manu II, 145.

‘The teacher (ākārya) is ten times more venerable than a sub-teacher (upādhyāya), the father a hundred times more than the teacher, and the mother a thousand times more than the father.’

49. ‘A wife, sons, and pupils who are defiled by sinful deeds, must first be reproved, and (if they do not amend, then) be cast off. He who forsakes them in any other way, becomes (himself) an outcast.’

50. An officiating priest and a teacher who neglect to teach the recitation of the Veda, or to sacrifice, shall be cast off. If he does not forsake them, he becomes an outcast.

51. They declare that the male offspring of outcasts are (also) outcasts, but not the females.

52. For a female enters (the family of) a stranger.

53. He may marry such a (female) without a dowry.

54. ‘If the teacher’s teacher is near, he must be treated like the teacher (himself). The Veda declares that one must behave towards the teacher’s son just as towards the teacher.’

55. A Brâhmaṇa shall not accept (as gifts) weapons, poison, and spirituous liquor.

56. Learning, wealth, age, relationship, and occupation must be honoured.

57. (But) each earlier named (quality) is more venerable than (the succeeding ones).

58. If he meets aged men, infants, sick men, load-carriers, women, and persons riding in chariots, he

49. Âpastamba I, 2, 8, 29-30.

50. Gautama XXI, 12.

51. Âpastamba I, 10, 29, 14.

53. Manu II, 238; Yâgyñavalkya III, 261.

54. Vishṇu XXVIII, 29, 31.

56. Vishṇu XXXII, 16.

58-59. Vishṇu LXIII, 51.

must make way (for them, i.e.) for each later (named before those enumerated earlier).

59. If a king and a Snâtaka meet, the king must make (way) for the Snâtaka.

60. All (must make way) for a bride who is being conveyed (to her husband's house).

61. Grass, room (for resting), fire, water, a welcome, and kind words never fail in the houses of good men.

CHAPTER XIV.

1. Now, therefore, we will declare what may be eaten and what may not be eaten.

2. Food given by a physician, a hunter, a woman of bad character, a mace-bearer, a thief, an Abhisasta, a eunuch, (or) an outcast must not be eaten,

3. (Nor that given) by a miser, one who has performed the initiatory ceremony of a Srauta-sacrifice, a prisoner, a sick person, a seller of the Soma-plant, a carpenter, a washerman, a dealer in spirituous liquor, a spy, a usurer, (or) a cobbler,

4. Nor (that given) by a Sûdra,

5. Nor (that given) by one who lives by his weapons,

6. Nor (that given) by the (kept) paramour of a

61. Âpastamba II, 2, 4, 14; Gautama V, 35-36.

XIV. 2. Vishnu LI, 7, 10-11. Dandika, 'a mace-bearer,' may mean 'a police officer' or 'a messenger.' I read with MSS. Bh. and F. shandha, 'a eunuch,' instead of satha, 'a rogue,' the reading of the other MSS. and of Krishnapandita.

3. Vishnu LI, 8-9, 12, 19; Gautama XVII, 17. I write sûkaka, 'a spy,' instead of sûkika, 'a tailor,' according to the other Smritis, e.g. Vishnu LI, 12; Âpastamba I, 6, 18, 30.

4. Âpastamba I, 6, 18, 13.

5. Âpastamba I, 6, 18, 19.

6. Vishnu LI, 16; Gautama XVII, 18. I read with the majority married woman, or by a husband who allows a paramour (to his wife),

7. Nor (that given) by an incendiary,

8. Nor (that given) by (a ruler) who does not slay those worthy of capital punishment,

9. Nor (food) offered publicly with these words, 'Who is willing to eat?'

10. Nor food given by a multitude of givers, or by harlots, and so forth.

11. Now they quote also (the following verse) : 'The gods do not eat (the offerings) of a man who keeps dogs, nor of him whose (only) wife is of the Sûdra caste, nor of him who lives in subjection to his wife, nor of (a husband) who (permits) a paramour (of his wife to reside) in his house.'

12. He may accept (the following presents even) from such (people, viz.) firewood, water, fodder, Kusa grass, parched grain, (food) given without asking, a vehicle, (shelter in) the house, small fish, millet, a garland, perfumes, honey, and meat.

13. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'For the sake of a Guru, when he desires to save his wife (and family from starvation), when he wishes to honour the gods or guests, he may accept (presents) from anybody; but let him not satisfy his (own hunger) with such (gifts).'

of the MSS. yaskopapatim [pattim F.] manyate, instead of B.'s and Krishnapandita's yaskopari manyate.

9. Âpastamba I, 6, 18, 17.

10. Vishnu LI, 7. 'And so forth (iti), i. e. by cruel men and the like.'—Krishnapandita.

11. Vishnu LI, 15.

12. Gautama XVII, 3; Vishnu LVII, 10.

13. Vishnu LVII, 13; Manu IV, 251.

14. Food given by a hunter who uses the bow must not be rejected.

15. For it is declared in the Veda, 'At a sacrificial session (sattra), which lasted one thousand years, Agastya went out to hunt. He had sacrificial cakes prepared with the meat of beasts and fowls good (to eat).'

16. With reference to this (subject) they quote also some verses proclaimed by Pragâpati, 'Pragâpati (the Lord of created beings) has declared that food freely offered and brought (by the giver himself) may be eaten, though (the giver) be a sinful man, provided the gift has not been asked for beforehand.'

17. 'Food offered by a man who has faith must certainly be eaten, even though (the giver) be a thief, but not that given by (a Brâhmaṇa) who sacrifices for many and who initiates many.'

18. 'The manes do not eat during fifteen years (the food) of that man who disdains a (freely offered gift), nor does the fire carry his offerings (to the gods).'

19. 'But alms, though offered without asking, must not be accepted from a physician, from a hunter, from a surgeon or a (very) wicked man, from a eunuch, and from a faithless wife.'

20. Fragments of food left by other persons than the teacher must not be eaten,

21. Nor remnants of one's own (meal) and food touched by leavings,

15. Manu V, 22-23. I connect vigñâyate with this Sûtra, instead of with the preceding one, as Kṛishṇapandita does.

16. Vishṇu LVII, 11; Manu IV, 248; Âpastamba I, 6, 19, 14.

18. Vishṇu LVII, 12; Manu IV, 249; Âpastamba I, 6, 19, 14.

19. Âpastamba I, 6, 19, 15.

20. Vishṇu XXVIII, 11.

22. Nor (food) defiled by contact with a garment, hair, or insects.

23. But at pleasure he may use (such food) after taking out the hair and the insects, sprinkling it with water, dropping ashes on it, and (after it has been declared) fit for use by the word (of a Brâhmaṇa).

24. With reference to this (subject) they quote also some verses proclaimed by Pragâpati, 'The gods created for Brâhmaṇas three means of purifying (defiled substances), viz. ignorance (of defilement), sprinkling (them) with water, and commending (them) by word of mouth.'

25. 'Let him not throw away that food which, at a procession with images of the gods, at weddings, and at sacrifices, is touched by crows or dogs.'

26. 'After the (defiled) portion has been removed, the remainder shall be purified, liquids by straining them, but solid food by sprinkling it with water.'

27. 'What has been touched by the mouth of a cat is even pure.'

28. (Cooked food which has become) stale (by being kept), what is naturally bad, what has been placed once only in the dish, what has been cooked more than once, raw (food), and (food) insufficiently cooked (must not be eaten).

29. But at pleasure he may use (such food) after pouring over it sour milk or clarified butter.

22. Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 28; Gautama XVII, 9.

23. Vishṇu XXIII, 38; Yâgñavalkya I, 189.

24. Yâgñavalkya I, 191.

26. Vishṇu XXIII, 30. Krishṇapandita thinks that plâvanena, 'by straining them (through a cloth),' may also mean 'by heating them on the fire.'

28. Gautama XVII, 13, and note, 15-16.

29. Manu V, 24.

30. With reference to this (subject) they quote also some verses proclaimed by Pragâpati, 'A Brâhmaṇa shall not eat clarified butter or oil which drips from the nails (of the giver). Yama has declared such (food to be) impure; (to eat it is as sinful) as to partake of cow's flesh.'

31. 'But fatty substances, salt, and condiments proffered with the hand do not benefit the giver, and he who partakes of them will eat sin.'

32. 'Let him give, therefore, such substances placed on a leaf or on grass, but never with his hands or in an iron vessel.'

33. For eating garlic, onions, mushrooms, turnips, Sleshmântaka, exudations from trees, the red sap flowing from incisions (in trees or plants), food pecked at by crows or worried by dogs, or the leavings of a Sûdra, an Atikrikkhṛa (penance must be performed).

34. (Let him not drink) the milk of a cow that is in heat, nor of one whose calf has died,

35. Nor that which cows, buffalo-cows, and goats give during the first ten days (after giving birth to young ones),

36. Nor water collected at the bottom of a boat.

37. Let him avoid wheat-cakes, (fried) grain, porridge, barley-meal, pulse-cakes, oil, rice boiled in milk, and vegetables that have turned sour (by standing),

33. Vishṇu LI, 34, 36; Gautama XVII, 32-33. Regarding the Atikrikkhṛa penance, see below, XXIV, 1.

34. Vishṇu LI, 40. For other explanations of the term sandhini, 'a cow that is in heat,' see Âpastamba I, 5, 17, 23; Vishṇu LI, 40.

35. Vishṇu LI, 39. The Sûtra implies that the milk of other animals must not be drunk under any circumstances.

37-38. Vishṇu LI, 35, 42.

38. Likewise other kinds of (sour) food prepared with milk and barley-flour.

39. Among five-toed animals, the porcupine, the hedgehog, the hare, the tortoise, and the iguana may be eaten,

40. Among (domestic) animals those having teeth in one jaw only, excepting camels.

41. And among fishes, the long-nosed crocodile, the Gavaya, the porpoise, the alligator, and the crab (must not be eaten),

42. Nor those which are misshaped or have heads like snakes,

43. Nor the bos Gaurus, the Gayal, and the Sarabha,

44. Nor those that have not been (specially mentioned (as fit for food),

45. Nor milch-cows, draught-oxen, and animals whose milk teeth have not dropped out.

46. It is declared in the Vâgasaneyaka, that (the flesh of) milch-cows and oxen is fit for offerings.

47. But regarding the rhinoceros and the wild boar they make conflicting statements.

48. And among birds, those who seek their food by scratching with their feet, the web-footed ones, the Kalaviṅka, the water-hen, the flamingo, the

39. Gautama XVII, 27. Haradatta on Âpastamba and Gautama explain svâvidh, 'the porcupine,' to be a kind of boar, and salyaka, 'the hedgehog,' to be 'the porcupine.'

40. Vishṇu LI, 30; Manu V, 18.

41-42. Gautama XVII, 36; Âpastamba I, 5, 17, 38-39.

43. Âpastamba I, 5, 17, 29.

44. Manu V, 11, 17.

45. Gautama XVII, 30-31.

46. Âpastamba I, 5, 17, 31.

48. Gautama XVII, 34-35; Vishṇu LI, 28-31. I read mân-dhâla, 'the flying fox,' while Krishṇapandita gives mâghâra, a Brahmanî duck, the Bhâsa, the crow, the blue pigeon, the osprey, the Kâtaka, the dove, the crane, the black partridge, the grey heron, the vulture, the falcon, the white egret, the ibis, the cormorant, the peewit, the flying-fox, those flying about at night, the woodpecker, the sparrow, the Railâtaka, the green pigeon, the wagtail, the village-cock, the parrot, the starling, the cuckoo, those feeding on flesh, and those living about villages (must not be eaten).

CHAPTER XV.

1. Man formed of uterine blood and virile seed proceeds from his mother and his father (as an effect) from its cause.

2. (Therefore) the father and the mother have power to give, to sell, and to abandon their (son).

3. But let him not give or receive (in adoption) an only son;

4. For he (must remain) to continue the line of the ancestors.

5. Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with her husband's permission.

6. He who desires to adopt a son, shall assemble | ✓ reading which he cannot explain. The MSS. read as follows: B. E. mâghâra, Bh. F. mâdhâm, I. O. 913 (âtibh)ândha (naktam). Haradatta on Âpastamba I, 5, 17, 33 explains plava, 'the water-hen,' to be a kind of heron, called also sakatabila.

XV. 1-9. Vyavahâramayûkha IV, 5, 16; Colebrooke V, Digest CCLXXIII; Dattakamimâmsâ IV, 14; V, 31-40.

3. Colebrooke, Mitâksharâ I, 11, 11; Dattakamimâmsâ IV, 2-3.

4. Dattakamimâmsâ IV, 4. I. e. to offer funeral sacrifices to his ancestors and to have sons who do it after him.

5. Dattakamimâmsâ I, 15; IV, 9.

6. Colebrooke, Mitâksharâ I, 11, 13, and note; Dattakamîhis kinsmen, announce his intention to the king, make burnt-offerings in the middle of the house, reciting the Vyâhr̥itis, and take (as a son) a not remote kinsman, just the nearest among his relatives.

7. But if a doubt arises (with respect to an adopted son who is) a remote kinsman, (the adopter) shall set him apart like a Sûdra.

8. For it is declared in the Veda, 'Through one he saves many.'

9. If, after an adoption has been made, a legitimate son be born, (the adopted son) shall obtain a fourth part,

10. Provided he be not engaged in (rites) procuring prosperity.

mâmsâ II, 51; Dattakāṇḍrikâ II, 11. 'To the king,' i.e. to the person who holds the village, either to the king of the country or to the feudal chief (Thâkor) who holds it under the sovereign. 'Reciting the Vyâhr̥itis,' i.e. saying with the first oblation Om bhûh svâhâ, with the second Om bhuvaḥ svâhâ, with the third Om svaḥ svâhâ, and with the fourth Om bh., bh., sv. svâhâ; see Vyavahâramayûkha IV, 5, 42. 'A not remote kinsman, just the nearest among his relatives,' i.e. a boy as nearly related as possible, in the first instance a Sapinda, on failure of such a one, a Samânodaka or a Sagotra.

7. Dattakamîmâmsâ II, 18; Dattakāṇḍrikâ II, 11. 'If a doubt arises,' i.e. if the adopter afterwards feels uncertain regarding the caste or other qualifications of his adopted son. 'Set him apart like a Sûdra,' i.e. shall neither have him initiated nor employ him for any sacred rites.

8. Dattakāṇḍrikâ II, 11.

9. Colebrooke, Mitāksharâ I, 11, 24. Dattakamîmâmsâ X, 1; Dattakāṇḍrikâ II, 11; V, 17. For the explanation of the term 'a fourth part,' see Colebrooke, Mitāksharâ I, 77.

10. 'Rites procuring prosperity,' i.e. Srâddhas, expiatory rites, &c. See also above, III, 71, and Gautama XI, 17. According to Krishnapañḍita the estate is in this case to be divided equally between the legitimate son and the adopted son. An entirely

11. He who divulges the Veda (to persons not authorised to study it), he who sacrifices for Sûdras, (and all those) who have fallen from the rank of the highest caste (shall be excommunicated by the ceremony of) emptying the water-vessel.

12. A slave or the son of a wife of a lower caste, or a relative not belonging to the same caste, who is destitute of good qualities, shall fetch a broken pot from a heap of vessels unfit for use, place Kusa grass, the tops of which have been cut off, or Lohita grass (on the ground), and empty the pot for the (outcast, overturning it) with his left foot;

13. And the relatives of the (outcast), allowing their hair to hang down, shall touch him who empties (the pot).

14. Turning (when they leave) their left hands towards (that spot), they may go home at pleasure.

15. Let them not afterwards admit the (excommunicated person) to sacred rites.

16. Those who admit him to sacred rites become his equals.

17. But outcasts who have performed (the prescribed) penance (may be) readmitted.

18. Now they quote also (the following verse):

different explanation, 'Provided (the estate) may not have been expended in acts of merit,' is given Dattaka~~andrikâ~~ V, 17-18. It is doubtlessly erroneous, for 'the estate' is nowhere mentioned in the preceding Sûtras.

11. Gautama XX, 1.

12. Gautama XX, 4. 'For the (outcast),' i. e. pronouncing his name, and saying, 'I deprive N. N. of water.'

13. Gautama XX, 5. Krishnapandita takes the Sûtra differently, but his explanation is refuted by the parallel passage of Gautama and Haradatta's commentary thereon.

14. Gautama XX, 7.

15. Gautama XX, 8-9.

‘Let him walk before those who readmit him, like one gamboling and laughing. Let him walk behind those who excommunicate him, like one weeping and sorrowing.’

19. Those who strike their teacher, their mother, or their father may be readmitted in the following manner, either after being pardoned by the (persons offended) or after expiating their sin.

20. Having filled a golden or an earthen vessel (with water taken) from a sacred lake or river, they pour (the water) over him, (reciting the three verses) ‘Ye waters are’ &c.

21. All the (other ceremonies to be performed on the) readmission of one who has bathed (in this manner) have been explained by (those ordained on) the birth of a son.

CHAPTER XVI.

1. Now (follow the rules regarding) legal proceedings.

2. Let the king (or) his minister transact the business on the bench.

3. When two (parties) have a dispute, let him not be partial to one of them.

20. Gautama XX, 10-14. I read ‘punyahradât,’ instead of ‘pûrnâhradât,’ as the MSS. and Krishnapandita have. The passage of the Veda referred to occurs Rig-veda X, 9, 1.

21. I. e. the person readmitted shall receive all the various sacraments just like a new-born child.

XVI. 2. Vishnu III, 72-73. Krishnapandita gives a second explanation of the Sûtra, which also appears admissible, ‘Let the king transact the business on the bench, taking counsel (with learned Brâhmanas as assessors);’ see Vishnu III, 72.

3. Translated as above the Sûtra is nearly equivalent to Gautama

4. Let him reason properly regarding an offence ; finally the offence (will become evident thereby).

5. He who properly reasons regarding an offence, in accordance with the sum of the science of the first two castes, is equitable towards all created beings.

6. And let him protect what has been gained ;

7. (Likewise) the property of infants (of the) royal (race).

XI, 5. But the phrase 'when two parties have a dispute' may also indicate, as Kṛishnapandita suggests, that the king or judge shall not promote litigation, see Gautama XIII, 27. As Kṛishnapandita states, the Sûtra may, however, mean also, 'When one case is being argued, let him not begin another (without finishing the first);' see Manu VIII, 43. Owing to the particular nature of the Sûtra style and the inclination of the Brâhmanical mind to double-entendres, I do not think it improbable that the author may have intended, both in this and in the preceding Sûtras, that his words should be interpreted in two ways.

4. Gautama XI, 23-24. I divide the words of the text, as follows, 'yathâsanam (i. e. yathâ-âsanam) aparâdhohî; antena aparâdhah,' and interpolate syât at the end of the first clause.

5. Kṛishnapandita wrongly divides this Sûtra into two, and wrongly adopts the reading of MSS. B. and E., consequently he obtains a sense only by the most astonishing tricks of interpretation. I read with MSS. Bh. and F., yathâsanam aparâdhohyâdyavarnayor vidyântatah, to which the reading of I. O. 913 âdyavarnayor vidhânatah points also. The meaning of the expression, 'according to the sum of the science of the first two castes,' I take to be according to the rules of sacred learning and of the mîmâmsâ, which is peculiar to the Brâhmanas and of logic (ânvikshikî) and polity (dandânîti), which are peculiar to or at least recommended to the particular attention of the Kshatriyas.

6. I read with MSS. Bh. and F., sampannam ka rakshayet. I consider this Sûtra to contain an admonition addressed to the king for himself; see Manu VII, 99. Kṛishnapandita and B. read sapattram ka rakshayet, 'Let him protect that which is attested by writings,' i. e. the donations of former kings, attested by writings; see Vishnu III, 83.

7. Kṛishnapandita thinks that the rule refers to the property of

8. (Likewise the property) of persons unfit to transact legal business (minors, widows, and so forth).

9. But if (a minor) comes of age, his property must be made over to him.

10. 'It is declared in the Smṛiti that there are three kinds of proof which give a title to (property, viz.) documents, witnesses, and possession; (thereby) an owner may recover property which formerly belonged to him (but was lost).'

11. From fields through which (there is a right of) road (a space sufficient for the road) must be set apart, likewise a space for turning (a cart).

12. Near new-built houses (and) other things (of the same description there shall be) a passage three feet broad.

13. In a dispute about a house or a field, reliance (may be placed on the depositions of) neighbours.

14. If the statements of the neighbours disagree, documents (may be taken as) proof.

the infant children of a hostile king who has been conquered and slain. It is, however, not improbable that it has a wider sense, and exhorts the king to look after the property of the children of his predecessor and of deceased feudal barons.

8-9. Gautama X, 48; Vishnu III, 65.

10. Yâgñavalkya II, 22.

11. Krishnapandita quotes in illustration of this Sûtra the following passage of Saṅkha and Likhita: 'In a field through which (there is a right of) road, (space) for the road must be set apart, and on the king's high-road a space sufficient for turning a chariot.'

12. Arthântareshu, 'near other things (of the same description),' means, according to Krishnapandita, 'near pleasure-gardens and the like.' No doubt, buildings of all kinds, fenced or walled gardens, and so forth are meant. I read tripâdamâtram.

13. Manu VIII, 258, 262; Yâgñavalkya II, 150, 152, 154.

15. If conflicting documents are produced, reliance (may be placed) on (the statements of) aged (inhabitants) of the village or town, and on (those of) guilds and corporations (of artisans or traders).

16. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Property inherited from a father, a thing bought, a pledge, property given to a wife after marriage by her husband's family, a gift, property obtained for performing a sacrifice, the property of reunited coparceners, and wages as the eighth.'

17. Whatever belonging to these (eight kinds of property) has been enjoyed (by another person) for ten years continuously (is lost to the owner).

18. They quote also (a verse) on the other side: 'A pledge, a boundary, and the property of minors, an (open) deposit, a sealed deposit, women, the property of a king, (and) the wealth of a Srotriya are not lost by being enjoyed (by others).'

19. Property entirely given up (by its owner) goes to the king.

20. If it be otherwise, the king with his ministers and the citizens shall administer it.

15. Manu VIII, 259.

16. In translating anvādheya by 'property given to a wife by her husband or his family after marriage,' I have followed Krishna-pañḍita's explanation. It may, however, mean also 'a deposit to be delivered to a third person' (anvāhita or anvādhi). Pratigraha, 'a gift,' is elsewhere explained as 'property promised, but not actually given.'

17. Yāgñavalkya II, 24; see also Vishṇu V, 187; Manu VIII, 148.

18. Identical with Manu VIII, 149; Yāgñavalkya II, 25.

19. Manu VIII, 30.

20. 'If it be otherwise,' i.e. if the owner gave his property up temporarily only, e.g. went on a journey or a pilgrimage, leaving it without anybody to take care of.

21. A king will be superior even to Brahman if he lives surrounded by servants (who are keen-eyed) like vultures.

22. But a king will not be exalted if he lives surrounded by servants (who are greedy) like vultures.

23. Let him live surrounded by servants (who are keen-eyed) like vultures, let him not be a vulture surrounded by vultures.

24. For through his servants blemishes become manifest (in his kingdom),

25. (Such as) theft, robbery, oppression, and (so forth).

26. Therefore let him question his servants beforehand.

27. Now (follow the rules regarding) witnesses :

28. Srotriyas, men of unblemished form, of good character, men who are holy and love truth (are fit to be) witnesses,

29. Or (men of) any (caste may give evidence) regarding (men of) any (other caste).

30. Let him make women witnesses regarding women ; for twice-born men twice-born men of the same caste (shall be witnesses), and good Sûdras for Sûdras, and men of low birth for low-caste men.

31. Now they quote also (the following verse) :
'A son need not pay money due by a surety, anything idly promised, money due for losses at play or for spirituous liquor, nor what remains unpaid of a fine or a toll.'

32. 'Depose, O witness, according to the truth ; expecting thy answer, thy ancestors hang in suspense ;

28. Vishnu VIII, 8 ; Yâgñavalkya II, 68 ; Manu VIII, 62-63.

29. Yâgñavalkya II, 69.

30. Manu VIII, 68.

31. Vishnu VI, 41 ; Manu VIII, 159 ; Yâgñavalkya II, 47.

(in accordance with its truth or falsehood) they will rise (to heaven) or fall (into hell).'

33. 'Naked and shorn, tormented with hunger and thirst, and deprived of sight shall the man who gives false evidence go with a potsherd to beg food at the door of his enemy.'

34. 'He kills five by false testimony regarding a maiden; he kills ten by false testimony regarding kine; he kills a hundred by false evidence regarding a horse, and a thousand by false evidence regarding a man.'

35. (Men) may speak an untruth at the time of marriage, during dalliance, when their lives are in danger or the loss of their whole property is imminent, and for the sake of a Brâhmaṇa; they declare that an untruth spoken in these five cases does not make (the speaker) an outcast.

36. Those who give partial evidence in a judicial proceeding for the sake of a relative or for money, deprive the ancestors of their spiritual family and those of their natural family of their place in heaven.

33. Identical with Manu VIII, 93.

34. Identical with Manu VIII, 98. Regarding the explanation of the words 'he kills,' see Manu VIII, 97, and Haradatta on Gautama XIII, 14.

35. Gautama XXIII, 29. Between this and the preceding Sûtras the MSS. as well as Kṛishnapandita insert another one, which is so corrupt that I am unable to translate it. Kṛishnapandita's explanation is opposed to all rules of interpretation, and not worth giving.

36. This verse, too, is corrupt, though the general sense is not doubtful. I read svaganasyârthe yadi vârtahetoḥ pakshâsrayenaiva vadanti kâryam—te sabdavamsasya kulasya pûrvân svargasthitâm-stânapi pâtayanti. 'The ancestors of their spiritual family,' i. e. the teacher, the teacher's teacher, and so forth.

CHAPTER XVII.

✓ 1. The father throws his debts on the (son) and obtains immortality if he sees the face of a living son.

✓ 2. It is declared in the Veda, 'Endless are the worlds of those who have sons; there is no place for the man who is destitute of male offspring.'

3. There is a curse (in the Veda), 'May our enemies be destitute of offspring.'

4. There is also (the following) passage of the Veda, 'May I obtain, O Agni, immortality by offspring.'

5. 'Through a son he conquers the worlds, through a grandson he obtains immortality, but through his son's grandson he gains the world of the sun.'

6. There is a dispute (among the wise; some say), 'The son belongs to the husband of the wife;' (and some say), 'The son belongs to the begetter.'

7. With respect to this (matter) they quote also on both sides verses like the following:

8. (Some say), 'If (one man's) bull were to beget a hundred calves on another man's cows, they would belong to the owner of the cows; in vain would the bull have spent his strength.'

XVII. 1. Identical with Vishnu XV, 45; Manu IX, 107; Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCIV.

2. The latter part of the quotation occurs Aitareya-brāhmaṇa VII, 3, 9.

3. Rig-veda I, 21, 5.

4. Rig-veda V, 4, 10; Taittirīya-saṃhitā I, 4, 46, 1.

5. Identical with Manu IX, 137, and Vishnu XV, 46.

6. The same point is argued Manu IX, 31-56.

8. Identical with Manu IX, 50.

9. (Others say), 'Carefully watch the procreation of your offspring, lest strangers sow seed on your soil; in the next world the son belongs to the begetter; (by carelessness) a husband makes (the possession of) offspring in vain.'

10. If amongst many brothers who are begotten by one father, one have a son, they all have offspring through that son; thus says the Veda.

11. If among many wives of one husband, one have a son, they all have offspring through that son; thus says the Veda.

12. Twelve (kinds of) sons only are noticed by the ancients.

13. The first (among these is the son) begotten by the husband himself on his legally married wife.

14. The second is the son of a wife (who is begotten) on failure of the (first) on a (wife or widow duly) authorised (thereto, by a kinsman).

15. The third is an appointed daughter.

9. Âpastamba II, 6, 13, 7.

10. Vishnu XV, 42.

11. Vishnu XV, 41.

12. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXCIH; Vishnu XV, 1. Elsewhere the expression purânadrishâh, 'noticed by the ancients,' has been taken to mean 'seen in the Purâna' ('the holy writ,' Colebrooke).

13. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXCIH; Vishnu XV, 2.

14. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXXX; Vishnu XV, 3.

15. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCIII; Mitâksharâ I, 11, 3; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 4, 43. The curious fact that Vasishtha here calls the appointed daughter a son may perhaps be explained by a custom which, though rarely practised, still occurs in Kasmîr, and by which a brotherless maiden is given a male name. A historical instance of this kind is mentioned in the Râgatarânginî, where it is stated that Kalyânadevî, princess of Gaudâ and wife of king Gayâpîdâ, was called by her father Kalyânamalla. When I collated this passage with the help of a Kasmîrian, I was told that a certain Brâhmana, still living in Srinagar, had changed the

16. It is declared in the Veda, 'A maiden who has no brothers comes back to the male ancestors (of her own family); returning she becomes their son.'

17. With reference to this (matter there is) a verse (to be spoken by the father when appointing his daughter), 'I shall give thee a brotherless damsel, decked with ornaments; the son whom she may bear, shall be my son.'

18. The fourth is the son of a remarried woman.

19. She is called remarried (punarbhû) who leaving the husband of her youth, and having lived with others, re-enters his family;

20. And she is called remarried who leaving an impotent, outcast or mad husband, or after the death of her husband takes another lord.

21. The fifth is the son of an unmarried damsel.

22. They declare that the son whom an unmarried damsel produces through lust in her father's house, is the son of his maternal grandfather.

name of his only child, a daughter called Amrî, to the corresponding masculine form, Amargû, in order to secure to himself through her the same spiritual benefits as if he had a son. It seems to me not improbable that Vasishtha's Sûtra alludes to the same legal fiction, and that he recommends in the first instance that the father is to make his daughter a son by changing her name, and next to secure for himself her son, by the verse quoted Sûtra 17.

16. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCIIL, where the preceding Sûtra has been placed after this. Compare Rig-veda I, 124, 5.

17. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXVI; Mitâksharâ I, 11, 3; Dâyabhâga X, 4; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 4, 43; Vishnu XV, 5.

18. Vishnu XV, 7.

19. Nârada XII, 48 (Jolly), where, however, kaumâram patim has been wrongly translated by 'an infant husband.'

20. Manu IX, 175.

21. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCLIX; Vishnu XV, 10.

22. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCLIX; Vishnu XV, 11.

23. Now they quote also (the following verse):
 'If an unmarried daughter bear a son begotten by a man of equal caste, the maternal grandfather has a son through him; he shall offer the funeral cake, and take the wealth (of his grandfather).'

24. (A male child) secretly born in the house is the sixth.

25. They declare that these (six) are heirs and kinsmen, preservers from a great danger.

26. Now among those (sons) who are not heirs, but kinsmen, the first is he who is received with a pregnant bride.

27. (The son of a damsel) who is married pregnant
 (is called) a son received with the bride (sahodha).

28. The second is the adopted son,

29. (He) whom his father and his mother give
 (in adoption).

30. (The son) bought is the third.

31. That is explained by (the story of) Sunahsepa.

32. 'Harisandra, forsooth, was a king. He bought the son of Aṭgarta Sauyavasi.

33. The fourth is (the son) self-given.

24. Vishṇu XV, 13.

25. 'From a great danger,' i.e. 'from the danger of losing heaven through failure of the funeral oblations.'

26. Vishṇu XV, 15.

28. Vishṇu XV, 18.

29. Vishṇu XV, 19.

30. Vishṇu XV, 20.

32. The MSS. and editions read the last word of the Sūtra as follows: B. vikriyya; Ben. ed. vikriya; Bh. E. F. vikrādyā; Calc.
 ed. and I. O. 913 vikrāyya svayam kṛitavān. I believe that, as the letters ka and va are constantly mistaken by the copyists the one for the other, the original reading was kikrāya. Regarding the story told in this Sūtra and continued below, Sūtra 35, see Max Müller, History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, pp. 408-416
 and 573-588.

33. Vishṇu XV, 22.

34. That is (likewise) explained by (the story of) Sunaḥsepa.

35. ' Sunaḥsepa, forsooth, when tied to the sacrificial stake, praised the gods; there the gods loosened his bonds. To him spoke (each of) the officiating priests, "He shall be my son." He did not agree to their (request. Then) they made him make (this) agreement, "He shall be the son of him whom he chooses." Visvâmitra was the Hotri priest at that (sacrifice). He became his son.'

36. The son cast off is the fifth.

37. (He is called so) who, cast off by his father and his mother, is received (as a son).

38. They declare that the son of a woman of the Sûdra caste is the sixth. These (six) are kinsmen, not heirs.

39. Now they quote also (the following rule): 'These (last-mentioned) six (sons) shall take the heritage of him who has no heir belonging to the first-mentioned six (classes).

40. Now (follow the rules regarding) the partition of the (paternal) estate among brothers :

41. And (let it be delayed) until those (widows) who have no offspring, (but are supposed to be pregnant), bear sons.

42. Let the eldest take a double share,

43. And a tithe of the kine and horses.

36-37. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXC; Vishnu XV, 24-25.

38. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXCII; Dattakandrikâ V, 14; Vishnu XVII, 27; Manu IX, 178-179; Gautama XXVIII, 39.

40. Colebrooke V, Dig. L; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 4, 37.

41. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXVII; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 4, 37.

42-45. Colebrooke V, Dig. L; Dâyabhâga II, 41; Gautama XXVIII, 9 and 5-7.

44. The goats, the sheep, and the house belong to the youngest,

45. Black iron, the utensils, and the furniture to the middlemost.

46. Let the daughters divide the nuptial present of their mother.

47. If a Brâhmana has issue by wives belonging to the Brâhmana, Kshatriya, and Vaisya classes respectively,

48. The son of the Brâhmana wife shall receive three shares,

49. The son of the Kshatriya wife two shares,

50. The other (sons) shall inherit equal shares.

51. And if one of the (brothers) has gained something by his own (effort), he shall receive a double share.

52. But those who have entered a different order receive no share,

53. Nor (those who are) eunuchs, madmen, or outcasts.

54. Eunuchs and madmen (have a claim to) maintenance.

55. The widow of a deceased person shall sleep

46. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCXCII; Dâyabhâga IV, 2, 15; Vishnu XVII, 21.

47-50. Colebrooke V, Dig. CLIV; Vishnu XVIII, 1-5.

51. Colebrooke V, Dig. LXXV, CXXXVIII, CCCLVI; Dâyabhâga II, 41; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 7, 8. 'By his own effort,' i.e. by learning or disputations with learned men, by bravery in battle, &c.

52. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCXXXVIII; Mitâksharâ II, 8, 7; 10, 3; Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 11, 5. The persons intended are a perpetual student, a hermit, and ascetic.

53. Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 11, 10.

54. Vyavahâra Mayûkha IV, 11, 10; Vishnu XV, 33.

55. 'Practising religious vows,' i.e. 'eating only once a day, and so forth.'—Krishnapandita.

on the ground during six months, practising religious vows and abstaining from pungent condiments and salt.

56. After the completion of six months she shall bathe, and offer a funeral oblation to her husband. (Then) her father or her brother shall assemble the Gurus who taught or sacrificed (for the deceased) and his relatives, and shall appoint her (to raise issue to her deceased husband).

57. Let him not appoint a (widow who is) mad, ill-conducted, or diseased,

58. Nor one who is very aged.

59. Sixteen years (after maturity is the period for appointing a widow);

60. Nor (shall an appointment be made) if the (male entitled to approach the widow) is sickly.

61. Let him approach (the widow) in the muhūrta sacred to Pragâpati, (behaving) like a husband, without (amorously) dallying with her, and without abusing or ill-treating her.

62. Let her obtain (the expenses for) food, raiment, baths, and unguents from (the estate of) her former (husband).

63. They declare that a son begotten on (a widow who has) not been (duly) appointed, belongs to the begetter.

56. Gautama XVIII, 4-7. The Gurus intended are the teacher, sub-teachers (upâdhyâya), and officiating priests.

57. Avasâm, 'ill-conducted,' may also mean 'out of her mind through grief or any other passion.' The former explanation has been adopted by Kṛishṇapandita, whom I have followed above.

61. Manu IX, 60. Regarding the muhūrta sacred to Pragâpati, see above, XII, 47.

63. Gautama XVIII, 9-12.

64. If she was (appointed, the child belongs) to both the males connected with the appointment.

65. No appointment (shall be made) through a desire to obtain the estate.

66. Some say, 'Or, one may appoint (a widow out of covetousness), after imposing a penance.'

67. A maiden who has attained puberty shall wait for three years.

68. After three years (have passed), she may take a husband of equal caste.

69. Now they quote also (the following verses) : 'But if through a father's negligence a maiden is here given away after the suitable age has passed, she who was waiting (for a husband) destroys him who gives her away, just as the fee which is paid too late to the teacher (destroys the pupil).'

70. 'Out of fear of the appearance of the menses let the father marry his daughter while she still runs about naked. For if she stays (in the house) after the age of puberty, sin falls on the father.'

64. Gautama XVIII, 13. 'To both the males connected with the appointment,' i.e. to the deceased husband for whose sake the appointment is made, and to the natural father of the child, to whom the widow is made over.

65. Colebrooke, Mitāksharâ II, 1, 11. Krishnapañḍita thinks that the Sūtra forbids an appointment which is made with the intention to secure the estate or a share of the estate of the natural father, from whom the kshetrāga son inherits also (Yāgñavalkya II, 127). But it seems equally probable that it is intended to prevent a widow from agreeing to an appointment in order to obtain control over her husband's estate.

66. Krishnapañḍita thinks that the rule refers to all cases of appointment.

67-68. Vishṇu XXIV, 40, and note.

70. Gautama XVIII, 23.

71. 'As often as the courses of a maiden, who is filled with desire, and demanded in marriage by men of equal caste, recur, so often her father and her mother are guilty of (the crime of) slaying an embryo; that is a rule of the sacred law.'

72. 'If the betrothed of a maiden die after she has been promised to him verbally, and by (a libation of) water, but before she was married with (the recitation of) sacred texts, she belongs to her father alone.'

73. 'If a damsel has been abducted by force, and not been wedded with sacred texts, she may lawfully be given to another man; she is even like a maiden.'

74. 'If a damsel at the death of her husband had been merely wedded by (the recitation of) sacred texts, and if the marriage had not been consummated, she may be married again.'

75. The wife of an emigrant shall wait for five years.

76. After five years (have passed), she may go (to seek) her husband.

77. If for reasons connected with spiritual or with money matters she be unwilling to leave her home, she must act in the same manner as if (her husband were) dead.

78. In this manner a wife of the Brâhmana caste who has issue (shall wait) five years, and one who has no issue, four years; a wife of the Kshatriya caste who has issue, five years, and one who has no issue, three years; a wife of the Vaisya caste who

71. Colebrooke IV, Dig. XVI; Dâyahâga XI, 2, 6; Yâgyñavalkya I, 64.

72. Colebrooke IV, Dig. CLXXIV.

75-76. Colebrooke IV, Dig. CLVI, where the Sûtras have been altered intentionally; Gautama XVIII, 15-12.

has issue, four years, and one who has no issue, two years; a wife of the Sûdra caste who has issue, three years, and one who has no issue, one year.

79. After that among those who are united (with her husband) in interest, or by birth, or by the funeral cake, or by libations of water, or by descent from the same family, each earlier named person is more venerable than the following ones.

80. But while a member of her family is living, she shall certainly not go to a stranger.

81. Let the Sapindas or the subsidiary sons divide the heritage of him who has no heir of the first-mentioned six kinds.

82. On failure of them the spiritual teacher and a pupil shall take the inheritance.

83. On failure of those two the king inherits.

84. But let the king not take (the estate) of a Brâhmana.

85. For the property of a Brâhmana is a terrible poison.

86. 'Poison they do not call the (worst) poison; the property of a Brâhmana is said to be the (most destructive) poison. Poison destroys only one person, but the property of a Brâhmana (him who takes it) together with sons and grandsons.'

79. The persons intended are, (1) brothers united in interest with her husband and other coparceners, (2) separated brothers of the husband, (3) separated blood-relations of the husband within six degrees, (4) separated blood-relations of the husband within fourteen degrees, and (5) persons bearing the same family name or, in the case of Brâhmanas, descended from the same Rîshi.

81. Gautama XXVIII, 21; Vishnu XVII, 10. The subsidiary sons are those mentioned above, 26-38, who under ordinary circumstances do not inherit; see also above, Sûtra 39, and Gautama XXVIII, 34.

82. Âpastamba II, 6, 14, 3.

83-84. Vishnu XVII, 13.

87. He should give it to men who are well versed in the three Vedas.

CHAPTER XVIII.

1. They declare that the offspring of a Sûdra and of a female of the Brâhmana caste becomes a Kândâla,

2. (That of a Sûdra and) of a female of the Kshatriya caste, a Vaina,

3. (That of a Sûdra and) of a female of the Vaisya caste, an Antyâvasâyin.

4. They declare that the (son) begotten by a Vaisya on a female of the Brâhmana caste becomes a Râmaka,

5. (The son begotten by the same) on a female of the Kshatriya caste, a Pulkasa.

6. They declare that the (son) begotten by a Kshatriya on a female of the Brâhmana caste becomes a Sûta.

7. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'One may know by their deeds those who have been begotten secretly, and to whom the stigma of springing from unions in the inverse order of the castes attaches, because they are destitute of virtue and good conduct.'

87. Vishnu XVII, 14.

XVIII. 1. Vishnu XVI, 6.

4. Krishnapandita reads Romaka, 'a Roman,' for Râmaka, and the B. MS. supports him. The other MSS., including I. O. 913, give the reading adopted above. I prefer it, as there is no reason to assume that the Vâsishtha Dharma-râstra belongs to the late period when the Hindus had become aware of the existence of the Roman empire. On the other hand, it may be urged that Romaka is a correction which would easily suggest itself to a Pandit, who was unable to find a parallel passage in which the word Râmaka occurs.

6. Vishnu XVI, 6.

7. Manu X, 40.

8. (Children) begotten by Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas on females of the next lower, second lower, and third lower castes become (respectively) Ambashthas, Ugras, and Nishâdas.

9. (The son of a Brâhmana and) of a Sûdra woman (is) a Pârasava.

10. They declare that the condition of a Pârasava is that of one who, though living, is (as impure) as a corpse.

|| 11. Some call that Sûdra race a burial-ground.

12. Therefore (the Veda) must not be recited in the presence of a Sûdra.

13. Now they quote also the (following) verses, which Yama proclaimed :

‘The wicked Sûdra-race is manifestly a burial-ground. Therefore (the Veda) must never be recited in the presence of a Sûdra.’

14. ‘Let him not give advice to a Sûdra, nor what remains from his table, nor (remnants of) offerings (to the gods); nor let him explain the holy law to such a man, nor order him (to perform) a penance.’

15. ‘He who declares the law to such a man, and he who instructs him in (the mode of) expiating (sin), sinks together with that very man into the dreadful hell, (called) Asamvrita.’

16. ‘If ever a worm is produced in an open wound (on his body), he shall purify himself by the Prâgâpatya penance, and give gold, a cow, (and) a garment as presents (to Brâhmanas).’

8. Gautama IV, 16.

10. I omit the words sava iti mrîtâkhyâ, ‘a corpse is another name for one who has died,’ as an interpolation.

11. Âpastamba I, 3, 9, 9.

12. Vishnu XXX, 14.

14-15. Identical with Manu IV, 80-81.

16. A Prâgâpatya penance, i. e. a Krikâhâra, see below, XXI, 20.

17. Let him not approach a wife of the Sûdra caste after he has built the fire-altar for a Srauta-sacrifice.

18. For a Sûdra-wife who belongs to the black race, (is espoused) for pleasure, not in order to fulfil the law.

CHAPTER XIX.

1. The particular duty of a king is to protect (all) beings; by fulfilling it (he obtains) success (in this world and in the next).

2. Those learned (in the sacred law) declare that to be free from fear and pity is, indeed, a life-long sacrificial session (sattrā, to be performed by the king).

3. Therefore let him appoint a domestic priest to (perform the rites) obligatory on the order of householders.

4. It is declared in the Veda, 'A realm where a Brâhmaṇa is appointed domestic priest, prospers;'

5. For thus both (the special duties of a king and those of a householder) will be fulfilled,

6. And (the king alone is) unable (to do both).

7. Let the king, paying attention to all the laws of countries, (subdivisions of) castes (gâti) and families, make the four castes (varṇa) fulfil their (respective) particular duties.

The verse belongs rather to the section on penances, and seems to have been entered here merely because it stood in Yama's text with the other two, and the author, to use a homely Indian comparison, 'did not disdain to catch a fish, though he went to fetch water.'

XIX. 1. Vishṇu III, 2.

2. Manu VIII, 306.

3. Vishṇu III, 70.

4. Gautama XI, 14.

7. Vishṇu III, 3; Gautama XI, 20.

8. Let him punish those who stray from (the path of duty).

9. But punishment must be awarded in cases of assault and abuse after (due consideration of) the particular place and time (where and when the offence was committed), of the duties, age, learning (of the parties), and the seat (of the injury),

10. In accordance with (the precepts of) the (sacred) records and with precedents.

11. Let him not injure trees that bear fruit or flowers.

12. (But) he may injure them in order to extend cultivation and (for sacrifices).

13. The measures and weights of objects necessary for households must be guarded (against falsification).

14. Let him not take property for his own use from (the inhabitants of) his realm.

15. The measures and price (of such property) only shall be liable to deductions (in the shape of taxes).

8. Vishnu III, 37.

9. Gautama XII, 51. Krishnapandita has two Sûtras instead of one, and reads the second himsâkrosayoḥ kalpāḥ. The majority of the MSS. have, however, kalpâ(ḥ), which I consider to be a mistake for kalpyaḥ, 'must be awarded.'

11. Vishnu V, 55-56. The meaning of the Sûtra is that the king is to punish those who commit such acts.

12. The explicit permission to cut down trees for sacrificial purposes is given Vishnu LI, 63.

13. Manu VIII, 403.

14-15. The translation of these two Sûtras is not certain, because the words nirhâra and naihârîka are not found elsewhere in the sense which has been attributed to them here. Still I think it very probable that Krishnapandita's explanation nirhâra and nirhâre sâdhu is right, and that the king is exhorted not to take the property of his subjects by force, but to levy taxes according to the value or the measure of the articles sold.

16.

17. On the march against the enemy the army which consists of companies of ten, shall be able to perform a double (duty).

18. In every (camp) there shall be places where water is distributed.

19. Let him make one hundred men at the least engage in battle.

20. The wives (of slain soldiers) shall be provided for.

21.

22. A ferry shall be taken away (from a river) in which there is no water.

23. A Srotriya is free from taxes, (and so are) a servant of the king, one who has no protector,

16. The Sûtra has been left out, as the text is corrupt, and I am unable to suggest any emendation. Krishnapandita's explanation is not worth giving.

17. 'The army which consists of companies of ten,' i.e. the lowest subdivision of which consists of ten parts, viz. one elephant, one chariot, two horsemen, and three foot soldiers. Such a body is called a patti. The larger divisions, like the senâ mukha, 'battalion,' &c., are formed by three, nine, or twenty-seven patti. Though I am unable to adduce any positive proof for it, vâha must, according to the connexion in which it stands, be a synonym of patti. 'The double duty' of the army is, according to Krishnapandita, marching and fighting.

21. The Sûtra is utterly corrupt, and cannot be restored with the help of the MSS. at my disposal. It probably referred to the amount of duties to be levied on goods sold in the market.

22. The meaning of the Sûtra seems to be, that on those rivers, where the water either runs off or is very low during the dry season, the ferrymen must not be allowed to exact a toll from people crossing without their help. Such a rule would not be superfluous, as most Indian rivers are perfectly fordable between December and June, but impassable without boats in the other five months.

23. Âpastamba II, 10, 26, 10, 12-17; Manu VIII, 394. Krishna- one who has left (the order of householders), an infant, a very aged man, a young man (who studies), and pradâtâs;

24. (Moreover widows) who return to their former (family), unmarried maidens, and the wives of servants,

25. He who swims with his arms (across a river in order to escape payment of a toll at a ferry) shall pay one hundred times (the amount due).

26. No taxes (shall be paid) on the usufruct of rivers, dry grass, forests, (places of) combustion, and mountains;

27. Or those who draw their subsistence from them may pay (something),

28. But he shall take a monthly tax from artisans.

29. And when a king has died, let him give what is required for the occasion.

pandita correctly points out that, though according to I, 43, all Brâhmanas are to be free from taxes, the Srotiya or Vaidik is mentioned once more in order to show that a king, however distressed, must not take anything from him (Manu VII, 133). Krishnapandita reads instead of pradâtâs, pradâtâraḥ, 'very liberal men.' Manu loc. cit. exempts 'those who confer great benefits on priests of eminent learning' from paying taxes. His emendation would, therefore, be acceptable if the word pradâtâḥ did not occur in the same connexion above, XI, 7.

24. Āpastamba II, 10, 26, 11.

25. I read with the majority of the MSS. bāhubhyāmutteraṅṅha-tagunam dadyât.

26. Krishnapandita explains dâha, '(places of) combustion,' by agni, 'fire.' I am not certain what he means thereby. To me it seems most probable that Vasishṭha intends 'a place of cremation' (dâhasthala), though it is just possible to refer the expression to the jungle fires, which the aboriginal tribes light in the forests, in order to sow their Nāglī in the ground manured by the ashes.

28. Gautama X, 31.

29. Krishnapandita refers this and the following five Sûtras to

30. It is hereby explained that (his) mother (must receive) maintenance.

31. Let the king maintain the paternal and maternal uncles of the chief-queen,

32. As well as her other relatives.

33. The wives of the (deceased) king shall receive food and raiment,

34. Or if they are unwilling, they may depart.

35. Let the king maintain eunuchs and madmen,

36. Since their property goes to him.

37. Now they quote also a verse proclaimed by Manu, which refers to duties and taxes, 'No duty (is paid) on a sum less than a Karshâpana, there is no tax on a livelihood gained by art, nor on an infant, nor on a messenger, nor on what has been received as alms, nor on the remnants of property left after a robbery, nor on a Srotriya, nor on an ascetic, nor on a sacrifice.'

the case where a king has conquered a foreign country ; compare also Vishnu III, 47-48. I think that Sûtras 30-31 conclusively show that these rules are intended to regulate the conduct of a king on the death of his predecessor and his own accession to the throne.

34. Krishnapandita thinks that the queens unwilling to accept a bare subsistence may go wherever they like. I think the word used in the text points rather to their becoming ascetics.

35. This rule refers apparently to eunuchs and insane persons left with money, but without near relatives, with whom they are united in interest. Vishnu III, 65.

37. I translate the one word sulka by 'duties and taxes.' The term has a great many different meanings in the law books, and is in this verse apparently used in two senses. Krishnapandita is of a different opinion, and thinks that the persons named are free from paying a sulka in case they trade. The chief objection is that trading ascetics and Srotriyas are not known to the ancient writers, though they are common enough in modern India.

38. A thief becomes free from guilt by entering (the royal presence) after (his deed and asking to be punished).

39. But according to some (lawyers) he (who is caught) with weapons in his hands, with stolen goods in his possession, or covered with wounds is proved (to be a criminal).

40. In case (a criminal) worthy of punishment is allowed to go free, the king shall fast during one (day and one) night;

41. (And) his domestic priest during three (days and) nights.

42. If an innocent man is punished, the domestic priest (shall perform) a Krikkhra penance;

43. (And) the king (shall fast) during three (days and) nights.

44. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'The slayer of a learned Brâhmaṇa casts his guilt on him who eats his food; an adulterous wife on her (negligent) husband; a student and a sacrificer on an (ignorant) teacher (and officiating priest); and a thief on the king (who pardons him).'

45. 'But men who have committed offences and have received from kings the punishment (due to them), go pure to heaven, and (become) as holy as the virtuous.'

46. 'The guilt falls on the king who pardons an

38. This Sûtra apparently alludes to a penitent thief who confesses his crime and asks for punishment; see below, XX, 41.

39. Manu IX, 270; Nârada V, 29-33 (Jolly). As given in the MSS. and by Kṛishṇapandita, the Sûtra is doubtlessly corrupt. I read vraṇasampanno vyapadish/aḥ.

44. Identical with Manu VIII, 317.

45. Identical with Manu VIII, 318.

offender. If he causes him to be slain, he destroys sin in accordance with the sacred law.'

47. 'It is ordained that kings become at once pure (by bathing) when they have done acts causing death. They are likewise (pure while engaged in business) not causing death. Time is the reason for that.'

48. And with reference to this (matter) they quote a verse proclaimed by Yama, 'No taint of impurity, forsooth, falls on kings, on those engaged in practising vows, or on those engaged in the performance of sacrificial session (sattrā); for (the first) are seated on the throne of Indra, (and the others) are always equal to Brahman.'

CHAPTER XX.

1. A penance (shall be performed) for an offence committed unintentionally.

2. Some (declare that it shall be performed) also for (a fault) committed intentionally.

3. 'The spiritual teacher corrects the learned; the king corrects the evil-minded; but Yama, the son of Vivasvat, forsooth, punishes those who offend secretly.'

4. And among those (sinful persons), let him who slept at sunrise stand during the (following) day and recite the verse sacred to Savitri.

47. Vishṇu XXII, 48; Manu V, 94.

48. Identical with Manu V, 93. 'Those engaged in practising vows' are, according to Kullūka and Kṛishṇapāṇḍita, students learning the Veda.

XX. 1-2. Manu XI, 45; Yāgñavalkya III, 226.

4. 'Among those,' i.e. the sinful men (enasvīnaḥ) enumerated above, I, 18; Vishṇu LIV, 11.

5. Let him who slept at sunset remain in a sitting posture during the (next) night, likewise (reciting the Gâyatri).

6. But let a man with deformed nails or black teeth perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration.

7. He whose younger brother married first shall perform a Krikkhra penance during twelve days, marry and take to himself even that (woman whom his brother wedded).

8. Now he who has taken a wife before his elder brother shall perform a Krikkhra penance and an Atikrikkhra penance, give (his wife) to that (elder brother), marry again, and take (back) the same (woman whom he wedded first).

9. The husband of a younger sister married before her elder sister shall perform a Krikkhra penance during twelve days, marry and take to him that (elder sister).

10. The husband of an elder sister married after the younger one shall perform a Krikkhra penance and an Atikrikkhra penance, give (his wife) to that (husband of the younger sister and marry again).

5-10. Manu XI, 201.

6. Regarding the Krikkhra penance, see below, XXI, 20.

7-8. Vishnu LIV, 16. According to Krishnapandita both brothers shall perform penances. The elder brother shall marry after his penance is finished. The younger one shall offer his wife to the elder, in order to atone for the slur put upon the elder. The latter shall accept her for form's sake and return her to the younger brother, who must once more wed her. Regarding the Atikrikkhra penance, see below, XXIV, 2.

10. Vishnu LIV, 16. Krishnapandita thinks that he should marry another wife, but adds that others say that, after offering his wife to the husband of the younger sister and receiving his permission, he should wed her once more.

11. We shall declare below (the penance prescribed for) him who extinguishes the sacred fire.

12. He who has forgot the Veda (by neglecting to recite it daily), shall perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration, and again learn it from his teacher.

13. He who violates a Guru's bed shall cut off his organ, together with the testicles, take them into his joined hands and walk towards the south; wherever he meets with an obstacle (to further progress), there he shall stand until he dies.

14. Or, having shaved all his hair and smeared his body with clarified butter, he shall embrace the heated (iron) image (of a woman). It is declared in the Veda that he is purified after death.

15. The same (expiation is prescribed if the offence was committed) with the wife of the teacher, of a son, and of a pupil.

16. If he has had intercourse with a female (who is considered) venerable in the family, with a female friend, with the female friend of a Guru, with an Apapâtra female, or with an outcast, he shall perform a Krikkhra penance during three months.

17. The same (penance must be performed) for eating food given by a Kândâla or by an outcast. Afterwards the initiation (must be performed) once more; but the tonsure and the rest may be omitted.

11. See below, XXI, 27.

12. Vishnu LIV, 13.

13. Gautama XXIII, 10.

14. Gautama XXIII, 9, 11.

15-16. Gautama XXIII, 12.

16. Krishnapandita explains sakhîm, 'a female friend,' by 'a woman who has affection (for the offender), i.e. a sister and so forth.' Apapâtras are low-caste people, whose vessels must not be used; see Âpastamba I, 1, 3, 25, note.

18. And with reference to this (matter) they quote a verse proclaimed by Manu, 'The tonsure, (the tying on of) the sacred girdle, (the wearing of) a staff, and the begging of alms, these acts may be omitted on a second initiation.'

19. If (a Brâhmana) intentionally (drinks) other spirituous liquor than that distilled from rice, or if he unintentionally (drinks) spirituous liquor extracted from rice (surâ), he (must perform) a Krikkh and an Atikrikkh, and, after eating clarified butter, be initiated again.

20. The same (expiation is prescribed) for swallowing ordure, urine, and semen.

21. If a Brâhmana drinks water which has stood in a vessel used for (keeping) spirituous liquor, he becomes pure by drinking, during three days, water (mixed with a decoction) of lotus, Udumbara, Bilva, and Palâsa (leaves).

22. But a Brâhmana who repeatedly (and intentionally partakes) of liquor extracted from rice, shall drink (liquor of) the same (kind) boiling hot. 'He becomes pure after death.'

23. We will declare (who must be considered) the slayer of a learned Brâhmana (bhrûnahan). He is called Bhrûnahan who kills a Brâhmana or destroys an embryo (the sex of) which is unknown.

24. 'For embryos (the sex of) which is unknown

18. Identical with Manu XI, 152, and Vishnu LI, 5.

19-20. Manu XI, 151; Vishnu LI, 2. Regarding the other of liquors, see Manu XI, 95-96.

21. Manu XI, 148.

22. Gautama XXIII, 1.

23. Gautama XXII, 13. It must be understood a real Brâhmana who knows the Veda is meant.

24. 'Therefore they offer burnt-oblations for the production of males,' i.e. they perform the Pûmsavana, one of the sacraments; become males; therefore they offer burnt-oblations for the production of males.'

25. Let the slayer of a learned Brâhmana kindle a fire and offer (therein the following eight oblations, consisting of portions of his own body),

26. The first (saying), 'I offer my hair to Death, I feed Death with my hair;' the second (saying), 'I offer my skin to Death, I feed Death with my skin;' the third (saying), 'I offer my blood to Death, I feed Death with my blood;' the fourth (saying), 'I offer my flesh to Death, I feed Death with my flesh;' the fifth (saying), 'I offer my sinews to Death, I feed Death with my sinews;' the sixth (saying), 'I offer my fat to Death, I feed Death with my fat;' the seventh (saying), 'I offer my bones to Death, I feed Death with my bones;' the eighth (saying), 'I offer my marrow to Death, I feed Death with my marrow.'

27. (Or) let him (fight) for the sake of the king, or for the sake of Brâhmanas, and let him die in battle with his face turned (to the foe).

28. It is declared in the Veda, '(A murderer) who remains thrice unvanquished or is thrice defeated (in battle) becomes pure.'

29. 'A sin which is openly proclaimed becomes smaller.'

see e.g. Âsvalâyana I, 13. The Sûtra is marked as a quotation, and probably belongs to some Vedic work.

25. Âpastamba I, 9, 25, 12.

27. Gautama XXII, 8.

28. Âpastamba I, 9, 24, 21.

29. Taken by itself the Sûtra would seem to refer to the maxim that a free confession reduces the guilt of the offender (Manu XI, 228). But on account of the next Sûtra it is necessary to assume, with Krishnapandita, that half the guilt of a crime, of which another man justly accuses an offender, falls on the accuser, while the

30. To this (effect) they quote also (the following verse): 'By saying to an outcast, "O thou outcast!" or to a thief, "O thou thief!" a man incurs a guilt as great as (that of the offender). (If he) falsely (accuses anybody of such offences), his guilt will be twice as great.'

31. In like manner having slain a Kshatriya, he shall perform (a penance) during eight years,

32. For (killing) a Vaisya during six (years),

33. For (killing) a Sûdra, during three (years),

34. For killing a female of the Brâhmana caste who is an Âtreya, and a Kshatriya or a Vaisya, engaged in a sacrifice (the same penance must be performed as for killing a learned Brâhmana).

35. We will explain (the term) Âtreya. They declare that she who has bathed after temporary uncleanness is an Âtreya.

36. 'For if (the husband) approaches her at that (time), he will have offspring.'

offender's guilt becomes less by the publication of his misdeed. It is, however, not improbable that the text is here defective, and one or several Sûtras have been left out.

30. Gautama XXI, 17-18.

31. Vishnu L, 12. The text is here evidently defective. The Sûtra or Sûtras left out must have contained the description of another penance for the murder of a Brâhmana, which is mentioned in nearly all the Smritis (see Vishnu L, 1-6, 15, and the parallel passages). Its chief conditions are, that the murderer is to live separate for twelve years, and to subsist on alms given by people who are acquainted with his crime. Without such an additional rule this and the following Sûtras are utterly unintelligible.

32. Vishnu L, 13.

33. Vishnu L, 14.

34. Vishnu L, 7, 9.

36. The author means to say that the word âtreya is derived from atra, 'at that time,' and the verb i, 'to approach.' The etymology is worthy of the Nirukta.

37. (For killing a female of the Brāhmaṇa caste) who is not an Ātreya, (the penance prescribed) for the murder of a Kshatriya (must be performed),

38. (For killing) a female of the Kshatriya caste, (the penance prescribed) for the murder of a Vaiśya,

39. (For killing) a female of the Vaiśya caste, (the penance prescribed) for the murder of a Sūdra.

40. (For killing) a female of the Sūdra caste (let him perform) during one year (the penance prescribed for the murder of a Brāhmaṇa).

41. If a man has stolen gold belonging to a Brāhmaṇa, he shall run, with flying hair, to the king, (exclaiming) 'Ho, I am a thief; sir, punish me!' The king shall give him a weapon made of Udumbara wood; with that he shall kill himself. It is declared in the Veda that he becomes pure after death.

42. Or (such a thief) may shave off all his hair, anoint his body with clarified butter, and cause himself to be burnt from the feet upwards, in a fire of dry cowdung. It is declared in the Veda that he becomes pure after death.

43. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Hear, (how) the bodies of those who having committed various crimes died a long time ago, and were (afterwards) born again, are (marked);'

37-40. Gautama XXII, 17.

41. Vishṇu LII, 1-2. Kṛishṇapāṇḍita remarks that Sūlapāṇi explains audumbaram, 'made of Udumbara wood,' by 'made of copper,' and that the weapon intended is a club. The last remark is probably true, as the parallel passages of the other Smṛitis state that the thief is to take a club to the king, with which he is to be struck.

42. Āpastamba I, 9, 25, 6.

44. 'A thief will have deformed nails, the murderer of a Brâhmana will be afflicted with white leprosy, but he who has drunk spirituous liquor will have black teeth, and the violator of his Guru's bed will suffer from skin diseases.'

45. Property received from outcasts, after forming alliances with them either by (teaching) the Veda (and by sacrificing) or by marriage, must be relinquished. Let him not associate with such (men).

46. It is declared in the Veda that (he who has associated with outcasts) becomes pure by reciting the Samhitâ (of his Veda), proceeding in a northerly direction and fasting.

47. They quote also (a verse) to this (effect), 'A sinner is liberated from guilt by tormenting his body, by austerities, and by reciting the Veda; he becomes also free by bestowing gifts. That has been declared in the Veda.'

CHAPTER XXI.

1. If a Sûdra approaches a female of the Brâhmana caste, (the king) shall cause the Sûdra to be tied up in Vîrâna grass and shall throw him into a fire. He shall cause the head of the Brâhmanî to be shaved, and her body to be anointed with butter; placing her naked on a black donkey, he shall cause her to be conducted along the highroad. It is declared that she becomes pure (thereby).

44. Manu XI, 49; Vishnu XLV, 4, 5, 6.

45. Vishnu LIV, 28.

46. Manu XI, 194.

XXI. 1-5. Gautama XXIII, 15. Krishnapandita reads, instead of prâsyet, 'he shall throw,' prâsyet, and explains it by dâhayet, 'he shall cause to be burnt.' It must be understood that these

2. If a Vaisya approaches a female of the Brâhmaṇa caste, (the king) shall cause the Vaisya to be tied up in Lohita grass and shall throw him into a fire. He shall cause the head of the Brâhmaṇī to be shaved, and her body to be anointed with butter; placing her naked on a yellowish donkey, he shall cause her to be conducted along the highroad. It is declared in the Veda that she becomes pure (thereby).

3. If a Kshatriya approaches a female of the Brâhmaṇa caste, (the king) shall cause the Kshatriya to be tied up in leaves of Sara grass and shall throw him into a fire. He shall cause the head of the Brâhmaṇī to be shaved, and her body to be anointed with butter; placing her naked on a white donkey, he shall cause her to be conducted along the highroad. It is declared in the Veda that she becomes pure (thereby).

4. A Vaisya who offends with a female of the Kshatriya class (shall be treated) in the same manner,

5. And a Sûdra (who offends) with females of the Kshatriya or Vaisya castes.

6. If (a wife) has been mentally unfaithful to her husband, she shall live on barley or rice boiled in milk during three days, and sleep on the bare ground. After the three days (have expired), the (husband) shall offer eight hundred burnt-oblations, (reciting) the Sâvitṛī (and the Mantra called) Siras, while she is immersed in water. It is declared in the Veda that she becomes pure (thereby).

extreme punishments are to be inflicted in particularly bad cases only.

6. 'Afterwards in order to purify her who is immersed in water, i. e. has plunged into water, he shall offer eight hundred, i. e. (such)

7. If (a wife) has held an (improper) conversation (with another man), she must perform the same penance during a month. After (the expiration of) the month, (the husband) shall offer four times eight hundred burnt-oblations, (reciting) the Sâvitṛī (and the Mantra called) Siras, while she is immersed in water. It is declared in the Veda that she becomes pure (thereby).

8. But if (a wife) has actually committed adultery, she shall wear during a year a garment smeared with clarified butter, and sleep on a mat of Kusa grass, or in a pit filled with cowdung. After (the expiration of) the year, (the husband) shall offer eight hundred burnt-oblations, (reciting) the Sâvitṛī (and the Mantra called) Siras, while she is immersed in water. It is declared in the Veda that she becomes pure (thereby).

9. But if she commits adultery with a Guru, she is forbidden (to assist her husband) in (the fulfilment of) his sacred duties.

10. But (these) four (wives) must be abandoned, (viz.) one who yields herself to (her husband's) pupil or to (his) Guru, and especially one who attempts a number of burnt-oblations with the Siras, i. e. (the words) "Om, ye waters, who are splendour, juice, and ambrosia," &c., which are joined to the Gâyatrī.—Krishnapandita. The Siras, or 'head,' is again mentioned below, XXV, 13; see also Vishnu LV, 9. This and the following two rules refer to offences committed with males of equal caste.

9. Yâgñavalkya I, 70. Colebrooke IV, Dig. LXXXVI, where a different reading, vyavâyatîrthagamanadharmebhyaḥ, has been adopted, and the Sûtra has been combined with the next. The first clause may also be translated, 'If she actually commits adultery, (and especially) if she converses with a Guru.'

10. Colebrooke loc. cit.; Manu IX, 80; Yâgñavalkya I, 72.

the life of her lord, or who commits adultery with a man of a degraded caste.

11. That woman of the Brâhmana caste who drinks spirituous liquor, the gods will not admit (after death) to the same abode with her husband; losing all spiritual merit she wanders about in this world and is born again as a leech or a pearl-oyster.

12. The wives of Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas who commit adultery with a Sûdra may be purified by a penance in case no child is born (from their adulterous intercourse), not otherwise.

13. (Those who have committed adultery) with a man of lower caste shall perform a Krikkhra penance, succeeded by one, two, or three Kândrâyanas.

14. Faithful wives who are constantly pure and truthful (reside after death) in the same abodes with their husbands; those who are unfaithful are born as jackals.

15. Half the body of the husband falls if his wife

11. Colebrooke IV, Dig. CXIII, where sûkarî, 'a sow,' is read instead of suktikâ, 'a pearl-oyster.'

13. Manu XI, 178. Krishnapandita states correctly that kândrâyanottaram, 'succeeded by one, two, or three Kândrâyanas,' may also mean 'following one, two, or three Kândrâyanas,' and that the number of Kândrâyanas to be performed depends on the caste of the person with whom the adultery was committed. Thus a Brâhmanî must perform one Krikkhra and one Kândrâyana for adultery with a Kshatriya, one Krikkhra and two Kândrâyanas for adultery with a Vaisya, and one Krikkhra and three Kândrâyanas for adultery with a Sûdra. His view that the rule refers to wives who commit the sin without intent or against their will, is open to doubt. It is probably an alternative, to be adopted in lighter cases, for the public punishment prescribed above, XXI, 1-3. Regarding the Kândrâyana, see below, XXIV, 44.

14. Colebrooke IV, Dig. CVIII; Manu V, 164-165.

15. Manu IX, 80; Yâgñavalkya I, 73.

drinks spirituous liquor. No purification is prescribed for the half which has fallen.

16. If a Brāhmaṇa unintentionally commits adultery with the wife of a Brāhmaṇa, (he shall perform) a Krikkhṛa penance in case (the husband) fulfils the religious duties (of his caste), and an Atikrikkhṛa penance in case (the husband) does not fulfil his religious duties.

17. The same (penances are prescribed) for Kshatriyas and Vaisyas (for adultery with women of their respective castes).

18. If he kills a cow, let him perform, during six months, a Krikkhṛa or a Taptakrikkhṛa, dressed in the raw hide of that (cow).

19. The rule for these two (penances is as follows):

20. 'During three days he eats in the day-time (only), and during the (next) three days at night (only), he subsists during (another) period of three days on food offered without asking, and (finally) he fasts during three days.' That is a Krikkhṛa penance.

21. 'Let him drink hot water during three days; let him drink hot milk during the (next) three days; after drinking during (another) period of three days hot clarified butter, he shall subsist on air during the (last) three days.' That is a Taptakrikkhṛa penance.

22. And he shall give (to a Brāhmaṇa) a bull and a cow.

23. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Through killing a spotted deer, a he-goat, and

16. Vishṇu LIII, 2.

18. Vishṇu L, 16-24; Gautama XXII, 18.

20. Vishṇu XLVI, 10.

21. Vishṇu XLVI, 11.

23. The above translation follows the commentary of Krishna- a bird three maladies (befal men), viz. jealousy, hunger, and old age; (therefore) let him (who is guilty of such an offence) perform (a penance) during ninety-eight (days).'

24. Having slain a dog, a cat, an ichneumon, a snake, a frog, or a rat, let him perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration, and give something (to a Brâhmana).

25. But having slain a quantity of boneless animals, equal to the weight of a cow, let him perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration, and give something (to a Brâhmana).

26. But (the same penance must be performed) for each single (slain animal) that possesses bones.

27. He who extinguishes the (sacred) fires shall perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days, and cause them to be kindled again (by priests engaged for the occasion).

28. He who falsely accuses a Guru shall bathe, dressed in his clothes, and ask his Guru's pardon. It is declared in the Veda that he becomes pure by the Guru's forgiving him.

29. An atheist shall perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration, and give up his infidelity.

pañḍita, who further states that the penance to be performed shall consist of a diet of barley gruel. I feel by no means certain that his interpretation, especially that of the last clause, is correct. Possibly ash/ânavatim âharet may mean 'he shall offer ninety-eight oblations.'

24. Vishṇu L, 30, 31.

25. Gautama XXII, 21. 'Something' means eight handfuls of grain.

26. Gautama XXII, 22.

27. Vishṇu LIV, 13; Gautama XXII, 34.

28. Vishṇu LIV, 14; Yâgñavalkya III, 283.

29-30. Vishṇu LIV, 15.

30. But he who receives subsistence from infidels (shall perform) an *Atikrikkh*ra penance (and not repeat his offence).

31. (The rule applicable to) a seller of Soma has been explained hereby.

32. A hermit, on violating the rules of his order, shall perform a *Krikkh*ra penance of twelve days' duration, and continue (the observances obligatory on him) in a great forest.

33. Ascetics, (offending in the same manner) as hermits, shall perform for a protracted period (the vow of regulating the quantity of their food according to) the growth of the moon, and shall again be initiated, in accordance with (the rules of) the Institutes applicable to them.

CHAPTER XXII.

1. Now, indeed, man (in) this (world) speaks an untruth, or sacrifices for men unworthy to offer a sacrifice, or accepts what ought not to be accepted, or eats forbidden food, or practises what ought not to be practised.

31. Vishnu LIV, 17.

33. The penance prescribed appears to be similar to the Kāṇḍāyana. The offender must eat one mouthful on the first lunar day, two on the second, and so forth. But it is not clear for how long a period the rule is to be observed. The Sūtra is interesting as it furnishes corroborative evidence for Pāṇini's statement (IV, 3, 110) that Bhikshu-sūtras which contained the rules applicable to Bhikshus formerly existed.

XXII. 1. As this chapter is almost identical with and probably copied from Baudhāyana III, 10, and Gautama XIX, the division of the Sūtras has not been made in accordance with Krishna-pāṇḍita's commentary, but agrees with that of the chapter in Gautama's Dharmasāstra. The notes to the translation of the

2. They are in doubt if he shall perform a penance for such (a deed), or if he shall not do it.

3. (Some) declare that he shall not do it,

4. Because the deed does not perish.

5. (The correct view is, that) he shall perform (a penance), because it is enjoined in the revealed texts,

6. 'He who offers a horse-sacrifice conquers all sin, he destroys the guilt of the murder of a Brâhmana.'

7. (Moreover), 'Let an Abhisasta offer a Gosava or an Agnishât-sacrifice.'

8. Reciting the Veda, austerity, a sacrifice, fasting, giving gifts are the means for expiating such a (blamable act).

9. (The purificatory texts are) the Upanishads, the Vedântas, the Samhitâ-text of all the Vedas, the (Anuvâkas called) Madhu, the (hymn of) Aghamarlatter work must be consulted for the explanation of the more difficult passages.

5-7. The text appears here to be corrupt. After Sûtra 5, Baudhâyana III, 10, 6 (Gautama XIX, 7), Puna^h stomena yageta puna^h savanamâyântîti vigñâyate, 'It is declared in the Veda, "Let him offer a Puna^hstoma-sacrifice, (those who offer it) again come to partake of (the libations of) Soma,"' has been left out. This omission caused the insertion of the words tasmâ^hkrutinidarsanât [darśanât, Bh. F.], ('because it is enjoined in the revealed texts,') at the end of Sûtra 5. The proof that the sixth Sûtra of Baudhâyana has been accidentally omitted is furnished by the fact that several MSS. of Vasishtha read iti ka after yo 'svamedhena yagate (Vas. XXII, 6). This ka has no meaning, except if another Vedic passage preceded Sûtra 6. In order to escape this difficulty, Krishnapandita writes yo 'svamedhena yagata iti, and begins the next Sûtra with iti ka, which he explains by 'moreover.'

9. Krishnapandita gives before 'Vedântas' another word vedâ-daya^h, which he explains by 'the Vedas, Smritis, and Purânas.'

shana, the Atharvasiras, the (Anuvâkas called) Rudras, the Purusha-hymn, the two Sâmans called Râgana and Rauhineya, the Kûshmândas, the Pâvamânîs, and the Sâvitri.

10. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He who performs once in each season the offerings to Vaisvânara and Vratapati and the Pavitreshî sanctifies ten ancestors.'

11. To live on milk alone, as if one were fasting, to eat fruit only, (to live on) barley gruel prepared of a handful of grain, to eat gold, to drink Soma (are modes of subsistence which) purify.

12. All mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, places of pilgrimage, the dwellings of Rishis, cowpens, and temples of the gods (are) places (which destroy sin).

13. A year, a month, twenty-four days, twelve days, six days, three days, a day and a night are the periods (for penances).

14. These (acts) may be optionally performed when no (particular penance) has been prescribed,

15. (Viz.) for great sins difficult (penances), and for trivial faults easy ones.

16. The Krikkhra and the Atikrikkhra (as well as) the Kândrâyana are penances for all (offences).

CHAPTER XXIII.

1. If a student has approached a woman, he shall slay in the forest, in a place where four roads meet,

10. Krishnapandîta takes the last word dasapûrusham to mean ten ancestors and ten descendants.

11. 'As if one were fasting,' i. e. in small quantities.—Krishnapandîta.

XXIII. 1. Gautama XXIII, 17.

(kindling) a common fire, an ass for the Rakshas (the goblins),

2. Or he may offer an oblation of rice (karu) to Nirriti (the goddess of hell).

3. Let him throw into the fire (four oblations consisting) of that (sacrificial food, saying), 'To Lust svâhâ; to him who follows his lust svâhâ; to Nirriti svâhâ; to the divine Rakshas svâhâ.'

4. If, before returning home (from his teacher, a student) voluntarily defiles himself, sleeps in the day-time, or practises any other vow (than that of studentship), the same (penance must be performed).

5. If he has committed a bestial crime, he shall give a white bull (to a Brâhmaṇa).

6. The guilt incurred by a bestial crime with a cow, has been explained by the (rule regarding) the killing of a female of the Sûdra caste.

7. A student breaks his vow by performing funeral rites,

8. Excepting those of his mother and his father.

9. If a (student) is sick, he may eat, at his pleasure, all that is left by his teacher as medicine.

10. If (a student) who is employed by his teacher (to perform some duty), meets with his death, (the teacher) shall perform three Krikkhra penances.

4. Manu XI, 121.

5. Vishṇu LIII, 7; Gautama XXII, 36.

6. Vishṇu LIII, 3; Gautama XXIII, 12.

7. Manu V, 88.

8. Manu V, 91.

9. The object of the Sûtra is to permit during sickness a relaxation of the rules regarding forbidden food. Hence a sick student may eat honey, meat, &c.

10. Yâgyñavalkya III, 283. 'Meets with his death,' e.g. is killed by a wild animal or a snake, while collecting fuel in the forest.

11. If a student eats meat which has been given to him as leavings (by his teacher), he shall perform a Krikkhra penance of twelve days' duration, and afterwards finish his vow.

12. The same (penance must be performed) if he eats food given at a Srâddha or by a person who is impure on account of a recent death or birth.

13. It is declared in the Veda, that honey given without asking does not defile (a student) of the Vâgasaneyi-sâkhâ.

14. For him who committing suicide becomes an Abhisasta, his blood-relations (sapinda) shall not perform the funeral rites.

15. He is called a suicide who destroys himself by means of wood, water, clods of earth, stones, weapons, poison, or a rope.

16. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The twice-born man who out of affection performs the last rites for a suicide, shall perform a Kândrâyana penance together with a Taptakrikkhra.'

17. We shall describe the Kândrâyana below.

18. A fast of three days (must be performed) for resolving to die by one's own hand.

11. Manu XI, 159; Yâgñavalkya III, 282; see also Âpastamba's discussion on the subject, I, 1, 4, 5.

12. Manu XI, 158.

13. This Sûtra may also mean, 'It is declared that, according to the Vâgasaneyaka, honey given (to a student) without his asking for it does not defile him.' But a parallel passage of Devala, which Krishnapandita quotes, makes, I think, the version given above appear preferable. In either case the passage is explained by the fact that, according to the Satapatha-brâhmana, Svetaketu, one of the great teachers of the White Yagur-veda, strongly pleaded for the use of honey; see Weber, Indische Studien X, 123 seq.

14. Vishnu XXII, 56; Gautama XIV, 12.

16. Vishnu XXII, 58-59.

17. See below, Sûtra 45.

19. 'He who attempts suicide, but remains alive, shall perform a Krikkhra penance during twelve days. (Afterwards) he shall fast for three (days and) nights, being dressed constantly in a garment smeared (with clarified butter), and suppressing his breath, he shall thrice recite the Aghamarshana ;'

20. Or, following the same rule, he may also frequently recite the Gâyatri ;

21. Or, having kindled a fire, he may offer clarified butter with the Kûshmândas.

22. 'And the guilt (of) all (offences) excepting mortal sins is removed thereby.'

23. Now he may also sip water in the morning, thinking of (the Mantra), 'May fire and wrath and the lords of wrath protect me,' &c., and meditating on his sin ; (then) he may mutter the Vyâhrîtis that end with satya (truth), prefixing (the syllable) Om (to each), or he may recite the Aghamarshana.

24. If he touches a human bone to which fat still adheres, he becomes impure during three (days and) nights ;

25. But (on touching a bone) to which no fat adheres, a day and a night,

26. Likewise if he has followed a corpse (to the burial-ground).

27. If he passes between men reciting the Veda, he shall fast during a day and a night.

28. (Those who recite the Veda) shall sprinkle each other with water and stay away (from their houses) during three (days and) nights.

22. Regarding the efficacy of the Kûshmânda texts, see above, XXII, 9.

23. The text occurs Taitt. Âr. X, 24, 1.

24-25. Manu V, 87 ; Vishnu XXII, 75.

26. Manu V, 101.

28. Gautama I, 58.

29. (The same penance must be performed) for a day and night, if a dog, a cat, or an ichneumon pass quickly (between those who recite the Veda).

30. If he has swallowed the flesh of a dog, a cock, a village pig, a grey heron, a vulture, a Bhâsa, a pigeon, a man, a crow or an owl, (he must) fast during seven days, (and thus) empty his entrails; (afterwards he must) eat clarified butter, and be initiated again.

31. 'But a Brâhmaṇa who has been bitten by a dog, becomes pure, if he goes to a river that flows into the ocean, (bathes there), suppresses his breath one hundred times, and eats clarified butter.'

32. 'Time, fire, purity of mind, water, looking at the sun, and ignorance (of defilement) are the six means by which created beings are purified.'

33. It is declared in the Veda that, on touching a dog, a Kândâla, or an outcast, he becomes at once pure, if he bathes, dressed in his clothes.

34. If (while reciting the Veda) they hear noises

29. Gautama I, 59.

30. Vishṇu LI, 3-4; Gautama XXIII, 4-5; Manu XI, 157. The Sûtra is badly corrupted in Kṛishnapandita's edition. I read kaṅka instead of vaṅka, leave out vâyasa after bhâsa, and change kâkolûkânâm sâdane to kâkolûkamâmsâdane. The latter change is absolutely necessary; firstly, because the penances for killing dogs and men have been given above; secondly, because the word mânusha requires a noun which it qualifies at the end of the compound; thirdly, because the penance which is prescribed, fasting until the entrails are empty, is absurd for murder, but appropriate for eating forbidden food; and fourthly, because the parallel passages of other Smṛitis actually do prescribe it for eating the flesh of excessively impure animals and for cannibalism. The change of amâ to ânâ is a very common mistake in Devanâgarî MSS.

31. Vishṇu LIV, 12.

32. Vishṇu XXII, 88.

33. Âpastamba I, 5, 15, 16.

made by outcasts or Kāṇḍālas, they shall sit silent and fasting during three days ;

35. Or if they repeat that (text of the Gâyatri) at least one thousand times, they become pure ; thus it is stated in the Veda.

36. By this rule (the penance to be performed by) those who teach or sacrifice for vile men has been explained. It is declared in the Veda that they become pure by also relinquishing the fees (which they received).

37. By this same (rule the penance prescribed for) an Abhisasta, (one accused of a heinous crime,) has been explained.

38. (If he has been accused of) killing a learned Brāhmaṇa, let him subsist during twelve days on water (only), and fast during (another) twelve days.

39. If he has falsely accused a Brāhmaṇa of a crime which causes loss of caste, or of a minor offence which does not cause loss of caste, he shall subsist during a month on water (only), and constantly repeat the (Rikas called) Suddhavatis ;

40. Or he may go to bathe (with the priests) at (the conclusion of) a horse-sacrifice.

41. By this (rule the penance for) intercourse with a female of the Kāṇḍāla caste has been declared.

42. Now (follows the description of) another Krikkhra penance, applicable to all (men), where (the rule given above) has been altered.

43. On one day (let him eat) in the morning (only), on the (following) day at night (only), on the (next) day food given without asking, and on the (fourth) day (let him) fast ; the succeeding (three) periods of

36. Vishṇu LIV, 25, 28.

39. Yâgñavalkya III, 286.

38. Yâgñavalkya III, 287.

41. Vishṇu LIII, 5, 6.

four days (must be passed) in the same manner. Wishing to show favour to the Brâhmanas, Manu, the chief among the pillars of the law, has thus described the Sisukrikkhra (the hard penance of children) for infants, aged, and sick men.

44. Now follows the rule for (the performance of) the Kândrâyana (lunar penance).

45. On the first day of the dark half (of the month) let him eat fourteen (mouthfuls), let him diminish the (number of) mouthfuls (each day by one), and continue in this manner until the end of the fortnight. In like manner let him eat one mouthful on the first day of the bright half, and (daily) increasing (the number of) mouthfuls, continue until the end of the fortnight.

46. Meanwhile let him sing Sâmans, or mutter the Vyâhr̥itis.

47. A month during which he thus performs a Kândrâyana, the Rishis have called by way of laudation, 'a means of purification' (pavitra). It is prescribed as an expiation of all (offences) for which no (special penance) has been mentioned.

CHAPTER XXIV.

1. Now (follows the description of) an Atikrikkhra penance.

2. Let him eat as much as he can take at one (mouthful, and follow the rules given) above for a Krikkhra, (viz.) to eat during three days in the morning, (during another three days) in the evening, (during further three days) food given without 44-47. Vishnu XLVII. It must be understood that during the bright half of the month the number of mouthfuls must be increased every day by one.

XXIV. 1-2. Gautama XXVI, 18-19. 'Above,' i. e. XXI, 20.

asking, and to fast during the last three days. That is an Atikrikkhra.

3. A Krikkhra penance (during the performance of which one) subsists on water (only is called) a Krikkhrâतिक्रिक्क़्हा.

4. The peculiar observances (prescribed during the performance) of Krikkhra penances (are as follows):

5. 'Having cut his nails, (the performer) shall cause his beard and all his hair to be shaved off, excepting the eyebrows, the eyelashes, and the lock at the top of the head; (wear) one garment only; he shall eat blameless food; what one obtains by going to beg once (is called) blameless food; he shall bathe in the morning, at noon, and in the evening; he shall carry a stick (and) a waterpot; he shall avoid to speak to women and Sûdras; carefully keeping himself in an upright or sitting posture, he shall stand during the day, and remain seated during the night.' Thus speaks the divine Vasishtha.

6. Let him not instruct in these Institutes of the sacred law anybody but his son or a pupil who stays (in his house at least) for a year.

7. The fee (for teaching it) is one thousand (panas), (or) ten cows and a bull, or the worship of the teacher.

CHAPTER XXV.

1. I will completely explain the purification of those whose guilt has not been made public, both from great crimes and for minor offences.

3. Gautama XXVI, 20; see also Vishnu XLVI, 13-14.

4-5. Gautama XXVI, 6, 8; Vishnu XLVII, 24-25.

6. The MSS. read in the beginning of this Sûtra, satayânudeti or satayâtudeta, while Krishnapandita, probably as a guess, writes satapâ nudati. I do not think that his correction is satisfactory, and propose in its stead, sa tadyadetad (dharmaśāstram).

2. A penance prescribed in (the section on) secret (penances) is for an Agnihotrin, an aged and a learned man, who have subdued their senses ; but other men (must perform the expiations) described above.

3. Those constantly engaged in suppressing their breath, reciting purificatory texts, giving gifts, making burnt-oblations, and muttering (sacred texts) will, undoubtedly, be freed from (the guilt of) crimes causing loss of caste.

4. Seated with Kusa grass in his hands, let him repeatedly suppress his breath, and again and again recite purificatory texts, the Vyâhr̥tis, the syllable Om, and the daily portion of the Veda.

5. Always intent on the practice of Yoga, let him again and again suppress his breath. Up to the ends of his hair and up to the ends of his nails let him perform highest austerity.

6. Through the obstruction (of the expiration) air is generated, through air fire is produced, then through heat water is formed ; hence he is internally purified by (these) three.

7. Neither through severe austerities, nor through the daily recitation of the Veda, nor through offering sacrifices can the twice-born reach that condition which they attain by the practice of Yoga.

8. Through the practice of Yoga (true) knowledge is obtained, Yoga is the sum of the sacred law, the practice of Yoga is the highest and eternal austerity ; therefore let him always be absorbed in the practice of Yoga.

XXV. 4. Read prânâyâmân in the text.

5. The MSS. read at the end of this verse, tapas tapyatam uttamam, while Krishnapandita gives tapas tapyât tu uttamam. The correct reading is probably tapas tapyatu uttamam.

9. For him who is constantly engaged in (reciting the syllable) Om, the seven Vyâhr̥tis, and the three-footed Gâyatrî no danger exists anywhere.

10. The Vedas likewise begin with the syllable Om, and they end with the syllable Om, the syllable Om is the sum of all speech; therefore let him repeat it constantly.

11. The most excellent (portion of the) Veda, which consists of one syllable, is declared to be the best purificatory text.

12. If the guilt of all sins did fall on one man, to repeat the Gâyatrî ten thousand times (would be) an efficient means of purification.

13. If, suppressing his breath, he thrice recites the Gâyatrî together with the Vyâhr̥tis together with the syllable Om and with the (text called) Siras, that is called one suppression of breath.

CHAPTER XXVI.

1. If, untired, he performs three suppressions of his breath according to the rule, the sins which he committed during a day and a night are instantly destroyed.

2. Seated during the evening prayer, he removes by (three) suppressions of his breath all guilt which

9. I read with the MSS. bhayam for bhave.

10. Manu II, 74.

13. Identical with Vishnu LV, 9. Regarding the text called Siras, see above, XXI, 6.

XXVI. 1. The verb dhârayet, 'performs,' seems to be used in order to indicate that, according to the Yogasâstra, three Prânâ-yâmas make one Dhâranâ; see Yâgyñavalkya III, 201.

2-3. Regarding the position at the Sandhyâ prayers, see also above.

he incurred during the day by deeds, thoughts, or speeches.

3. But standing during the morning prayer, he removes by (three) suppressions of his breath all guilt which he incurred during the night by deeds, thoughts, or speeches.

4. But sixteen suppressions of breath, accompanied by (the recitation of) the Vyâhr̥itis and the syllable Om, repeated daily, purify after a month even the slayer of a learned Brâhmaṇa.

5. Even a drinker of spirituous liquor becomes pure, if he mutters the (hymn seen) by Kutsa, 'Apanaḥ sosukāḍ agham,' and (the hymn seen) by Vasishtha (which begins with the word) 'Prati,' the Mâhitra (hymn), and the Suddhavattis.

6. Even he who has stolen gold becomes instantly free from guilt, if he once mutters (the hymn beginning with the words) 'Asya vâmasya' and the Sivasamkalpa.

7. The violator of a Guru's bed is freed (from sin) if he repeatedly recites the (hymn beginning) 'Havish pântam agaram' and that (beginning) 'Na tam amhaḥ' and mutters the hymn addressed to Purusha.

8. Or plunging into water he may thrice mutter the Aghamarshana. Manu has declared that the (effect is the) same as if he had gone to bathe at a horse-sacrifice.

4. Identical with Manu XI, 249; see also Vishṇu LV, 2.

5. Identical with Manu XI, 250. The Vedic texts mentioned are Rig-veda I, 97, 1; VII, 80; X, 185; VIII, 84, 7-9.

6. Manu LI, 251. The Vedic texts alluded to are Rig-veda I, 164; and an Upanishad.

7. Identical with Manu XI, 252. The Vedic texts mentioned are Rig-veda X, 88; X, 126; X, 90.

8. Manu XI, 260-261; Vishṇu LV, 7.

9. An offering consisting of muttered prayers is ten times more efficacious than a sacrifice at which animals are killed; a (prayer) which is inaudible (to others) surpasses it a hundred times, and the mental (recitation of sacred texts) one thousand times.

10. The four Pākayagñas and those sacrifices which are enjoined by the rules of the Veda are all together not equal in value to the sixteenth part of a sacrifice consisting of muttered prayers.

11. But, undoubtedly, a Brāhmaṇa reaches the highest goal by muttering prayers only; whether he perform other (rites) or neglect them, he is called a Brāhmaṇa who befriends all creatures (maitra).

12. The sins of those who are intent on muttering prayers, of those who offer burnt-oblations, of those who are given to meditation, of those who reside in sacred places, and of those who have bathed after performing the vows called Śīras, do not remain.

13. As a fire, fanned by wind, burns brighter, and (as its flame grows) through offerings (of butter), even so a Brāhmaṇa who is daily engaged in

9. Manu II, 85; Vishṇu LV, 19. The term ārambhayagña, translated by 'an offering at which animals are slain,' is taken by Krishnapandita to mean pāthayagña, 'an offering consisting of Vedic mantras recited aloud.' The word may be taken in several ways, but the various reading vidhiyagña in Manu's verse induces me to adopt the translation given above.

10. Identical with Manu II, 86, and Vishṇu LV, 20. Regarding the four Pākayagñas, see Professor Jolly's note on Vishṇu. In my opinion the four classes of rites huta, ahuta, prahuta, and prâsita are meant.

11. Identical with Manu II, 87.

12. 'After performing the vows (called) Śīras,' i. e. those which are known in the Upanishads, which are called agnidhârana and so forth, and whose head (siras) consists in the worship of the teacher.—Krishnapandita. Mundaka Upanishad III, 2, 10.

muttering sacred texts shines with a brilliant lustre.

14. The destruction of those who fulfil the duty of daily study, who constantly restrain themselves, who mutter prayers and offer sacrifices has never been known (to happen).

15. Let him who is desirous of purification repeat, though he be charged with all sins, the divine (Gâyatri), at the most one thousand times, or one hundred times as a medium (penance), or at least ten times (for trivial faults).

16. A Kshatriya shall pass through misfortunes which have befallen him by the strength of his arms, a Vaisya and Sûdra by their wealth, the highest among twice-born men by muttered prayers and burnt-oblations.

17. As horses (are useless) without a chariot, as chariots (are useless) without horses, even so austerity (is useless) to him who is destitute of sacred learning, and sacred learning to him who practises no austerities.

18. As food mixed with honey, or honey mixed with food, even so are austerities and learning, joined together, a powerful medicine.

19. No guilt taints a Brâhmaṇa who possesses learning, practises austerities, and daily mutters sacred texts, though he may constantly commit sinful acts.

CHAPTER XXVII.

1. If a hundred improper acts, and even more, have been committed, and the (knowledge of the)

14. Manu IV, 146.

XXVII. 1-2. Manu XI, 247.

Veda is retained, the fire of the Veda destroys all (the guilt) of that man just as a (common) fire consumes fuel.

2. As a fire that burns strongly consumes even green trees, even so the fire of the Veda destroys one's guilt caused by (evil) deeds.

3. A Brâhmana who remembers the Rig-veda is not tainted by any guilt, though he has destroyed these (three) worlds and has eaten the food of all, (even of the most sinful) men.

4. If (a Brâhmana) relies on the power of the Veda, he cannot find pleasure in sinful acts. Guilt (incurred) through ignorance and negligence is destroyed, not (that of) other (intentional offences).

5. If a hermit subsisting on roots and fruit practises austerities in a forest, and (a householder) recites a single Rik, the merit of the acts of the one and of the other is equal.

6. Let him strengthen the Veda by (studying) the Itihâsas and Purâṇas. For the Veda fears a man of little learning, (thinking) 'He will destroy me.'

7. The daily recitation of the Veda and the performance, according to one's ability, of the series of Mahâyagñas quickly destroy guilt, even that of mortal sins.

8. Let him daily perform, without tiring, his particular rites which the Veda enjoins. For if he does that according to his ability, he will reach the most blessed state.

9. Through sacrificing for wicked people, through teaching them, through intermarrying with them, and through receiving gifts from them, (learned)

3. Identical with Manu XI, 262.

8. 'The most blessed state,' i. e. final liberation, or moksha.

Brâhmaṇas do not contract guilt, for (a learned Brâhmaṇa) resembles a fire and the sun.

10. I will now declare the purification prescribed for (eating) food, regarding which doubts have arisen, whether it may be called fit to be eaten or not. Listen to my words!

11. Let a Brâhmaṇa drink during three days the astringent decoction of the Brahmasuvarṅgalâ plant, unmixed with salt or pungent condiments, and (a decoction of) the Saṅkha pushpî plant, together with milk.

12. Let him drink water, after boiling in it Palâsa and Bilva leaves, Kusa grass, and (leaves of) lotuses and Udumbara trees; after three days and no more he becomes pure.

13. (Subsisting) during one day on each (of the following substances), cow's urine, cowdung, milk, sour milk, butter, and water in which Kusa grass has been boiled, and fasting on the seventh day purify even (him who fears that he has partaken of the food of) a Svapâka.

14. He who lives during five days on cow's urine, cowdung, milk, sour milk, and clarified butter, is purified by means of (that) Pañḍagavya, (the five products of the cow.)

15. He who, in accordance with the rule, uses barley (for his food), becomes pure even by ocular proof. (For) if he is pure, those (barley grains) will be white, if he is impure they will be discoloured.

16. (If he makes) three morning meals of food

12. Vishṇu XLVI, 23. I read abhogyabhogyasamṅgiake.

13. Vishṇu XLVI, 19.

15. The rule is described by Vishṇu XLVIII.

16. The meaning of the Sûtra is that each mode of subsistence is to be continued during three days.

fit for a sacrifice and three evening meals in like manner, and if food given without asking (is his subsistence) in the same manner, (he will thus perform) three fasts.

17. Now if he is in haste to make (himself pure), (let him) subsist on air during a day, and pass the night standing in water; (that penance) is equal to a Prâgâpatya (Krikkhra).

18. But if at sunrise he mutters the Gâyatrî eight thousand times, he will be freed from all mortal sins, provided he be not the slayer of a Brâhmaṇa.

19. He, forsooth, who has stolen (the gold of a Brâhmaṇa), has drunk spirituous liquor, has slain a learned Brâhmaṇa, or has violated his Guru's bed, will become free from all (these) mortal sins if he studies the Institutes of the sacred law.

20. For unlawful acts, for unlawful sacrifices, and for great sins (let him perform) a Krikkhra and a Kândrâyana, which destroy all guilt.

21. Let him add daily one mouthful (to his food) during the bright (half of the month), let him diminish it (daily by one mouthful) during the dark (half), and let him fast on the new-moon day; that is the rule for the Kândrâyana (or lunar penance).

CHAPTER XXVIII.

1. A woman is not defiled by a lover, nor a Brâhmaṇa by Vedic rites, nor water by urine and ordure, nor fire by consuming (impure substances).

18. Ash/asahasram, 'eight thousand times,' may also mean 'one thousand and eight times.'

21. See above, XXIII, 44-47.

XXVIII. 1. 'Is not defiled by a lover,' i.e. does not become irrevocably an outcast, but may be restored to her position after

2-3. A wife, (though) tainted by sin, whether she be quarrelsome, or have left the house, or have suffered criminal force, or have fallen into the hands of thieves, must not be abandoned; to forsake her is not prescribed (by the sacred law). Let him wait for the time of her courses; by her temporary uncleanness she becomes pure.

4. Women (possess) an unequalled means of purification; they never become (entirely) foul. For month by month their temporary uncleanness removes their sins.

5. Women belong first to three gods, Soma (the moon), the Gandharva, and Fire, and come afterwards into the possession of men; according to the law they cannot be contaminated.

6. Soma gave them cleanliness, the Gandharva their melodious voice, and Fire purity of all (limbs); therefore women are free from stains.

7. Those versed in the sacred law state that there are three acts (only) which make women outcasts, (viz.) the murder of the husband, slaying a learned Brâhmana, and the destruction of the fruit of their womb.

8. A calf is pure when the milk flows, a bird when it causes fruit to fall, women during dalliance, and a dog when he catches a deer.

9. Pure is the mouth of a goat and of a horse, pure is the back of a cow, pure are the feet of a Brâhmana, but women are pure in all (limbs).

performing a penance, provided her lover was a man of equal caste.—Krishnapandita.

2-3. For the last clause compare Yâgñavalkya I, 72.

4. See above, V, 3-4.

5. Pâraskara Grihya-sûtra I, 4, 16.

6. Yâgñavalkya I, 71.

8. Vishnu XXIII, 49.

7. Yâgñavalkya I, 72.

9. Vishnu XXIII, 40.

10. I will now declare the purificatory texts (which are found) in each Veda ; by muttering them or reciting them at a burnt-oblation (men) are doubtlessly cleansed (from sin).

11. (They are) the Aghamarshana, the Devakrita, the Suddhavattis, the Taratsamas, the Kûshmândas, the Pâvamânîs, and the Durgâsâvitri ;

12. The Attishaṅgas, the Padastobhas, and the Sâmans (called) Vyâhṛiti, the Bhârunda Sâmans, the Gâyatra (Sâman), and the Raivata ;

13. The Purushavrata and the Bhâsa, and likewise the Devavrata (Sâmans), the Abliṅga, the Bârhaspatya, the hymn addressed to Vâk, likewise the Rikâs (called) Madhu ;

14. The Satarudriya, the Atharvasiras, the Tri-suparna, the Mahâvrata, the Gosûkta, and the Asvasûkta, and the two Sâmans (called) Suddhâsuddhîya.

15. The three (Sâmans called) Âgyadohas, the Rathantara, the Agnervrata, the Vâmadevya, and the Bṛihat, being muttered, purify (all) living beings. (He who sings them) may obtain the recollection of former existences, if he desires it.

16. Gold is the firstborn of Fire, through Vishṇu exists the earth, and the cows are children of the 10-15. Vishṇu LVI, and preface, p. xviii. The explanation of the various terms used will be found in the notes to Professor Jolly's translation of Vishṇu.

12. MSS. and Krishnapandita, Abhishaṅgâḥ. Krishnapandita and MS. B. bhâradandâni ; E. bhâdâni ; Bh. and F. omit vv. 12 and 13 a.

13. Krishnapandita and B. artvigam ; Bh. E. F. as above. The Bhâsa begins, according to Krishnapandita, agne vratapate.

14. Krishnapandita and B. indrasuddhe ; Bh. E. F. suddham-suddhena.

Sun ; he who bestows as gifts gold, a cow, and land will obtain rewards without end for them.

17. A cow, a horse, gold, (and) land, bestowed on an unlearned Brâhmana who neglects his sacred duties, prevent the giver (from attaining heaven).

18-19. (If he presents), on the full moon of the month of Vaisâkha, (to) seven or five Brâhmanas, black or white sesamum grains (mixed) with honey, (saying), ' May the king of justice (Yama) rejoice !' or (expressing) some other (wish) which he may have in his mind, the guilt which he has incurred during his (whole) life will instantly vanish.

20. But hear (now) the reward of the merit acquired by that man who gives the skin of a black antelope, to which the hoofs are (still) attached and the navel of which is adorned with gold, covering it with sesamum grains.

21. ' Without doubt he has bestowed (through that gift) the four-faced earth, together with its caves filled with gold, and together with its mountains, groves, and forests.'

22. ' He who, placing on the skin of a black antelope, sesamum, gold, honey, and butter, gives it to a Brâhmana, overcomes all sin.'

17. Manu IV, 190, 193-194. Krishnapandita and MSS. B. and E. read uparudanti dâtâram, MSS. Bh. and F. uparundanti. I change the latter reading to uparundhanti.

18-19. Vishnu XC, 10.

20-22. Vishnu LXXXVII, 8-10, and Professor Jolly's preface, p. xviii.

21. ' The four-faced earth,' i. e. the earth which is surrounded by the four oceans.

CHAPTER XXIX.

1. Through liberality (man) obtains all his desires,
2. (Even) longevity, (and he is born again as) a student of the Veda, possessed of beauty.
3. He who abstains from injuring (sentient beings) obtains heaven.
4. By entering a fire the world of Brahman (is gained).
5. By (a vow of) silence (he obtains) happiness.
6. By staying (constantly) in water he becomes a lord of elephants.
7. He who expends his hoard (in gifts) becomes free from disease.
8. A giver of water (becomes) rich by (the fulfilment of) all his desires.
9. A giver of food (will have) beautiful eyes and a good memory.
10. He who gives a promise to protect (somebody) from all dangers (becomes) wise.
11. (To bestow gifts) for the use of cows (is equal to) bathing at all sacred places.
12. By giving a couch and a seat (the giver becomes) master of a harem.
13. By giving an umbrella (the giver) obtains a house.

XXIX. 4. This Sûtra, which recommends self-cremation, is of some importance, as it confirms the teaching of the Purânas and explains the accounts of the Greeks regarding the self-immolation of Brâhmanas who visited Europe.

9. Vishnu XCII, 21.

12. Vishnu XCII, 27 ; Manu IV, 232. 'Master of a harem,' i. e. the possessor of many beautiful wives and concubines.

14. He who gives a house obtains a town.

15. He who gives a pair of shoes obtains a vehicle.

16. Now they quote also (the following verses) :
'Whatever sin a man distressed for livelihood commits, (from that) he is purified by giving land, (be it) even "a bull's hide."'

17. 'He who gives to a Brâhmana a vessel filled with water for sipping, will obtain after death complete freedom from thirst and be born again as a drinker of Soma.'

18. 'If a gift of one thousand oxen fit to draw a carriage (has been bestowed) according to the rule on a perfectly worthy man, that is equal to giving a maiden.'

19. 'They declare that cows, land, and learning are the three most excellent gifts. For to give learning is (to bestow) the greatest of all gifts, and it surpasses those (other gifts).'

20. 'A learned man who, free from envy, follows this rule of conduct which procures endless rewards, and which through final liberation frees him from transmigration ;'

21. 'Or who, full of faith, pure, and subduing his

14. Vishnu XCII, 31.

15. Vishnu XCII, 28.

16. Vishnu XCII, 4. Krishnapandita quotes a passage of the Matsya-purâna according to which 'a bull's hide' is a measure equal to 140 square hastas ; see, however, notes to Vishnu loc. cit. and V, 183.

17. Manu IV, 229.

18. Read in the text vidhivaddânam kanyâdânena tatsamam.

19. Krishnapandita wrongly makes two Sûtras out of this verse.

20. Krishnapandita and MS. B. read, against the metre and sense, yoginâm sampûritam vidvân, another reading yoginâm sammatam vidvân. F. reads yonasamyurimam vidvân. I read yo'na-sûyurimam vidvân.

senses, remembers or even hears it, will, freed from all sin, be exalted in the highest heaven.'

CHAPTER XXX.

1. Practise righteousness, not unrighteousness; speak truth, not untruth; look far, not near; look towards the Highest, not towards that which is not the Highest.

2. A Brâhmana is a fire.

3. For the Veda (says), 'Agni, forsooth, is a Brâhmana.'

4. And how is that?

5. And it is also declared in the Kâthaka, 'On that (occasion) the body of the Brâhmana who represents the sacrificial seat is the altar, the vow to perform the rite is the sacrifice, the soul is the animal to be slain, the intellect the rope (with which the animal is bound), the mouth of (the Brâhmana) who represents the seat is the Âhavanîya fire, in his navel (is the Dakshinâ fire), the fire in his abdomen is the Gârhapatya fire, the Prâna is the Adhvaryu priest, the Apâna the Hotri priest, the Vyâna the Brahman, the Samâna the Udgâtri priest, the organs of sensation the sacrificial vessels. He who knowing this offers a sacrifice to the organs through the organs.' . . .

6. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'An offering placed in the mouth-fire of a Brâh-

XXX. 2. See above, III, 10.

3. Satapatha-brâhmana I, 4, 22.

5. Krishnapandita divides the passage into thirteen Sûtras, and connects tatra, 'on that occasion,' with the preceding Sûtra. 'On that (occasion),' i. e. if a Brâhmana is fed, mana which is rich in Veda-fuel, protects and saves the giver and (the eater) himself from sin.'

7. 'But the offering made through the mouth of a Brâhmana, which is neither spilt nor causes pain (to sentient creatures), nor assails him (who makes it), is far more excellent than an Agnihotra.'

8. After performing a mental sacrifice at which meditation (takes the place of the sacred) fire, truthfulness (the place of) the sacred fuel, patience (the place of) the oblation, modesty (the place of) the sacrificial spoon, abstention from injuring living beings (the place of the) sacrificial cake, contentment (the place of) the sacrificial post, (and a promise of) safety given to all beings which is hard to keep (the place of) the reward given to the priests, a wise man goes to his (eternal) home.

9. The hair of an aging man shows signs of age, (and) the teeth of an aging man show signs of age, (but) the desire to live and the desire for wealth do not decay even in an aging man.

7. Manu VII, 84; Yâgñavalkya I, 315. Krîṣṇapandita's reading, nainam adhyâkate ka yaḥ, which occurs also in B., is nonsense. I read with Bh. nainam adhyâpatekka yat, and take adhyâpatet, 'assails (the giver),' in the sense of 'troubles him by causing the performance of penances, on account of mistakes committed.' Manu's version, na vinasati karhiḥit, 'and never perishes,' is of course an easier one, but it seems to me doubtful whether it is older than Vasishṭha's.

8. The passage, which is probably a quotation from an Upanishad, is very corrupt in the MSS. and Krîṣṇapandita's text. I correct it as follows:

Dhyânâgniḥ satyopâkayanam kshântyâhutiḥ sruvamhrîḥ puroḍâsamahimsâ samtoshô yûpaḥ krîkḥram bhûtebhyo 'bhayadâkshinyam iti krîtvâ kratum mânasam yâti kshayam budhaḥ.

But I am not confident that all the difficulties have been removed.

10. Happiness (is the portion) of that man who relinquishes (all) desire, which fools give up with difficulty, which does not diminish with age, and which is a life-long disease.

11. Adoration to Vasishtha Satayātu, the son of Mitra and Varuna and Urvast!

BAUDHÂYANA.

BAUDHÂYANA.

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 1, KANDIKÂ 1.

1. The sacred law is taught in each Veda.
 2. We will explain (it) in accordance with that.
 3. (The sacred law), taught in the Tradition (Smṛiti, stands) second.
 4. The practice of the Sishṭas (stands) third.
 5. Sishṭas, forsooth, (are those) who are free from envy, free from pride, contented with a store of grain sufficient for ten days, free from covetousness, and free from hypocrisy, arrogance, greed, perplexity, and anger.
 6. '(Those are called) Sishṭas who, in accordance with the sacred law, have studied the Veda together
-

1. 1. Vasishṭha I, 4. Each Veda, i. e. each jâkhâ or redaction of the Veda.—Govinda.

3. Vasishṭha I, 4. Govinda takes smṛiti, 'the tradition,' in the sense of works (grantha) explaining the recollections of the Rishis, and is no doubt right in doing so.

4. Vasishṭha I, 5. The explanation of âgama by 'practice' rests on the authority of Govinda and the parallel passages where śīla and âkâra, 'conduct,' are used.

5. Âpastamba I, 7, 20, 8; Gautama XXVIII, 48. Kumbhîdhânya, translated according to Govinda by 'contented with a store of grain sufficient for ten days,' means, according to others, 'contented with a store of grain sufficient for six days or for a year.'

6. Vasishṭha VI, 43. Govinda omits the word 'iti,' given by the with its appendages, know how to draw inferences from that, (and) are able to adduce proofs perceptible by the senses from the revealed texts.'

7. On failure of them, an assembly consisting at least of ten members (shall decide disputed points of law).

8. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Four men, who each know one of the four Vedas, a Mīmāṃsaka, one who knows the Aṅgas, one who recites (the works on) the sacred law, and three Brāhmaṇas belonging to (three different) orders, (constitute) an assembly consisting, at least, of ten members.'

9. 'There may be five, or there may be three, or there may be one blameless man, who decides (questions regarding) the sacred law. But a thousand fools (can)not (do it).'

10. 'As an elephant made of wood, as an antelope made of leather, such is an unlearned Brāhmaṇa : those three having nothing but the name (of their kind).'

MSS. after the verse, whereby it is marked as a quotation. 'The appendages,' i. e. the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.—Govinda.

8. Vasishṭha III, 20. Govinda, quoting Gautama XXVIII, 49, says that Vānaprasthas cannot serve as members of Parishads, because they live in the forest. He also notices a different reading, not found in my MSS., 'Āsramasthās trayo mukhyāḥ.' He asserts that thereby professed students are intended, because professed students are declared to be particularly holy in the Dharmaskandha-brāhmaṇa.

9. Vasishṭha III, 7. Itare, translated by 'fools,' means literally, 'those different from the persons enumerated in the preceding verse.' Govinda remarks that according to Sūtra 12 one learned Brāhmaṇa must be taken only in cases of the most pressing necessity.

10. Vasishṭha III, 11.

11. 'That sin which dunces, perplexed by ignorance and unacquainted with the sacred law, declare (to be duty), falls, increased a hundredfold, on those who propound it.'

12. 'Narrow and difficult to find is the path of the sacred law, towards which many gates lead. Hence, if there is a doubt, it must not be propounded by one man (only), however learned he may be.'

13. 'What Brâhmanas, riding in the chariot of the law (and) wielding the sword of the Veda, propound even in jest, that is declared to be the highest law.'

14. 'As wind and sun will make water, collected on a stone, disappear, even so the sin that (cleaves) to an offender completely vanishes like water.'

15. 'He who knows the sacred law shall fix the penances with discernment, taking into consideration the constitution, the strength, the knowledge, and the age (of the offender), as well as the time and the deed.'

11. Vasishṭha III, 6.

12. The 'gates' of the sacred law are the Vedas, the Smṛitis, and the practice of the Śiṣṭas. They are many, because the redactions of the Vedas and Smṛitis are numerous and the practices vary in different countries.

14. I. e. provided the offender performs the penance imposed by learned and virtuous Brâhmanas. Pranârayet, 'will make disappear,' is ungrammatical, as the subject stands in the dual. Grammatical accuracy has probably been sacrificed to the exigencies of the metre.

15. Vasishṭha XIX, 9. Sarîram, literally 'the body,' means here the constitution, which may be bilious, 'windy,' and so forth. Âyuh, literally 'life' or 'long life,' has been translated by 'knowledge,' in accordance with Govinda's explanation, gñânam. As the word vayaḥ, 'age,' also occurs in this verse, it is clear that âyuh cannot have its usual meaning.

16. 'Many thousands (of Brāhmanas) cannot form a (legal) assembly (for declaring the sacred law), if they have not fulfilled their sacred duties, are unacquainted with the Veda, and subsist only by the name of their caste.'

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 1, KANDIKĀ 2.

1. There is a dispute regarding five (practices) both in the south and in the north.

2. We will explain those (peculiar) to the south.

3. They are, to eat in the company of an uninitiated person, to eat in the company of one's wife, to eat stale food, to marry the daughter of a maternal uncle or of a paternal aunt.

4. Now (the customs peculiar) to the north are, to deal in wool, to drink rum, to sell animals that have teeth in the upper and in the lower jaws, to follow the trade of arms, to go to sea.

16. Vasishṭha III, 5. The two copies of the commentary omit this Sūtra, though it is quoted in the explanation of Sūtra 9. The best MSS. repeat the last words of the Sūtra in order to show that the Kandikā ends here. The same practice is observed, though not quite regularly, in the sequel.

2. 1. The boundary between the north and south of India is, as Govinda also points out, the river Narmadā.

3. Some of the customs mentioned here still prevail in parts of southern India. Thus the marriages between cousins occur among the Desastha and Karhāḍā Brāhmanas of the Dekhan.

4. The first two customs mentioned still prevail in the north, especially in Kasmîr, where Brāhmanas commonly deal in wool and woollen cloth. Spirituous liquor is not now drunk openly, but its use is sanctioned in the Kasmîrian Nilamata-purāna. Many Brāhmanical families in the north, especially in the North-western Provinces, subsist by enlisting as soldiers in the British and native armies.

5. He who follows (these practices) in any other country than where they prevail, commits sin.

6. For each (of these customs) the (rule of the) country should be (considered) the authority.

7. Gautama declares that that is false.

8. And one should not take heed of either (set of practices) because they are opposed to the tradition of the Sishṭas.

9. The country of the Āryas (Āryāvarta) lies to the east of the region where (the river Sarasvatī) disappears, to the west of the Black-forest (Kāla-kavana), to the north of the Pāripātra (mountains), to the south of the Himālaya. The rule of conduct which (prevails) there, is authoritative.

10. Some (declare) the country between the (rivers) Yamunā and Ganges (to be the Āryāvarta).

11. Now the Bhāllavins quote also the (following) verse :

12. 'In the west the boundary-river, in the east the region where the sun rises,—as far as the black antelopes wander (between these two limits), so far spiritual pre-eminence (is found).'

5-6. A similar argument is given by the Kasmīrians for the lawfulness of the consumption of meat, which they justify by a deraguṇa or 'virtue of their country.'

7. Gautama XI, 20.

9. Vasishṭha I, 8, 10. Many MSS., and among them the Telugu copy of the commentary, read Pāriyātra instead of Pāripātra, which latter I consider to be the correct form of the word.

10. Vasishṭha I, 12.

11. Vasishṭha I, 14. Govinda remarks that the Bhāllavins are a school studying the Sāma-veda. See also Max Müller, Hist. Anc. Sansk. Lit., pp. 193, 364.

12. Vasishṭha I, 15. There is a great uncertainty in the MSS. about the word following sindhuḥ. I have adopted the reading of

13. The inhabitants of Avantī, of Aṅga, of Magadha, of Surāshtra, of the Dekhan, of Upāvrīṭ, of Sindh, and the Sauvīrās are of mixed origin.

14. He who has visited the (countries of the) Ārattas, Kāraskaras, Pundras, Sauvīras, Vaṅgas, Kaliṅgas, (or) Prānūnas shall offer a Punastoma or a Sarvapriṣṭhā (ishṭi).

15. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'He commits sin through his feet, who travels to the (country of the) Kaliṅgas. The sages declare the Vaisvānari ishṭi to be a purification for him.'

M., sindhur vidharanī, 'the boundary-river,' which occurs also in the parallel passage of Vasishṭha. The Dekhan and Gugarāt MSS. read viṭharanī or viṭharanā, and the two copies of the commentary visaranī. The sense of these various readings appears to be 'the river that vanishes or looses itself,' i. e. the Sarasvatī.

13. This and the following two Sūtras are intended to show that the customs prevailing in the countries named have no authority and must not be followed. Avanti corresponds to western Mālvā, Aṅga to western Bengal, Magadha to Bihār, and Surāshtra to southern Kāśhīāvād. The Sauvīras, who are always associated with the Sindhians, probably dwelt in the south-west of the Pañgāb, near Multān. The Upāvrīṭs probably are the same as the Upāvrīttas mentioned Mahābhārata VI, 49. But I am unable to determine their seats.

14. The Ārattas dwelt in the Pañgāb (Lassen, Ind. Alth. I, p. 973, sec. ed.), and are greatly blamed, Mahābhārata VIII, 44, 36 seq. The Kāraskaras are named in the same chapter of the Mahābhārata as a degraded tribe, but seem to belong to the south of India. The Kaliṅgas are the inhabitants of the eastern coast of India, between Orissa and the mouth of the Kṛishṇā river. The Pundras, who are mentioned as a degraded tribe in the Aitareya-brāhmaṇa VII, 18, and occur frequently in the Mahābhārata, and the Vaṅgas belong to Bengal (see Lassen, Ind. Alth. I, 669, sec. ed.; Cunningham, Anc. Geog. p. 480). Regarding the Punastoma, see Gautama XIX, 7 note; and regarding the Sarvapriṣṭhā ishṭi, Taittirīya-saṃhitā II, 3, 7, 1-2.

15. Āpastamba I, 11, 32, 18.

16. 'Even if many offences have been committed, they recommend for the removal of the sin the Pavitreshî. For that (sacrifice) is a most excellent means of purification.'

17. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He who performs (by turns) in each season the Vaisvânari (ishî), the Vrâtapati (ishî), and the Pavitreshî is freed from (all) sins.'

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 2, KANDIKÂ 3.

1. The (term of the) studentship for (learning the) Veda, as kept by the ancients, (is) forty-eight years,

2. (Or) twenty-four (years), or twelve for each Veda,

3. Or at the least one year for each Kânda,

4. Or until (the Veda has been) learned; for life is uncertain.

5. A passage of the revealed texts declares, 'Let him kindle the sacred fires while his hair is (still) black.'

17. Vasishtha XXII, 10. The meaning is that in each of the three seasons of the year, Grîshma, Varsha, Hemanta, one of the three sacrifices is to be offered.

3. 1. Âpastamba I, 1, 2, 12. Govindasvâmin gives four explanations of the adjective paurânam, 'kept by the ancients,' viz. 1. old, i. e. kept by the men of the Krîta or Golden age; 2. revealed to and kept by the ancients, such as Manu; 3. found in the ancient, i. e. eternal Veda; 4. found in the known Itihâsas and Purânas.

2. Âpastamba I, 1, 2, 14-16.

3. Each Kânda, i. e. each of the seven books of the Taittirîya-samhitâ.

4. Manu III, 1.

5. The object of the Sûtra is to prove that the period of studentship must not be protracted too long, lest the duty of offering the Srauta Agnihotra be neglected.

6. They do not put any (religious) restrictions on the acts of a (child) before the investiture with the girdle (is performed). For he is on a level with a Sûdra before (his second) birth through the Veda.

7. The number of years (must be calculated) from the conception. Let him initiate a Brâhmaṇa in the eighth (year) after that,

8. A Kshatriya three (years) later (than a Brâhmaṇa),

9. A Vaisya one year later than a (Kshatriya).

10. Spring, summer, and autumn are the seasons (for the initiation) according to the order of the castes.

11. (Let him perform the initiation reciting), according to the order (of the castes), a Gâyatrî, a Trishṭubh, (or) a Gagatî (verse).

12. Up to the sixteenth, the twenty-second, and the twenty-fourth (years) respectively (the time for the initiation) has not passed.

13. The girdles (shall consist of a rope) made of Muñga grass, a bow-string, (or a rope) made of hemp.

14. The skins (shall be) those of a black antelope, of a spotted deer, (or) of a he-goat.

15. The staff shall reach the crown of the head, the forehead, (or) the tip of the nose, (and be made) of a tree fit for a sacrifice. The details have been stated above.

6. Vasishṭha II, 6 ; Gautama II, 1.

7-9. Vasishṭha XI, 49-51.

10. Âpastamba I, 1, 1, 18.

12. Vasishṭha XI, 71-73.

13. Vasishṭha XI, 58-60. With this and the next two Sûtras the words 'according to the order of the castes' must be understood.

14. Vasishṭha XI, 61-63.

15. Vasishṭha XI, 55-57. The details referred to are to be

16. Let him beg, (employing a formula) consisting of seven syllables, with the word bhavat in the beginning, with the word bhikshâ in the middle, and with the (verb expressing) the request at the end; and let him not pronounce loudly (the syllables) kshâ and hi.

17. A Brâhmana (student) shall ask for alms, placing (the word) 'Lady' first, a Kshatriya placing found in the Baudhâyana Grîhya-sûtra II, 7, where the various kinds of trees from which the staff may be taken are specified. The Sûtra shows that the Grîhya-sûtra preceded the Dharma-sûtra in the collection.

16. The text of this Sûtra is corrupt. I read, 'bhavatpurvâm bhikshâmadhyâm yâkñântâm karet saptâksharâm bhikshâm kshâm ka him ka na vardhayet.' The various readings of the MSS. are, bhikshâm madhyâm yakñhântâm karet saptâksharâm bhim ka na vardhayet, C. T.;—yâkñântâm karet saptâksharamni kshâm ka bhim ka narvayet, D.;—yâkñântâm karet saptâksharâstm rkshâ ba him na vardhayet, K.;—yâkñântâm tikshâm karet saptâksharân kshâm ka him ka na vardhayan, M.;—yâkanâskântâm karet saptâksharân bhikshâm ka him ka na vardhayet, C. I. The most serious corruption lies in the syllables following saptâksharâm, and I am not certain that my emendation bhikshâm is correct. The commentary on the first half of the Sûtra runs as follows: bhikshâmantram vyaktam evokkaret bhavakñhabdapûrvâm bhikshâsabdāmadhyâm yâkñâprati-pa[pâ]dakarsabdāmtâm sabdâksharâm [saptâksharâm] ka evam hi bhavati bhikshâm dehi sampanno bhavati, 'let him pronounce distinctly the formula employed in begging, beginning with the word bhavat, having the word bhikshâ in the middle, and ending with the word conveying the sense of giving, and containing seven syllables. For thus (the formula), "Lady, give alms," becomes complete.' It is curious that Govinda says nothing about the form saptâksharâm and the feminine terminations of the other adjectives, which do not agree with mantram, a masculine.

17. Vasishṭha XI, 68–70; Gautama II, 35. Govinda thinks that a student should, if possible, beg from people of his own caste. Three castes only are intended by the term 'from all castes.' But see Āpastamba I, 1, 3, 25; Gautama VII, 1 seqq.

it in the middle, (and) a Vaisya placing it at the end (of the formula), from (men of) all castes.

18. The (persons fit to be asked) are Brâhmanas and so forth, who follow (their lawful) occupations.

19. Let him daily fetch fuel out of the forest and offer (it in the sacred fire).

20. (A student shall be) truthful, modest, and devoid of pride.

21. He shall rise before (his teacher in the morning) and go to rest after (him in the evening).

22. He shall never disobey the words of his teacher except (when he is ordered to commit) a crime causing loss of caste.

23. Let him converse with women so much (only) as his purpose requires.

24. Let him avoid dancing, singing, playing musical instruments, the use of perfumes, garlands, shoes, (or) a parasol, applying collyrium (to his eyes), and anointing (his body).

25. Let him take hold (of his teacher's) right (foot) with the right (hand), and of the left (foot) with the left hand.

26. If he desires long life and (bliss in) heaven,

19. Vishnu XXVIII, 4.

20. Gautama II, 8; Âpastamba I, 1, 3, 20.

21. Vishnu XXVIII, 13.

22. Âpastamba I, 1, 2, 19; Vasishtha VII, 10.

23. Âpastamba I, 1, 3, 16.

24. Vishnu XXVIII, 11; Vasishtha VII, 15.

25. Vishnu XXVIII, 15. The details regarding the times when this kind of salutation is to be performed are found Âpastamba I, 2, 5, 21 seqq.

26. The two copies of the commentary connect the clause, 'if he is desirous of long life and (bliss in) heaven,' with the preceding Sûtra. But see Âpastamba I, 2, 5, 15, where the identical words

(he may act) at his pleasure (in the same manner) towards other holy (men), after having received permission from his teacher.

27. (Let him say), 'I N. N., ho! (salute thee),' touching his ears, in order to compose the internal organ.

28. (Let him embrace his teacher's leg) below the knee down to the feet.

29. (A student shall not embrace his teacher) when he (himself) is seated, or lying down, or impure, nor when (his teacher) is seated, lying down, or impure.

30. If he can (find water to sip), he shall not remain impure even during a muhūrta.

31. If he carries a load of fuel or holds a pot, flowers, or food in his hands, he shall not salute; nor (shall he do it) on similar occasions.

32. Let him not salute (the teacher) standing too close,

33. Nor, if he has reached the age of puberty, the young wives of brothers and the young wives of the teacher.

occur. The commentary omits the remainder of the Sûtra, which all my MSS. give here, and inserts it below, after Sûtra 29.

27. Âpastamba I, 2, 5, 12; Vasishṭha XIII, 44. Regarding the phrase, 'in order to compose his internal organ,' see Manu II, 120.

28. Âpastamba I, 2, 5, 22. The meaning seems to be that the pupil is first to stroke his teacher's legs from the knee downwards, and then to take hold of it at the ankle.

29. Âpastamba I, 4, 14, 14-20. 30. Âpastamba I, 5, 15, 8.

31. Âpastamba I, 4, 14, 22. 'On similar occasions,' i.e. when he himself is engaged in the worship of the manes, of the gods, or of the fire, or when his teacher is occupied in that way.

33. The salutation which is meant, is probably the embrace of the feet; see also Gautama II, 32. Govinda thinks that the words samavâye 'tyantyasaḥ, 'standing too close,' must be understood.

34. To sit together with (these persons) in a boat, on a rock, on a plank, on an elephant, on the roof of a house, on a mat, or in wheeled vehicles is permissible.

35. (The pupil) must assist his teacher in making his toilet, shampoo him, attend him while bathing, eat his leavings, and so forth.

36. (But he) should avoid the remnants of food left by his (teacher's) son, though he may know the Veda together with the Āngas,

37. And to assist at the toilet of, to shampoo, to attend in the bath, and to eat the remnants of food left by a young wife of his (teacher).

38. Let him run after (his teacher) when he runs, walk after him when he walks, attend him standing when he stands.

39. Let him not sport in the water while bathing.

40. Let him swim (motionless) like a stick.

41. To study under a non-Brāhmanical teacher (is permitted) in times of distress.

34. Govinda adds that to sit with young wives of his teachers on other occasions is sinful.

35. I read utsādana, 'to shampoo,' while the MSS. have either a lacuna or read ukḥhādana, and the commentary âkḥhādana, which is explained by khattradhâraṇa, 'to hold a parasol,' or malâpa-karshana, 'to clean.' The khḥa is, however, merely owing to a very common faulty pronunciation of tṣa. Govinda remarks correctly that the word 'iti,' which follows the enumeration of the services to be performed by the pupil, has the force of 'and so forth.'

36-37. The meaning of the two Sûtras is that the pupil shall serve the son of his teacher, especially if he is learned, and aged wives of his teacher, but not eat their leavings. The explanation of anûkṣâna, 'who knows the Āngas,' is given by Baudhâyana, Gṛhya-sûtra I, 11, 4.

38. Āpastamba I, 2, 6, 7-9; Vasishṭha VII, 12.

39-40. Āpastamba I, 1, 2, 30; Vishṇu XXVIII, 5.

41. Āpastamba II, 2, 4, 25. Govinda combines this Sûtra with the next two and makes one of the three.

42. (The pupil shall) obey and walk after him as long as the instruction (lasts).

43. (According to some this is improper, because) just that (mutual relation) sanctifies both of them.

44. And (the behaviour) towards brothers, sons, and (other) pupils (of the teacher shall be regulated) in the same manner.

45. But officiating priests, a father-in-law, paternal and maternal uncles who are younger than (oneself must be honoured by) rising and (by being) addressed.

46. Kâtya (declares that) the salutation shall be returned.

47. For (the propriety of that rule) is apparent (from the story) about Sisu Âṅgīrasa.

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 2, KANDIKÂ 4.

1. If merit and wealth are not (obtained by teaching), nor (at least) the due obedience, one should die with one's learning; one should not sow it on barren soil.

42. Âpastamba II, 2, 4, 26; Gautama VII, 2-3.

43. The words between brackets belong to Govinda.

44. I. e. if they are younger than oneself.

45. Instead of pratyutthâyâbhibhâṣanam, '(shall be honoured by) rising and being addressed,' which is the reading of the two copies of the commentary and of M., the MSS. from the Dekhan and Gugarât read, pratyutthâyâbhivâdanam. The latter reading might be translated by 'shall be saluted by rising;' see Gautama VI, 9. Govinda says, in explanation of this rule: 'This restrictive rule also (refers) to teachers only, officiating priests, and the rest; to address (means) to use words such as "welcome."'

46. 'Kâtya, i. e. a descendant of the Rîshi Kâta. He was of opinion that officiating priests and the rest must return the salute. As the return of a salute is prescribed for them, it is understood that the other (party) must salute.'—Govinda.

47. The story of Sisu Âṅgīrasa is told, Manu II, 151-153.

4. 1. Manu II, 112.

2. As fire consumes dry grass, even so the Veda, asked for, (but) not honoured, (destroys the enquirer). Therefore let him not proclaim the Veda to those who do not show him honour according to their ability.

3. They proclaim to him a command to the following effect;

4. 'Brahman, forsooth, made the created beings over to Death. The student alone it did not make over to him.' He (Death) spake, 'Let me have a share in him.' (Brahman answered), 'That night in which he may neglect to offer a piece of sacred fuel (shall belong to thee).'

5. 'Therefore a student who passes a night without offering a piece of sacred fuel, cuts it off from the length of his life. Therefore let the student offer a piece of sacred fuel, lest he spend a night, shortening his life.'

6. 'A long sacrificial session begins he who commences his studentship. That (night) in which, after being initiated, he (first) offers a piece of sacred fuel corresponds to the Prâyanīya (Ātirātra of a sacrificial session); that night in which (he offers it last), intending to take the final bath, corresponds to the Udayanīya (Ātirātra). Those nights which (lie) between (these two terms correspond) just to the nights of his sacrificial session.'

2. Vasishṭha II, 12.

3. 'They, i. e. the Vâgasaneyins; to him, i. e. to the student.'—Govinda.

4. The quotation, which begins here and ends with the end of the section, is taken from Satapatha-brâhmaṇa XI, 2, 6. In the text the word Brahman is a neuter.

6. MSS. M. and K., as well as the commentary, read dirghasat-

7. 'A Brāhmaṇa who becomes a student of the Veda, enters existent beings in a fourfold manner, (viz.) with one quarter (he enters) Fire, with one quarter Death, with one quarter the Teacher, the fourth quarter remains in the Soul. When he offers to Fire a piece of sacred fuel, he thereby buys back even that quarter which (resides) in Fire, hallowing it, he places it in himself; that enters into him. Now when making himself poor and, becoming shameless, he asks for alms (and) lives as a student of the Veda, he thereby buys back the quarter which (resides) in Death; hallowing it, he places it in himself; that enters into him. Now when he obeys the orders of his Teacher, he thereby buys back that quarter which (resides) in the Teacher; hallowing it, he places it in himself; that enters into him. [Now when he recites the Veda, he thereby buys back the quarter which resides in the Soul. Hallowing it, he places it in himself; that enters into him.] Let him not go to beg, after he has bathed (on finishing his studentship). . . . If he does not find another woman whom he can ask for alms, let him beg even from his own teacher's wife or from his own mother. The seventh (night) shall not pass without his asking for alms. [(He commits) sin if he does not go out to ask for alms and does not place fuel on the fire. If he neglects that during seven (days and) nights, he must perform the tram ha vā eṣha upaiti, while the MSS. from the Dekhan and Gugarāt, like the printed edition of the Sat. Br., omit the particle 'ha.' Prāyaṇīya means, literally, 'initial,' and udayaṇīya, 'final.' Each sattra or sacrificial session begins and ends with an Âtirâtra sacrifice.

7. This portion of the quotation shows, besides some minor deviations from the published text of the Mādhyandinas, several penance prescribed for one who has broken the vow of studentship.] All the Vedas come to him who knows that and acts thus.'

8. 'As a blazing fire shines, even so shines he who, knowing this, thus fulfils the duties of studentship, after he has bathed (on leaving his teacher).' Thus speaks the Brāhmaṇa.

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 3, KANDIKĀ 5.

1. Now (follow the duties) of a Snātaka.

interpolations and corruptions. The minor discrepancies are, 'brāhmaṇo vai brahmaṭaryam upayan' (upayaḥkhan, C. I. and T.); padātmanyeva katurthaḥ pādaḥ; yadagnaye samidham ādadhāti; atha yad ātmānam daridrīkrītyāhrīr bhūtvā bhikshate brahmaṭaryam karati; atha yad ātāryavataḥ karoti ya evāsyātkārye. In the second passage the Dekhan MSS. read, however, like the printed text. The interpolations are, 'Now when he recites the Veda,' &c., and the verse, 'He commits sin if he neglects,' &c. The former passage entirely destroys the sense of the whole and the connexion of the parts. Both have, however, been retained, as they occur in all the MSS. and the two copies of the commentary, and have been enclosed in brackets. The corrupt passage is so bad that it makes no sense at all. The best MSS. read as follows: 'api hi vai snātvā bhikshām karatyavignānanāsanāyayā pitrīnāmanyabhyah kriyābhyah' sa yadanyām, &c., D.; 'api ha vai snātvā bhishām karasapi gnāni nāsanāya yā [vā sec. m.] pitrīnām anyābhyah kriyābhyah,' K.; api ha vai snātvā bhikshāñ karati—pagñāti —nām sanāyāpi pitrīnām anyābhyah kriyāsas, M.; api ha vai snātvā bhikshām karatyavignātināmasanayāpi pitrīnām anyābhyah kriyābhyah, C. I. As it is by no means certain that Baudhāyana's reading agreed with that of the printed text, I have left the passage out.

5. 1. Regarding the term Snātaka, see Āpastamba I, 11, 30, 1-4. Govinda thinks that the following rules are intended to apply in the first instance to a student who has performed the Samāvartana on completion of his studentship and lives unmarried at home. For though the Smṛiti declares it necessary for a student to enter, on completing his term, at once into one of the remaining three

2. He shall wear a lower garment and upper garment.

3. Let him carry a staff made of bamboo,

4. And a pot filled with water.

5. Let him wear two sacrificial threads.

6. (He shall possess) a turban, an upper garment (consisting of) a skin, shoes, and a parasol. (He shall keep) a sacred fire and (offer) the new and full moon (Sthâlpâkas).

7. He shall cause the hair of his head, of his beard, and of his body, and his nails to be cut on the Parva days.

8. His livelihood (he shall obtain in the following manner):

9. Let him beg uncooked (food) from Brâhmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, or carpenters,

10. Or (cooked) food (even from many).

11. Let him remain silent (when he goes to beg).

12. Let him perform with that all Pâkayagñas, offered to the gods and manes, and the rites, securing welfare.

orders, it may happen, as the commentator observes, that the Snâtaka's marriage cannot take place immediately. The correctness of this view is proved by Âpastamba I, 2, 8, and by the fact that below, II, 3, 5, the rules for a married Snâtaka are given separately.

2-5. Vasishṭha XII, 14.

6. Âpastamba I, 2, 8, 2.

7. Regarding the Parva days, see Vasishṭha XII, 21 note.

8. Vasishṭha XII, 2-4. 'Though the Snâtaka is the subject of the discussion, the word "his" is used (in this Sûtra) in order to introduce the remaining duties of a householder also.'—Govinda.

9. The carpenter (rathakâra) is a Sûdra, but connected with the Vedic sacrifices.

10. "Food" (bhaiksham), i.e. a quantity of begged food. The meaning is that in times of distress he may beg from many.'—Govinda.

12. With that, i.e. with the food obtained by begging. Regarding

13. Baudhāyana declares that by (following) this rule the most excellent sages reach the highest abode of Prajāpati Parameshthin.

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 4, KANDIKĀ 6.

1. Now (those who know the law) prescribe the carrying of a waterpot.

2. It is declared (in the Vedas) that fire (resides) in the right ear of a goat, in the right hand of a Brāhmaṇa, likewise in water (and) in a bundle of Kusa grass. Therefore after personal purification let him wipe (his water-vessel) on all sides with his (right) hand, (reciting the mantra), 'Blaze up, O fire;' for that (is called) encircling it with fire and is preferable to heating (the pot on the fire).

3. With reference to this matter they prescribe also (the following rules): 'If he thinks in his heart that (the pot) has been slightly defiled, let him light Kusa or (other) grass and heat (the pot) on all sides, keeping his right hand turned towards it.'

4. 'If (pots) have been touched by crows, dogs, or the Pākayagñas, see Gautama VIII, 18. Govinda gives as an instance of the rites securing welfare (bhūtikarmāṇi) the āyushyākaru, a rice-offering intended to procure long life.

13. Govinda explains Baudhāyana by Kāṇvāyana, and adds that either the author speaks of himself in the third person or a pupil must have compiled the book.

6. 1. As Govinda observes, the rules regarding the waterpot (ka-maṇḍalu) are introduced here in connexion with I, 3, 5, 4.

2. Vasishtha XII, 15-16. The mantra is found, Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka X, 1, 4.

3. The word upadisanti, 'they prescribe,' stands at the end of Sūtra 4, as it refers to both rules.

4. Vasishtha III, 59. The paryagnikarāṇa is the rite prescribed in Sūtra 2.

other (unclean animals, they shall be heated, until they are of) the colour of fire, after the (paryagnikarana has been performed).'

5. (Pots) which have been defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen, and the like must be thrown away.

6. If his waterpot has been broken, let him offer one hundred (oblations) reciting the Vyâhr̥itis, or mutter (the Vyâhr̥itis as often).

7. (Reciting the text), 'Earth went to earth, the mother joined the mother; may we have sons and cattle; may he who hates us be destroyed,' he shall collect the fragments, throw them into water, repeat the Gâyatrī at least ten times and take again another (pot).

8. Taking refuge with Varuṇa, (he shall recite the mantra), 'That (belongs) to thee, Varuṇa; again to me, Om,' (and) meditate on the indestructible.

5. Vasishṭha III, 59.

6. Regarding the Vyâhr̥itis, see Gautama I, 51.

7. Govinda says that Vâmadeva is the R̥ishi of the mantra. The fragments of the pot are to be thrown into a river or tank, in order to preserve them from defilement. See also Journ. Bo. Br. Roy. As. Soc., No. XXXIV A, p. 55 note.

8. 'Taking refuge with Varuṇa, i. e. saying, "I flee for safety to Varuṇa." (The words), "That for thee, Varuṇa, again to me, Om," (are) the mantras (to be recited) on taking (a new vessel). Its meaning is this: "Those fragments which I have thrown into the water shall belong to thee, Varuṇa." (Saying), "Come, thou (who art) a lord of water-vessels, again to me, Om," he shall meditate on another visible pot as indestructible, i. e. at the end of the Vedic (word) "Om," let him meditate, (i. e.) recollect, that not everything will be turned topsy-turvy, (but that some things are) also indestructible, i. e. that that is not destroyed, does not perish.'—Govinda. The explanation of the last clause of our Sūtra seems to be that, on pronouncing the syllable (akshara) Om, the reciter is

9. 'If he has received (the new vessel) from a Sûdra, let him recite (the Gâyatri) one hundred (times). (If he has received it) from a Vaisya, fifty (repetitions of the Gâyatri) are prescribed, but (on receiving it) from a Kshatriya twenty-five, (and on taking it) from a Brâhmaṇa ten.'

10. Those who recite the Veda are doubtful whether he shall fetch water after the sun has set or shall not fetch it.

11. The most excellent (opinion is) that he may fetch it.

12. Let him restrain his breath, while he fetches water.

13. Fire, forsooth, takes up water.

14. It is declared (in the Veda), 'When he has washed his hands and feet with water from his water-vessel, he is impure for others, as long as the moisture (remains). He purifies himself only. Let him not perform other religious rites (with water from his pot).'

to recollect the etymological import of the word akshara, 'indestructible,' and thus to guard the new vessel against the mishap which befell the old one.

9. According to Govinda, either the praṇava, the syllable Om, or the Gâyatri are the mantras to be recited, and the recitation is a penance to be performed when the vessel is received. The MSS. of the text mark the verse as a quotation by adding the word 'iti,' which the commentary omits.

13. According to Govinda, a Brâhmaṇa who goes to fetch water at night, which he may want for personal purification, is ordered to restrain his breath, because thereby the air in the body becomes strong, and fire or heat (agni) is produced. Now as at night the sun is stated to enter the fire and to become subject to it, a Brâhmaṇa, who by restraining his breath has produced fire, has secured the presence of the sun, when he goes to fetch water.

14. Govinda expressly states that the word vigñāyate, 'it is declared,'

15. Baudhâya (says), 'Or if on the occasion of each personal purification (he washes himself with other water) up to the wrist, (he will become) pure.'

16. Now they quote also (the following verses):

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 4, KANDIKÂ 7.

1. 'Formerly (the use of) a waterpot has been prescribed by Brahman and the chief sages for the purification of twice-born men. Therefore he shall always carry one.'

'He who desires his own welfare, shall use it without hesitation, for purifying (his person), for drinking, and for performing his twilight devotions.'

2. Let him do it with a believing heart; a wise man must not corrupt his mind. The self-existent literally, 'it is distinctly known,' always indicates that the passage quoted is taken from the Veda. The rites for which water from the waterpot is not to be used, are libations to the manes, the gods, and the fire. See also below, I, 4, 7, 5.

15. The words enclosed between parentheses are Govinda's.

7. 1. The division of this chapter into two sections occurs in the M. manuscript only. The Dekhan MSS., which give the division into Kandikâs, do not note it, and have at the end of the Prasna the figure 20, while M. has 21 and in words ekavimsati after the enumeration of the Pratīkas.

2. 'A wise man must not corrupt his mind,' i. e. must not doubt or adopt erroneous views regarding the teaching of the Sâstras with respect to the waterpot. It seems to me that this passage indicates the existence of an opposition to the constant carrying of the waterpot in Baudhâya's times. This is so much more probable, as the custom is now obsolete, and is mentioned in some Purāṇas and versified Smṛtis as one of the practices forbidden in the Kali age; see e.g. the general note appended to Sir W. Jones' translation of Manu.

(Brahman) came into existence with a water-vessel. Therefore let him perform (his rites) with a water-vessel.

3. Let him hold it in his right hand when he voids urine and excrements, in the left when he sips water. That is (a) settled (rule) for all good men.

4. For as the sacrificial cup (kamasa) is declared to be pure on account of its contact with the Soma-juice, even so the water-vessel is constantly pure through its contact with water.

5. Therefore let him avoid (to use) it for the worship of the manes, the gods, and the fire.

6. Therefore let him not go on a journey without a waterpot, nor to the boundary of the village, nor from one house to the other.

7. Some (declare that he must not go without it) a step further than the length of an arrow.

8. Baudhāyana (says that he shall not go without it) if he wishes to fulfil his duties constantly.

9. (The divine) Word declares that (this is confirmed) by a Rīk-shaped (passage).

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKĀ 8.

1. Now (follows the description of) the means of purification.

5. According to Govinda the word 'therefore' refers back to Sūtra I, 4, 6, 14.

9. 'Rīgvidham, "a Rīk-shaped (passage)," means Rīgvidhānam, "a prescription consisting of a Rīk." The Brāhmaṇa is indicated by (the word) vāk, ("the goddess of) speech." The meaning is, "The Brāhmaṇa says that there is also a Rīk-verse to this effect. That is as follows, tasyaishā bhavati yat te silpam ityādi' (Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka I, 7, 1).—Govinda.

2. The body is purified by water, the understanding by knowledge, the soul by abstention from injuring living beings, the internal organ by truth.

3. Purifying the internal organ (is called) internal purification.

4. We will explain (the rules of) external purification.

5. The sacrificial thread (shall be made) of Kusa grass, or cotton, (and consist) of thrice three strings.

6. (It shall hang down) to the navel.

7. (In putting it on) he shall raise the right arm, lower the left, and lower the head.

8. The contrary (is done at sacrifices) to the manes.

9. (If the thread is) suspended round the neck, (it is called) nivṛta.

10. (If it is) suspended below (the navel, it is called) adhōpavṛta.

11. Let him perform (the rite of personal) purification, facing the east or the north, (and) seated in a pure place; (let him) place his right arm between his knees and wash both hands up to the wrist and both feet (up to the ankles).

12. Let him not use for sipping the remainder of the water with which he has washed his feet.

13. But if he uses (that) for sipping, let him do it, after pouring (a portion of it) on the ground.

8. 2. Vasishṭha III, 60.

7-9. Manu II, 63.

11. Vasishṭha III, 26. Govinda points out that the word saukām, '(rite of) purification,' has here the meaning of âkamanam, 'sipping water.' He thinks that the ka, 'and,' which stands after pâdau, 'both feet,' indicates that other portions of the body which have been defiled must be washed also.

14. He shall sip out of the Tīrtha sacred to Brahman.

15. The part (of the hand) at the root of the thumb (is called) the Tīrtha sacred to Brahman.

16. The part above the thumb (is called the Tīrtha) sacred to the manes, the part at the tips of the fingers that sacred to the gods, the part at the root of the fingers that sacred to the Rishis.

17. (Let him not use for sipping water that has trickled) from the fingers, nor (water) that is covered with bubbles or foam, nor (water that is) hot, or alkaline, or salt, or muddy, or discoloured, or has a bad smell or taste.

18. (Let him not sip water) laughing, nor talking, nor standing, nor looking about, nor bending his head or his body forward, nor while the lock on his crown is untied, nor while his throat is wrapped up, nor while his head is covered, nor when he is in a hurry, nor without wearing the sacrificial thread, nor stretching his feet out, nor while his loins are girt (with a cloth), nor without holding his right arm between his knees, nor making a sound.

19. Let him thrice drink water that reaches his heart.

20. Let him wipe (his lips) thrice.

21. Some (declare that he shall do it) twice.

14. Vasishṭha III, 26.

16. Vishṇu LXII, 3-4. All the MSS. except M. place the Tīrtha sacred to the gods at the root of the fingers, and that sacred to the Rishis at the tips of the fingers, and Govinda has the same erroneous reading.

17. Vasishṭha III, 36.

18. Vasishṭha III, 30.

19-20. Vasishṭha III, 26; Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 3.

21. Vasishṭha III, 27; Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 4.

22. A woman and a Sûdra (shall perform) both (acts) once (only).

23. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'A Brâhmaṇa is purified by water that reaches his heart, a Kshatriya by (water) reaching his throat, a Vaisya by (water barely) taken into the mouth, a woman and a Sûdra by touching (it) with the extremity (of the lips).

24. 'If (drops) adhere to his teeth, (they must be considered pure) like the teeth, because they are fixed (in the mouth) like the teeth. Let him not sip water on their account in case they fall. If they flow out, he will be pure.'

25. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'If anything adheres to the teeth, (it is pure) like the teeth; and if he swallows (it or) whatever else may be in the mouth (or) may remain after sipping water, (he will become) pure.'

26. (After sipping) he shall touch the cavities (of the head) with water, the feet, the navel, the head, (and) lastly the left hand.

27. If he becomes impure while holding (a vessel) made of metal, he shall put it down, sip water and sprinkle it, when he is going to take it up.

28. Now if he becomes impure (while he is occupied) with food, he shall put it down, sip water and sprinkle it, when he is going to take it up.

29. Now if he becomes impure (while occupied)

23. Vasishṭha III, 31-34.

24. The MSS. read in the last pāda of this verse, teshām samsrāye [ya or va]-kkukīṣṭi. I think samsrāvanâkkhukīṣṭi iti is the correct reading.

25. Vasishṭha III, 41.

26. Vasishṭha III, 28-29.

28. Vasishṭha III, 43-44.

with water, he shall put it down, sip water and sprinkle it, when he is going to take it up.

30. That is contrary (to the rule) in (the case of an earthen) vessel.

31. In (the case of a vessel) made of wood there is an option.

32. Defiled (objects) made of metal must be scoured with cowdung, earth, and ashes, or with one of these (three).

33. Copper, silver, and gold (must be cleaned) with acids.

34. Earthen vessels must be heated.

35. (Objects) made of wood must be planed.

36. (Objects) made of bamboo (must be cleaned) with cowdung,

37. (Objects) made of fruits with a rope of cow-hair,

38. Skins of black deer with (ground) Bel nut and rice,

39. Blankets (of the hair of the mountain goat) with Areka nuts,

40. (Cloth) made of (sheep's) wool by the (rays of the) sun,

41. Linen (cloth) with a paste of yellow mustard,

30. '(The word) amatram, literally "a vessel," denotes here an earthen vessel. The meaning is that such a one, if it is very much defiled, shall only be put down and not be taken back. Any other (earthen vessel) shall be heated.'—Govinda.

32. Vasishṭha III, 49.

33. Manu V, 114; Vasishṭha III, 63.

34-35. Vasishṭha III, 49.

36. Vasishṭha III, 53.

37. Vasishṭha III, 54. Govinda thinks that the word raggu, 'a rope,' is used here in the sense of 'a conglomeration,' and merely indicates that a quantity of cowhair must be used.

39. Manu V, 120.

41. Vasishṭha III, 55.

42. Cotton cloth with earth,
 43. Skins (other than deer-skins shall be treated) like cotton cloth,
 44. Stones and gems like (objects) made of metal,
 45. Bones like wood,
 46. Conch-shells, horn, pearl-shells, and ivory like linen cloth,
 47. Or (they may be cleaned) with milk.
 48. (Objects) which have been defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen, or a dead body, (but) are agreeable to the eye and the nose, shall be rubbed seven times with one of the substances mentioned above.
 49. (Objects) not made of metal which are in the same condition must be thrown away.
 50. The cups and vessels (used) at a sacrifice (must be cleaned) according to the injunction (of the Veda).
 51. The Veda (declares), 'They do not become impure through Soma.'
 52. 'Time, fire, purity of mind, water and the like (fluids), smearing with cowdung and ignorance (of defilement) are declared to be the sixfold (means of) purification for created beings.'
 53. Now they quote also (the following verse):

42. Vasishṭha III, 49.

43. Vasishṭha III, 53.

44. Vasishṭha III, 50.

45. Vasishṭha III, 52.

46. Vasishṭha III, 51.

49. Vasishṭha III, 59.

50. Govinda explains this Sūtra differently. He says: 'The fault of defilement by remnants does not affect sacrificial cups and vessels. This must be understood. If they are defiled by urine and the like, they must be thrown away.' My explanation is based on the parallel passage of Āpastamba I, 5, 17, 13. See also below, I, 6, 13, 11 seq.

52. Vishṇu XXII, 88.

‘A clever man, who knows (the rules of) purification and is desirous of righteousness, shall perform (the rites of) purification, after having fully considered the time, and the place (of the defilement), likewise himself, (as well as) the object (to be cleaned) and the substance (to be employed), the purpose of the object, the cause (of the defilement), and the condition (of the thing or person defiled).’

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKĀ 9.

1. The Veda declares that the hand of an artisan is always pure, so is every vendible commodity exposed for sale and food obtained by begging, which a student holds in his hand.

2. A calf is pure on the flowing (of the milk), a bird on the fall of the fruit, women at the time of dalliance, and a dog when he catches a deer.

3. All mines and places of manufacture are pure excepting distilleries of spirituous liquor; continuously flowing streams of water and dust raised by the wind cannot be contaminated.

4. The flowers and fruit of flowering and fruit-bearing trees which grow in unclean places are likewise not impure.

9. 1. Vishṇu XXIII, 48.

2. Vishṇu XXIII, 49.

3. Vishṇu XXIII, 48. The term ākara, translated by ‘mines and places of manufacture,’ is explained in the commentary by ‘places of production, i.e. of sugar and honey.’ It is no doubt intended to apply to any place where articles of consumption or use are produced. Govinda adds that as ‘continuous streams of water’ are always pure, one must take care that the water for sipping flows out of the vessel in an unbroken stream.

5. On touching a tree standing on a sacred spot, a funeral pile, a sacrificial post, a Kandâla or a person who sells the Veda, a Brâhmana shall bathe dressed in his clothes.

6. One's own couch, seat, clothes, wife, child, and waterpot are pure for oneself; but for strangers they are impure.

7. A seat, a couch, a vehicle, ships (and boats), the road and grass are purified by the wind, if they have been touched by Kandâlas or outcasts.

8. Grain on the threshing-floor, water in wells and reservoirs, and milk in the cowpen are fit for use even (if they come) from a person whose food must not be eaten.

9. The gods created for Brâhmanas three means of purification, (viz.) ignorance of defilement, sprinkling with water, and commending by word of mouth.

10. Water collected on the ground with which

5. Vasishtha IV, 37. Kaityavriksha, 'a tree standing on sacred ground,' means literally, 'a memorial-tree.'

7. Govinda points out that couches and seats and the like, on which Kandâlas and outcasts have lain or sat down, must be purified.

8. 'That must be referred to grain on a threshing-floor, and so forth, which has been produced by men whose food must not be eaten, and again is considered to be common to all. In this case, too, what has been received from outcasts and Kandâlas, that is defiled. Milk which has been received just at milking-time may be drunk out of a vessel that stands in the cowpen.'—Govinda. As regards the grain produced by low-caste people, the rule probably refers to cases where the land of an Agrahâra or other village is cultivated by men of the lowest castes. The author means to say that in such cases a Brâhmana may take his share from the threshing-floor, where the whole produce of the village-land is stored, without hesitation.

9. Vasishtha XIV, 24; Manu V, 127.

10. Vasishtha III, 35-36.

cows slake their thirst is a means of purification, provided it is not strongly mixed with unclean (substances), nor has a (bad) smell, nor is discoloured, nor has a (bad) taste.

11. But land becomes pure, according to the degree of the defilement, by sweeping the (defiled) spot, by sprinkling it with water, by smearing it with cowdung, by scattering (pure earth) on it, or by scraping it.

12. Now they quote also (the following verse) :

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKĀ 10.

1. 'A drop of water which is allowed to fall (on the ground) purifies a bull's hide of land, whether (the land) has been (previously) swept or not, provided no impure substance is visible on it.'

2. Food which is cooked out of sight must be illuminated (with fire) and be sprinkled with water,

3. Likewise eatables bought in the market.

4. For the Veda (declares), 'For the gods who are (easily) disgusted and desirous of purity do not

11. Vasishṭha III, 56.

10. 1. Regarding the term 'a bull's hide' of land, see Vishṇu V, 181-183, XCII, 4.

2. Āpastamba II, 2, 3, 9. 'Out of sight,' i. e. not before the eyes of him who eats it.—Govinda. It would, however, seem that this rule refers to food prepared by Sūdras, without the supervisions of Āryans. For Āpastamba's Sūtra, which contains the same word, paroksham, 'out of sight,' certainly has reference to that case only, and there is no reason why food prepared by Brahman cooks should be purified before it is eaten.

3. Āpastamba I, 5, 17, 19. The eatables here intended are, according to Govinda, Lāḍus and other sweet-meats which are frequently bought ready made.

enjoy the offerings made by a man destitute of faith.'

5. After reflecting (for a long time on the respective value of) the (food) of a pure man destitute of faith and of an impure person who has faith, the gods declared both to be equal. But the Lord of created beings said to them, 'That is not equal, it is unequal. The food of a man destitute of faith is worthless, that which is purified by faith is preferable.'

6. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Want of faith is the greatest sin; for faith is the highest austerity. Therefore the gods do not eat offerings given without faith.'

7. 'A foolish man does not reach heaven, though he may offer (sacrifices) or give (gifts).'

8. 'He is called a foolish man whose conduct is blemished by doubts, and who, clinging to his own fancies, transgresses (the rules of) the Sâstras, because he opposes the fulfilment of the sacred law.'

9. But pot-herbs, flowers, fruit, roots, and annual plants (must be) sprinkled (with water).

10. Having placed dry grass, wood of trees unfit for sacrifices or a clod of earth (on the ground), let him void faeces or urine, turning his face during the day towards the north and at night towards the south and wrapping up his head.

8. Dharmatantra, translated 'the fulfilment of the sacred law,' is explained in the commentary by dharmasya tantram anushṭhānam, by 'the performance of the sacred duties.' It may also mean 'the doctrine of or the treatises on the sacred law.' The Sâstras are the Vedas and the whole body of the sacred literature.

9. Vishṇu XXIII, 15.

10. Vasishṭha VI, 10.

11. (After voiding) urine he shall clean (the organ once) with earth and water,
12. The hand three times.
13. In like manner (he shall clean himself with earth and water after voiding) faeces.
14. The number (of the applications of both is) thrice three for both feet and the hand.
15. After an effusion of semen (he shall purify himself) in the same manner as after voiding urine.
16. He shall wash himself, after he has untied or put on the cloth round his loins,
17. Or he may touch moist grass, cowdung, or earth.
18. While he is engaged in (the performance of) religious rites, he shall avoid to touch (the part of his body) below the navel.
19. The Veda (declares), 'A man's (body) is pure above the navel, it is impure below the navel.'
20. Sûdras living in the service of Âryans shall trim (their hair and nails) every month; their mode

11-12. Vasishṭha VI, 14, 18. According to Govinda one application of water suffices for the left hand and two for both together.

13-14. Vasishṭha VI, 18. Govinda reads in Sûtra 14, against the authority of all the MSS., pâyoḥ, 'for the anus,' instead of pâdayoḥ, 'for both feet.'

15. Âpastamba I, 5, 15, 23.

16. Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 14.

17. Âpastamba I, 5, 16, 15.

18. Vishṇu XXIII, 51.

19. Taittirîya Samhitâ VI, 1, 3, 4.

20. Âpastamba II, 1, 2, 4-5. The above translation follows Govinda's explanation. But âryâdhishṭhitâḥ, 'living in the service of Âryans,' may also mean 'superintended by Âryans,' and the rule be taken to refer to the special case of Sûdra cooks, as in the parallel passage of Âpastamba.

of sipping water (shall be) the same as that of Āryans.

21. A Vaisya may live by usury.

22. But (a sum of) twenty-five (kârshâpanas shall bear an interest) of five mâshas (per mensem).

23. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'He who, acquiring property cheap, employs (it so that it yields) a higher price, is called a usurer, and blamed in all (treatises on) the sacred law.' '(Brahman) weighed in the scales the crime of killing a learned Brâhmana against (the crime of) usury; the slayer of the Brâhmana remained at the top, the usurer sank downwards.'

24. 'Let him treat Brâhmanas who tend cattle, those who live by trade, (and) those who are artisans, actors (and bards), servants or usurers, like Sûdras.'

25. But men of the first two castes may, at their pleasure, lend (money at interest) to one who neglects his sacred duties, to a miser, to an atheist, or to a very wicked man.

26. Through the neglect of sacrifices, of (lawful) marriages, of the study of the Veda, and of (learned) Brâhmanas, (noble) families (even) are degraded.

27. The offence of neglecting a Brâhmana cannot be committed against a fool who is unacquainted

21. Vasishṭha II, 19.

22. Vasishṭha II, 51.

23. Vasishṭha II, 41-42.

24. Vasishṭha III, 3.

25. Vasishṭha II, 43. M. reads na dadyâtâm, 'shall not lend.' According to Govinda, 'a very wicked man' is equivalent to 'a Sûdra.'

26. Manu III, 63. Govinda says that this Sûtra is introduced in connexion with the expression, 'one who neglects his sacred duties,' which occurs in Sûtra 25.

27. Vasishṭha III, 9 note, 10. This Sûtra is added in explanation of the term 'the offence of neglecting a Brâhmana.'

with the Veda. For (in offering sacrifices) one does not pass by a brilliant fire and throw the oblations into ashes.

28. Families which are deficient in (the knowledge of) the Veda, are degraded by (keeping) cows, horses and vehicles, by agriculture and by serving the king.

29. But even poor families which are rich in (the knowledge of) the Veda obtain rank among the (noble) families and gain great fame.

30. The (study of) the Veda impedes (the pursuit of) agriculture, (the pursuit of) agriculture impedes (the study of) the Veda. He who is able (to do it), may attend to both; but he who is unable (to attend to both), shall give up agriculture.

31. A fat, bellowing, raging humped bull, who does not restrain himself, who hurts living creatures and speaks according to his pleasure, forsooth, does not reach the (abode of) the gods; (but) those who are small like atoms, (being) emaciated (by austerities and fasts), go thither.

32. If, erring, in his youth he commits at any time good or evil acts of any kind, (they will all remain without result). (For) if in his later age he lives righteously, he will obtain (the reward of) that (virtuous conduct) alone, not (the punishments of his former) crimes.

33. Let him always be sorrowing in his heart, when he thinks of his sins, (let him) practise austerities and be careful; thus he will be freed from sin.

34. 'Where drops of water touch the feet of a

28-29. Manu III, 64, 66.

34. Vasishṭha III, 42.

man who offers water for sipping to others, no defilement is caused by them. They are equally (pure) as (water) collected on the ground.'

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKĀ 11.

1. Referring to deaths and births, they declare that the impurity of Sapindas lasts ten days; excepting officiating priests, men who have performed the initiatory ceremony of a Soma-sacrifice, and students of the Veda.

2. But amongst Sapindas Sapinda-relationship (extends) to the seventh person.

3. (If children die) before the completion of the seventh month or before teething, (the relatives) shall bathe.

4. In (the case of a child) that dies before the completion of its third year or before teething, offerings of funeral cakes and water are not prescribed, and one should not burn its (body);

5. Nor when unmarried maidens die.

6. Some do it in the case of married daughters.

7. That (is done) in order to gain the good-will

11. 1. Vasishṭha IV, 16. Officiating priests, Soma-sacrificers, and students do not become impure by deaths or births occurring among their relatives; see Vasishṭha XIX, 48; Gautama XIV, 1.

2. Vasishṭha IV, 17. For the specification of the extent of the Sapinda-relationship, see below, Sūtra 9.

3. Vishṇu XXII, 27.

4. Vishṇu XXII, 28; Gautama XIV, 34, 43.

6. Gautama XIV, 36. 'That refers to the Sapindas on the father's side.'—Govinda.

7. Manu IX, 18.

of the people. Women are considered to have no business with the sacred texts.

8. 'The relatives of unmarried women become pure after three days. But the uterine brothers become pure by (following) the rule mentioned before.'

9. Moreover, the great-grandfather, the grandfather, the father, oneself, the uterine brothers, the son by a wife of equal caste, the grandson, (and) the great-grandson—these they call Sapindas, but not the (great-grandson's) son;—and amongst these a son and a son's son (together with their father are) sharers of an undivided oblation.

10. The sharers of divided oblations they call Sakulyas.

8. This verse, which occurs in all my MSS. of the text, is left out in the two copies of Govinda's commentary.

9. Colebrooke, Dâyabhâga XI, 1, 37; V. Digest CCCXCVII. The text on which Colebrooke's two versions are based differs from that of my MSS. and of Govinda by reading avibhaktadâyâdân instead of teshâm ka putrapautram [v. l. °pautrakam] avibhaktadâyam. The meaning of the latter clause, which is placed parenthetically before sapindân âkashate, '(these) they call Sapindas,' seems to be that a father with his son and grandson share the cakes offered at one funeral sacrifice by the fourth descendant. Its object is to show that the group called Sapindas consists of two such subdivisions, between whom the middlemost forms the connecting link. For the middlemost, the svayam, 'oneself,' of the text, first offers the cakes to his three ancestors and later receives the cakes, together with his first two descendants, from his great-grandson. Govinda gives no help. He merely remarks that the Sûtra contains a paribhâshâ or technical rule of interpretation, and that the words api ka, 'moreover,' indicate that it is an expansion of Sûtra 2.

10. Colebrooke, loc. cit. According to Gîmûtavâhana the Sakulyas are the three ascendants beyond the great-grandfather and the three descendants beyond the great-grandson. Others, among

11. If no other (relations) are living, the property (of a deceased male) descends to them (the Sapindas).

12. On failure of Sapindas, the Sakulyas (inherit).

13. On failure of them, the teacher who (holds the place of a spiritual) father, a pupil, or an officiating priest shall take it,

14. On failure of them, the king. Let him give that property to persons well-versed in the three Vedas.

15. But the king should never take for himself the property of a Brâhmana.

16. Now they quote also (the following verse):
'The property of a Brâhmana destroys (him who whom Govinda takes his place, explain the word sakulya to mean 'members of one family' in general. Govinda says, sambandha-vishagñâne sati sapindâ ukyante sambandhamâtragñâne sakulyâh || Atas ka sapindâ api sakulyâh || 'If a particular relationship is known, they are called Sapindas; and if (the fact) only is known that relationship exists, Sakulyas. Hence the Sapindas are also Sakulyas.'

11. Colebrooke, loc. cit. Both the Dâyabhâga and the Digest read satsvangageshu, 'when there is male issue,' and the Vîramitrodaya, fol. 218, p. 2, l. 7, agrees with them. The MSS. read all satsv anyeshu, which may, however, be taken with Govinda for asatsv anyeshu, because the preceding word ends in a. Govinda explains anyeshu, 'others,' by aurasâdishu, 'legitimate sons of the body, and so forth.'

12. Colebrooke, Dâyabhâga, loc. cit. The digest omits this Sûtra.

13. Colebrooke, loc. cit. Gîmûtavâhana wrongly reads pitâ kâkâryah, 'the father and the teacher.' Govinda gives the explanation adopted above. Regarding the spiritual fatherhood of the teacher, see e. g. Vasishtha II, 4.

14. Colebrooke, loc. cit. Govinda reads satsvam, 'the property of a holy man,' instead of tatsvam, 'that property.'

15. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCCXLIV; Vasishtha XVII, 86.

takes it), together with sons and grandsons; poison kills one man only. (Therefore) they do not declare poison to be (the worst) poison. The property of a Brāhmaṇa is called (the worst) poison.'

17. If a birth and a death occur together, one and the same period of ten (days and) nights (shall serve for both).

18. Now if (other deaths or births) happen before the completion of the ten (days and) nights (of impurity), the first period of ten (days and) nights (shall suffice, provided the new cause of impurity occurs) before the end of the ninth day.

19. On a birth, indeed, the parents (alone) become impure during ten days.

20. Some (declare that) the mother (alone becomes impure), because (people) avoid (lying-in women alone).

21. Others (say that) the father (alone becomes impure) because the semen is the chief cause (of the generation).

22. For sons who were born without mothers, are mentioned in the revealed texts.

23. But (the correct opinion is that) both the parents (become impure) because they are equally connected (with the event).

18. Vasishṭha IV, 23-25. Govinda points out that in case the second birth or death happens after the completion of the ninth day, the rule given (Gautama XIV, 7) applies.

19. Vasishṭha IV, 20-21.

20. Vasishṭha IV, 21-22. Tatpariharaṇāt, literally, 'because she is avoided, i.e. because people avoid newly-confined women (not their husbands).—Govinda.

21. E.g. Agastya and Vasishṭha. See Rig-veda VII, 33, 11, and Sâyana's commentary thereon.

24. But when a death (has happened, the relatives of the deceased), allowing the youngest to begin, shall pass their sacrificial threads over the right shoulder and under the left arm, descend into the water at a bathing-place, submerge (their bodies), emerge (out of the water), ascend the bank, sip water, pour out libations for the (deceased, repeating the last four acts) severally three times thereafter, ascend the bank, sip water, touch a coal, water or the like at the door of their house, and sit during ten days on mats, eating food that does not contain pungent condiments or salt.

25. (Let him perform) a funeral sacrifice on the eleventh or the twelfth (day).

26. In (performing) the remaining rites (one should) conform to (the customs of) the people.

27. In case of a (death) let him also keep (a period of impurity) for (persons who are) not (his) Sapindas, according to the degree of nearness, three (days and) nights, a day and a night, one day and so forth,

24. Vasishtha IV, 9-15. When the libations of water are poured out, the name of the deceased must be pronounced. Govinda correctly states that iti, 'or the like,' which stands after 'a coal, water,' is intended to include 'cowdung, and yellow mustard seed,' which are mentioned by Yâgñavalkya III, 13. Regarding the clause sakṛttriṣ, '(repeating these last four acts) severally three times,' see Âpastamba II, 6, 15, 10.

25. Vishnu XXI, 2 seq., and especially 19.

26. Govinda, in explanation of this Sûtra, refers to the last words of Âpastamba II, 6, 15, 10, where it is said that relatives 'shall perform those rites for the dead which the women declare to be necessary,' and to Âpastamba II, 11, 29, 15.

27. Gautama XIV, 20. Govinda is of opinion that the duration of the impurity shall depend on the good qualities, learning, &c. of the deceased.

28. For a teacher, a sub-teacher (upādhyāya), and their sons, three (days and) nights,

29. Likewise for officiating priests,

30. Let him keep on account of a pupil, for one who has the same spiritual guide, for a fellow-student (sābrahmaṇin) three (days and) nights, one day and a night, one day and so forth (as periods of impurity).

31. On a miscarriage females (remain impure) as many (days and) nights as months (elapsed after conception).

32. If he unintentionally touches the corpse of a stranger, he becomes at once pure after bathing dressed in his clothes.

33. (If he does it) intentionally, (he will remain impure) during three (days and) nights.

34. And (the same rules apply if he touches a woman) during her courses.

35. A son who is born from (intercourse with a temporarily unclean woman) becomes an Abhisasta. Thereby the penances (to be performed) by him have been explained.

28. Vishṇu XXII, 42, 44. Govinda asserts that the impurity on account of an Upādhyāya lasts one night, together with the preceding and following days, and on account of a teacher's or Upādhyāya's sons one day only. It looks as if he had read the words pakṣiṇyekāham in his text.

29. Govinda asserts that ka, 'likewise,' indicates that the rule applies also on the death of persons for whom one sacrifices.

30. Vishṇu XXII, 44. Govinda explains satīrthya to mean 'one who has the same guru or spiritual guide,' while according to others it means 'one who studies under the same sub-teacher' (upādhyāya). See also the Kāśikā on Pāṇini IV, 4, 117, and note.

31. Vishṇu XXII, 25.

32-33. Gautama XIV, 27.

34. Vishṇu XXII, 69.

36. On touching one who sells the Veda, a sacrificial post, an outcast, a funeral pile, a dog, or a Kandâla he shall bathe.

37. Now if a worm is produced in an open wound that is filled with pus and sanies, how shall, in that case, a penance be performed?

38. He who is bitten by a worm will become pure on bathing (daily) during three days and drinking (a mixture of) cow's urine, cowdung, milk, sour milk, butter, and water boiled with Kusa grass.

39. He who has been touched by a dog shall bathe dressed in his clothes;

40. Or he becomes pure by washing that spot (where he has been touched), by touching it with fire, by (afterwards) again washing it and his feet, and by sipping water.

41. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'But a Brâhmana who has been bitten by a dog, is purified if he goes to a river that flows into the ocean, (bathes there and) suppresses his breath one hundred times and (afterwards) eats clarified butter. He will (also) become pure at once on bathing (in water brought) in golden or silver (vessels), or in a cow's horn, or in new (earthen pots).'

36. This verse, which is another version of I, 5, 9, 5, is left out in the Dekhan and Gugarât MSS.; I consider its genuineness very doubtful.

37. Vasishtha XVIII, 16.

39-40. Âpastamba I, 5, 15, 16-17. Govinda, too, states that the second mode of purification is to be adopted, if the dog touches any part of the body below the navel.

41. Vasishtha XXIII, 31.

PRAŚNA I, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKĀ 12.

1. Tame animals must not be eaten,
2. Nor carnivorous and (tame) birds,
3. Nor (tame) cocks and pigs;
4. Goats and sheep (are) excepted (from the above prohibition).

5. Five five-toed animals may be eaten, (viz.) the porcupine, the iguana, the hare, the hedgehog, the tortoise and the rhinoceros, excepting the rhinoceros,

6. Likewise five animals with cloven hoofs, (viz.) the white-footed antelope (Nīl-gāi), the (common ravine) deer, the spotted deer, the buffalo, the (wild) boar and the black antelope, excepting the black antelope,

7. (Likewise) five (kinds of) birds that feed scratching with their feet, (viz.) the partridge, the blue rock-pigeon, the francoline partridge, the (crane called) Vārdhrāṇasa, the peacock and the Vārāṇa, excepting the Vārāṇa,

12. 1. Vasishṭha XIV, 40.

2. Vasishṭha XIV, 48. Govinda says that the particle ka, 'and,' is used in order to indicate that the word 'tame' must be understood.

3. Āpastamba I, 5, 17, 29, 32.

5. Vasishṭha XIV, 39. Another explanation of the word svāvīṭ, 'the porcupine' (see also Gautama XVII, 27), is given in the commentary, which says that it is a wild animal resembling a dog, and belonging to the boar species. Govinda points out that there is a dispute among the learned regarding the rhinoceros (Vasishṭha XV, 47), and that the peculiar wording of the Sūtra is intended to indicate that.

6. The permissibility of the last-named animal is again doubtful.

7. Gautama XVII, 35. The case of the last-mentioned bird, the Vārāṇa, is again doubtful. From the first rock-edict of Asoka

8. (And the following) fishes, (viz.) the Silurus Pelorius (Sahasradamshtrin), the Kilikima, the Varmi, the Bṛihakkhīras, the Masakari(?), the Cyprinus Rohita, and the Rāgi.

9. The milk of a (female animal) whose offspring is not ten days old, and of one that gives milk while big with a young one, must not be drunk.

10. Nor that of a (cow) that has no calf or that (suckles) a strange calf.

11. (The milk) of sheep, camels, and one-hoofed animals must not be drunk.

12. If (he has) drunk (milk) which ought not to be drunk, excepting cow's milk, (he must perform) a Krikkhira (penance).

13. But if (he has drunk) cow's milk (that is unfit for use, he shall) fast during three (days and) nights.

14. Stale (food must not be eaten or drunk) excepting pot-herbs, broths, meat, clarified butter, cooked grain, molasses, sour milk, and barley-meal,

15. Nor (substances) which have turned sour, nor molasses which have come into that state.

16. After performing the ceremony preparatory it appears that peacocks, now considered inviolable, were actually eaten in the third century A. D.

8. Vasishṭha XIV, 41-42. The names are much corrupted in the MSS., and for Masakari, which I do not find in the dictionaries, Samasakari or Samasakari is also read. The Bṛihakkhīras is probably the Indian salmon, the Māhsir.

9-10. Vasishṭha XIV, 34-35; Gautama XVII, 22. The meaning of sandhini, 'a female animal that gives milk while big with young,' is uncertain. See also Vishṇu LI, 40; Āpastamba I, 5, 17, 23.

11. Gautama XVII, 24.

12. Vishṇu LI, 38-41.

14. Gautama XVII, 16.

15. Vasishṭha XIV, 37-38.

16. Vasishṭha XIII, 1-5. Govinda states that this Sūtra has been introduced here, because the purity of one's food ensures to the beginning of the Veda-study (upâkarman) on the (full moon of the month) of Srâvana or of Âshâdha, they shall close the term on the full moon of Taisha or Mâgha.

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 6, KANDIKĀ 13.

1. The gods enjoy a pure sacrifice (only);
2. For the gods are desirous of purity and (themselves) pure.
3. The following (Rik) declares that, 'To you, O Maruts, the pure ones, pure viands; to you, the pure ones, I offer a pure sacrifice. They who love the pious rites, who are of pure origin, (themselves) pure and purifiers (of others), came duly to the truthful (worshipper).'
4. (He will be) pure (if there is) no blemish on his clothes, therefore let him perform all (acts) that are connected with sacrificing, (dressed) in unblemished clothes.
5. The sacrificer and his wife as well as the officiating priests shall put on dresses which have been washed, and dried by the wind, and which are not in a bad condition.

purity of one's soul, and purity of soul gives strength of memory, and thereby makes one fit to study the Veda.

13. 1-2. See also above, I, 5, 10, 4. This Adhyâya and the next ought to have been given in the Srauta Sûtra.

3. Rig-veda VII, 56, 12; Taittiriya-brâhmaṇa II, 8, 5, 5. The meaning of the last portion of the verse is somewhat doubtful. Sâyana gives two different explanations and Govinda a third.

4. Govinda points out that the dresses of the sacrificer and of his priests must be white, because farther on (Sûtras 9-10) other colours are specially prescribed.

5. Govinda thinks that the word kā, 'as well as,' is intended to include the lookers-on.

6. (It shall be) thus from the (beginning of the) Prakrama,

7. And thus at the long Soma-sacrifices and the Sattras ;

8. And (on other occasions other dresses must be used) in accordance with the injunction (of the Veda),

9. Thus at (all) Ishṭis, animal sacrifices, and Soma-sacrifices which may be used as spells (against enemies), the priests shall perform (the sacred rites), wearing red turbans and red dresses ; (when reciting the hymn seen by) Vṛishākapi (he shall) wear a dress and a mantle of many colours and so forth.

10. At the Agnyâdhâna (sacrifice) the clothes (shall be made) of flax ; on failure of such, (dresses) made of cotton or of wool are used.

11. Clothes defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen and the like (shall be) cleaned with earth, water and the like.

12. (Dresses) made of Tripa-bark and vṛikala (shall be treated) like cotton-cloth,

6. Regarding the ceremony called Prakrama, literally 'stepping forward from the Gârhapatya fire,' see Sâyana on Taitt. Br. I, 1, 4, 1. It opens the Agnyâdhâna rite.

9. Govinda states that the words iti ka, 'and so forth,' are intended to include other incantations. The Vṛishākapi hymn is found Rig-veda X, 86.

11. Govinda states that the word iti, 'and the like,' is intended to include cowdung, cow's urine, and other substances used for purification.

12. Govinda states that there is a tree called Tripa, the bark of which is used for dresses. Vṛikala, which has been left untranslated, is explained by sakama, a word which is not found in our dictionaries.

13. Deer-skins like (dresses) made of bark.
14. (Let him) not (use) a mantle which has been wrapped (round the loins, or) on which he has been lying (in his bed), without washing it.
15. Let him not employ for the gods anything used by men without beating it on a stone.
16. If solid earth is defiled, (it must be) smeared with cowdung.
17. Loose (earth must be cleansed by) ploughing,
18. Moist (earth) by bringing pure (earth) and covering (it with that).
19. Land is purified in four (ways), by being trod on by cows, by digging, by lighting a fire on it, by rain falling on it,
20. Fifthly by smearing it with cowdung, and sixthly through (the lapse of) time.
21. Grass placed on unconsecrated ground (must be) washed.
22. (Grass) defiled out of one's sight, (shall be) sprinkled (with water).
23. Small pieces of sacred fuel (shall be purified) in the same manner.
24. Large pieces of wood (must be) washed and dried.

13. Govinda says that, as the treatment of valkala, 'bark-dresses,' has not been prescribed, the meaning of the Sûtra can only be, that bark-dresses and black-buck skins are to be treated alike, i. e. that they are to be cleaned with Bel-nut and rice; see above.

15. Govinda explains apalpūlitam by 'without beating it with the hand on a stone.' He mentions as an instance the skin which is used in preparing the Soma.

16. According to Govinda, solid earth is such on which the fire-altars are built.

21. E. g. grass intended for the barhis, if it has been placed on a spot which has not been sprinkled with water.

22. 'Defiled out of one's sight,' i. e. brought by Sûdras.

25. But a great quantity (of wood shall be) sprinkled (with water).

26. Wooden vessels which have been touched by impure men (shall be) scraped ;

27. (And) those which are defiled by stains of remnants (shall be) planed.

28. (Wooden vessels) defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen, and the like (very impure substances shall be) thrown away.

29. These (rules must be followed) except in case a (special) injunction (is given);

30. Thus, for instance, (purification by) washing with Kusa grass and water (is prescribed) on all the following (occasions, viz.) at the Agnihotra, the Gharma~~kk~~hishta, the Dadhigharma, the Kundapâyinâm Ayana, the Utsarginâm Ayana, the Dâkshâyana sacrifice, the Ardhodaya, the Katushakra, and the Brahmaudanas,

31. (Again) at all Soma-sacrifices (the cups must be) cleaned with water only on (the heap of earth called) the Mârgâlîya ;

32. If these same (cups are defiled) by urine, ordure,

27. Govinda says that this rule is optional.

28. Govinda adds that fuel, Kusa grass, and the like, which have been defiled in this manner, must also be thrown away.

30. Regarding the Dadhigharma, a homa, see Vaitâna Sûtra 21, 18 ; regarding the Kundapâyinâm Ayana, Âsvalâyana Srauta Sûtra XII, 4 ; and regarding the Dâkshâyana sacrifice, a variety of the new and full-moon offering, Âsvalâyana II, 14. The Ardhodaya is possibly the vrata of that name mentioned in the Purânas. According to Govinda, the Katushakra, which is otherwise known as a Tântic rite, is a sacrifice, ish~~ak~~âkosh~~ta~~ (?) madhyavasanto yagante tathetaradaya~~h~~ (?). Regarding the Brahmaudana, see Âsvalâyana Srauta Sûtra I, 4.

32. Govinda says that the injunction to throw away defiled blood, semen, and the like (they must be) thrown away.

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 6, KANDIKĀ 14.

1. Earthen vessels that have been touched by impure persons (must be) exposed to (the flame of) a fire of Kusa grass.

2. Those which have been defiled by stains of remnants (of food must be) exposed to another burning.

3. Those which have been defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen, and the like (must be) thrown away.

4. (Vessels) made of metal (must be) washed, after having been scrubbed as (directed) above.

5. The materials (to be used) for scrubbing (are) cowdung, earth, ashes, and so forth.

6. Those which have been defiled by urine, ordure, blood, semen, and the like (must be) recast,

7. Or (they must) be kept during seven (days and) nights completely immersed in cow's urine,

8. Or in a great river for as long (a period).

9. (Vessels) made of stone or of fruits, (i. e.) gourds, Bel-fruit, and Vinā/as, (shall be) brushed with (a brush of) cow's hair.

vessels has been repeated, in order to prevent a misconception. For as Soma is said to be a great means of purification, it might be supposed that it was powerful enough to prevent the defilement of vessels into which it is poured at a sacrifice. But compare the next Sūtras.

14. 8. A great river, i. e. one which directly flows into the ocean.—Govinda.

9. A Vinā/a, i. e. (a vessel) made of bamboo or Vidagdhanā/a; it is called a 'long vessel' (dirghabhāganam), and is used for carrying the Prāṇita water and the like purposes.—Govinda. The vessel

10. (Sacrificial implements made of) plaited Na/a-reeds, bamboo, or Sara-reeds (shall be) washed with cowdung, water, and the like.

11. If unhusked rice has been defiled, (it must be) washed (and afterwards be) dried.

12. But a great quantity (of unhusked rice must be) sprinkled.

13. Husked rice (which has been defiled must be) thrown away.

14. The same (rule applies) to cooked sacrificial viands.

15. But if a great quantity has been defiled by (the touch of) dogs, crows, and the like (unclean beings), one must throw away that portion (as) food for men, and sprinkle (the rest with water), reciting the Anuvāka, 'Pavamānaḥ suvarganaḥ.'

16. Hydromel and preparations of milk (are) purified by pouring them from one vessel into another.

intended is no doubt the flask made of a bamboo which is cut below the joint, and is commonly used as a bottle for oil. Govinda adds that this mode of purification is to be adopted in case the vessels have been touched by impure persons.

10. Na/a-reeds, i.e. Amphidonax Karka; Sara, i.e. Saccharum Sara. Govinda says that the rule applies to cases where such implements have been defiled by remnants of food (ukḥishṭa-lepa).

11. 'Defiled, i.e. touched by a Kandāla.' (The rule) refers to a quantity less than a Drona (66 or 132 lbs.).—Govinda.

13. 'If it has been defiled by urine and the like and the quantity is small;' this must be understood, because he will declare (below, Sūtra 15) that if there is a great quantity (the defiled) portion only shall be thrown away.—Govinda.

14. This, too, refers to small quantities only.

15. The Anuvāka referred to is Taittirīya-brāhmaṇa I, 4, 8.

16. 'Hydromel, i.e. sour milk, honey, clarified butter, water, and

17. In like manner let him pour oil and clarified butter which have been touched by an impure (person) into water, and (afterwards) use them.

18. If (any) impure (substance) is thrown (into the sacrificial fire) let him place (the two Araṇis one) on (the other), produce fire by friction, (and offer) a Pavamāneshṭi.

19. If (the rules regarding) purity, the proper place, the mantras, the series of actions, the object, the materials, (their) consecration, and the proper time are conflicting, each earlier-named (point) is more important (than the following ones).

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 7, KANDIKĀ 15.

1. The sacred fires (shall be) approached from the north,

2. (And be) left in the same manner.

3. The contrary (proceeding should be adopted at sacrifices offered) to the manes.

grain; a preparation of milk, i. e. curd of two-milk whey (āmikshā), if these are blemished by the fault of men, and that (blemish must have been caused by) the touch of an impure (person, ukṣhishta) only.'—Govinda.

17. 'And that must be done in such a manner that the oil and the clarified butter are not lost.'—Govinda.

18. 'Any impure substance, i. e. urine, ordure, and the like.'—Govinda.

19. Āvṛt, 'the series of actions,' i. e. the growth (prāṃsubhāva) of the ceremonial (prayoga).—Govinda.

15. 1. Mānava Śrauta Sūtra I, 1, 1, and Kumārila thereon in Professor Goldstücker's lithographed copy and Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra I, 8, 24. See also Professor Haug's map of 'the sacrificial compound,' Aitareya-brāhmaṇa, vol. i.

3. I. e. the entrance and exit are to be made to the south of the fires.

4. Let him wash that which has been touched with (his) foot.

5. Let him touch water, in case he touches his body or the hem (of his garment).

6. Likewise (let him touch water) after cutting, splitting, digging or removing (anything, or offering oblations) to the manes, to the Rākshasas, to Nirṛiti, to Rudra, (and after performing sacrifices) intended as spells (against enemies).

7. Let him not turn round himself a sacrificial implement (the use of) which is accompanied by the recitation of mantras.

8. (For) the sacrificial implements (are) more nearly (connected with the sacrifice),

9. The priests, more remotely.

10. The sacrificer and his wife are even nearer than the priests.

11. After the sacrificial implements (follows) the clarified butter, after the clarified butter the sacrificial viands, after the sacrificial viands the animal to be slain, after the animal the Soma, after the Soma the sacred fires.

5. Govinda explains siḥ, 'the hem of the garment,' by the garment wrapped round the loins (parihitam vāsaḥ).

7. The meaning is that the priest must hold the sacrificial implements, such as the sruḥ and sruva ladles, between himself and the fires, and not place himself between them and the fires (âtmano bahir na kûryât agner antaraḥ svayam na bhaved iti yâvat).

8. 'He gives the reason for that (rule), "For the sacrificial implements (are) nearer" than the priests, that must be understood.'—Govinda.

10. 'For they obtain the reward of the sacrifice. The instances (referring) to those two are the Vaisarganas and the Dâkshinas.'—Govinda.

11. Kâtyâyana Srauta Sûtra I, 8, 31. 'If the space on the 12. If there is work for them, the priests shall not turn away from the sacred fires.

13. If he faces the east, let him turn towards his right shoulder,

14. If he faces the west, towards the left.

15. The entrance to the sacrificial (enclosure lies) between the Kâtvâla and the Utkara,

16. (When one comes) from the Kâtvâla, (it lies between) the Âhavanīya fire and the Utkara.

17. The officiating (priests), the sacrificer, and his wife shall enter by that (road),

18. As long as the sacrificial rite is not completed.

19. When it has been finished (they shall) pass to and fro on the side where there is no Utkara (i.e. on the western side of the enclosure).

Uttaravedi and the rest is confined, the Soma is made ready immediately after the fire, after that the meat and so forth, after that the grain for the sacrificial cakes, then the clarified butter, and after that the spoons called sruva, sruk, and so forth.'—Govinda.

12. 'It is indicated hereby that, if there is work (to be done) there, they shall not turn away from the sacred fires except in cases of absolute necessity.'—Govinda.

13. 'This rule (refers to the case) when he walks with the sacred fires. It must be understood that he shall not turn his back on the fires.'—Govinda.

14. 'This rule (is to be interpreted) in the same manner (as the preceding one). Or it is prescribed by these two Sûtras that the men engaged (in the sacrifice) shall go out, turning their right hand towards (the fires).'—Govinda.

15. Kâtyâyana Srauta Sûtra V, 1, 11.

16. I read with the MSS. of the text 'kâtvâlâd âhavanīyotkarau.' The two copies of the commentary give kâtvâlâd âhavanīyotkarau. Govinda says that the words antarena tīrtham must be understood. For the position of the Kâtvâla and the Utkara, see Professor Haug's map, where the road of the priests is also marked, though somewhat differently.

20. Let him not put on the fire logs or Samidhs which have not been sprinkled (with water),

21. The Brahman (priest) and the sacrificer shall enter in front of the Âhavanîya fire.

22. Some (declare that they shall enter) behind the Âhavanîya fire.

23. The seat of the Brahman (priest is situated) to the south of the Âhavanîya fire, (that) of the sacrificer to the west of him.

24. (The seat) of the Hotri (priest is situated) to the north of the northern Sroni (of the Vedi),

25. (That) of the Âgnîdhra priest near the Utkara,

26. (That) of the (sacrificer's) wife behind the Gârhapatya fire.

27. He scatters Darbha grass on these (seats) as often as (they are used).

28. A vessel filled with water, for the purpose of sipping, shall be appropriated to (the use of) each (person).

29. He who has been initiated (to the performance of a sacrifice shall) keep the (following) vows :

30. Let him not proclaim the guilt of other men ; let him not become angry ; let him not weep ; let him not look at urine and ordure.

31. If he has looked at any unclean (substance), he mutters (the verse), ' Unrestrained is the internal

23. For the seats of the priests and the other persons named in this and the following rules, see Professor Haug's plan, and Dr. Hillebrandt's Altindische Neu und Vollmondopfer, p. 190.

24. 'The northern Sroni of the Vedi, i. e. the north-western corner of the Vedi.'—Govinda.

31. Taittirîya Samhitâ III, 1, 1, 2, where the rule also is given. M. alone adds another Sûtra, the text of which is corrupt. But it ended with the mantra undatîr balam dhatta, &c. Taitt. S. ibid. 3. .

organ, wretched (my) eye-sight; the sun is the chief of the (heavenly) lights; O Dīkshā, do not forsake me!’

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 8, KANDIKĀ 16.

1. There are four castes (varṇa, viz.) Brāhmanas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sūdras.
2. (Males) belonging to them (may take) wives according to the order of the castes, (viz.) a Brāhmaṇa four,
3. A Kshatriya three,
4. A Vaisya two,
5. A Sūdra one.
6. Sons begotten on (wives) of equal or of the next lower castes (are called) Savarnas (of equal caste).
7. (Those born) of (wives) of the second or third lower castes (become) Ambashthas, Ugras, and Nishādas.
8. Of females wedded in the inverse order of the castes (are born) Āyogavas, Māgadhas, Vainas, Kshattris, Pulkasas, Kukkutakas, Vaidehakas, and Kāṇḍālas.
9. An Ambashtha (begets) on a female of the first (caste) a Svapāka,
10. An Ugra on a female of the second (caste) a Vaina,
11. A Nishāda on a female of the third (caste) a Pulkasa.

16. 1. Vasishtha II, 1.

2-5. Vasishtha I, 24-25.

6. Gautama IV, 16.

7. Vasishtha XVIII, 8.

8-12. Vasishtha XVIII, 1-6; Gautama IV, 17-21. In the I. O. copy of the commentary there is a break, which extends from Sūtra 8 to the beginning of Adhyāya 10.

12. In the contrary case a Kukkuṭaka (is produced).

13.

14.

15.

16. Now they quote also (the following verse):
'But those sons whom an uninitiated man begets, the wise call Vrātyas, who are excluded from the Sāvitrī; (that is a rule which refers) in an equal manner to the three (highest) castes.'

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 9, KANDIKĀ 17.

1. The Rathakāra (carpenter), the Ambashṭha, the Sūta (charioteer), the Ugra, the Māgadha, the Āyogava, the Vaina, the Kshattrī, the Pulkasa, the Kukkuṭa, the Vaidehaka, the Kāṇḍāla, and so forth,

2. Among these, sons of equal caste (spring) from women of equal caste.

3. A Brāhmaṇa (begets) on a female of the Kshatriya caste a Brāhmaṇa, on a female of the Vaisya caste an Ambashṭha, on a female of the Sūdra caste a Nishāda,

4. (According to) some a Pārasava.

13-15. The text of the three Sūtras is exceedingly corrupt, and the Telugu copy of the commentary affords no help. It is, however, clear that the passage left out contained something which corresponded to Gautama IV, 22-23, and treated of the possibility of raising persons of a lower caste to a higher one by intermarriages continued for five or seven generations. The reading of K., which perhaps is the best, will show this: 'nishādena nishādyād ā pañ-kāmāggātā bhavanti tam upanayet shashṭham yāgayet saptamo 'vikritāgīsamamgito saptamauñgīsama ity ekeshām samgñā kramena nipatanti.'

16. Manu X, 20.

17. 1-2. Manu X, 26-27.

3-6. See above, I, 8, 16, 6-7.

5. A Kshatriya (begets) on a female of the Vaisya caste a Kshatriya, on a female of the Sûdra caste an Ugra.

6. A Vaisya (begets) on a female of the Sûdra caste a Rathakâra.

7. A Sûdra begets on a female of the Vaisya caste a Mâgadha, on a female of the Kshatriya caste a Kshattri, but on a female of the Brâhmana caste a Kandâla.

8. A Vaisya begets on a female of the Kshatriya caste an Âyogava, on a female of the Brâhmana caste a Sûta.

9. If among these an Ambasht̥ha (male) and an Ugra (female) unite, (their son) will be born in the direct order of the castes (Anuloma).

10. If a Kshattri (male) and a Vaidehaka (female) unite, (their son will be) born against the order of the castes (Pratiloma).

11. An Ugra (begets) on a female of the Kshattri caste a Svapâka,

12. A Vaidehaka on a female of the Ambasht̥ha caste a Vaina,

13. A Nishâda on a female of the Sûdra caste a Pulkasa,

14. A Sûdra on a female of the Nishâda caste a Kukkuṭaka.

15. The wise declare those sprung from an intermixture of the castes to be Vrâtyas.

7-8. See above, I, 8, 16, 8.

9-10. I.e. the offspring of individuals of different Anuloma castes again become Anulomas, and the offspring of individuals of different Pratiloma castes, Pratilomas.

11-12. Manu X, 19.

13-14. See above, I, 8, 16, 11-12.

15. Gautama IV, 25.

PRASNA I, ADHYĀYA 10, KANDIKĀ 18.

1. Let the king protect (his) subjects, receiving as his pay a sixth part (of their incomes or spiritual merit).

2. Brahman, forsooth, placed its majesty in the Brāhmaṇas, together with (the duties and privileges of) studying, teaching, sacrificing for themselves, sacrificing for others, liberality, and accepting (gifts), for the protection of the Vedas ;

3. In the Kshatriyas (it placed) strength, together with (the duties and privileges of) studying, sacrificing, liberality, (using) weapons, and protecting the treasure (and the life of) created beings, for the growth of (good) government ;

4. In the Vaisyas (it placed the power of work), together with (the duties of) studying, sacrificing, liberality, cultivating (the soil), trading, and tending cattle, for the growth of (productive) labour.

5. On the Sūdras (it imposed the duty of) serving the three higher (castes).

6. For (the Veda states), 'they were created from the feet (of Brahman).' X

18. 1. Vasishṭha I, 42-44. Learned Brāhmaṇas do not pay taxes, but the king obtains a sixth part of the spiritual merit which they acquire. Hence Baudhāyana uses the general term, 'a sixth share.'

2. Vasishṭha II, 13-14.

3. Vasishṭha II, 15-17.

4. Vasishṭha II, 18-19. The words 'the power of work' are inserted by Govinda.

5. Vasishṭha II, 20.

6. Rig-veda X, 90, 12 ; Taittiriya Āraṇyaka III, 12, 6.

7. Let (the king) choose a domestic priest (who shall be) foremost in all (transactions).

8. Let him act according to his instructions.

9. Let him not turn back in battle.

10. Let him not strike with barbed or poisoned (weapons).

11. Let him not fight with those who are in fear, intoxicated, insane or out of their minds, (nor with those) who have lost their armour, (nor with) women, infants, aged men, and Brâhmanas,

12. Excepting assassins (âtatâyin).

13. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He who slays an assassin, able to teach (the Veda) and born in a (noble) family, does not (incur) by that (act the guilt of) the murderer of a learned Brâhmaṇa; (in) that (case) fury recoils upon fury.'

14. The duty on goods imported by sea is, after deducting a choice article, ten Panas in the hundred.

15. Let him also lay just (duties) on other (marketable goods) according to their intrinsic value without oppressing (the traders).

7. Vasishṭha XIX, 3-6. Govinda explains sarvatodhuram, 'foremost in all,' by sarvagñam, 'omniscient.'

8. Vasishṭha I, 40-41. The rule, of course, refers primarily to advice in spiritual matters.

9. Gautama X, 16.

10. Manu VII, 90.

11. Gautama X, 18. The meaning is that such persons shall not be slain in battle.

12-13. Vasishṭha III, 18.

14. I take this to mean that the king may take one article which particularly pleases him out of each consignment, and impose on the rest an ad valorem duty of ten per cent. Regarding the tribute in kind to be paid to Indian kings by foreign merchants, see Periplus maris Erythraei, par. 49.

15. Vishṇu III, 29-30. Govinda interprets anupahatya, 'without

16. Let the king guard the property of men belonging to a non-Brâhmanical caste, the owner of which has disappeared, during a year, and afterwards take it (for himself).

17. A Brâhmana, forsooth, shall not suffer corporal punishment for any offence.

18. In case (a Brâhmana) has slain a Brâhmana, has violated his Guru's bed, has stolen the gold (of a Brâhmana), or has drunk (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ, (the king) shall cause to be impressed with a heated iron the mark of a headless trunk, a female part, a jackal, (or) the sign of a tavern on the forehead (of the offender) and banish him from his realm.

19. If a Kshatriya or (a man of any) other (lower caste) has murdered a Brâhmana, death and the confiscation of all his property (shall be his punishment).

20. If those same (persons) slay men of equal or lower castes, (the king) shall fix suitable punishments in accordance with their ability.

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 10, KANDIKÂ 19.

1. For slaying a Kshatriya (the offender) shall oppressing the traders,' by 'without deducting (anuddhrîtya) a choice article.'

16. Vasishṭha XVI, 19-20. As stated above, I, 5, 11, 15, the king must not take the property of a Brâhmana.

17. Vishṇu V, 2. 'Corporal punishment,' i.e. capital punishment, mutilation, &c., except branding.

18. Vishṇu V, 3-7.

19. Âpastamba II, 10, 27, 16.

20. Vasishṭha XIX, 9. 'Those same persons,' i.e. Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, or Sûdras.

19. 1. Âpastamba I, 9, 24, 1. Govinda explains vairaniryâta-give to the king one thousand cows and besides a bull in expiation of his sin,

2. For (slaying) a Vaisya one hundred cows, for (slaying) a Sûdra ten; and a bull (must be) added (in each case).

3. (The punishment for) the murder of a woman—excepting a (Brâhmanî) who had bathed after temporary uncleanness—and for the destruction of a cow have been explained by the (rule regarding the) murder of a Sûdra.

4. If he has slain a milch-cow or a draught-ox, he shall perform a Kândrâyana (lunar penance) after (paying the prescribed fine).

5. The (punishment for the) murder of a (Brâhmanî) who had bathed after temporary uncleanness has been explained by (the rule regarding) the murder of a Kshatriya.

6. For killing a flamingo, a Bhâsa, a peacock, a Brâhmanî duck, a Prakalâka, a crow, an owl, a frog, a musk-rat, a dog, (the large ichneumon called) Babhru, a common ichneumon, and so forth, (the offender shall pay) the same (fine) as (for the murder of) a Sûdra.

7. In order to gain the good opinion of men, a witness shall give evidence in accordance with what he has seen or heard.

nârtham in two ways: 1. in expiation of his sin; 2. in order to remove the enmity of the relatives of the murdered man. He adds all these punishments are really penances (prâyasaittas) to be imposed by the king. Âpastamba has these Sûtras in the section on penances.

2. Âpastamba I, 9, 24, 2-4.

3. Âpastamba I, 9, 24, 5; I, 9, 26, 1.

5. Vasishtha XX, 34, 37.

6. Âpastamba I, 9, 25, 13.

7. Vishnu VIII, 13-14.

8. Of injustice (in decisions) one quarter falls on the party in the cause, one quarter on his witnesses, one quarter on all the judges, and one quarter on the king.

But where he who deserves condemnation is condemned, the king is guiltless and the judges free from blame; the guilt falls on the offender (alone).

9. (Therefore) a wise man should ask an appointed witness in the following manner :

10. 'The merit which thou hast acquired in the interval between the night in which thou wast born and that in which thou wilt die, all that will go to the king, if thou speakest an untruth.'

11. 'A witness who speaks falsely, slays three fathers and three grandfathers and seven (descendants), both the born and the unborn.'

12. 'By false testimony concerning gold he kills three ancestors; by false testimony regarding (small) cattle he kills five; by false testimony concerning kine he kills ten.'

'He kills a hundred by false evidence regarding horses, (and) a thousand by false evidence concerning a man. A witness who speaks falsely, destroys the whole (world) by false evidence concerning land.'

8. Manu VIII, 18-19.

9. I read, with the Telugu copy of the commentary, sākshinam tvevam uddish/am. All the MSS. of the text and C. I. read sākshinam daivam uddish/am. Govinda's explanation, adhunā nir-dish/ān sākshina evam prikkhed iti padānvayaḥ, 'the construction of the words is, "let him now ask the appointed witnesses in the following manner,"' agrees with the reading adopted.

10. Vasish/ha XVI, 32-33.

11. 'Three fathers and three grandfathers,' i. e. seven ancestors.

12. Vasish/ha XVI, 34. Regarding the explanation of the

13. (Men of) the four castes (varṇa) who have sons may be witnesses excepting Srottriyas, the king, ascetics, and those who are destitute of human (intellect).

14. If (the witness rightly) recollects (the facts of) the case (he will receive) commendation from the most eminent men.

15. In the contrary case (he will) fall into hell.

16. Let him (who has given false evidence), drink hot milk during twelve (days and) nights or offer burnt oblations (reciting) the Kūshmāṇḍa (texts).

words 'he kills,' see Manu VIII, 97, and Haradatta on Gautama XIII, 14.

13. Vasishṭha XVI, 28-30. The text has rāḡanya, 'members of the royal family.' But the parallel passages of other Dharma-sūtras, e.g. Vishṇu VIII, 2, make it probable that the king is meant.

14. Āpastamba II, 11, 29, 10. Govinda takes the Sūtra differently. His commentary runs as follows: sākshidvaye sati rāḡñā tatpurushais ka kim kartavyam ity ata āha || smṛitau pradhānataḥ pratipattiḥ || prādhānyatas taponirdish/avidyātibhiḥ | tadvaḥanāt pratipattir niskayaḥ kārya ityadhyāhāraḥ kāryaḥ || 'What shall the king and his officers do, if there are two witnesses? In order to answer this question he says: "On recollection, according to pre-eminence, reliance." According to pre-eminence, i. e. on account of austerities, (being) appointed (as a witness), learning and the like; in accordance with the evidence of such person's conviction, i. e. the decision must be made. The latter word has to be understood.' Govinda then goes on to quote Manu VIII, 73.

15. Āpastamba II, 11, 29, 9. Govinda and M. read kartrīpatyam for kartapatyam, the reading of the Dekhan and Gugarāt MSS. The explanation of the former term is said to be doshah, 'sin.' Regarding the ancient word kartapatya, which Govinda and the writer of M. have not understood, see Haradatta on Āpastamba I, 2, 5, 3.

16. In accordance with his explanation of Sūtra 14, Govinda thinks that this penance is to be performed by the king and the judges in case they fail to weigh the evidence properly. But

PRASNA I, ADHYÂYA 11, KANDIKÂ 20.

1. (There are) eight marriage-rites.
2. If (the father) gives (his daughter) to a student (who has not broken his vow of chastity and) who asks for her, after fully enquiring into his learning and character, that (is) the rite of Brahman (brâhma).
3. If (the father gives his daughter away) after clothing her and decking her with ornaments, (saying) 'That (is thy wife), fulfil the law (with her),' that (is) the rite of Prâgâpati (prâgâpatya).
4. If (the bridegroom) after offering the first burnt oblation of parched grain (receives the maiden) for a bull and a cow, that is the rite of the Rîshis (ârsha).
5. If (a maiden is given) to an officiating priest within the sacrificial enclosure, while the presents are being taken away, that (is) the rite of the gods (daiva).

according to Manu VIII, 106, Vishnu VIII, 16, the oblations with the Kûshmândas (Taitt. Âr. X, 3-5) are to be offered for uttering in evidence a venial falsehood. That is, no doubt, here, too, the real meaning.

20. 1. Vishnu XXIV, 17.
2. Vasishtha I, 30. The word brahmaçârin has, no doubt, as Govinda too contends, been used in the double sense of 'a student of the Veda' and 'chaste.'
3. Vishnu XXIV, 22.
4. Vasishtha I, 32. 'After the first of the burnt oblations of parched grain, which are prescribed for weddings, has been offered, the bridegroom shall give to him who has power over the maiden a bull and a cow, and receive them back together with the (bride).'-Govinda.
5. Vasishtha I, 31. According to this rule the damsel is given

6. The union of a lover with a loving damsel (is called) the rite of the Gandharvas (gāndharva).

7. (If the bridegroom receives the maiden) after gladdening (the parents) by money, (that is) the rite of the Asuras (āśura).

8. (If the maiden is wedded) after being forcibly abducted, (that is) the rite of the Rākshasas (rākshasa).

9. If one has intercourse with (a maiden) who is sleeping, intoxicated, or out of her senses (with fear or passion and weds her afterwards, that is) the rite of the Pisākas (paisāka).

10. Among these (eight rites) the four first (named) are (lawful) for a Brāhmaṇa. Among these also each earlier named is preferable.

11. Among the (four) later (named rites) each succeeding one is more sinful (than the preceding ones).

12. Among these the sixth and the seventh agree with the law of the Kshatriyas. For power is their attribute.

as part of the sacrificial fee (dakṣiṇā) to one of the priests after a sacrifice has been completed. Govinda adds that the recipient has to accept the gift with the six mantras, 'pragāpati striyām yasaḥ,' Taitt. Brāhmaṇa II, 4, 6, 5. In his commentary on the passage Sāyana makes the same statement. Govinda adds that in this case as well as in those mentioned in the following Sūtras the regular marriage ceremony must be performed later.

6. Vasishṭha I, 33.

7. Vasishṭha I, 35.

8. Vasishṭha I, 34.

9. Vishṇu XXIV, 26.

10. Vishṇu XXIV, 27.

12. Vishṇu XXIV, 28; Vasishṭha I, 29; 34. The meaning of the last clause is that as, according to I, 10, 18, 3, Brahman placed power in the Kshatriyas, they may adopt marriage rites by which a disregard of conventionalities or strength is displayed.

13. The fifth and the eighth (are lawful) for Vaisyas and Sûdras.

14. For Vaisyas and Sûdras are not particular about their wives,

15. Because they are allowed (to subsist by such low occupations as) husbandry and service.

16. Some recommend the Gândharva rite for all (castes), because it is based on (mutual) affection.

PRAŚNA I, ADHYÂYA 11, KANDIKÂ 21.

1. The Veda declares, 'The quality of the offspring depends on the quality of the marriage rite.'

2. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'It is declared that a female who has been purchased for money is not a wife. She cannot (assist) at sacrifices offered to the gods or the manes. Kâsyapa has stated that she is a slave.'

13. 'I.e. the fifth for Vaisyas and the eighth for Sûdras.'—Govinda.

14. 'Those whose spouse, i.e. wife, is not restrained, i.e. not fixed by rule, are called not particular about their wives. The meaning is that there is oneness (dâreshvaikyam) with respect to wives, that fixed rules regarding them there are none (niyamas teshâm na bhavati).'—Govinda.

15. "'Husbandry" includes also trade and the like. Because those two (castes) are permitted to pursue low occupations, therefore their marriage rites are of the same description. That is what the author intends to say.'—Govinda.

21. 1. Âpastamba II, 5, 12, 4.

2. Vasishtha I, 36-38. Govinda inserts after the words 'Now they quote also,' two Sûtras in prose: 1. 'Ten virtuous sons and daughters (spring) from a Daiva marriage, ten from a Prâgâpatya marriage. It is declared in the Veda that the son of a wife wedded according to the Brâhma rite (sanctifies) ten ancestors, ten descendants, and oneself.' 2. 'The power of learning the Veda also

3. 'Those wicked men who, seduced by greed, give away a daughter for a fee, who (thus) sell themselves and commit a great crime, fall (after death) into a dreadful place of punishment and destroy their family down to the seventh (generation). Moreover they will repeatedly die and be born again. All (this) is declared (to happen), if a fee (is taken).'

4. On the day of the full moon, on the eighth day (of each half month), on the day of the new moon, on the appearance of a meteor, on the occasion of an earthquake, on visiting a burial-ground, and on the death of the king of the country, of a Srotiṛya or of one who has the same Guru (satṛthya), the study of the Veda must be discontinued for a day and a night.

5. (The study of the Veda must be interrupted) while (a strong) wind (blows), a foul smell (is perceptible), or hoar-frost (lies on the ground), when dancing (is going on), and while the sounds of singing, musical instruments, weeping, or of the Sāman (melodies are audible).

6. When thunder, lightning, and rain come together, (the interruption shall last) three days except in the rainy season.

belongs to such sons.' None of my MSS. of the text has these words, and they are suspicious, because the phrase 'Now they quote also' usually precedes verses only. The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS., except K., omit these and the next Sūtra too.

4. Vasishṭha XIII, 22, 32-35; Vishṇu XXX, 23. Govinda explains agnyutpāta, 'on the appearance of meteor,' by 'if a fire breaks out in the village.'

5. Vasishṭha XIII, 17, 30; Vishṇu XXX, 7, 13; Āpastamba I, 3, 11, 31; I, 3, 10, 17.

6. Gautama XVI, 41.

7. In the rainy season, too, (the reading must be interrupted) until the same hour of the (next) day or night, (if thunder and lightning come together), not on account of rain.

8. If (he has) received anything or dined on the occasion of a sacrifice in honour of the manes, (he shall not read) during the remainder of the day,

9. (Nor) after meals until (the food) has been digested.

10. For the hand of a Brâhmana is his mouth.

11. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'According to the revealed texts there is no difference whether one has eaten or received (a present at a Srâddha).'

12. (A student shall discontinue the study of the Veda) during three days in case his father has died.

13. 'Of two kinds, forsooth, is the virile energy of a famous Brâhmana who is learned in the Vedas, (that which resides) above the navel and the other (that resides) below the navel. Through that which

7. Govinda takes ahorâtrayor ka tatkâlam to mean until the end of the day or night.

8. Vasish/ha XIII, 15. Govinda adds that the recitation must be stopped as soon as the invitation to a Srâddha is received.

9. Vasish/ha XIII, 31.

10. Vasish/ha XIII, 16. The word 'for' used in this Sûtra gives the reason for the rule in Sûtra 8.

12. 'This (rule) refers to a student who has not returned home. But on one who has returned home it is obligatory to interrupt the Veda-study until he becomes pure. Here he calls the sub-teacher (upâdhyâya) "father," because he gives the Veda. For (an interruption of) twelve days' duration is prescribed on (the death of) a real father (by the Sûtra); "on the death of the mother, the father, and the teacher twelve days."—Govinda.

13. Vasish/ha II, 5. This Sûtra is intended to show how the (resides) above the navel, his offspring is produced when he initiates Brāhmaṇas, when he teaches them, when he causes them to offer sacrifices, when he makes them holy. All these are his children. But through that which resides below the navel the children of his body are produced. Therefore they never say to a Srottriya who is versed in the Vedas, 'Thou art destitute of offspring.'

14. 'Therefore a Brāhmaṇa has two names, two mouths, two kinds of virile energy, and two births.'

15. (Let him discontinue the recitation of the Veda) as long as he is within hearing or sight of Sūdras and Apapātras.

16. When at night the howl of a solitary jackal is heard, he shall not study until he has slept.

17. Let him not study in the evening and morning twilights nor on the Parva-days.

18. He shall not eat meat nor approach his wife (on those days).

19. It is declared in the Veda, 'For on the Parva-days the Rākshasas and the Pisākas roam about (in order to injure men).'

20. And on (the appearance of) other omens and portents (he shall not repeat the Veda), except mentally, during a day and a night.

Upādhyāya can be called a father. Govinda states that the precise meaning of anūṭāna, 'versed or learned in the Veda,' is 'one who knows the Veda, its meaning, and the Āṅgas.' See also Baudhāyana Gr̥hya-sūtra I, 10, 5.

15. Vasishṭha XVIII, 12. Regarding the term Apapātras, see Āpastamba I, 1, 3, 25 note.

16. Āpastamba I, 3, 10, 17.

17. Vasishṭha XIII, 22. The explanation of the term Parva-day is given below, Sūtra 22.

18. Vishṇu LXIX, 1.

21. The mental recitation of the Veda must also be interrupted on births and deaths (occurring in the family).

22. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The eighth day destroys the teacher, the fourteenth destroys the pupil, the fifteenth destroys learning; therefore let him avoid (studying the Veda) on the Parva-days.'

PRAŚNA II, ADHYĀYA 1, KANDIKĀ 1.

1. Now, therefore, the penances (will be described).

2. The murderer of a learned Brāhmaṇa (shall practise the following vow) during twelve years:

3. Carrying a skull (instead of a dish) and the foot of a bedstead (instead of a staff), dressed in the hide of an ass, staying in the forest, making a dead man's skull his flag, he shall cause a hut to be built in a burial-ground and reside there; going to seven houses in order to beg food, while proclaiming his deed, he shall support life with what (he gets there), and shall fast if he obtains nothing;

4. Or he may offer a horse-sacrifice, a Gosava, or an Agnishṭut;

22. Vishṇu XXX, 29-30. In accordance with the practice usual in Vedic works the best MSS. of the text repeat the beginning of each Kandikā at the end of the Praśna, giving the last first.

1. 2-3. Gautama XXII, 4-6; Vishṇu L, 1-3, 15. The expression 'staying in the forest' means that the sinner shall not stop in the village or the fields during the day-time, but live in some uncultivated tract in the neighbourhood.

4. Gautama XIX, 9-10. The Gosava sacrifice is an Ekāha; see Kātyāyana Śrauta Sūtra XXII, 11, 3.

5. Or he may bathe (with the priests) on the completion of a horse-sacrifice (offered by somebody else).

6. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'He who unintentionally slays a Brāhmaṇa becomes sinful according to the sacred law. The sages declare that he may be purified (if he did it) unintentionally. But no expiation is found for a wilful murderer.'

7. 'He who has raised his hand (against a Brāhmaṇa), shall perform a Krikkhra penance, an Atikrikkhra penance if he strikes, a Krikkhra and a Kāndrāyana if blood flows. Therefore let him neither raise his hand nor cause blood to flow.'

8. (For killing) a Kshatriya (he shall keep the normal vow of continence) during nine years,

9. (For killing) a Vaisya during three (years),

10. (For killing) a Sūdra during one year,

11. Likewise for killing a woman.

12. (The penance for killing) a woman who has bathed after temporary uncleanness (is) the same (as that) for (the murder of) a Brāhmaṇa.

5. Gautama XXII, 9.

6. Manu XI, 90.

7. Yāgyavalkya III, 293. Regarding the penances named, see Vasishṭha XXI, 20, XXIV, 1-2, XXIII, 45, and below, II, 1, 2, 38, IV, 5, 6.

8-10. Vasishṭha XX, 31-33. The words 'shall keep the normal vow of continence' have been inserted in accordance with Govinda's explanation, which apparently is based on Gautama XXII, 14. But it is also possible that Baudhāyana, like Vishnu (L, 15) and others, may have intended murderers of Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, &c., too, to perform the penance prescribed above, Sūtra 4, only for shorter periods.

11. Gautama XXII, 17. Govinda is of opinion that the word kā, 'likewise,' is intended to include 'worthless' Kshatriyas and Vaisyas.

12. Vasishṭha XX, 34-35.

13. He who has defiled the bed of a Guru shall place himself on a heated iron bed,

14. Or embrace a red hot image (of a woman),

15. Or cutting off his organ together with the testicles and holding them in his joined hands, he shall walk towards the south-west until he falls down (dead).

16. A thief shall go to the king with flying hair, carrying on his shoulder a club of Sindhraka wood (and say), 'Strike me with that.' (Then the king) shall strike him.

17. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'A thief shall go to the king carrying a club on his shoulder (and say to him), 'Punish me with that, O king, remembering the duty of Kshatriyas.'

'Whether he be punished or be pardoned, the thief is freed from his guilt. But if the king does not punish him, that guilt of the thief falls on him.'

18. If he has drunk (the spirituous liquor called) Surâ, he shall scald himself to death with hot (liquor of the) same (kind).

19. For unintentionally drinking (Surâ), he shall perform Krikkhra penances during three months and be initiated again,

20. And (on this second initiation) the cutting (of 13-15. Gautama XXIII, 8-10; Vasishtha XX, 13, 14.

16. Vasishtha XX, 41. 'A thief,' i.e. one who has stolen gold from a Brâhmana.

17. Âpastamba I, 9, 25, 4-5.

18. Vasishtha XX, 22. Surâ, i.e. the spirituous liquor extracted from rice, to drink which is considered a particularly heinous crime. Vasishtha XX, 19, and loc. cit.

19. Vasishtha XX, 19.

20. Vishnu LI, 5. The vows and restrictive rules, i.e. the Sâvitrya vow, begging, &c.

the hair and nails), the vows, and (the observance of the) restrictive rules may be omitted.

21. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'A Brāhmaṇa, Kshatriya, or Vaisya who has unintentionally drunk (the spirituous liquor called) Vāruṇī or has swallowed urine or faeces must be initiated a second time.'

22. 'But he who drinks water which has stood in a vessel, used for keeping Surā, shall live six days on milk in which (leaves of) the Saṅkhapusht plant have been boiled.'

23. If (a pupil) who is employed by his teacher (on some errand) meets with his death, (the teacher) shall perform three Krikkhṛa penances.

24. The same (penance) is prescribed for not finishing (the education of the pupil).

25. If a student assists at the burial of anybody except (at that of his) mother, of his father, or of his teacher, he must begin his vow afresh.

26. If a (student) is sick, he may, at his pleasure, eat all the fragments of his teacher's meal as medicine.

27. He may physic himself with any (medicine) which he may desire.

21. Vishṇu LI, 2-4.

22. Vishṇu LI, 23.

23. Vasishṭha XXIII, 10.

24. 'Finishing (the education of the pupil, samskrītam), i.e. teaching him the rules of purification, of conduct, and so forth; failing (to do) that (is called) not finishing (the education of the pupil). For that (omission) the same (penance), i.e. three Krikkhṛas (are to be) performed.'—Govinda.

25. Vasishṭha XXIII, 7-8. 'Assists at a burial (savakarma), i.e. lays out a corpse, and so forth (ālamkaranādi), or carries it out, and so forth.'—Govinda.

26. Vasishṭha XXIII, 9, and note.

27. 'The meaning is that he may cure himself even with such

28. When he is unable to move, he may worship the sun, after he has risen, reciting this (Rîk verse): 'A swan, dwelling in purity.'

29. When he has spent his manly strength in the day-time, let him thrice drink water that reaches his heart, reciting the verses which contain the word retas.

30. A student who approaches a woman (is called) an Avakîrvin,

31. Let him offer an ass (in the place of) a sacrificial animal.

32. The sacrificial meat-cake (puroḍāsa shall be offered) to Nirvṛiti, or to the Rākshasas, or to Yama.

33. It is declared in the Veda, 'The piece to be eaten by the sacrificer (prâsitra, shall be taken) from the organ (of the animal); and the (other) portions shall be offered in water.'

34. 'Or he may also heap (fuel) on the fire in the night of the new moon, perform the preparatory rites required for the Darvîthoma, and offer two (substances) which are forbidden even to his teacher, e. g. garlic, and so forth.' For a Smṛiti declares, 'He shall protect himself by every means.'—Govinda.

28. 'Unable to move,' i. e. sick. This is a penance to be performed by a sick student when he is unable to fulfil the rules enjoining the morning and evening prayers, and the like; and it applies to other men also because there is no objection. Regarding the Mantra, see Taittirîya Saṃhitâ I, 8, 15, 2.

29. The rule refers to intercourse with a wife in the day-time; see Vishnu LIII, 4. The Retasyâs occur Taittirîya Âraṇyaka I, 30.

30. Vasishṭha XXIII, 1.

33. Weber, Ind. Stud. X, 102; Kâtyâyana Śrauta Sûtra I, 1, 15.

34. Taitt. Âraṇyaka II, 18. The Âraṇyaka has, more appropriately, prañîya, 'having taken out,' before upasamâdhâya, 'may heap (fuel) upon.' The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS. insert the words 'amṛitam oblations of clarified butter (reciting these two sacred texts): "O Lust, I have broken my vow; my vow have I broken, O Lust; to Lust Svâhâ;" "O Lust, I have done evil; evil have I done, O Lust; to Lust Svâhâ."

35. 'After he has made the offering, he shall address the fire, closely joining his hands, turning sideways (with the following texts): "May the Maruts grant me, may Indra, may Brîhaspati, may this fire grant me long life and strength, may it make me long-lived!"'

36. Now the relatives shall empty (the water-pot) of a (grievous offender) at a (solemn) meeting (and he shall confess), 'I N. N. am (the perpetrator of) such and such (a deed).' After (the outcast) has performed (his penance) the Brâhmanas shall ask him who has touched water, milk, clarified butter, honey, and salt, 'Hast thou performed (thy penance)?' The other (person) shall answer, 'Om' (yes)! They shall admit him who has performed (a penance) to all sacrificial rites, making no difference (between him and others).

37. If he unintentionally marries a female who belongs to his own family (gotra), he shall support her, (treating her) like his mother.

vâ âgyam amṛitam evâtman dhatte,' which occur also in the Âraṇyaka, after the Mantra. According to Govinda parīkṣhā, 'preparatory rites,' refers to the consecration of the clarified butter, and so forth. The special rules regarding the Darvîthomas are given Kâtyâyana Śrauta Sûtra VI, 10, 17 seq.

36. Vasishṭha XV, 12-21. Govinda thinks that nirvîśesham savanîyam kuryuḥ, 'they shall admit him to all sacrificial rites, making no difference,' may also be interpreted by 'they shall perform for him the sacraments just as for a new-born child.'

37. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCXL.

38. If (such a woman) has borne a child, he shall perform Krikkhra penances during three months and offer (two burnt oblations reciting) the two (Mantras), 'That which is the blemish of my soul' (and) 'Fire restored my sight.'

39. 'An elder brother whose younger brother marries first, the younger brother who marries first, the damsel wedded (by the latter), he who gives her away, and fifthly he who sacrifices for them (at the wedding), all sink to a region of torment.'

40. 'The unmarried elder brother and the married younger brother, the giver (of the maiden) and the performer of the sacrifices become pure by undergoing a Krikkhra penance of twelve days, the female (who has been wedded to the younger brother) by (fasting during) three days.'

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 1, KANDIKÂ 2.

1. Now (follow the offences) causing loss of caste (patanīya),

2. (Viz.) making voyages by sea,

38. The Mantras are found, Taittirīya Samhitā III, 2, 5, 4.

39. Vasishṭha XX, 7-8. The MSS. read parivittāḥ parivettā yas kṛinām [nam] parivindati. But it is absolutely necessary to adopt either the various reading given Manu III, 172, yayā ka parividyate, or to read yā kṛinām parivindati.

40. The MSS. all read at the end of the verse, tristrirātrena or dvistrirātrena. The correct reading appears, however, to be strī trirātrena; for Govinda says, yayā saha parivettā bhūtas [bhūttasya C. I., bhūttassāstri C. T.] tasyās trirātrenopavāsena suddhiḥ, 'the purification of that female with whom he has become a parivettṛ takes place through three days, i. e. through fasting (three days).'

2. 1. Āpastamba I, 7, 21, 7-11.

2. Govinda explains samudrasamyānam, 'making voyages by sea,' by 'voyaging by means of ships to another continent (dvīpa).'

3. Stealing the property of a Brāhmaṇa or a deposit,

4. Giving false evidence regarding land,

5. Trading with merchandise of any description (whether forbidden or not),

6. Serving Sūdras,

7. Begetting a son on a female of the Sūdra caste,

8. And becoming thereby her son.

9. (For those who have) committed one of these (offences the following penance is prescribed):

10. 'They shall eat every fourth meal-time a little food, bathe at the time of the three libations (morning, noon, and evening), passing (the day) standing and (the night) sitting. After the lapse of three years they throw off their guilt.'

11. 'A Brāhmaṇa removes the sin which he committed by serving the black race during one day and one night, if he bathes during three years at every fourth meal-time.'

7. The MSS. from Gugarāt and the Dekhan read instead of this and the next Sūtras, yaśka sūdrāyām abhipragāyate tadapatyam ka bhavati, 'and he who begets (offspring) on a Sūdra female, and thereby becomes her son.'

8. Govinda explains the Sūtra as a prohibition against allowing oneself to be adopted by a Sūdra (sūdraputrabhāvaḥ + tavāham putro 'smīty upagīvanam).

9. The Dekhan and Gugarāt MSS. again have a different reading, teshām tu nisveshaḥ, 'but the atonement of these offences (is as follows).'

10. Âpastamba I, 9, 25, 10. All the MSS. read in the last pāda 'tribhir varshais tad apahanti pāpam.' The correct reading is that given by Âpastamba loc. cit., 'tribhir varshair apa pāpam nudante.'

11. Âpastamba I, 9, 27, 11. Govinda explains the Sūtra as referring to cohabitation with a female of the 'black race.' By the latter term he understands a Kāṇḍālī, adding that others believe

12. Now (follow) the minor offences, entailing loss of caste (upapâtaka),

13. (Viz.) intercourse with females who must not be approached (agamyâ, e. g.) cohabitation with the female friend of a female Guru, with the female friend of a male Guru, with an Apapâtra woman, and a female outcast, following the profession of medicine, sacrificing for many, living by (performances on) the stage, following the profession of a teacher of dancing, singing and acting, tending cows and buffalos, and similar (low occupations, as well as) fornication.

14. The expiation (prescribed) for these (offences is) to live as an outcast during two years.

a Sûdra female to be intended. It is, however, more probable that Baudhâyana took the verse to forbid twice-born men to serve Sûdras.

12. Âpastamba I, 7, 21, 9.

13. Gautama XXI, 11. In explanation of the term agamyâ, 'a female who must not be approached,' Govinda quotes Nârada XII, 73-74, and he takes the four classes of females, who are specially mentioned, not as examples illustrating the term agamyâ, but as not included in and additional to the latter. Physicians and the other professional men enumerated are usually not mentioned among the upapâtakins, but occur in the lists of those whose gifts must not be accepted, and of those who defile the company at a funeral dinner, e. g. Vasishtha III, 3; XIV, 2, 3, 11. The expression 'sacrificing for many' (grâmayâganam) appears to be a description of the so-called Yagamâna Vrâtti, by which the modern Bhattas, or priests who officiate for hire, subsist. In explanation of the term nâtyâkâryatâ, 'following the profession of teaching dancing, music, and acting,' Govinda says that 'instruction in the works of Bharata, Visâkhila, and others' is intended. Baudhâyana no doubt intends to forbid the instruction of professional dancers and actors in actual works on their art, such as the nâtya-sûtras mentioned by Pânini.

14. 'To live as an outcast, i. e. to subsist by begging.'—Govinda.

15. Now (follow the offences) which make men impure (asuḥikara),

16. (Viz.) gambling, performing incantations, subsisting by gleaning corn though one does not perform an Agnihotra, subsisting by alms after one has finished one's studentship, living, after that has been finished, longer than four months in the house of one's teacher, and teaching such a (person who has finished his studentship), gaining one's livelihood by astrology and so forth.

17. But the expiation of these (offences is to perform penances) during twelve months, during twelve fortnights, during twelve times ten days, during twelve se'nights, during twelve times three days, during twelve days, during six days, during three days, during a day and a night, during one day, in proportion to the offence committed.

18. Now outcasts shall live together and (together) fulfil their duties, sacrificing for each other, teaching each other, and marrying amongst each other. If they have begot sons, they shall say to them, 'Depart from among us; thus you will again reach the Āryas.'

19. For the organs do not become impure together with the man.

20. (The truth of) that may be learned from this (parallel case); a man deficient in limbs begets a son who has the full number of limbs.

21. Hārta declares that this is wrong.

22. For wives may be (considered) similar to the

15. Āpastamba I, 7, 21, 12-19; I, 10, 29, 15.

16. Govinda is probably right in asserting that the word ka, 'and (so forth)', is intended to include other not-named offences.

17. Āpastamba I, 10, 29, 17-18.

18-23. Āpastamba I, 10, 29, 8-14.

vessel which contains the curds (for the sacrifice). If one makes impure milk curdle in a milk-vessel and stirs it, the Śishyas do not use the (curds thus produced) for sacred rites.

23. In like manner no intercourse can be held with that (offspring) which is produced from impure seed.

24. If they desire it, (they may perform) a penance,

25. (Viz. in the case of males) the third part (of the penance prescribed) for crimes causing loss of caste (patantya); for females the third part (of that).

26. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'If he applies sesamum to any other purpose, but food, anointing, and charitable gifts, he will be born again as a worm and, together with his ancestors, be plunged into the ordure of dogs.'

27. He who sells sesamum, forsooth, sells his ancestors; he who sells rice, forsooth, sells his life; he who gives away his daughter, making a bargain, forsooth, sells portions of his spiritual merit.

28. Grass and wood, in its natural state, may be sold.

29. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Animals that have teeth in one jaw only, as well as minerals excepting salt, and undyed thread, these, O Brâhmaṇa, are the goods which thou art permitted to sell.'

30. (If he has committed) any offence excepting a

25. I. e. males shall live, according to the rules given above in Sûtras 10-11, during one year, and females during four months.

26. Vasishṭha II, 30.

28. Âpastamba I, 7, 21, 2.

29. The permission to sell 'stones' or minerals contradicts Vasishṭha II, 24.

30. Regarding the definition of the term 'anûkâna,' see above, I, 11, 21, 13.

mortal sin (pâtaka) he may either give to a learned Brâhmana (anûkâna) a hairy cow of brown or reddish colour, after sprinkling her with clarified butter and scattering black sesamum seeds over her ;

31. Or (he may offer burnt oblations), reciting the Kûshmândas, during twelve days.

32. '(Thus) he will be freed from the guilt (of any crime that is) less (heinous) than the murder of a learned Brâhmana.'

33. If one is accused of a mortal sin (pâtaka), a Krikkhra (penance must be performed by the accused).

34. The accuser (shall perform) that (Krikkhra penance during) a year.

35. 'He who during a year associates with an outcast, becomes (likewise) an outcast ; not by sacrificing for him, by teaching him or by (forming) a matrimonial (alliance with him), but by using the same carriage or seat.'

36. The penance for eating impure substances is to fast until the entrails are empty. That is attained in seven (days and) nights.

31. Regarding the efficacy of the Kûshmânda texts, see e.g. Gautama XIX, 12 ; XXII, 36.

33. Vasishtha XXIII, 37-38.

34. Vasishtha XXIII, 39.

35. Vasishtha I, 22.

36. Âpastamba I, 9, 27, 3-4 ; Vasishtha XXIII, 30. I follow here the Gugarât and Dekhan MSS., which read amedhyaprâsane prâyaskittir naishpurîshyam tat saptarâtrenâvâpyate. M. and the two MSS. of the commentary give amedhyaprâsane prâyaskittam and leave the remainder out. The commentary states that the penance intended is the Taptakrikkhra, described in the next Sûtra. The parallel passages of Âpastamba and others leave no doubt that the northern MSS. in this case have preserved the older form of the text.

37. (Subsisting on) water, milk, clarified butter, (and) fasting,—each for three days,—(and taking the three fluids) hot, that is a Taptakrikkhra penance.

38. (Eating) during three days in the morning only, during the (next) three days in the evening only, (subsisting) during (another) three days (on) food given unasked, and fasting during three days, (that is) a Krikkhra penance.

39. (If the period of twelve days is divided into) three (periods of) four days, that is the Krikkhra penance of women, children, and aged men.

40. If (observing the rule given) above one eats (at each meal) so much only as one can take at one (mouthful), that is an Atikrikkhra penance.

41. (If one) subsists on water only, that is a Krikkhrâtikrikkhra, the third (in the order of the Krikkhra penances).

42. During a Krikkhra penance (the following rules must be followed, viz.) to bathe at morn, noon, and evening,

43. To sleep on the ground,

44. To wear one garment only, to shave the hair of the head, of the beard, and of the body, and to clip the nails.

45. The same (rules apply) to women except (that referring to) shaving the head.

37. Vasishtha XXI, 21.

38. Vasishtha XXI, 20. M. and the two MSS. of the commentary omit the word 'krikkhra' at the end of the Sûtra.

39. Vasishtha XXIII, 43.

40. Vasishtha XXIV, 2.

41. Vasishtha XXIV, 3. Govinda gives another explanation of the word trîṣyaḥ, 'the third,' according to which it is to refer to the third tryaḥ, or 'period of three days.'

42-44. Vasishtha XXIV, 4-5.

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 2, KANDIKĀ 3.

1. A Brāhmaṇa who always carries water (in his pot), who always wears the sacred thread, who daily recites the Veda, who avoids the food of Sūdras, who approaches (his wife) in the proper season, and offers sacrifices in accordance with the rules (of the Veda, after death) never falls from Brahman's heaven.

2. The Veda (says), 'Manu divided his estate among his sons.'

3. (A father may, therefore, divide his property) equally among all, without (making any) difference ;

4. Or the eldest may receive the most excellent chattel.

5. (For) the Veda says, 'Therefore, they distinguish the eldest by (an additional share of the) property.'

6. Or the eldest may receive (in excess) one part out of ten ;

7. (And) the other (sons) shall receive equal shares.

8. While the father lives, the division of the estate takes place (only) with the permission of the father.

3. 1. Vasishṭha VIII, 17.

2. Taittirīya Samhitā III, 1, 9, 4.

3. Colebrooke V, Dig. XL. Govinda points out that this rule refers to sons equal by caste, origin, and virtue.

4. Colebrooke, loc. cit. ; Vishṇu XVIII, 37.

5. Taittirīya Samhitā II, 5, 2, 7. See also the discussion on this text, Âpastamba II, 6, 14, 10-13.

6. Colebrooke, loc. cit. ; Vasishṭha XVII, 43.

7. Colebrooke, loc. cit. ; Gautama XXVIII, 8.

8. Colebrooke V, Dig. XXII ; Dâyaabhāga II, 8. In C.'s Digest

9. The (additional) share of the eldest is, (according to the order) of the four castes, a cow, a horse, a goat, and a sheep.

10. If there are sons born of wives of different castes (varṇa), they should make ten portions of the ancestral property and take four (shares), three, two, (and) one, according to the order (of the castes).

11. But if a legitimate son of the body (aurasa) is born, the (other) sons of equal caste shall obtain one third share (of the estate).

12. If there is a son of equal caste and a son of the first clause is omitted and connected with the following Sūtra. Govinda agrees with Gīmûtavāhana.

9. Colebrooke V, Dig. XLIX. The rule is an explanation of the term varam rūpam, 'the most excellent chattel,' in Sūtra 4. The meaning probably is, as the Digest states, that among Brāhmanas it is usual to give to the eldest a bull, among Kshatriyas a horse, and so forth.

10. Vasishṭha XVII, 48-50; Vishnu XVIII, 2-40; where the several cases that can arise have been fully worked out.

11. I translate according to the reading of K., M., and the two MSS. of the commentary, aurase tūtpanne savarnās ['nas, M., K.] trītiyāmsaharāḥ ['yāmsam haret, K.] The other MSS. omit the last two words of the Sūtra. The sense of the Sūtra seems to be, that subsidiary sons of equal caste obtain a third of the estate when a legitimate son of the body is born to their father; see also Kātyāyana V, Dig. CCXVIII. Govinda gives the following explanation: aurasaḥ savarnaputrās ka vakshyante | aurasaḥ savarnâyām samskrītâyām svayam utpādītaḥ [Sūtra 14] | tasminnutpanne savarnās trītiyāmsaharā bhaveyuh | sarvam dhanagātam tredhā vibhagya teshām ekam shodasa sampādya trīn dvāvekam iti kalpayet || 'The legitimate son and the sons of equal caste will be described (below). He is called a legitimate son who is begotten by the husband himself on a wedded wife of equal caste. When such a one is born, the (other) sons of equal caste shall obtain one third share. Dividing the whole property into three parts, and making one of them sixteen (?), he shall give three, two, one.'—Govinda.

12. Colebrooke V, Dig. CLVII; Dāyabhāga IX, 15.

a wife of the next lower caste, the son born of the wife of the next lower caste may take the share of the eldest, provided he be endowed with good qualities.

13. (A son) who possesses good qualities becomes the protector of the rest.

14. One must know a son begotten by (the husband) himself on a wedded wife of equal caste (to be) a legitimate son of the body (aurasa).

Now they quote also (the following verse): 'From the several limbs (of my body) art thou produced, from my heart art thou born; thou art "self" called a son; mayest thou live a hundred autumns.'

15. The (male child) born of a daughter, after an agreement has been made, (one must know to be) the son of an appointed daughter (putrikâputra); any other (male offspring of a daughter they call) a daughter's son (dauhitra).

16. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The son of an appointed daughter should offer the first funeral cake to his mother, the second to her father, and the third to his father's father.'

17. He who is begotten, by another man, on the wife of a deceased man, of a eunuch, or of one (incurably) diseased, after permission (has been given), is called the son begotten on a wife (kshetrâga).

13. Colebrooke, loc. cit.

14. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXCVI; Vasishṭha XVII, 13. The verse is found in the Mahâbhârata and elsewhere.

15. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXIII; Vasishṭha XVII, 15-17.

17. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXXXVII; Dâyaabhâga II, 60; Vasishṭha XVII, 14.

18. Such a (son begotten on a wife) has two fathers and belongs to two families; he has a right to perform the funeral oblations, and to inherit the property of (his) two (fathers).

19. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The son of two fathers shall give the funeral cakes (to his two fathers, and pronounce) two names with each oblation, and three cakes shall serve for six persons; he who acts thus will not err.'

20. He (is called) an adopted son (datta) who, being given by his father and his mother, or by either of the two, is received in the place of a child.

21. He (is called) a son made (kr̥itr̥ima) whom (a man) himself makes (his son), with the (adopter's) consent (only), and who belongs to the same caste (as the adopter).

22. He is called a son born secretly (gūḍhaga) who is secretly born in the house and whose (origin is) afterwards (only) recognised.

23. He is called a son cast off (apavidḍha) who, being cast off by his father and his mother, or by either (of them), is received in the place of a child.

24. If anybody approaches an unmarried girl without the permission (of her father or guardian), the son born by such (a woman is called) the son of an unmarried damsel (kāñina).

18. Colebrooke Dig., loc. cit.

20. Vasishṭha XVII, 28.

21. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCLXXXIV; Gautama XXVIII, 32.

22. Vasishṭha XVII, 24.

23. Vishṇu XV, 24-25.

24. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCLXI; Vasishṭha XVII, 21-23. It must be understood that the father must belong to the same caste as the girl.

25. If one marries either knowingly or unknowingly a pregnant bride, the child which is born of her is called (a son) taken with the bride (sahodha).

26. He (is called a son) bought (krīta) who, being purchased from his father and his mother, or from either of them, is received in the place of a child.

27. He (is called the son) of a twice-married woman (paunarbhava) who is born of a re-married female, (i. e.) of one who, having left an impotent man, has taken a second husband.

28. He (is called) a self-given (son, svayam-datta) who, abandoned by his father and his mother, gives himself (to a stranger).

29. He who is begotten by (a man of) the first twice-born (caste) on a female of the Sūdra caste (is called) a Nishāda.

30. (He who was begotten by the same parents) through lust (is called) a Pārasava. Thus (the various kinds of) sons (have been enumerated).

31. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'They declare the legitimate son, the son of an appointed daughter, the son begotten on a wife, the adopted son and the son made, the son born secretly and the son cast off, (to be entitled) to share the inheritance.'

32. 'They declare the son of an unmarried damsel and the son received with the bride, the son bought,

25. Vasishṭha XVII, 27.

26. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCLXXXI; Vasishṭha XVII, 30-32.

27. Vasishṭha XVII, 18-20.

28. Vasishṭha XVII, 33-35.

30. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCXCIII. Govinda points out that the Pārasava is, according to Baudhāyana, the offspring of a Sūdrā concubine, not of a Sūdrā wife. But see also above, I, 9, 17, 4.

31. Colebrooke V, Dig. CLXXX; Vasishṭha XVII, 25.

32. Colebrooke V, Dig. CLXXIX; Vasishṭha XVII, 26.

likewise the son of a twice-married female, the son self-given and the Nishâda, to be members of the family.'

33. Aupagandhani (declares that) the first among them alone (is entitled to inherit, and a member of his father's family).

34. 'Now, O Ganaka, I jealously watch my wives, (though I did) not (do it) formerly; for they have declared in Yama's court that the son belongs to the begetter. The giver of the seed carries off the son, after death, in Yama's hall. Therefore they carefully protect their wives, fearing the seed of strangers.'

35. 'Carefully watch (the procreation of your) offspring, lest strange seed fall on your soil. After death the son belongs to the begetter; through carelessness a husband makes (the procreation of) a son useless.'

36. Let them carefully protect the shares of 33-34. Aupagandhani is one of the ancient teachers of the White Yagur-veda, mentioned in the lists incorporated in the Sata-patha-brâhmaṇa XIV, 5, 5, 21; 7, 3, 26. The legends of the White Yagur-veda frequently mention king Ganaka of Videha, and assert that that philosopher king had frequent and intimate intercourse with Yâgñavalkya and other teachers of the Veda which Âditya revealed. It seems to me, therefore, highly probable that Govinda is right in taking the vocative ganaka in Sûtra 34 as a proper name, and in asserting that the verse belongs to a conversation between Aupagandhani and Ganaka. This explanation, which possibly may be based on an ancient tradition of Baudhâyana's school, is certainly preferable to Haradatta's statement on Âpastamba II, 6, 13, 7, that these verses express the sentiments of a husband who had neglected to watch his wives, and later learned that he would not derive any spiritual benefit from their offspring. In the text of Sûtra 34 I read with the Dekhan MSS. and Âpastamba, loc. cit., îrshyâmi, instead of ishyâmi, which M. and the commentary give.

36. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCCLII; Vasishṭha XVI, 8, 9. 'The those who are minors, as well as the increments (thereon).

37. Granting food, clothes, (and shelter), they shall support those who are incapable of transacting legal business,

38. (Viz.) the blind, idiots, those immersed in vice, the incurably diseased, and so forth,

39. Those who neglect their duties and occupations;

40. But not the outcast nor his offspring.

41. Intercourse with outcasts shall not take place.

42. But he shall support an outcast mother, without speaking to her.

43. The daughters shall obtain the ornaments of their mother, (as many as are) presented according to the custom (of the caste), or anything else (that may be given according to custom).

increments, i.e. the proper interest. Thus the money of minors shall bear interest.'—Govinda.

37. Colebrooke V, Dig. CCCXXVIII; Dāyabhāga V, 12; Vyavahāramayūkha IV, 11, 10; Vasishṭha XVII, 52-54.

38. Colebrooke and Mayūkha, loc. cit. 'The expression "and so forth" includes hunchbacks and other (disabled) persons.'—Govinda. Vyasanin, 'immersed in vice,' may also mean 'afflicted by calamities,' and is perhaps intended to be taken both ways.

39. Colebrooke and Mayūkha, loc. cit. Akarminas, 'those who neglect their duties and occupations,' i.e. those who though able (to fulfil their duties are) indolent.—Govinda.

40. Colebrooke and Mayūkha, loc. cit.; Burnell, Dāyabhāga 49.

42. Gautama XXI, 15, and note.

43. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXXX; Vasishṭha XVII, 46. 'Sâm-pradâyikam (literally "customary") qualifies (the word) ornaments; sâm-pradâyikam (means) what is obtained according to custom; what is given to their mother by the maternal grandfather and grandmother, that (is called) sâm-pradâyikam. "Or anything else," (viz.) presented according to custom, (e.g.) a bedstead and the 44. Women do not possess independence.

45. Now they quote also (the following verse):
'Their father protects (them) in childhood, their husband protects (them) in youth, and their sons protect (them) in old age; a woman is never fit for independence.'

46. The Veda declares, 'Therefore women are considered to be destitute of strength and of a portion.'

like, a couch, and an outer garment, and the like. So much and nothing else shall the daughters receive.'—Govinda.

44. Vasishṭha V, 1. All the MSS. of the text read na strisvātantryam vidyate, while the text given by the two copies of the commentary has na strī svātantryam vindate. Govinda asserts that the Sūtra is intended to forbid the independent action of women with respect to things inherited. The correct view probably is that with this Sūtra the topic of the duties and rights of women begins, and that the rule contains a general maxim.

45. Vasishṭha V, 2.

46. Colebrooke V, Dig. CXXXI. The text is in great confusion. The Dekhan and Gugarāt MSS., except K., read, na dāyam nirindriyā hyadâyās ka striyo matâ iti srutiḥ; K. has, tasmât[n]-nirindriyâ hy. st. m. i. sr. || tasmât striyo nirindriyâ adâyâdîr api pâpât; while M. and the I. O. copy of the commentary have, tasmân-nirindriyâ adâyâs ka striyo matâ iti srutiḥ [sûtiḥ, M.] The Telugu copy is mutilated, and reads nâdayantiriti srutiḥ. Though the reading of the Dekhan MSS. is supported by Mitramisra Vîramitrodaya, fol. 209, p. 1, l. 3, it is certainly not the original one, for there is no verb by which the accusative 'dāyam' is governed. Mitramisra's attempt to make it depend on 'arhati' in the verse quoted in Sūtra 45 is futile, because, according to the usage of the Sūtrakâras, a Sūtra may be completed by a verb taken from another original aphorism of the author, but cannot be connected with a portion of a quotation taken from some other work. This same principle, of course, applies not only to Sūtras, but to the writings of all other authors, whether Indian or European. The reading of K., M., and of the I. O. copy of the commentary is not open to the objection just mentioned, and therefore preferable. But it seems to me highly probable that, nevertheless, it is not

47. Those (women) who strive (to do what is) agreeable to their husbands will gain heaven.

48. But for a violation (of their duty towards the husband) a Krikkhra penance (must be performed).

49. (For violating it) with a Sûdra (a woman) shall perform a lunar penance (kândrâyana);

50. (For violating it) against the order of the castes with a Vaisya and so forth, she shall perform a Krikkhra or an (Atikrikkhra) penance.

51. For male (offenders, i.e.) Brâhmanas and so forth, a year's chastity (is prescribed).

quite genuine; for the word 'tasmât,' with which it begins, is not required, because its sense is already expressed by the following 'hi,' and because the Sûtra apparently contains half an Anushûbh Sloka, which the insertion of tasmât destroys. It is also easy to see how it came to be inserted. Every Yagurvedî who read the passage would be reminded of the analogous passage of the Taittiriya Samhitâ VI, 5, 8, 2, 'tasmât striyo nirindriyâ adâyâdîr api pâpât pumsaḥ upastitaram,' which in K. has actually been inserted after our Sûtra. In the Vedic Mantra 'tasmât' is required, and is certainly the genuine reading. Hence it seems to have been transferred into Baudhâyana's text, possibly by the mistake of some scribe who, according to the habit of his kind, took a marginal reference to the beginning of the Vedic passage for a correction of the text. In my opinion it must be thrown out. The sense of the half verse remains exactly the same. It corresponds to Manu IX, 18. According to Govindasvâmin and others its object is to show that women are incapable of inheriting, and the word dâya, 'portion,' must be taken in the sense of 'a share of the inheritance.' For a full discussion of this point, I refer to the Introductory Note on Book I, Chapter II, Sect. 14 of West and Bühler's Digest of H. L. C., third edition.

47. Vishnu XXV, 15, 17; Vasishṭha XXI, 14.

48-50. Vasishṭha XXI, 6-13.

51. Govinda points out that this rule refers to adultery with women of equal caste, and thinks that the word 'chastity' indicates that Krikkhra penances are to be performed; Vasishṭha XXI, 16, 17; Vishnu LIII, 2. But see Gautama XXII, 29.

52. Let him burn a Sûdra (who commits adultery with an Âryan) in a straw-fire.

53. Now they quote also (the following verses):

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 2, KANDIKÂ 4.

1. 'Anybody but a Brâhmaṇa shall suffer corporal punishment for adultery.'

2. 'The wives (of men) of all castes must be guarded more carefully than wealth.'

3. 'But corporal punishment (shall) not (be inflicted) for (adultery with) the wives of minstrels and with those who appear on the stage. For (the husbands) carry them (to other men), or, lying concealed (at home), permit them to hold culpable intercourse.'

4. 'Women (possess) an unrivalled means of purification; they never become (entirely) foul. For month by month their temporary uncleanness removes their sins.'

5. 'Soma gave them cleanliness, the Gandharva their melodious voice, and Fire purity of all (limbs); therefore women are free from stains.'

52. Vasishṭha XXI, 1, 5.

4. 1. Âpastamba II, 10, 26, 20; 10, 27, 11. Govinda thinks that non-Brâhmanical offenders should be burned, in accordance with Vasishṭha XXI, 2-3. But mutilation may also be intended. Samgrahana, 'adultery,' probably includes all those acts mentioned Manu VIII, 354-358.

2. Manu VIII, 359.

3. Manu VIII, 362. I read conjecturally, 'samsargayanti te hyetâ niguptâs kâlayantyapi,' basing my emendations on Manu's text. The MSS. and Govinda have, samsargayanti tâ hyetân niguptâms kâlayantyapi, which gives no good sense. Govinda explains kâraṇa-dârâh, 'the wives of minstrels,' by devadâsyah, 'temple-slaves.'

4. Vasishṭha XXVIII, 4.

5. Vasishṭha XXVIII, 6.

6. 'Let him abandon a barren (wife) in the tenth year, one who bears daughters (only) in the twelfth, one whose children (all) die in the fifteenth, but her who is quarrelsome without delay.'

7. A widow shall avoid during a year (the use of) honey, meat, spirituous liquor, and salt, and sleep on the ground.

8. Maudgalya (declares that she shall do so) during six months.

9. After (the expiration of) that (time) she may, with the permission of her Gurus, bear a son to her brother-in-law, in case she has no son.

10. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'One whose appointment can have no result, (viz.) a barren woman, one who has borne sons, one who is past child-bearing, one whose children are (all) dead, and one who is unwilling must not be appointed.'

11. The sister of a maternal uncle and of the father, a sister, a sister's daughter, a daughter-in-law, a maternal uncle's wife, and the wife of a

6. Manu IX, 81.

7-8. Vasishṭha XVII, 55. The word madya, 'spirituous liquor,' occurs in M. and the I. O. copy of the commentary. The MSS. from the Dekhan and Gugarât, including K., read maggana or maddâna, the compound letter being very indistinct.

9. Vasishṭha XVII, 56, where the term 'Gurus' is fully explained.

10. Vasishṭha XVII, 57-59. M. and the two copies of the commentary read pisâṭotpannaputrâ ka instead of vasâ ṭotpannaputrâ ka, 'a barren woman and one who has borne sons.' I follow the Dekhan and Gugarât MSS., which undoubtedly give the genuine reading. Perhaps the term avarâm, Vasishṭha XVII, 57, should be corrected to varâm.

11-12. These two Sûtras are additions to II, 1, 2, 13. See also Nârada XII, 73-74; Vasishṭha XXI, 16.

friend are females who must never be approached (agamyâ).

12. For intercourse with females who must not be approached (agamyâ), a Krikkhra and an Ati-krikkhra (and) a Kândrâyana are the penances prescribed for all.

13. Thereby (the rule regarding) intercourse with a female of the Kandâla caste has been declared.

14. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'A Brâhmana who unintentionally approaches a female of the Kandâla caste, eats (food given by a Kandâla) or receives (presents from him), becomes an outcast; but (if he does it) intentionally, he becomes equal (to a Kandâla).

15. 'He who approaches his father's, his teacher's, or a king's wife, is guilty of the crime of violating a Guru's bed; the penance ordained for him has been declared above.'

16. (A Brâhmana) who is unable (to subsist) by teaching, sacrificing for others, or the acceptance of gifts, shall maintain himself by following the duties of Kshatriyas, because that is the next following (caste).

13. Vasishtha XXIII, 41; Vishnu LIII, 5-6.

14. Manu XI, 176.

15. Govinda thinks that the penance intended is that mentioned in Sûtra 12. Probably a severer one is meant. The verse is interesting, as it clearly is a quotation from some metrical work on law, not merely of traditional detached slokas.

16. Vasishtha II, 22. The Sûtra 'adhyâpanayâganapratigrahair asaktaḥ kshatradharmena gîvet pratyantaratvât' occurs in the two copies of the commentary only. The I.O. copy of the commentary has, however, before it the following words: [dharma] svâdhyâyapraṇaṇe evety adhikânâm [kâram] darsayati pratigrihitâ tâdrîk pratigrihitâram grîdhnvanti [târa ridhnu] ritvignyagamânâ yâginau

17. Gautama (declares that one shall) not (act thus). For the duties of Kshatriyas are too cruel for a Brâhmana.

18. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Out of regard for the sacred law a Brâhmana and a Vaisya may take up arms for (the protection of) cows or Brâhmanas, or when a confusion of the castes (threatens to take place).

19. (Or) the livelihood of a Vaisya should be adopted, because that is the one following (next).

20. (If he lives by agriculture) he shall plough before breakfast,

21. With two bulls whose noses have not been pierced, not striking them with the goad, (but) frequently coaxing them.

22. The (sacred domestic) fire (shall be kindled) at the wedding; the religious ceremonies up to the Agnyâdheya (shall be) performed in that.

[°gane] tadasaktau kshatradharmau. M. reads, dharmanasvâdhyâ-yapraṇāṭana [ne] ityadhikāram darsayati pratigrahītâṛk pratigrahītāra rīdhnuvanti rītvigyagamāna yāganau tadasaktau svâdhyâyadhyâ [°yâdhyâ] panayagñayāganapratigrahair asaktama [taḥ] kshatradharmena givet. The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS. read, dhârmye svâdhyâyapraṇāṭane ityadhikāram darsayati | pratigrahe dâtâ pratigrahītâ[ra] rīdhnuvanti | rītvigyagamānâ yāgane | tadasaktau kshatradharmena gīvayet, or have corruptions of this passage. I cannot come to any other conclusion than that the passage which precedes the words translated by me are a very ancient interpolation, caused by the embodiment of a portion of an old Bhâshya with the text, and that all our MSS., however much they may differ, go back to one codex archetypus.

17. Gautama Introduction, p. lii.

18. Gautama VII, 25.

19. Vasishṭha II, 24.

20-21. Vasishṭha II, 32.

22. Vasishṭha VIII, 3. The religious ceremonies to be performed with the sacred domestic fire, which, according to Baudhâyana,

23. Now, beginning with the Agnyâdheya, follow these (rites in an) uninterrupted (series), as, for instance, the Agnyâdheya, the Agnihotra, the new and full moon sacrifices, the Âgrayana at the winter and summer solstices, the animal sacrifice, the Kâturmâsyas at the beginning of each season, the Shaddhotri in spring, the Agnishôma. Thus the attainment of bliss (is secured).

24. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Neither he who is accustomed to sleep in the day-time, nor he who eats the food of anybody, nor he who falls from a height to which he has climbed, can reach heaven as he desires.'

25. Let him avoid meanness, hard-heartedness, and crookedness.

26. Now they quote also with reference to this (subject the following) verse in the dialogue between the daughters of Usanas and Vrishaparvan: 'Thou, forsooth, art the daughter of one who praises (others), who begs and accepts (gifts); but I am the child of one who is praised, who gives gifts and does not accept them.'

should be kindled at the wedding, not on the division of the paternal estate (Gautama V, 7), are the so-called Grîhya ceremonies (Gautama V, 8-9).

23. Vasishtha XI, 46. The sacrifices enumerated in this Sûtra require three fires, and belong to the śrauta or vaitânika yagñas. The Shaddhotri mentioned here seems to be the animal sacrifice mentioned in the commentary on Kâtyâyana Śrauta-sûtra VI, 1, 36.

24. An ârûdhapatita, 'he who falls from a height to which he has climbed,' is, according to Govinda, an ascetic who slides back into civil life.

25. Vasishtha VI, 40; X, 30. Govinda explains śâthyam, 'hard-heartedness,' by saktau satyâm api paropakârâkaranam, 'not doing a kindness to others though one is able to do so.'

26. The dialogue mentioned is that between Sarmishthâ and

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 3, KANDIKĀ 5.

1. Bathing is suitable for (the practice of) austerity.

2. The libation to the manes (is offered) after the gods have been satisfied (with water).

3. They pour out water which gives strength, from one Tīrtha after the other.

4. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'With flowing, unconfined water twice-born men of the three castes shall satisfy the gods, R̥shis, and manes, when they have risen in the morning.'

5. 'They shall not offer (libations of water) confined (in tanks and wells). (If they do it), he who made the embankment, will obtain a share (of the merit of their devotion).'

6. 'Therefore let him avoid embankments (around tanks) and wells made by others.'

7. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Or, in times of distress—not as a rule—he may bathe in (water) confined (in tanks), after taking out three lumps (of earth); from a well (let him take three) lumps of clay and three jars of water.'

Devayānī, which occurs Mahābhārata I, 78. The verse quoted is the tenth of that Adhyāya, and agrees with ours, except that sutāham is read for athāham in the beginning of the second half verse.

5. 3. As to the Tīrthas, see above, I, 5, 8, 15-16.

5. Manu IV, 201.

6. Vishṇu LXIV, 1.

7. Vishṇu LXIV, 2. I read the verse as follows: uddhrītya vāpi trīṇ pindān kuryād āpatsu no sadā | niruddhāsu ka mrīṇpindān kûpât trīṇ abghaśmstatheti || The Dekhan MSS. read at the end of the second half verse, kûpāmstrīnavaśmstathâ; M. has kupâ-trīnabapaśmstathâ; while C. I. gives kûpât trīṇ ghaśmstathâ. Nandapandita on Vishṇu, loc. cit., seems to have had the latter

8. If he has accepted presents from one who is able to give presents to many, or from one whose presents ought not to be accepted, or if he has sacrificed for one for whom he ought not to have sacrificed, or if he has eaten food (given by a person) whose food must not be eaten, he shall mutter the Taratsamandīya.

9. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Those who improperly associate with (an outcast) teacher, those who improperly associate with (outcast) pupils, and those who improperly associate (with outcasts) by (accepting their) food or by (reciting) Mantras (for them), enter into deep darkness.'

10. Now (follow) the duties of a Snātaka.

11. After offering at the morning and at the evening (meals) with (a portion of) the food which he may have, the Vaisvadeva and the Bali-offerings, he shall honour, according to his ability, Brāhmaṇas, Kshatriyas, Vaisyas, and Sūdras (who may come to his house as) guests.

12. If he cannot (afford to give food) to many, let him give (something) to one who possesses good qualities,

13. Or to him who has come first.

14. If a Sūdra (has come as) a guest, he shall order him (to do some) work, (and feed him afterwards); reading, and to have changed it to 'kūpāt tu trin ghaṣṁstathā,' in order to save the metre. The sense remains the same.

8. Manu XI, 254. The text is found Rig-veda IX, 58. Govinda explains bahupratigrāhya, 'one who is able to give presents to many,' by bahubhrītyabharanākshama, 'one who is able to support many servants.'

10. Vasishṭha XII, 1.

11. Vasishṭha XI, 3-9.

14. Āpastamba II, 2, 4, 19.

15. Or (if he cannot spare much), he may give a first portion (agrya) to a Srotriya.

16. It is prescribed that the division (of the food) shall be made without detriment to (the interests of) those who daily receive a portion.

17. But he shall never eat without having given away (some small portion of the food).

18. Now they quote also two verses which have been proclaimed by (the goddess of) food: 'Him who, without giving me to the gods, the manes, his servants, his guests and friends, consumes what has been prepared and (thus), in his exceeding folly, swallows poison, I consume, and I am his death. But for him who, offering the Agnihotra, performing the Vaisvadeva, and honouring guests, eats, full of contentment, purity, and faith, what remains after feeding those whom he must support, I become ambrosia, and he (really) enjoys me.'

19. Presents of money must be given, according to one's ability, to good Brâhmanâs, Srotriyas, and Vedapârâgas, when they beg outside the Vêdi, for the sake of Gurus, in order to defray (the expenses of) their marriages, or of medicine, or when they are distressed for a livelihood, or desirous to offer a sacrifice, or engaged in studying, or on a journey, or have performed a Visvagit sacrifice.

15. Vasishṭha XI, 5. Govinda quotes a verse, according to which an agrya, 'first portion,' is equal to sixteen mouthfuls, each of the size of a peahen's egg.

16. Âpastamba II, 4, 9, 10-11. 'Those who daily receive a portion' (nityabhâktika), i. e. sons, wives, and so forth.—Govinda. But see also Âpastamba, loc. cit.

19. Gautama V, 20-21, and notes. 'A good Brâhmana, i. e. one who follows the rule of conduct.'—Govinda.

20. Cooked food (must be given) to other (beggars).

21. Let him eat (seated) in a pure, enclosed place, after having well washed his hands and feet and after having sipped water, respectfully receiving the food which is brought to him, keeping himself free from lust, anger, hatred, greed, and perplexity, (conveying the food into his mouth) with all his fingers and making no noise (during mastication).

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 3, KANDIKÂ 6.

1. Let him not put back into the dish a remnant of food.

2. If he eats (food), containing meat, fish, or sesamum, he shall (afterwards) wash and touch fire,

3. And bathe after sunset.

4. Let him avoid a seat, clogs, sticks for cleaning the teeth, and other (implements) made of Palâsa wood.

20. Gautama V, 22.

21. Vasishtha XII, 19-20; Vishnu LXVIII, 46. 'This is the rule for him who makes an offering to Âtman (i. e. performs the Prâzâgnihotra at his meal).—Govinda. See also below, II, 7, 12.

6. 1. 'I. e. he shall take up as much food only as he can swallow at one mouthful.'—Govinda.

2. The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS., including K., add madhu, 'honey,' after sesamum.

3. This and the following six Sûtras are left out in M. and the two copies of the commentary. If they have, nevertheless, been received into the text, the reason is that similar rules occur in all Dharmasûtras, and that Sûtra 3 begins with astamite, while astamaye occurs in Sûtra 10. It seems therefore probable that the writer of the MS. from which M. and Govinda's copies are derived, skipped over a line by mistake.

4-7. Vasishtha XII, 34-38.

5. Let him not eat (food placed) in his lap,
6. Nor on a chair.
7. He shall carry a staff, made of bamboo, and golden earrings.
8. Let him not rub one foot with the other while bathing, nor place the one on the other while standing,
9. Let him not wear a visible garland.
10. Let him not look at the sun when he rises or sets.
11. Let him not announce (the appearance of a rainbow) to another (man, saying), 'There is Indra's bow.'
12. If he points it out, he shall call it 'the jewelled bow.'
13. Let him not pass between the prakilaka and the beam at the town gate,
14. Nor let him pass between the two posts of a swing.
15. Let him not step over a rope to which a calf is tied.
16. Let him not step on ashes, bones, hair, chaff, potsherds, nor on a bathing-place (moist with) water.

8. Vishnu LXXI, 40.

9. Vasishtha XII, 39.

10. Vasishtha XII, 10.

11-12. Vasishtha XII, 32-33.

13. Govinda explains prakilaka by 'a piece of wood fastened at the town gate.' Etymologically it would mean 'a strong bolt.' Possibly the rule may be equivalent to Âpastamba I, 11, 31, 23, and mean that a Snâtaka is not to creep through the small door which is found in all Indian town gates, and left open after the gates have been shut.

14. Âpastamba I, 11, 31, 16.

15. Vasishtha XII, 9.

16. Gautama IX, 15; Manu IV, 132.

17. Let him not announce it to another (man if) a cow suckles (her calf).

18. Let him not say of (a cow which is) not a milch-cow, 'She is not a milch-cow.'

19. If he speaks (of such a one), let him say, 'It is one which will become a milch-cow.'

20. Let him not make empty, ill-sounding, or harsh speeches.

21. Let him not go alone on a journey,

22. Nor with outcasts, nor with a woman, nor with a Sûdra.

23. Let him not set out (on a journey) towards evening.

24. Let him not bathe (entirely) naked.

25. Let him not bathe at night.

26. Let him not cross a river swimming.

27. Let him not look down into a well.

28. Let him not look down into a pit.

29. Let him not sit down there, where another person may order him to rise.

30. Way must be made for a Brâhmana, a cow, a king, a blind man, an aged man, one who is suffering under a burden, a pregnant woman, and a weak man.

31. A righteous man shall seek to dwell in a village where fuel, water, fodder, sacred fuel, Kusa grass, and garlands are plentiful, access to which is

17. Vishnu LXXI, 62.

18-19. Gautama IX, 19.

20. Manu IV, 177; Vishnu LXXI, 57, 72, 74.

21-23. Manu IV, 140.

24. Gautama IX, 61.

26. Vasishtha XII, 45.

29. E. g. in the palace of a king, whence the attendants may drive him.

30. Vasishtha XIII, 58.

31. Gautama IX, 65.

easy, where many rich people dwell, which abounds in industrious people, where Āryans form the majority, and which is not easily entered by robbers.

32. 'A Brāhmaṇa who, having wedded a wife of the Sūdra caste and dwells during twelve years in a village where water (is obtainable) from wells only, becomes equal to a Sūdra.'

33. (If you say that) he who lives in a town and whose body is covered with the dust, (raised) by others, and whose eyes and mouth are filled with it, will obtain salvation, if he restrains himself, (I declare that) that is impossible.

34. 'The dust raised by carriages, horses, elephants, and cows, and (that which comes) from grain is pure, blamed is (that raised) by a broom, goats, sheep, donkeys, and garments.'

35. Let him honour those who are worthy of honour.

36. 'A Rishi, a learned man, a king, a bridegroom, a maternal uncle, a father-in-law, and an officiating priest are mentioned in the Smṛiti as worthy of the honey-mixture at certain times and occasions.'

37. 'A Rishi, a learned man, and a king must be

33. Āpastamba I, 11, 32, 21.

36. Vasiṣṭha XI, 1-2. A Rishi is, according to Govinda, a man who knows not only the text of the Mantras, but also their sense. But Baudhāyana, Gr̥hya-sūtra I, 11, 4, says that a man who knows, besides the Sākhā and its Āṅgas, the Kalpa also, is called Rishikalpa, i. e. one almost a Rishi. See also Āpastamba I, 2, 5, 5. A learned man (vidvas) is probably a student who has finished not only his vow, but learned the Veda, a so-called vidyā-snātaka, Āpastamba I, 11, 30, 3. Regarding the arghya or madhuparka, the honey-mixture, see Āpastamba II, 4, 8, 7-9.

37. Gautama V, 27-30. I read kriyārambhe varartvigau. The honoured whenever they come, a bridegroom and a priest at the beginning of the religious rites, a maternal uncle and a father-in-law when a year has elapsed since their last visit.'

38. 'Let him raise his right arm on (entering) the place where the sacred fire is kept, in the midst of a herd of cows, in the presence of Bráhmaṇas, at the daily recitation of the Veda, and at dinner.'

39. 'An upper garment must be worn on the following five occasions: during the daily study, during the evacuation (of excrements), when one bestows gifts, at dinner, and while one sips water.'

40. 'While one offers oblations in the fire, while one dines, bestows gifts, offers (food to deities or Gurus), and accepts presents, (the right hand) must be placed between the knees.'

41. 'The revealed texts declare, that the creatures depend on food, food is life; therefore gifts of food must be made. Food is the most excellent of sacrificial viands.'

42. 'Sin is removed by burnt offerings, burnt oblations are surpassed by (gifts of) food, and gifts of food by kind speeches. That (is declared) to us in the revealed texts.'

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 4, KANDIKÂ 7.

I. Now, therefore, we will declare the rule for (performing) the twilight devotions.

meaning is that a bridegroom is to receive the honey-mixture when he comes to his father-in-law's house for his wedding, and an officiating priest when he comes to perform a sacrifice.

38. Vishṇu LXXI, 60. Govinda adds that the act is performed as a salutation.

41. See e. g. Taittiriya Âraṇyaka VIII, 2.

2. Going to a (sacred) bathing-place, he shall bathe, in case he is impure; in case he is pure, he may, optionally, omit the bath. (But in either case) he shall wash his feet and hands. Sipping water and sprinkling himself, while he recites the (Rik-verses) containing the word Surabhi, the Ablīngas, those addressed to Varuṇa, the Hiranyavarnas, the Pāvamānis, the (sacred syllables called) Vyāhritis, and other purificatory (texts), he becomes pure (and fit to perform the twilight devotions).

3. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Submersion in water (and) bathing are prescribed for all the (four) castes. But sprinkling (water over the body), while Mantras (are being recited), is the particular (duty) of the twice-born.'

4. He who sprinkles himself (with water) at the beginning of any sacred rite,—before the time of the twilight devotions,—while reciting that same collection of purificatory (texts), becomes pure.

5. Now they quote also (the following rules): Seated, with his face to the west, on Darbha grass and holding Darbha blades in his (right) hand, which

7. 2. 'A sacred bathing-place, i. e. a river or pond outside the village.'—Govinda. The same author adds that the hands must be washed as far as the wrist, that while sipping water the worshipper is to repeat in the evening, Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 31, and in the morning X, 32, and that if he bathes, Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 1, 12, and other texts must be recited. The Rik containing the word Surabhi is found Taittirīya Saṃhitā I, 5, 11, 4, 7; the three Ablīngas, Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 1, 11; the four verses addressed to Varuṇa, Taittirīya Saṃhitā III, 4, 11, 4, and Taittirīya Āraṇyaka II, 4, 4. By the term Pāvamānis the Pavamānānuvāka, Taittirīya Brāhmaṇa I, 4, 8, is meant.

5. The injunction to turn the face to the west refers to the evening prayer; see also below, Sūtra 10.

is filled with water, he shall repeat the Sāvitrī one thousand times ;

6. Or (he may recite the verse) one hundred times, suppressing his breath ;

7. Or mentally ten times, adding the syllable Om at the beginning and at the end and the seven Vyāhritis.

8. And if he is tired by three suppressions of his breath (performed) with (the recitation of) the (Anuvāka called) Brahmaṛīdaya (the heart of Brahman, then let him repeat the Sāvitrī).

9. In the evening he worships (the sun) with the two (verses) addressed to Varuṇa, 'Hear this my call, O Varuṇa,' and 'Therefore I go to thee.'

10. The same (rules apply to the twilight devotion) in the morning, (but the worshipper) shall face the east and stand upright.

11. In the day-time he worships (the sun) with the two (verses) addressed to Mitra, 'The glory of Mitra, who supports men,' and 'Mitra causes men to join.'

12. Let him begin (the twilight devotion) in the

6. Govinda states that prāṇâyāmasaḥ, 'suppressing his breath,' has in this Sūtra no technical meaning.

7. Govinda says that the order to be observed in this case is as follows : First the syllable Om is to be recited, next the seven Vyāhritis, beginning with Bhûḥ and ending with Satyam, then the Sāvitrī, and finally again the syllable Om.

8. The Brahmaṛīdaya is Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 28. This Anuvāka may be repeated three times for each Prāṇâyāma (see Vasishṭha XXV, 13), or altogether nine times, and, if the worshipper is then tired, he may go on repeating the Sāvitrī without suppressing his breath.

9. Taittirīya Samhitā II, 1, 11, 6.

10. Gautama II, 11.

11. Taittirīya Samhitā III, 4, 11, 5.

12. Very early, i.e. when the stars are still visible ; see also Gautama II, 11, and note.

morning very early, and finish it when the sun has risen.

13. Let him begin (the twilight devotion) in the evening, when (the sun) has set, (and finish it) very soon after (the appearance of the stars);

14. And the complete observance of the twilight devotions (produces as its reward) an uninterrupted succession of days and nights.

15. Now they quote with reference to this (subject) also the following two verses, which have been proclaimed by the Lord of created beings (Pragâ-pati): 'How can those twice-born men be called Brâhmaṇas who do not perform their twilight devotions, in the morning and in the evening at the proper time? At his pleasure a righteous king may appoint those Brâhmaṇas who neglect to daily perform the twilight devotions, both at morn and at eve, to do the work of Sûdras.'

16. If the time for the (twilight devotion) is allowed to pass in the evening, (the offender shall) fast during the night; and if it is neglected in the morning, he shall fast during the (next) day.

17. He obtains (thereby) the (same) reward as if he had remained standing and sitting (in the twilight).

18. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Whatever sin (a man) may have committed with his organ, with his feet, with his arms, by thoughts or by speech, from (all) that he is freed by performing the twilight devotion in the evening.'

19. (The worshipper) becomes also connected

14. The day and night will not be cut off from his existence.

16. Vasishṭha XX, 4-5.

18. Vasishṭha XXVI, 2.

(thereby) with the (next) night, and Varuṇa will not seize him.

20. In like manner he becomes free from the sin committed during the night by worshipping in the morning.

21. He is also connected with the (next) day, Mitra protects him and Âditya leads him up to heaven.

22. It is declared in the Veda, 'A Brâhmana who in this same manner daily worships in the twilight, both at morn and at eve and, being sanctified by the Brahman, becoming one with the Brahman, and resplendent through the Brahman, follows the rules of the Sâstra, gains the heaven of Brahman.'

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 5, KANDIKÂ 8.

1. Now, after washing his hands, he shall take his waterpot and a clod of earth, go to a (sacred) bathing-place and thrice clean his feet (with earth and water) and thrice his body.

2. Now some say, 'One must not enter a burial-ground, water, a temple, a cowpen, nor a place where Brâhmanas (sit) without having cleaned one's feet.'

20. Vasishṭha XXVI, 3.

22. Brahman means here the Veda, the Sâvitṛ, and the universal soul.

8. 1. Vishṇu LXIV, 18. This Adhyâya contains the rules for bathing, and the subject is introduced, as Govinda observes, because in the preceding chapter II, 4, 7, 2, it has been said that an impure person must bathe before he performs the twilight devotions. Govinda also states that the word ka, 'and,' which stands after mṛitpindam, 'a clod,' indicates that gomaya, 'cowdung,' must also be employed.

3. Then he enters the water, (reciting the following verse): 'I take refuge with gold-horned Varuna, give me at my request (O Varuna) a purifying bathing-place. May Indra, Varuna, Brihaspati, and Savitri again and again cleanse me from all sin which I have committed by eating the food of unholy men, by receiving gifts from the wicked, and from all evil which I have done by thoughts, speeches, or deeds.'

4. Then he takes up water in his joined hands, (saying), 'May the waters and the herbs be propitious to us.'

5. (Next) he pours (the water) out in that direction in which an enemy of his dwells, (saying), 'May they work woe to him who hates us and whom we hate.'

6. Then he sips water, and thrice makes the water eddy around himself turning from the left to the right (and saying), 'May that which is hurtful, which is impure, and which is inauspicious in the water be removed.'

7. After having submerged himself and having emerged from the water,

8. (Acts of) personal purification, washing the clothes by beating them on a stone and sipping

3. The verse is found Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 1, 12.

4. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 1, 11.

5. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka, loc. cit. This and the following Sûtras, down to II, 6, 11, 15, are wanting in the Gugarât and Dekhan MSS. except in K.

6. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 1, 13.

7. Govinda points out that the completion of this Sûtra is to be found in Sûtra 10. He adds that Baudhâyana inserted Sûtras 8-9 in the middle, because he was afraid to forget the rules contained in them.

8. Vishnu LXIV, 10, 11.

water are not (permitted to the worshipper) as long as he is in the water.

9. If (the water used for bathing) has been (taken from a) confined (place, such as a well), he worships it with the following (Mantra): 'Adoration to Agni, the lord of the waters; adoration to Indra; adoration to Varuna; adoration to Vârunî; adoration to the waters.'

10. After having ascended the bank and having sipped water, let him again sip water, though he has done so before, (and recite the following Mantras): 'May water purify the earth, may the purified earth purify me, may Brahmanaspati (and) Brahman purify, may the purified (earth) purify me. May water purify me, (taking away) all (the guilt which I incurred by eating) remnants of food, and forbidden food, (by committing) evil deeds, (by) receiving gifts from wicked men, Svâhâ!'

11. Making two Pavitras he rubs (his body) with water. Having rubbed himself, (reciting the) three (verses), 'Ye waters are,' &c., the four (verses), 'The golden-coloured, pure, purifying,' &c., (and) the Anuvâka, 'He who purifies,' &c., he performs, stepping back into the water, three Prânâyâmas with the Aghamarshana (hymn); then he ascends the bank, squeezes (the water) out of his dress, puts on garments which have been washed and dried in the air and which are not the worse for wear, sips water,

9. Taittirîya Âranyaka X, 1, 12.

10. Taittirîya Âranyaka X, 23. Govinda says that the rule is intended to indicate also that a person who recites sacred texts while sipping water, must do so only after having taken water once before. K. inserts before this Mantra, also Anuvâka 22.

11. Vishnu LXIV, 13-14; 18-19. The Vedic passages intended sits down on Darbha grass, and, holding Darbha grass (in his hands), recites, facing the east, the Gâyatrî one thousand times, (or) one hundred times, or any number of times, or at least twelve times.

12. Then he worships the sun (reciting the following Mantras): 'Out of darkness we,' &c., 'Up that bright,' &c., 'That eye which is beneficial to the gods,' &c., (and) 'He who rose,' &c.

13. Now they quote also (the following maxim): 'The syllable Om, the Vyâhr̥tis, and the Sâvitṛī, these five Veda-offerings daily cleanse the Brâhmaṇa from guilt.'

14. Being purified by the five Veda-offerings, he next satiates the gods (with water, saying),

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 5, KANDIKÂ 9.

1. 'I satiate the deities of the eastern gate, Agni, Pragâpati, Soma, Rudra, Aditi, Br̥haspati, together with the lunar mansions, with the planets, with the days and nights, and with the Muhûrtas; Om, I also satiate the Vasus ; are found Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 1, 5, 1; V, 6, 1, 1; and Taitt. Brâhmaṇa I, 4, 8. Pavitras, i. e. blades of Kusa grass. 'He performs three Prâṇâyâmas with the A hamarshana hymn (Rig-veda X, 190),' i. e. he thrice suppresses his breath (prâṇâyâma) and recites during each suppression the Aghamarshana three times, just as on other occasions the Gâyatrî is recited three times.

12. The first Mantra is found Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 1, 7, 4; the third and the fourth Taitt. Âranyaka IV, 42, 32-33.

14. Vishṇu XLIV, 24. The ceremony is the so-called Tarpana, which is usually described in the Gr̥hya-sûtras, e. g. Sâṅkhâya IV, 9-10, and the quotations in Professor Oldenberg's notes, Indische Studien XV, 152.

9. 1. This and the next Kandîkâs are given in full by K. only. M. gives the first and last words of both, the commentary the

2. 'Om, I satiate the deities of the southern gate, the Pitrīs, Yama, Bhaga, Savitri, Tvashtri, Vāyu, Indrāgni, together with the lunar mansions, with the planets, with the days and nights, and with the Muhūrtas; Om, I also satiate the Rudras.

3. 'Om, I satiate the deities of the western gate, Mitra, Indra, the Mahāpitris, the Waters, all the gods, Brahman, Vishnu, together with the lunar mansions, with the planets, with the days and nights, and with the Muhūrtas; Om, I also satiate the Ādityas.

4. 'Om, I satiate the deities of the northern gate, the Vasus, Varuna, Āga-ekapād, Ahibudhnya, Ushas, the two Asvins, Yama, together with

5. 'Om, I satiate all the gods; the Sādhyas; Brahman; Pragāpati; the four-faced god; Hiranyagarbha; Svayambhū; the male attendants of Brahman; Parameshthin; the female attendants of Brahman; Agni; Vāyu; Varuna; Sūrya; the moon; the lunar mansions; Sadyogāta; Bhūh-purusha; Bhuvaḥ-purusha; Suvaḥ-purusha; Bhūh; Bhuvaḥ; Suvaḥ; Mahaḥ; Ganaḥ; Tapaḥ; Satya.

6. 'Om, I satiate the god Bhava; Sarva; Īsāna; Pasupati; Rudra; Ugra; Bhīmadeva; Mahādeva; the wife of the god Bhava; of the god Sarva; of the god Īsāna; of the god Pasupati; of the god Rudra; of the god Ugra; of Bhīmadeva; of Mahādeva; the son of Bhava; of Sarva; of Īsāna; of Pasupati; of beginning of 9 and the end of 10 only. The text of K. is probably interpolated, as it seems impossible that Baudhāyana could have mentioned his successors, Āpastamba and Satyāshādha Hiranyakesin, whose names occur below, II, 5, 9, 14. On the other hand, it is not doubtful that the number of Mantras must nevertheless have been very large, as the numeration in M. shows that they filled two entire Kandikās.

Rudra ; of Ugra ; of Bhṛmadeva ; of Mahādeva ; Om, I also satiate the Rudras ; the attendants of Rudra.

7. 'Om, I satiate Vighna ; Vināyaka ; Vīra ; Sthūla ; Varada ; Hastimukha ; Vakratunda ; Ekadanta ; Lambodara ; the male attendants of Vighna ; the female attendants of Vighna.

8. 'Om, I satiate Sanatkumāra ; Skanda ; Indra ; Shashī ; Shānmukha ; Visākha ; Mahāsena ; Subrahmanya ; the male attendants of Skanda ; the female attendants of Skanda.

9. 'Om, I satiate Āditya ; Soma ; Angāraka ; Budha ; Brīhaspati ; Sukra ; Sanaiskara ; Rāhu ; Ketu.

10. 'Om, I satiate Kesava ; Nārāyaṇa ; Mādhava ; Govinda ; Vishṇu ; Madhusūdana ; Trivikrama ; Vāmana ; Śrīdhara ; Hrishīkeśa ; Padmanābha ; Dāmodara ; the goddess Śrī ; the goddess Sarasvatī ; Pushī ; Tushī ; Vishṇu ; Garutmat ; the male attendants of Vishṇu ; the female attendants of Vishṇu.

11. 'Om, I satiate Yama ; Yamarāga ; Dharma ; Dharmarāga ; Kāla ; Nīla ; Mrityu ; Mrityuṅgaya ; Vaivasvata ; Kītragupta ; Audumbara ; the male attendants of Vaivasvata ; the female attendants of Vaivasvata.

12. 'Om, I satiate the gods of the earth ; Kāśyapa ; Antariksha ; Vidyā ; Dhanvantari ; the male attendants of Dhanvantari ; the female attendants of Dhanvantari.'

13. Next, passing the sacrificial thread round the neck, (he offers the following libations) :

14. 'Om, I satiate the Rishis ; the great Rishis ; the best Rishis ; the Brahmarshis ; the divine Rishis ; the royal Rishis ; the Sutarshis ; the Seven Rishis ;

the Rishis of the Kândas (of the Yagur-veda); the Rishikas; the wives of the Rishis; the sons of the Rishis; Kanva Baudhâyana; Âpastamba, the author of the Sûtra; Satyâshâdha Hiranyakesin; Vâgasaneyin Yâgñavalkya; Âsvalâyana Saunaka; Vyâsa; the syllable Om; the Vyâhrîtis; the Sâvitri; the Gâyatri; the Khandas; the Rig-veda; the Yagur-veda; the Sâma-veda; the Atharvângirasa; the Itihâsa and Purâna; all the Vedas; the servants of all gods; all beings.'

15. Then, passing the sacrificial string over the right shoulder, (he offers the following libations):

PRASNA II, ADHÂYA 5, KANDIKÂ 10.

1. 'Om, I satiate the fathers, Svadhâ, adoration! the grandfathers; the great-grandfathers; the mothers; the grandmothers; the great-grandmothers; the maternal grandfathers; the maternal grandmother; the mother's grandmother; the mother's great-grandmother.

2. 'Om, I satiate the teacher (âkârya), Svadhâ, adoration! the wife of the teacher; the friends; the wives of the friends; the relatives; the wives of the relatives; the inmates of the house (amâtya); the wives of the inmates of the house; all; the wives of all.'

3. He pours the water out from the several Tîrthas (of the hand sacred to the several deities).

4. (He recites at the end of the rite the following

3. I. e. the water must be poured out in accordance with the rule given above.

4. Vâgasaneyi Samhitâ II, 34. The translation of the Mantra follows Govinda's explanation.

Mantra): '(Ye waters), who bring food, ambrosia, clarified butter, milk, and barley-gruel, are food for the manes; satiate my ancestors! May you be satiated, may you be satiated!'

5. Let him not perform ceremonies in honour of the gods while his clothes are wet, or while he is dressed in one garment only;

6. Nor those connected with the manes. That (is the opinion) of some (teachers).

PRAŚNA II, ADHYĀYA 6, KANDIKĀ 11.

1. Now these five great sacrifices, which are also called the great sacrificial sessions, are the sacrifice to be offered to the gods, the sacrifice to be offered to the manes, the sacrifice to be offered to all beings, the sacrifice to be offered to men, (and) the sacrifice to be offered to Brahman,

2. Let him daily offer (something to the gods with the exclamation) Svāhā, be it only a piece of fuel. Thereby he performs that sacrifice to the gods.

3. Let him daily offer (something to the manes with the exclamation) Svadhā, be it only a vessel filled with water. Thereby he performs that sacrifice to the manes.

4. Let him daily pay reverence to (all beings) endowed with life. Thereby he performs that sacrifice to the beings.

11. 1. This and the next four Sūtras agree almost literally with Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 6, 1. See also Taitt. Āranyaka II, 10; Āpastamba I, 4, 12, 15-13, 1.

4. Govinda says that the Mantra is to be 'bhūtebhyo namaḥ, adoration to all beings,' and adds that some consider the first three

5. Let him daily give food to Brāhmanas, be it only roots, fruit, or vegetables. Thereby he performs that sacrifice to men.

6. Let him daily recite the Veda privately, be it only the syllable Om or the Vyāhritis. Thereby he performs that sacrifice to be offered to Brahman.

7. 'The private recitation of the Veda is, indeed, the sacrifice to Brahman. At that sacrifice to Brahman speech, forsooth, (takes the place of) the Guhû, the internal organ (that of) the Upabhrît, the eye (that of) the Dhruvâ, the understanding (that of) the Sruva, truth (that of) the final bath, heaven (is) the conclusion of the sacrifice. He who, knowing this, daily recites the Veda to himself, gains as much heavenly bliss as, and more than, he who gives away this whole earth that is filled with wealth, and imperishable (beatitude), and conquers death. Therefore the Veda should be recited in private. Thus speaks the Brāhmaṇa.'

8. Now they quote also (the following passage): 'If, well anointed, well fed, and lying on a comfortable couch, one recites (the portion of the Veda referring to) any sacrifice, one has offered it thereby.'

Mahāyagñas to be performed by the Vaisraveda and the Bali-offering, while others enjoin their separate performance.

7. Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 6, 2. See also Taitt. Âranyaka II, 17. K. reads dhṛitir dhruvâ, 'the firm resolve (takes the place of) the Dhruvâ,' which is apparently a correction made according to the Âranyaka. According to the commentary the text of the last portion of the quotation runs thus, 'yāvantaṃ ha vâ imāṃ vittasya pûrnāṃ dadat svargam lokam gayati tāvantaṃ lokam gayati bhûyâṃsam kâkshayyam kâpa mrityum gayati ya evaṃ vidvân,' &c. M. and K. do not give the whole passage. The published text of the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa slightly differs from Govinda's version.

8. Satapatha-brāhmaṇa XI, 5, 7, 3-4.

9. Some (teachers) declare (that there is a text) which teaches a fourfold division of these sacred duties. (But) as no (other meaning is) perceptible, (the text) 'Four paths,' &c., refers to sacrificial rites.

10. (Viz.) to Ishās, animal sacrifices, Soma sacrifices, and Darvīthomas.

11. The following (Rik) declares that, 'Four paths, leading to the world of the gods, go severally from the earth to heaven. All ye gods, place us on that among them which will gain us undecaying prosperity.'

12. The student, the householder, the hermit in the woods, the ascetic (constitute the four orders).

13. A student (shall) obey his teacher until death.

9. I read the text as follows, 'tasya ha vā etasya dharmasya taturdhā bhedaṁ eka āhuḥ.' M. has bhedakam, the I. O. copy of the commentary bhedasāṅkām, and K. tasya ha vā etasya yagñasya taturdhā bhūtam eka āhuḥ. Below in the commentary on Sūtra 27, Govinda repeats the latter part of this Sūtra in the form which I have adopted. The discussion which begins here is the same as that which occurs Āpastamba II, 9, 23, 3-24, 15.

11. Taittirīya Samhitā V, 7, 2, 3.

12. K. omits this Sūtra. After it M. and K. have the following passage: 'brahma-kārino 'tyantam ātmānam upasamgrīhyā 'kāryān bruvate vane srāmyantyeke [yāntyete, K.] savaneshvapa upasprī-santo vanyenānnenaikāgnim [nyenānnena naikāgnim, K.; vānye-naikānāñ, M.] guhvānāḥ [guhvās, M.] satyasya ike karmāni [karmāni, M.] anagnayo 'niketanāḥ [tvāḥ kam, K.] kaupīnāḥ kṣādanā varshāsv ekasthā uddhrītaparipūtābhir adbhīḥ kāryam [apa-kāryam, M.] kurvānāḥ [kurvānās tatrodāharanti, K.] sannamusalē vyaṅgāre nivrītasarāvasampāte bhikshantāḥ sarvataḥ parimoksham [parimeke, M.] apavidhya vaidikāni karmāny abhayataḥ parikkṣinnā madhyamam padam upasliṣhyāmaha iti vadanto.' The commentary gives a few portions of this passage further on. Irrespective of minor corruptions, it gives no sense in the place where it stands, and it seems probable that we have to deal with a confused and badly corrupted text, which Govinda arranged either as seemed good to him, or on the authority of better MSS.

14. A hermit is he who regulates his conduct entirely according to the Institutes proclaimed by Vikhanas.

15. A Vaikhâṇasa (shall live) in the forest, subsisting on roots and fruit, practising austerities and bathing at morn, noon, and eve; he shall kindle a fire according to the Srâmanaka (rule); he shall eat wild-growing (vegetables and grain) only; he shall worship gods, manes, Bhûtas, men, and Rishis; he shall receive hospitably (men of) all (castes) except those (with whom intercourse is) forbidden; he may even use the flesh of animals killed by carnivorous beasts; he shall not step on ploughed (land); and he shall not enter a village; he shall wear his hair in braids, and dress in (garments made of) bark or skins; he shall not eat anything that has been hoarded for more than a year.

16. An ascetic shall leave his relatives and, not attended by any one nor procuring any property, depart (from his house performing the customary ceremony) according to the rule.

17. He shall go into the forest (and live there).

18. He shall shave his hair excepting the top-lock.

15. This passage, which Govinda gives as one Sûtra, agrees word for word with Gautama III, 26–35, except in the beginning, where Gautama omits ‘bathing at morn, noon, and eve.’ The MSS. all read bhaiksham, ‘begged food,’ instead of baishkam, ‘the flesh of animals slain by carnivorous beasts.’ But Govinda’s explanation leaves no doubt as to the correctness of the latter reading. The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS., including K., read agrâmyabhogî || agrâmyabhogî.

16. I adopt the readings of the Dekhan MSS., aparigrahaḥ (for apratigrahaḥ) and pravrajet (for parivrajet). The rule for the ceremony is given below, II, 10, 17.

18. This is Govinda’s explanation of sikhâmundah, the reading of all MSS.

19. He shall wear a cloth to cover his nakedness.
20. He shall reside in one place during the rainy season.
21. He shall wear a dress dyed yellowish-red.
22. He shall go to beg when the pestle lies motionless, when the embers have been extinguished, and when the cleaning of the dishes has been finished.
23. With the three means of punishment, (viz.) words, thoughts, and acts, he shall not injure created beings.
24. He shall carry a cloth for straining water for the sake of purification.
25. He shall perform the necessary purifications with water which has been taken out (of a well or tank) and has been strained.
26. (Ascetics shall) say, 'Renouncing the works taught in the Veda, cut off from both (worlds), we attach ourselves to the central sphere (Brahman).'
27. But the venerable teacher (declares) that there is one order only, because the others do not beget offspring.
28. With reference to this matter they quote also (the following passage): 'There was, forsooth, an Āsura, Kapila by name, the son of Prahlāda.

20 and 22. These two Sūtras are omitted in K. and M., which give them in the passage following Sūtra 12, as well as in the Dekhan and Gugarāt MSS.

24. See below, II, 10, 17, 11. Govinda explains pavitra, 'a cloth for straining water,' by 'a bunch of Kusa grass for removing insects from the road.'

25. According to Govinda such water is to be used for washing off the stains of urine &c., not for drinking.

26. This Sūtra is again omitted in the MSS. of the text. M. and K. give it in the passage following Sūtra 12.

27. Gautama III, 36.

Striving with the gods, he made these divisions. A wise man should not take heed of them.'

29. Because no (other meaning is) perceptible, (the text) 'Four paths,' &c., refers to sacrificial rites, (viz.) to Ishṭis, animal sacrifices, Soma sacrifices, Darvīthomas.

30. With respect to this (question the following verse also) is quoted: 'That eternal greatness of the Brāhmaṇa is neither increased by works, nor diminished. The soul knows the nature of that (greatness); knowing that, he is not stained by evil deeds.'

31. If he says that, (let him reflect on the following verse): 'He who knows not the Veda, does not at death think of that great, all-perceiving soul, through which the sun, resplendent with brilliancy, gives warmth, and the father has a father through the son at his birth from the womb.'

32. (Moreover), 'Those who, being neither true Brāhmaṇas nor performers of Soma sacrifices, work not for that which is near, nor for that which is far, take hold of the word and with sinful (speech) ignorantly perform the rites.'

33. There are innumerable (passages in the Veda) which refer to the debts (to be paid by a Brāhmaṇa), such as, 'May I obtain, O Agni, immor-

30-31. Taitt. Brāhmaṇa III, 12, 9, 7.

32. Rig-veda X, 71, 9. My rendering of the difficult verse is merely tentative, and I have left out the word sirīḥ, for which I am as little able as other Sanskritists to offer a safe explanation. The general meaning of the verse, I think, has been rightly understood by Sāyana and Govinda, who both say that it contains a reproach, addressed to those Brāhmaṇas who, contented with the letter of the Veda, do not master its meaning.

33-34. The commentary omits these two Sūtras, which, however, seem necessary for the completion of the discussion. The talities through offspring ;' 'A Brāhmaṇa on being born, (owes) a son to his ancestors,' &c.

34. 'Those dwell with us, who fulfil the following (duties), the study of the three Vedas, the studentship, the procreation of offspring, faith, austerity, sacrificing, and giving gifts ; he who praises other (duties) becomes dust and perishes.'

PRAŚNA II, ADHYĀYA 7, KANDIKĀ 12.

1. Now we will explain the oblations (offered) to the vital air (prāṇa) by Sālīnas (householders) and Yāyāvaras (vagrants), who sacrifice to the soul.

2. At the end of all the necessary (daily rites), let him sit down, facing the east, in a place that has been well cleaned and smeared with cowdung ; next let him worship that prepared (food) which is being brought, (saying), 'Bhūh, Bhuvah, Svah, Om,' (and then) remain silent.

3. (Next) he pours water round the food which has been placed (before him), turning his right hand towards it, and reciting the Mahāvyaḥrītis ; (afterwards), continuing to hold (the dish) with his left hand, he first drinks water, (saying), 'Thou art a substratum for ambrosia,' and (finally) offers five oblations of food to the vital airs, (reciting the second occurs also Āpastamba II, 9, 24, 8. Though Baudhāyana does not express himself as clearly as Āpastamba, he disapproves, as it would seem, like the latter, of the opinion of those who gave an undue preference to asceticism at the expense of married life, the order of the householders.

12. 1. The Prāṇāgnihoṭra is alluded to by Āpastamba II, 7, 17, 16. Regarding the terms Sālīna and Yāyāvara, see below, III, 1, 3-4.

3. The Mahāvyaḥrītis are the Mantras given Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 2. The second Mantra is found Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 32, and texts), 'Full of reverence, I offer ambrosia to Prâna; mayest thou propitiously enter me, not in order to burn me. To Prâna, Svâhâ!' &c.

4. After offering the five oblations of food to the vital airs, let him finish his meal silently. Meditating in his heart on the lord of created beings, let him not emit speech while (eating).

5. If he emits speech, he shall mutter 'Bhûh, Bhuvah, Svah, Om,' and afterwards continue to eat.

6. Now they quote also (the following rule): 'If he sees (bits of) skin, hair, nail-(parings), insects, or the dung of rats (in his food), he shall take out a lump, sprinkle that spot with water, scatter ashes on it, again sprinkle it with water, and use (the remainder of the food), after it has been declared fit (for use).'

7. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He shall eat, seated with his face towards the east, silent, not despising his food, not scattering (fragments on the ground), and solely attend (to his dinner); and, after he has eaten, he shall touch fire.'

8. He shall not cut off with his teeth (pieces from) eatables (that must be swallowed) entire, (such as) cakes, bulbs, roots, fruit, and flesh.

9. (Let him) not (eat) to repletion.

10. After (dinner) he shall drink water, (reciting the text), 'Thou art a covering for ambrosia,' and stroke (the region of) the heart, (saying), 'Thou art the bond that connects the vital airs; (thou art) the third ibid. X, 34. The translation of the Mantras follows Govinda, who somewhat differs from Sâyana.

6. Vasishtha XIV, 23.

7. Vishnu LXVIII, 40-43.

9. Vishnu LXVIII, 47.

10. The first text is found Taittiriya Âranyaka X, 35, and the second ibid. X, 37. I translate the first according to Govinda.

Rudra and Death ; enter me ; mayest thou grow through this food.'

11. After sipping water a second time, he allows (the drops from) the hand to flow on the big toe of his right foot (and recites the following text): 'May the male be pleased, he who is of the size of a thumb, who occupies (a space of the size of) a thumb, who is the lord of the whole world, masterful, and the enjoyer of the universe.'

12. Let him perform the subsequent consecration (anumantrana) of the (food which has been) offered, with raised arms, (and let him recite) the five (texts beginning), 'With faith, worshipping Prâna, (I have) offered ambrosia ; mayest thou increase Prâna through this food,'

13. (And let him address the soul with the last text of the Anuvâka), '(May) my soul (gain) immortality in the universal soul.'

14. And let him (meditate on his) soul (as) united with the imperishable (syllable Om).

15. He who sacrifices to the soul, surpasses him who offers all sacrifices.

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 7, KANDIKĀ 13.

I. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'As cotton and reeds, thrown into a fire, blaze up, even so all the guilt of him who sacrifices to the soul is consumed ;'

11. Taittiriya Âraṇyaka X, 38. The individual soul which resides in the heart is here identified with the universal soul ; see also Kâṭhaka Upanishad IV, 12.

12-13. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 36.

14. The syllable Om is Brahman, the universal soul.

2. (Moreover), 'He who eats merely (in order to satisfy his own hunger) reaps only guilt. In vain (the fool) takes food.'

3. Let him daily, both in the morning and in the evening, sacrifice in this manner;

4. Or (he may offer) water in the evening.

5. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Let him first feed his guests, next the pregnant women, then the infants and the aged, thereafter the distressed and particularly the diseased. But he who eats first, without having given (food) to those (persons) according to the rule, does not know that he is being eaten. He does not eat, (but) he is eaten.'

6. 'Let him eat silently what remains, (after he has given their portions) to the manes, the gods, the servants, his parents, and his Gurus; that is declared to be the rule of the sacred law.'

7. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Eight mouthfuls are the meal of an ascetic, sixteen that of a hermit in the woods, thirty-two that of a householder, and an unlimited (quantity) that of a student.'

8. 'An Agnihotrin, a draught-ox, and a student, those three can do their work only if they eat (much); without eating (much) they cannot do it.'

9. 'A householder, or a student who practises

13. 2. Rig-veda X, 117, 6, and Taittiriya Brâhmana II, 8, 8, 3. The words have been transposed.

5. Vasishṭha XI, 6-8; Manu III, 114-115. I write, with the Dekhan and Gugarât MSS., na sa bhuñkte, sa bhuḡyate, instead of the senseless reading of M. and the commentary, na sa bhuñkte na bhuḡyate.

6. Vasishṭha XI, 11.

7-8. Âpastamba II, 4, 9, 13.

9-10. Âpastamba II, 4, 9, 12, and note on II, 1, 1, 2.

austerity by fasting, becomes an Avakīrṇin through the omission of the sacrifice to the vital airs;'

10. Except when he performs a penance. In the case of a penance that (fasting) is the rule.

11. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'He who never eats between the morning and the evening meals, (obtains the same reward as he who) constantly fasts.'

12. 'As in case one obtains no materials (for the sacrifice), one must mutter the sacred texts to be recited at the Agnihotra, offered in the three fires, even so one should mutter the texts to be recited at the Prâṇāgnihotra, when one is prevented from dining.'

13. 'He who acts thus, will become one with Brahman.' Thus spake Pragâpati (the lord of created beings).

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 8, KANDIKĀ 14.

1. The offering to the manes secures long life and heaven, is worthy of praise and a rite ensuring prosperity.

2. Persons who sanctify the company are, a Trimadhu, a Trinâkiketa, a Trisuparna, one who keeps five fires, and one who knows the six Āṅgas, one who performs the vow called Siras, one who knows the Gyeshthaśāman, (and) a Snâtaka;

3. On failure of these, one who knows the (texts called) Rahasya.

14. 1. Āpastamba II, 7, 16, 1-2.

2. Āpastamba II, 7, 17, 22; Vasishtha III, 19. Govinda states that the Atharvavedins know the vow called Siras; see also Vasishtha XXVI, 12, and note.

3. Govinda says that persons acquainted with the Rahasyas or

4. The Rîk-verses, the Yagus-formulas, and the Sâmans (give) lustre to a funeral offering. Therefore he may feed (on that occasion) even a Sapinda relation who (knows) those (texts).

5. Let him who feeds (Brâhmanas at a funeral sacrifice) cause them to hear successively the Rakshoghna Sâmans, the Yagus-formulas (called) Svadhâvat, the Rîk-verses (called) Madhu, and the (texts called) Pavitrâs.

6. Having invited on the day before (the Srâddha), or just in the morning, virtuous, pure (men), such as Trimadhus, who know the Vedângas and the sacred texts, who are not related by marriage, nor members of the same family, nor connected through the Veda, at least three, (but always) an odd number, the (sacrificer) makes them sit down on prepared seats, covered with Darbha grass, facing the east or the north.

7. Then he offers to them water mixed with sesamum seed, adorns them with scents and garlands (and says), 'I wish to offer oblations in the fire.'

Âraṇyakas are preferable to those mentioned in the preceding Sûtra, and thus the order must be reversed.

4. Âpastamba II, 7, 17, 5.

5. The texts on which the Rakshoghna Sâmans are based occur Sâma-veda I, 1, 1, 3, 4-6; the Svadhâvat Yagus, Taitt. Brâhmana I, 3, 10, 2; the Madhu Rîkas, Rig-veda I, 90, 6; and the three Pavitrâs, Taitt. Brâhmana I, 4, 8, 2.

6. Âpastamba II, 7, 14, 5. All the MSS., including those of the commentary, read yonigotramantrasambandhân instead of yonigotramantrâsambandhân. But the explanation of gotrasambandhân by asagotrân shows still a faint trace of the former existence of the reading which I have restored conjecturally and translated. Its correctness is proved by the parallel passage of Âpastamba.

7. Vishnu LXXIII, 12-13; Manu III, 208-211. The Agnimukha

When he has received permission (to do so), he heaps fuel on the sacred fire, scatters Kusa grass around it, performs (all the ceremonies) up to the end of the Agnimukha, and offers three burnt oblations of food only, (reciting the following texts): 'To Soma, accompanied by the manes, Svâhâ!' 'To Yama, accompanied by the Ângiras and by the manes, Svâhâ!' 'To Agni, who carries the offerings to the manes, who causes sacrifices to be well performed, Svâhâ!'

8. He shall make these three oblations with food only which has been sprinkled with the remainder of the (clarified butter).

9. Let him give a cake of food to the birds.

10. For it is declared in the Veda, 'The manes roam about in the shape of birds.'

11. Next he touches the (other food) with his hand and with the thumb,

12. (And recites the following texts): 'Fire sees thee, who art co-extensive with the earth, the Rik-verses are thy greatness, lest the gift be in vain; the earth is the vessel for thee, the sky the cover; I offer thee in the mouth of Brahman, I offer thee in the Prâṇa and the Apâna of learned Brâhmaṇas; thou art imperishable, mayest thou never fail to (the manes of our) fathers yonder, in the other world.' 'Air hears thee, who art co-extensive with the middle sphere, is a term denoting all the preliminaries which precede the Pradhânahoma of a ceremony. The Dekhan and Gugarât MSS. read âgyasya instead of annasyaiva.

8. Clarified butter is necessary for the rites included in the Agnimukha.

12. The Mantras are addressed to the food which is to be offered.

the Yagus-formulas are thy greatness, lest the gift be in vain; the earth is the vessel for thee, the sky the cover; mayest thou never fail to the (manes of our) grandfathers yonder, in the other world.' 'The sun reveals thee, who art co-extensive with the sky, the Sāmāns are thy greatness, lest the gift be in vain; mayest thou never fail to the (manes of our) great-grandfathers yonder, in the other world.'

PRASNA II, ADHYĀYA 8, KANDIKĀ 15.

1. Now indeed (that) happens (also which the following verses teach):

2. 'Let him sprinkle that food with the remainder of the burnt oblations. But what is given without (touching it with) the thumb does not gladden the manes.'

3. 'The malevolent Asuras seek an opportunity (to snatch away) that food intended for the manes, which is not supported with both hands.'

4. 'The Yātudhānas and Pisāṅgas, who receive no share, steal the food if sesamum grains are not scattered (on the seats of the guests), and the Asuras (take it) if (the host) is under the sway of anger.'

5. 'If a person dressed in reddish clothes mutters prayers, offers burnt oblations, or receives gifts, the sacrificial viands, offered at sacrifices to the gods or to the manes, do not reach the deities.'

15. 2. Manu III, 215. See also above, II, 8, 14, 10.

3. Vasishṭha XI, 25.

4. Vishṇu LXXIII, 11; Manu III, 229.

5. Govinda states that the rule is intended to teach that the sacrificer and the guests at a Śrāddha must be dressed in white,

6. 'If gifts are given or received without (touching them with) the thumb and, if one sips water standing, (the performer of the act) is not benefited thereby.'

7. At the beginning and at the end (of a Srâddha) water must be given (to the guests).

8. In every case the muttering (of sacred texts) and the other (necessary acts must be performed) according to the rule.

9. The remaining (rules) have been prescribed (in the section) on the burnt oblations on Ashṭakâ (days).

10. 'He shall feed two (Brâhmanas) at the offering to the gods and three at the offering to the manes, or a single man on either occasion. Even a very wealthy man shall not be anxious (to entertain) a large company.'

11. 'A large company destroys these five (advantages), the respectful treatment (of the invited guests, the propriety of) time and place, purity and (the selection of) virtuous Brâhmaṇa (guests); therefore he shall not invite (a large number).'

12. 'In front (feed) the fathers of the (sacrificer), to the left the grandfathers, to the right the great-grandfathers, and at the back those who pare off (portions) from the cakes.'

and that ascetics are not to be invited. But see Vasishṭha XI, 17, 34.

7. Vishṇu LXXIII, 12, 27, and above, II, 8, 14, 6.

9. Baudhâyana Grîhya-sûtra II, 17, 18.

10-11. Vasishṭha XI, 27-28.

12. In the beginning of the verse I read with M. and the I. O. copy of the commentary urastah pitaras tasya, and in the end with the Dekhan and Gugarât MSS. pindatakshakâh. M. reads pindatarkyâ, and the copies of the commentary pindodakâh. Both these

PRASNA II, ADHYÂYA 9, KANDIKÂ 16.

1. (Now follows some) advice for him who is desirous of offspring.

2. The two Asvins have declared, that fame is gained by the procreation (of sons);

3. 'Performing acts which tend to prolong life and austerities, intent on the performance of the private recitation and of sacrifices, and keeping his organs in subjection, let him carefully beget offspring in his own caste.'

4. 'From his birth a Brâhmaṇa is loaded with three debts; these let him pay. A prudent man is free from doubts regarding the sacred law.'

5. 'If he worships the sages through the study of the Veda, Indra with Soma sacrifices, and the manes of his ancestors through (the procreation of) children, he will rejoice in heaven, free from debt.'

6. 'Through a son he conquers the worlds, through a grandson he obtains immortality, but through his son's grandson he ascends to the (highest) heaven.' (All that) has been declared in the Veda.

7. The Veda shows the existence of the three debts in the following (passage): 'A Brâhmaṇa is born loaded with three debts; (he owes) the studentship to the sages, sacrifices to the gods, and a son to the manes;'

readings are clearly corrupt, and so is the var. lect. of the Gṛhyasamgraha, quoted in the Petersburg Dictionary, pindatarkukâḥ. Pindatakshakâḥ, 'the cutters or parers of the cakes,' is appropriate, because the remoter ancestors, who, as Govinda too declares, are meant by the term, obtain the fragments of the funeral cakes.

6. Vasishṭha XVII, 5.

7. Vasishṭha XI, 48. After this Sûtra the MSS. of the text

8. Through the procreation of a virtuous son he saves himself.

9. He who obtains a virtuous son saves from the fear of sin seven in the descending line and seven in the ascending line, (viz.) six others (in each), himself being the seventh.

10. Therefore he obtains a reward if he begets issue.

11. Therefore he should sedulously beget offspring, insert the following corrupt passage : bandham rinamoksham pragâyâs kâyattam pitrînâm kânukarshasabdas ka pragâyâm darsayati | anutsannaḥ pragâvân bhavati | yâ vad enam pragânugrihṇîte tâvad akshayam lokam gayati. The commentary does not notice it, and it seems to me that it needlessly interrupts the context.

11. M. and K. add to this Sûtra, âtmanaḥ phalalâbhâya, 'in order to gain a reward for himself.' The same two MSS., further, insert the following Sûtras : tasmât putram kotpâdyâtmânam evotpâdayatîti | vigñâyate kâtmâ vai putranâmâsṭi | evam dvitīya âtmâ gīvatâ drashavyo yaḥ putram utpâdayati | sa tathâ bhavati | tasmân nâtmâ kvaṇid akshetra utsrashavyaḥ | âtmânam avamanyate hi | yathâtmânam utpâdayati sa tathâ bhavati | tasmâd âdita eva kshetram anvikkhet sarvavarne samskrîtam upadesena | tasmin dârasamyoge pragâm utpâdayet || 'Therefore (they say) that he who begets a son produces even his own self; and it is declared in the Veda, "Thou art self, called a son." Thus he who begets a son will see, during his lifetime, a second self. He becomes like him. Therefore one's own self must not be begotten on an unworthy female. For (he who does that) despises himself. He becomes even so, as he produces himself. Therefore (every man), each in his own caste, should first look out for a female who has been sanctified according to the injunction (of the sacred texts). Taking her to be his wedded wife, he shall beget a son.' It is possible that this passage really belongs to Baudhâyana, for it is written in the usual style of our Sûtra, and the last word of this passage as well as of Sûtra 11, as given in the Dekhan MSS., is utpâdayet. But it is not absolutely required by the context, and the commentary too omits it.

12. Through the application of medicines and sacred texts.

13. The advice to him (who is intent on the procreation of children) is given in agreement with the revealed texts.

14. For it produces results in the case of all the castes.

PRAŚNA II, ADHYĀYA 10, KANDIKĀ 17.

1. Now we will explain the rule for entering the order of ascetics (saṃnyāsa).

2. Some (teachers say), 'He who has finished his studentship may become an ascetic immediately on (the completion of) that.'

3. But (according to others, asceticism is befitting) for Śālinas and Yâyâvaras who are childless ;

4. Or a widower (may become an ascetic).

5. (In general) they prescribe the profession of asceticism after the completion of the seventieth year and after the children have been firmly settled in (the performance of) their sacred duties.

6. Or a hermit in the woods (may become an

13. I read with M., whose reading is confirmed by the explanation given in the commentary, tasyopadesaḥ śrutisāmānyenopadiśyate. The other MS. reads tasyopadesena, and in the text of the commentary the first word is left out.

17. 2. Gautama III, 1.

3. Regarding the two terms Śālina and Yâyâvara, see below, III, 1, 3-4.

4. Vidhura, translated, according to Govinda's explanation, by 'widower,' perhaps includes all persons who have been separated from their families.

6. Regarding the ceremonies to be performed by hermits in the wood, see above, II, 6, 11, 15, and below, III, 3.

ascetic) on finishing the (special) ceremonies (prescribed for him).

7. 'That eternal greatness of the Brāhmaṇa is neither increased nor diminished by works. The soul knows the nature of that (greatness). He who knows that, is not stained by evil deeds.'

8. 'It leads to the cessation of births.'

9. 'The eternal one leads (him) to glory.' The greatness (of asceticism is declared by these passages).

10. After having caused the hair of his head, his beard, the hair on his body, and his nails to be cut, he prepares

11. Sticks, a rope, a cloth for straining water, a water vessel, and an alms-bowl.

12. Taking these (implements, let him go) to the extremity of the village, or to the extremity of the boundary (of the village), or to the house where the sacred fires are kept, partake of a threefold (mixture of) clarified butter, milk, (and) sour milk, and (afterwards) fast;

13. Or (he may partake of) water.

14. (Saying), 'Om, Bhûh, I enter the Sâvitṛī, tat savitur vareṇyam; Om, Bhuvaḥ, I enter the Sâvitṛī, bhargo devasya dhīmahi; Om, I enter the Sâvitṛī, dhiyo yo naḥ prakodayât;' (he shall recite the Sâvitṛī) foot by foot, half-verse by half-verse, (and finish by repeating) the whole or the parts (of the verse).

7. See above, II, 6, 11, 30.

11. Yāgyavalkya III, 58-60.

14. This part of the ceremony is called Sâvitṛīpraveśa, 'entering the Sâvitṛī.' According to the Dharmasindhu, fol. 84 a, l. 8, the last Mantra is 'Om, Bhûh, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, I enter the Sâvitṛī; we meditate on that adorable light of divine Savitrī, who may impel our thoughts.'

15. It is declared in the Veda, 'Entering order after order, (man) becomes (one with) Brahman.'

16. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'He who has passed from order to order, has offered burnt oblations and kept his organs in subjection, becomes afterwards, tired with (giving) alms and (making) offerings, an ascetic.'

17. Such an ascetic (becomes one with) the infinite (Brahman).

18. Before the sun sets, he heaps fuel on the Gârhapatya fire, brings the Anvâhâryapaṭana fire (to the spot), takes the flaming Âhavantya fire out (of the Gârhapatya), melts butter on the Gârhapatya fire, cleanses it (with 'Kusa grass), takes four times (portions of it) in the sacrificial spoon (called Sruṭ), and offers in the Âhavantya fire on which sacred fuel has been heaped, (four times) a full oblation, (saying), 'Om, Svâhâ!'

19. It is declared in the Veda that this (offering is) the Brahmânsvâdhâna (putting fuel on the sacred fires for the sake of the universal soul).

20. Now in the evening, after the Agnihotra has been offered, he scatters grass to the north of the Gârhapatya fire, places the sacrificial vessels in pairs, the upper part turned downwards, on it, strews Darbha grass to the south of the Âhavantya fire on the seat destined for the Brahman priest, covers

16. Manu VI, 34.

18. Anvâhâryapaṭana is another name of the so-called Dakshinâgni, in which the sacrificial viands are cooked. The cleansing of the butter (utpavana) is performed by taking hold of the ends of blades of Kusa grass and dipping the bent middle part into the melted butter and then drawing it upwards. A full burnt oblation (pūrṇâhuti) consists of a whole spoonful. As four spoonfuls are to be taken out, it follows that four oblations are to be offered.

it with the skin of a black antelope, and remains awake during that night.

21. A Brâhmaṇa who, knowing this, dies after fasting during the night of Brahman and repositing within himself the sacred fires, conquers all guilt, even (that of) killing a Brâhmaṇa.

22. Then he rises in the muhūrta sacred to Brahman, and offers the early Agnihotra just at the (appointed) time.

23. Next, after covering the (part of the altar called) Prishṭhyâ and bringing water, he prepares (an offering) to (Agni) Vaisvânara (which is cooked) in twelve potsherds. That (well-)known Ishî is the last (which he performs).

24. Afterwards he throws the sacrificial vessels, which are neither made of earth nor of stone, into the Âhavanīya fire,

25. (And) throwing the two Araṇis into the Gârhapatya fire (with the words), 'May ye be of one mind with us,' he reposes the sacred fires in himself.

26. (Reciting the sacred text), 'O Fire, that body of thine, which is fit for the sacrifice,' he inhales the smell of (the smoke of) each fire thrice three times.

27. Then, standing within the sacrificial enclosure, (he says) thrice in a low voice and thrice aloud, 'Om, Bhûh, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, I have entered the order of ascetics, I have entered the order of ascetics, I have entered the order of ascetics.'

21. The night during which the ascetic keeps watch near the fires is called 'the night of Brahman.'

25. The Araṇis are the two pieces of wood used for producing fire by friction, Taittirīya Samhitâ I, 3, 7, 1-2.

28. It is declared in the Veda, 'The gods are trebly true.'

29. (Finally) he pours out as much water as will fill his joined hands, (saying), 'I promise not to injure any living being.'

30. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'An ascetic who roams about after having given a promise of safety to all living beings, is not threatened with danger by any creature.'

31. (Henceforth) he must restrain his speech.

32. He grasps his staff, (saying), '(Thou art my) friend, protect me.'

33. He takes the rope, (reciting the verse), 'The brilliant light,' &c.

34. He takes the cloth for straining water, (reciting the text), 'With which means of purification the gods,' &c.

35. He takes the waterpot, (reciting the verse), 'Through that light, by which the gods rose on high,' &c.

36. He takes the alms-bowl, (reciting the Vyâhr̥tis).

37. Taking with him the staves, the rope, the

28. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka II, 18, 6.

29. All gifts must be confirmed by a libation of water, which in other cases is poured into the hand of the recipient. The ceremony proves more clearly even than the numerous other passages of the Smṛ̥tis, in which ascetics are exhorted to abstain from injuring living beings, that the so-called ahimsâ doctrine is not of Buddhistic, but of Brâhmanical origin.

30. Vasishṭha X, 1-2.

31. Gautama III, 17.

33. Taittirīya Brâhmana III, 7, 8, 1.

35. Taittirīya Samhitâ V, 7, 2, 2.

37. The Surabhimatī occurs Taittirīya Brâhmana III, 9, 7, 5. For the other texts named, see above, II, 4, 7, 2. The Tarpana has been fully described above, II, 5, 9-10.

cloth for straining water, the waterpot, (and) the alms-bowl, he goes where water (is to be obtained), bathes, sips water, (and) washes himself, (reciting the verses called) Surabhimatī, Ablīṅgās, Vārunīs, Hiranyavarṇās, and Pāvamānīs. Entering the water, he performs sixteen suppressions of the breath, (mentally repeating) the Aghamarshaṇa hymn, ascends the bank, wrings out his dress, puts on another pure dress, sips water, takes the cloth for straining, (saying), 'Om, Bhûh, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ,' and performs the Tarpaṇa (with the following texts), 'Om, Bhûh, I satiate,' 'Om, Bhuvaḥ —, Om, Svaḥ —, Om, Mahaḥ —, Om, Ganaḥ —, Om, Tapaḥ —, Om, Satyam —.'

38. He takes up as much water as his joined hands will hold for the manes, (and satiates them with it) exactly in the same manner as the gods, (saying), 'Om, Bhûh Svadhâ, Om, Bhuvaḥ Svadhâ,' &c.

39. Then he worships the sun, (reciting) the two verses (which begin), 'Ud u tyam kītram,' &c.

40. (Saying), 'Om, this (syllable Om), forsooth, is Brahman; this (syllable) which sheds warmth is light; this which gives warmth is the Veda; this must be known as that which sheds warmth;' he thus satiates the soul (and afterwards) worships the soul (with these texts), 'The soul (is) Brahman, (is) light.'

38. 'In the same manner as the gods,' i. e. without passing the sacred string over the right shoulder.—Govinda.

40. The Gugarât and Dekhan MSS., including K., place after the first Om two additional Mantras, 'Brahman (is) Om; this universe (is) Om.' The object of the Mantras given in the Madras MSS. is to identify the Prāṇava with the Brahman, the sun, and the Veda.

41. Let him repeat the Sâvitṛī one thousand times, or one hundred times, or an unlimited number of times.

42. (Saying), 'Bhûh, Bhuvaḥ, Suvaḥ,' he takes up the cloth for straining, (and) fetches water.

43. Let him not, (at any period) after that (moment), sip water which has not been drawn up (from a well and the like), which has not been strained, and which has not been completely cleansed.

44. Let him not wear any longer a white dress.

45. (He may carry) one staff or three staves.

PRAŚNA II, ADHYĀYA 10, KANDIKĀ 18.

1. Now the following vows are (to be kept by an ascetic):

2. Abstention from injuring living beings, truthfulness, abstention from appropriating the property of others, continence, (and) liberality.

3. There are five minor vows, (viz.) abstention from anger, obedience towards the Guru, avoidance of rashness, cleanliness and purity in eating.

4. Now (follows the rule for) begging. Let him

43. Manu VI, 46. Aparipâtābhiḥ, 'which has not been completely cleansed,' probably refers to the so-called drishya paripavana, 'carefully looking at it in order to see if any living being remains in it.'

18. 2. The five vows (vratas) named here are the principal ones. As to the vow of 'liberality' Govinda remarks that though the ascetic possesses no 'store' and no property in the ordinary sense of the word, still he can have books and give those away.

3. 'Avoidance of rashness,' i. e. committing any act which might destroy life.

4. 'When the Vaisraveda offering has been finished,' i. e. when people have had their dinner; see also Vasishṭha X, 7.

ask Brāhmanas, both those who have houses (sālīna) and those who lead a wandering life (yâyāvara), for alms, when the Vaisvadeva offering has been finished.

5. Let him ask (for it), prefacing (his request with the word) Bhavat.

6. Let him stand begging no longer than the time required for milking a cow.

7. When he returns from begging, he lays (the alms) down in a pure place, washes his hands and feet, and announces (what he obtained) to the sun, (reciting the text), 'Ud u tyam kṛitam,' &c. He (also) announces it to Brahman (with the text), 'The first-born Brahman,' &c.

8. It is declared in the Veda, 'After the Brahmādhāna the sacrificer himself (contains) the sacrificial fires. His respiration (prāṇa, represents) the Gârhapatya fire, the air that goes downwards (apāna, represents) the Anvâhâryapaṭana (or Dakshina) fire, the circulation in the body (vyâna, represents) the Âhavanīya fire, the cerebral circulation (udâna) and the abdominal circulation (samâna, represent) the Sabhya and Âvasathya fires. These five fires are abiding in the soul. He (therefore) offers (the oblations) in the soul alone.'

9. 'This sacrifice, offered in the soul, which is located in and based on the soul, leads the soul to happiness.'

10. Giving, compassionately, portions (of his food) to the living beings, and sprinkling the re-

7. The second text occurs repeatedly in the Taittirīya-veda, e.g. Taittirīya Âraṇyaka X, 1, 10.

8. Regarding the Brahmādhāna, see above, II, 10, 17, 19.

mainder with water, he shall eat it as if it were a medicine.

11. After he has eaten and sipped water, he mutters (the texts), 'Out of darkness we,' &c., (and), 'My speech resides in the mouth,' &c., and worships the sun with the (verse called) Gyotishmatī.

12. Let him eat food, given without asking, regarding which nothing has been settled beforehand and which has reached him accidentally, so much only as is sufficient to sustain life.

13. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Eight mouthfuls (make) the meal of an ascetic, sixteen (that) of a hermit in the woods, thirty-two (that) of a householder, an unlimited (quantity that) of a student.'

14. 'Alms (may) either (be obtained) from (men of) the three castes, or the food (given) by a single Brāhmaṇa (may be eaten); or (he may obtain food) from (men of) all castes, and not (eat) that given by a single Brāhmaṇa.'

15. Now they quote (the following special rules) for the case that the teachers explain (the doctrine) of the Upanishads: 'Diligently standing (in the day-time), keeping silence, sitting (at night) with crossed legs, bathing three times a day, and eating

11. The first text occurs frequently in the Taittirīya-veda, e.g. Taittirīya Saṃhitā IV, 1, 7, 4; the second, Taittirīya Āraṇyaka X, 72. The Gyotishmatī is, according to Govinda, the first of the two Mantras quoted.

12. According to Govinda this verse gives the opinion of 'some' teachers, not the author's. Asaṃkṣiptam, 'regarding which nothing has been settled beforehand,' indicates, according to Govinda, that the ascetic must not even mentally determine what he is going to eat.

13. See above, II, 7, 13, 7.

at the fourth, sixth, or eighth (meal-time only), he shall subsist entirely on (rice) grains, oil-cake, food prepared from barley, sour milk, (and) milk.'

16. It is declared in the Veda, 'On that (occasion) he shall rigidly keep silence; pressing the teeth together he may converse, without opening his mouth, as much as is necessary with teachers deeply versed in the three Vedas (and) with ascetics possessing a great knowledge of the scriptures, not with women, nor when he would break (his vow).'

17. (Let him keep) only one of (the rules which enjoin) standing (in the day-time), rigid silence, and sitting (at night) with crossed legs; let him not keep all three together.

18. It is declared in the Veda, 'And he who has gone there may eat, in times of distress, a small quantity of the food prescribed by his vow after (having partaken of other dishes), provided he does not break (his vow).'

19. 'Eight (things) do not cause him who is intent on standing (in the day-time), keeping rigid silence, sitting (at night) with crossed legs, bathing three times a day, and (eating) at the fourth, sixth, or eighth meal-time only, to break his vow, (viz.) water, roots, clarified butter, milk, sacrificial food, the wish of a Brâhmaṇa, an order of his teacher, and medicine.'

20. Let him mutter the (Mantras which must be

18. 'The meaning is, that in times of distress, having partaken at his pleasure (of other food), he may afterwards eat of one (of the substances mentioned above, viz.) rice-grains and the rest.'—Govinda.

19. All the MSS. except M. have snâna, 'bathing,' instead of sthâna, 'standing (in the day-time),' though the reading is clearly wrong.

recited at the) Agnihotra, in the evening and in the morning,

21. After performing his evening devotions by (reciting the verses called) Vârunîs, and his morning devotions by (reciting the verses called) Maitrîs.

22. 'An ascetic shall keep no fire, have no house, no home, and no protector. He may enter a village in order to collect alms, and emit speech at the private recitation of the Veda.'

23. It is declared in the Veda, 'Limited in number are the Rîk-verses, limited in number are the Sâmans, limited is the answer (of the Adhvaryu priest).'

24. 'Thus (an ascetic) shall not give up the Veda, (but live), until he is liberated from the body, at the root of the tree.'

25. 'The tree (is) the Veda; the syllable Om is its root; the syllable Om is the essence of the Veda.'

26. 'Meditating on the syllable Om, he becomes

21. The Maitrîs occur Taitt. Samhitâ III, 4, 11, 5, and the Vârunîs follow them immediately.

22. Âpastamba II, 9, 21, 10.

23. This and the next Sûtras are intended to teach that ascetics may limit their private recitation to the repetition of the pranava, 'the syllable Om.' According to Govinda the passage of the Veda quoted refers originally to the Katurhotârah, which the Taittirîya Brâhmana II, 2, 1, 4, and III, 12, 5, 1 identifies with the Brahman, and where the pratigara, the answer of the Adhvaryu priest, is 'Om hotaḥ' (Aitareya Brâhmana V, 25).

24. I have taken vrikshamûlikavedasamnyâsî to stand for vrikshamûliko avedasamnyâsî. For the vedasamnyâsa, 'giving up the Veda,' is not permitted to an ascetic; see e. g. Vasishṭha X, 4. But even without the negative particle vedasamnyâsî may convey a sense not opposed to the general teaching of the Smṛitis. For it may be taken to mean 'abandoning (the recitation of other portions of) the Veda.'

fit (to be united with) Brahman.' Thus spake the lord of created beings.

27. Let him cleanse the vessel of Brahman with the seven Vyâhr̥itis.

PRASNA III, ADHYĀYA 1.

1. Now, therefore, (we will speak) of those who desire (to fulfil) the duties of Sālīnas (dwellers in houses), Yâyâvaras (wanderers), and Kakraṭaras (circle-goers), who subsist by nine (different) means of livelihood.

2. The term 'livelihood' (vr̥itti) is used because they subsist thereby (tadvartanât).

3. The word Sālīna (is used) because they dwell in houses (sālā).

4. To be a Yâyâvara (means that one) goes on by means of a most excellent livelihood (vr̥ittyâ varayâ yâti).

5. The term Kakraṭara is derived from going by turns (to the houses of rich men).

6. We will explain those (above-mentioned) means of livelihood in their proper order.

7. They are nine, (viz.) Shannivartant, Kaudḍālī, Dhruvā, Samprakshālant, Samûhā, Pālant, Siloñkhā, Kapotā, and Siddhoñkhā.

27. Govinda is uncertain if the term brahmabhāṅga, 'the vessel of Brahman,' refers to the alms-bowl or to the body of the ascetic. Probably both are meant, and the Sūtra is intended to prescribe the frequent recitation of the Vyâhr̥itis in addition to the syllable Om.

1. 5. Govinda says that Kakraṭara is another name for Yâyâvara, and that anukramakarana, 'going by turns,' means going successively to the houses of Brāhmanas, Kshatriyas, and Vaisyas.

7. The terms left untranslated are fully explained in the next

8. (In addition) to these there is a tenth way of living, viz. forest-life.

9. (If he desires to adopt) any of the nine ways of living,

10. He causes the hair of his head, his beard, the hair on his body, and his nails to be cut, and besides gets ready (the following objects),

11. (Viz.) the skin of a black antelope, a water-pot, a staff, a yoke for carrying burdens, (and) a sickle.

12. He desires to go forth, after having offered a Traidhâtaviya (offering) or a Vaisvânart (ishî).

13. Now on the (following) morning, after the sun has risen, he makes the sacred fires burn brightly, melts butter on the Gârhapatya fire, cleanses it (with Kusa grass), heats the (spoons called) Sruṣ and Sruva, cleans (them), takes out four (spoonfuls of butter) in the Sruṣ, and offers the Vâstoshpatiya (oblation) in the Âhavantya fire according to (the rules of his) Sûtra.

chapter. All the MSS. read kauntâlî for kauddâlî, which occurs in the commentary alone.

11. The vivadha, 'a yoke for carrying burdens,' consists usually of a bamboo pole, to the ends of which two ropes are attached for fastening the loads. Kuthahârî, 'a sickle,' seems to be the name of a particular kind of sickle, since Govinda explains it by vâsa-varâsanadâtram. He adds that the term includes 'a spade' (kud-dâla) and other implements.

12. The meaning is that on the evening before his departure from the old home he is to offer the Traidhâtaviya-homa. According to the Srauta-sûtras (see the Petersb. Dict. s. v. traidhâtavî) the latter offering always occurs at the end of a great sacrifice. Hence it is appropriate for a person who wishes to begin a new mode of life.

13. This is the leave-taking from the old dwelling.

14. Having recited the Puroṇuvākya (verse), 'O lord of the dwelling, permit us,' &c., he offers (the oblation) with the Yāgya verse, 'O lord of the dwelling, with thy kind company,' &c.

15. Some (declare that) every person who has kindled the sacred fires (shall offer these Homas).

16. Others (say that) a Yāyāvara alone (shall do it).

17. After departing (from his house), he stops at the extremity of the village, or at the extremity of the boundary of the village, builds there a hut or a cottage, and enters that.

18. Let him use the skin of the black antelope and the other (objects) which he has prepared for the several purposes which they are intended to serve.

19. Known (is) the (duty of) serving the fires; known (is) the (duty of) offering the new and full moon sacrifices; known (is) the successive performance of the five Mahāyagñas; it is seen that the vegetables, which have been produced, are offered.

20. He hallows those (vegetables), either (reciting the text), 'I offer what is agreeable to all the gods,' or silently, and cooks (them).

14. The two verses occur Taittirīya Samhitā III, 4, 10, 1. It is specially mentioned by Sāyana that the two verses have to be recited by an Agnihotrin on departing from his home.

17. Matka, 'a cottage,' is, according to Govinda, a house resting on many posts or pillars, while kuṭ is the simple shed with four posts and a roof of leaves.

19. The last clause, probably, is meant to prescribe a simpler form of the Vaisvadeva.

20. Govinda adds that the meaning is that the sacrificer shall eat the boiled rice in silence.

21. For such (a man the duty of) teaching, sacrificing for others, accepting gifts, and (performing) other sacrifices (than those mentioned) ceases.

22. (The use of) sacrificial food fit to be eaten during the performance of a vow is seen;

23. That is as follows: (his food may be) mixed with clarified butter or sour milk, (it must) not (contain) pungent condiments or salt, nor meat, nor (be) stale.

24. (He shall remain) chaste, or approach (his wife) in season.

25. (It is necessary) to have the hair of his head, his beard, the hair on his body, and his nails cut on each Parva day, and the rules of purification (are obligatory on him).

26. Now they quote also (the following verses): 'Two kinds of purification, which the Śiṣṭas reverentially practise, are mentioned in the Veda,—external (purification), which consists in the removal of impure stains and foul smells, and internal (purification), which consists in the abstention from injuring live creatures.'

27. 'The body is purified by water, the understanding by knowledge, the soul of beings by abstention from injuring, (and) the internal organ by truth.'

PRASNA III, ADHYÂYA 2.

1. As regards (the mode of subsistence called) Shannivartant, (that) is (as follows):

21. Govinda adds that the obligation of performing other meritorious deeds, such as digging wells and tanks (pârta), also ceases.

27. Vasishṭha III, 60.

2. He cultivates six Nivartanas (of) fallow (land); he gives a share to the owner (of the soil), or solicits his permission (to keep the whole produce).

3. Let him plough before breakfast with two bulls whose noses have not been pierced, not striking (them) with the goad, (but) frequently coaxing (them).

4. If he cultivates six Nivartanas in this manner (and subsists thereby), that is (the mode of living called) Shannivartant (subsistence on six Nivartanas).

5. (As regards the mode of subsistence called) Kauddālt, he digs up (the soil) near a water(-course or tank) with a spade, a ploughshare, or a pointed piece of wood, sows seed, (and) grows bulbs, roots, fruit, pot-herbs, and vegetables.

6. (If he thus) cultivates (land) with a spade (and lives on its produce), that is the (mode of life called) Kauddālt (subsistence by the spade).

7. He who lives by the (mode of subsistence called) Dhruvâ, wraps up his head in a white dress (saying), 'For the sake of welfare I wrap thee up, O head,' (and) takes the skin of a black antelope (with the words), '(Thou art) spiritual pre-eminence, (I take thee) for the sake of spiritual pre-eminence;' the Pavitra (reciting) the Ablinga texts; the water-pot (saying), 'Thou art strength, (I take) thee for

2. 2. A Nivartana is a measure of 4000 square hastas, the ancient equivalent of the modern Bighâ.

3. Identical with II, 2, 4, 21.

6. Govinda says that according to some the following ceremonies need only be performed when one goes out begging for the first time, while others insist on their being performed daily.

7. The Mânastokiya, i. e. the text beginning 'mâ nas toke,' the sake of strength;’ the yoke for carrying burdens (saying), ‘Thou art grain, (I take) thee for the sake of prosperity;’ the staff (saying), ‘(Thou art) a friend, protect me.’

8. On leaving (his hut), he mutters the Vyâhr̥itis, and (afterwards the verse used for) hallowing the quarters of the horizon, ‘May the earth, the middle sphere, the sky, the constellations, and all the quarters of the horizon, fire, air, and sun, (may all these) deities protect me on my road.’

9. Because, after muttering the Mânastokīya (text) and entering the village, he shows himself with the yoke (on his shoulder) at the door of each house, they call it ‘showing oneself.’

10. Because, if every (other) livelihood fails, he persistently (dhruvam) supports himself by this (mode of living), it is called Dhruvâ (the unchangeable).

11. (As regards the mode of life called) Samprakshālāṇī, (if, in order to show that) there is no waste of the vegetable (substances) obtained nor occurs repeatedly in the Taittirīya-veda, e. g. Taitt. Samhitā III, 4, 11, 2. Govinda adds that the beggar must remain silent, and not stop longer at each door than the time required for milking a cow.

10. Both the text and the scanty commentary on this Sūtra are corrupt. K. reads, vr̥tter vr̥ttair avārtâyām tayaiva tasya dhruvam varttayatīti dhruveti parikīrtitā; D. vr̥tte vr̥ttair avārtâtâhâ, &c.; M. vr̥tte vr̥tter avr̥ttâyām avr̥ttâyām tathaiva tasyāḥ ddhrivam varttamānād iti, &c.; C. I. vr̥tter vr̥tter āvartâyām āvartâyām tathaiva tasyām dhruvam vartanād iti, &c. The Telugu copy omits the text. From the commentary it is clear that Govinda read at the beginning of the Sūtra ‘vr̥tter vr̥tter,’ and the Telugu copy proves that ‘tayaiva’ is the correct reading. I restore the Sūtra conjecturally, as follows, vr̥tter vr̥tter avārtâyām tayaiva tasya dhruvam vartanād iti dhruveti parikīrtitā.

11. I read, samprakshālāṇīti | utpannānām oshadhīnām prakshē-

any hoarding, he turns the dishes, after washing them, upside down, (that is the livelihood called) Samprakshālant (living by washing).

12. As to the (mode of subsistence called) Samūhā, (if) he sweeps up (grain) with a broom in permitted places where (grain-bearing) plants are found, either on a road or in fields the access to which is not obstructed (by hedges), and lives on (what he has thus obtained), that (livelihood is called) Samūhā (living by sweeping).

13. As to the (mode of life called) Pālant, it is also named Ahimsakā (not hurting), and the following (definition) is given. (If) he tries to obtain from virtuous men husked rice or seeds, and maintains (himself) thereby, that (is the mode of subsistence called) Pālant.

14. As to the (mode of life called) Siloñkhā, (if) he gleanes single ears in permitted places where (grain-bearing) plants grow, on a road or in fields the access to which is not obstructed, and supports himself by (these) gleanings, (collected) from time panam nāstīti nikāyo vā bhāganāni samprakshālya nyubgayatīti samprakshālant || M. has nāsti nikāyo vā, and C. I. reads also nikāyo and omits 'vā.' The Dekhan MSS. have nāstīti kāyo vā. The description is not very clear; but it seems that a person who lives by the Samprakshālant vṛtti must obtain grain and vegetables by begging in such quantities as will suffice for one meal, and prove by the way in which he treats his dishes that he has neither wasted his food nor any store remaining.

13. The translation of this Sūtra is merely tentative, as the two MSS. of the commentary omit the text, and contain only a fragment of Govinda's explanation. The latter seems to have differed from my interpretation. The text, as given by the other MSS., runs as follows: pālantī [pālī°, MSS.] ahimsakety evedam uktam bhavati [°ūti, M.] tushavihināms tandulān ikkhati sagganebhyo bīgāni vā [kā, D.] pālayatīti pālant [phāla°, phālani, M.; pālino, K. D.]

to time, that (is the mode of subsistence called) Siloñkkhâ (gleaning).

15. As to the (livelihood called) Kapotâ, (if) he picks up with two fingers single grains in permitted places, where (grain-bearing) plants grow, either on the road or in fields the access to which is not obstructed, that (is called), because he acts like a pigeon, Kapotâ (pigeon-life).

16. As to (the mode of life called) Siddhoñkkhâ, (if) tired with the (other) ways of subsistence, he asks, because he has become old or diseased, virtuous men for cooked food, that (is the livelihood called) Siddhoñkkhâ (gleaning cooked food).

17. If (he adopts) the latter, he must reposit (the sacred fires) in his soul and behave like an ascetic, except (in using) the cloth for straining water and (wearing) a reddish-brown dress.

18. If he subsists on the produce of the forest, (the fruits) of trees, creepers, and lianas, and of grasses, such as wild millet (syâmâka) and wild sesamum, that (is called) forest-life.

19. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'Moving about with the beasts, dwelling together with them, and maintaining oneself in a manner similar to theirs, that is clearly the road to heaven.'

PRASNA III, ADHYÂYA 3.

1. Now the hermits in the wood belong to two classes,

15. Govinda mentions a varia lectio not found in our MSS., kapotavatsamdamsinî, 'because he pecks like a pigeon.'

16. Here as well as above, III, 1, 7, the Dekhan MSS. read siddhekkhâ, 'begging cooked food,' instead of siddhoñkkhâ.

3. 1. Compare for the whole Adhyâya, Âpastamba II, 9, 21, 20-23, 2.

2. Those who cook (their food), and those who do not cook it.

3. Among them, those who cook (their food are divided) into five subdivisions, (viz.) those who eat everything which the forest contains, those who live on unhusked (wild-growing grain), those who eat bulbs and roots, those who eat fruit, and those who eat pot-herbs.

4. Those who eat everything which the forest produces are, again, of two kinds: they either subsist on forest-produce generated by Indra, or on that which has been generated from semen.

5. Among these, that which has been generated by Indra (is the produce) of lianas, shrubs, creepers, and trees. Fetching (that) and cooking it, they offer the Agnihotra in the evening and in the morning, give (food) to ascetics, guests, and students, and eat the remainder.

6. That which is generated from semen is the flesh (of animals) slain by tigers, wolves, falcons, and other (carnivorous beasts), or by one of them. Fetching (that) and cooking it, they offer the Agnihotra in the evening and in the morning, give (shares) to ascetics, guests, and students, and eat the remainder.

7. Those who eat unhusked grain only, fetch rice, avoiding (husked) corn, boil it, offer the Agnihotra both in the evening and in the morning, give (food) to ascetics, guests, and students, and eat the remainder.

8. Those who eat bulbs and roots, or fruit, or pot-herbs, (act) exactly in the same manner.

9. Those (hermits) who do not cook (their food are divided into) five (classes), Unmaggakas, Pravṛttâsins, Mukhenâdâyins, Toyâhâras, and Vâyubhakshas.

10. Among these, the Unmaggakas (collect and prepare their food), avoiding (the use of) iron and stone implements,

11. The Pravṛttâsins take it with the hand,

12. The Mukhenâdâyins take it with the mouth (only, like beasts),

13. The Toyâhâras subsist on water only,

14. And the Vâyubhakshas (air-eaters) eat nothing.

15. In this manner ten (different) initiations are prescribed for hermits who follow the rule of Vikhanas (vaikhâna).

16. He who has agreed (to obey) the Institutes of his (order, shall wear) a staff, (shall keep) rigid silence, and (shall) abstain from rash acts.

17. Hermits following the rule of Vikhanas (vaikhâna) are purified (from sin), and (especially) those who abstain from food.

18. The sum of the rules applicable to all Brahma-Vaikhânasas (is as follows):

19. 'Let him not injure (even) gadflies or gnats; let him bear cold and perform austerities; let him constantly reside in the forest, be contented, and

11. Pravṛttâsin, i. e. he who eats food only which comes to him accidentally.

15-17. These three Sûtras are omitted in the commentary, but found in all the MSS. of the text.

18. Govinda proposes two explanations for the term brahma-vaikhâna; he thinks that it may mean either brahmanâ drishâ vaikhânasâh, 'hermits seen by Brahman,' i. e. whose duties have been revealed by Brahman, or 'hermits who are Brâhmanas by caste.' The true sense, however, is probably 'a hermit (who strives) to (become one with) Brahman' (brahmârtham vaikhâna).

delight in (dresses made of) bark and skins, (and in carrying) water (in his pot).'

20. 'A devotee shall first honour the guests who have come to his hermitage at (dinner) time ; he shall be sedulous in (worshipping) gods and Brāhmaṇas, in (offering) the Agnihotra, and in practising austerities.'

21. 'A Brāhmaṇa who has taken to forest-life, and who has adopted this difficult (but) pure mode of existence, which keeps him apart from wicked men, which must never be given up, which is similar to (that of the) beasts and birds, which allows the collection of the necessities of life for one day only, and which necessitates the consumption of astringent and bitter (food), never sinks low.'

22. 'Moving about with the beasts, dwelling together with them, and maintaining oneself in a manner similar to theirs, that is clearly the road to heaven.'

PRAŚNA III, ADHYĀYA 4.

1. Now if a student commits any act against his vow, eats meat, or approaches a woman, whenever any evil befalls him,

2. He heaps fuel on the fire in the interior of the house, scatters (Kusa grass) around it, and performs the ceremonies up to the end of the Agnimukha ; then he offers oblations of clarified butter, (reciting the following texts) : 'It was done by lust, lust does

22. See above, III, 2, 19.

4. 1. The clause striyaṃ vopeyât, 'or approaches a woman,' is omitted by Govinda. The whole chapter is a supplement to the rules given above, II, 1, 1, 30-35, where some of the Vedic passages mentioned here have already been given.

it, to lust (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ; 'It was done by the internal organ, the internal organ does it, to the internal organ (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ; 'It was done by passion, passion does it, to passion (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ; 'It was done by ignorance, ignorance does it, to ignorance (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ; 'It was done by sin, sin does it, to sin (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ; 'It was done by wrath, wrath does it, to wrath (belongs) all this, to him who draws me on, Svâhâ.'

3. That which begins with the muttering (of the Vedic texts) and ends with the gift of a fee (consisting of) a cow is known,

4. (Afterwards) he stays (during the night) behind (i. e. to the west of) the fire, wrapping himself in the skin of a black antelope, the neck of which is turned towards the east and the hair of which is turned outside.

5. When the day dawns, he drags himself away from the hinder part (of the skin), goes to a bathing-place, bathes (there) in the manner which is known, (but) performs, while in the water, sixteen suppressions of breath with the Aghamarshana hymn; next he performs the known (ceremonies) up to the worship of the sun, and afterwards goes to the house of his teacher.

6. Let him know for certain that that is equally (effective) as bathing (with the priests) at the end of a horse-sacrifice.

5. Govinda says that this manner of crawling out of the skin is symbolical of a new birth.

PRASNA III, ADHYĀYA 5.

1. Now we will explain the rule of the most holy Aghamarshana.

2. He goes to a bathing-place and bathes (there). Dressed in a pure dress let him raise, close to the water, an altar, and moistening his clothes by one (application of water), and filling his hand once (with water), let him recite the Aghamarshana hymn (in the manner of his daily) private recitation.

3. (Let him repeat it) one hundred times in the morning, one hundred times at midday, and one hundred times or an unlimited number of times in the afternoon.

4. When the stars have risen, let him partake of gruel prepared of one handful of barley.

5. After seven (days and) nights he is freed from all minor sins (upapâtaka), whether they have been committed intentionally or unintentionally, after twelve (days and) nights (from all other sins) excepting the murder of a learned Brâhmana, the violation of a Guru's bed, stealing gold, and drinking Surâ.

6. After twenty-one (days and) nights he overcomes even those (crimes) and conquers them.

5. 1. Vasishtha XXVI, 8.

2. Sthanâla, 'an altar,' is a slightly raised mound of earth, which, according to Govinda, in this case must have the shape of the sun's disc. According to the same authority the hand of the performer must remain filled with water as long as the recitation lasts, and the performer stands behind the altar facing the east.

5. Regarding the prasritiyâvaka, '(subsisting on) gruel prepared from a handful of barley,' see below, III, 6.

7. He overcomes everything, he conquers all, he obtains the reward of all sacrifices, he has bathed at all sacred bathing-places, he has performed the vows required for (the study of) all the Vedas, he becomes known to all the gods, he sanctifies a company (of Brāhmaṇas) by merely looking (at them), and his undertakings are successful. Thus speaks Baudhāyana.

PRASNA III, ADHYĀYA 6.

1. Now if a man feels his conscience charged with (evil) actions committed by himself, let him boil for himself (alone), when the stars have risen, a handful of barley, (and prepare) gruel (with that).

2. Let him not perform the Vaisvadeva oblation with (a portion of) that,

3. Nor (shall) a Bali offering (be performed) on that (occasion).

4. Let him consecrate the barley before it is boiled, while it is being boiled, and after it has been boiled, with the (following) Mantras :

5. 'Thou art barley, thou art the king of grains, thou art sacred to Varuṇa and mixed with honey, the sages have proclaimed thee an expeller of all guilt and a means of purification.'

7. Govinda is of opinion that the words, 'thus speaks Baudhāyana,' indicate that this part of the work has been composed by a pupil or some other person.

6. 1. For the whole Adhyāya compare Vishṇu XLVIII.

5. According to Govinda, Vāmadeva is the Rishi of these Mantras. The phrase, 'Thou art sacred to Varuṇa,' is to be explained, according to Govinda, by the fact that offerings presented to Varuṇa frequently consist of barley. 'Honey' means, according to some, 'sweet butter,' with which the dish is seasoned.

‘Ye barley-grains are clarified butter and honey, ye barley-grains are water and ambrosia. May you remove my guilt and all my sins :’

‘Those committed by words, by acts, and by evil thoughts ; ill-fortune and the night of all-destroying time,—all that avert from me, ye barley-grains.’

‘(From the sin of eating) food which had been worried by dogs or pigs, or which had been defiled by crows and impure men, from the sin of disobedience towards mother and father,—from all that purify me, ye barley-grains.’

‘From the dreadful (guilt of) mortal sins and of the crime (of serving) a king, from the wrong done to infants or aged men, from (the guilt) of stealing gold, of breaking my vows, of sacrificing for an unworthy man, of speaking evil of Brâhmaṇas,—from all that purify me, ye barley-grains.’

‘From (the sin of eating) the food of many men, of harlots and of Sûdras, of (partaking of) funeral dinners and of (the food given by) persons who are unclean on account of a death or a birth, of that given by thieves, or at a funeral sacrifice offered to one who lately died,—from all that purify me, ye barley-grains.’

6. (While the barley) is being boiled, he must protect it (and recite the text), ‘Adoration to Rudra, the lord of created beings ; pacified is the sky ;’ the Anuvâka (beginning), ‘Give strength ;’ the five sentences (beginning), ‘The gods who are seated in front, led by Agni ;’ the two (texts), ‘Do not hurt

6. The Anuvâka meant is Taitt. Samhitâ I, 2, 14. The five sentences are found, ibid. I, 8, 7, 1. Regarding the text mâ nastoke, ‘do not hurt our offspring,’ see above, III, 2, 9. The last our offspring,' (and) 'The Brahman-priest among the gods.'

7. Having purified himself (by sipping water, &c.), he shall eat a little of the boiled (mess), after pouring it into (another) vessel.

8. Let him offer it as a sacrifice to the soul, (reciting the text), 'May the gods, who are born from the internal organ and joined to the internal organ, who are very strong, whose father is Daksha, protect us (and) guard us; adoration to them, to them Svâhâ.'

9. Let him who desires intelligence (subsist on such food) during three (days and) nights.

10. A sinner who drinks it during six (days and) nights becomes pure.

11. He who drinks it during seven (days and) nights is purified from (the guilt of) the murder of a learned Brâhmaṇa, of violating a Guru's bed, of stealing gold, and of drinking Surâ.

12. He who drinks it during eleven (days and) nights, removes even the sins committed by his ancestors.

13. 'But he who during twenty-one days (drinks gruel made) of barley-grains which have passed through a cow, sees the Ganas and the lord of the Ganas, sees the goddess of learning and the lord of learning.' Thus speaks the venerable Baudhâyana.

Mantra occurs Taitt. Samhitâ III, 4, 11, 1. Govinda says that material protection, too, in the shape of an iron platter or cover is to be given to the boiling barley.

8. The text occurs Taitt. Samhitâ I, 2, 3, 1. It consists of five sentences, and is addressed to the five vital airs, to each of which the eater offers one oblation.

PRASNA III, ADHYĀYA 7.

1. 'Let him who considers himself impure offer (burnt oblations), reciting the Kûshmândas.'

2. 'He who has had forbidden intercourse, or has committed a crime against nature, becomes even like a thief, even like the slayer of a learned Brâhmana.'

3. 'He is freed from any sin which is less than the crime of slaying a learned Brâhmana.'

4. If, after wasting his strength except in his sleep, he desires to become free from the stain and holy,

5. He causes the hair of his head, his beard, the hair on his body, and his nails to be cut on the day of the new moon or of the full moon, and takes upon himself a vow according to the rule prescribed for students,

6. (To be kept) during a year, or a month, or twenty-four days, or twelve nights, or six or three nights.

7. Let him not eat meat, nor approach a woman, not sit on (a couch or seat, and) beware of (speaking an) untruth.

8. To subsist on milk (alone is) the most excellent mode of living; or, using barley-gruel (as his food), he may perform a Krikkhra (penance) of twelve days, or he may (maintain himself by) begging.

7. 1-3. Taittirîya Âranyaka II, 8, 1-3.

6. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 8, 5-6.

7. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 8, 7.

8. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 8, 8. As the next Sûtra shows, these rules refer to Brâhmanas. Regarding the Krikkhra, see below, IV, 57.

9. On such (occasions) a Kshatriya (shall subsist on) barley-gruel, a Vaisya on curds of two-milk whey.

10. Having kindled the sacred fire in the morning according to the rule for Pākayagñas, having scattered (Kusa grass) around it, and having performed (the preliminary ceremonies) up to the end of the Agnimukha, he next offers in addition burnt oblations, reciting the three Anuvākas (beginning), 'What cause of anger to the gods, ye gods,' 'The debts which I contracted,' (and) 'May worshipful Agni give thee by every means long life.'

11. Let him offer with each Rik-verse a portion of clarified butter.

12. After having offered four oblations with (the spoon called) Sruva, reciting (the texts), 'That strength which lies in the lion, in the tiger, and in the panther,' &c., and the four Abhyāvartintś (i.e. the texts), 'Thou, O fire, who turnest back,' &c., 'O Angiras,' &c., 'Again with strength,' &c., (and) 'With wealth,' &c., after having taken his position, with sacred fuel in his hands, in the place allotted to the sacrificer, he worships (the fire) with the hymn which contains twelve verses (and begins), 'To Vaisvânara we announce.'

13. Having placed the piece of sacred fuel (on the fire with the text), 'Whatever sin I ever com-

10. For the rule, see Taitt. Âranyaka II, 7, 4. The three Anuvākas mentioned are Taitt. Âranyaka II, 3-5.

12. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 7, 4. The first four texts occur Taitt. Brâhmana II, 7, 7, 1-2, the next four Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 2, 1, 2-3, and the hymn Taitt. Âranyaka II, 6. The place of the sacrificer to the south of the fire.

13. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 6, 2 (13).

mitted by thoughts or words, from all that free me (O fire, being duly) praised, for thou knowest the truth, Svâhâ,' he gives a fee.

14. (The ceremonies) which begin with the muttering (of the texts) and end with the gift of a cow as a fee are known.

15. One (person) only (shall) perform the service of the fire.

16. Now (let him offer) at the Agnyâdheya full oblations (pûrnâhuti, with the texts), 'Whatever cause of anger to the gods, ye gods;' 'The debts which I contracted;' 'May worshipful Agni give thee by every means long life.'

17. Having offered (it), he who is about to perform the Agnihotra, (worships) with the Dasahotri (texts); having offered (it), he who is about to perform the new and full moon sacrifices (worships) with the Katurhotri (texts); having offered (it), he who is about to offer the Kâturmâsya sacrifices (worships) with the Pañkahotri (texts); having offered it, (he worships) at an animal sacrifice with the Shaddhotri (texts), at a Soma-sacrifice with the Saptahotri (texts).

18. And it is declared in the Veda, 'Let him sacrifice (with the Kûshmânda texts) at the beginning of the rites; purified (thereby) he gains the world of the gods.' Thus (speaks) the Brâhmana.

16. From this and the next Sûtras it must be understood that the Kûshmândahoma is not only to be used as a penance, but may be offered at the beginning of the great Srauta sacrifices, in order to sanctify the performer and to secure special benefits.

17. The Saptahotri and the other texts mentioned occur Taitt. Âranyaka III, 1-5. I understand the verb 'worship' on account of Lâtyâyana X, 12, 10.

18. Taitt. Âranyaka II, 7, 5.

PRAŚNA III, ADHYÂYA 8.

1. Now, therefore, we will explain the rule of the Kândrâyana (lunar penance).

2. Let him fast on the fourteenth day of the bright half of the month.

3. Having had the hair on his head, his beard, the hair on his body, and his nails, or his beard alone, cut, let him enter, dressed in new clothes and speaking the truth, the place where the sacrificial fire is preserved.

4. There a (common) fire, (which may be) fetched once (only, shall serve) him ; or (the fire) must be produced by friction with the Araṇis.

5. Let a student, who is a friend (of the performer), be ready at hand to (carry out his) directions ;

6. And sacrificial viands (shall be his) food during the performance of the vow.

7. Having heaped fuel on the fire, scattered (Kusa grass) around it, and performed (the ceremonies) up to the end of the Agnimukha, he offers burnt oblations, (cutting off portions) from the cooked food,

8. (The first) to Agni, (the second) to the lunar day whichever it may be, (the third and the fourth)

8. 1. For this chapter compare Gautama XXVII.

4. The meaning of the Sûtra is that the fire which has been carried into the âvasatha must be kept burning during the whole month which the Kândrâyana lasts. For a burnt oblation has to be performed at the end of the penance. Should it be extinguished, it must be rekindled by friction.

8. The text quoted occurs Taitt. Brâhmana I, 5, 8, 1.

to the lunar mansion together with its guardian deity, the fifth to the moon (with the verse), 'Atrâha gor amanvata,' the sixth to the sky and the earth, the seventh to day and night, the eighth to Rudra, the ninth to the sun, the tenth to Varuṇa, the eleventh to Indra, and the twelfth to all the gods.

9. Now they mention (the following) other (oblations which are to be offered) to the points of the horizon and to their (guardian) deities, to the wide middle sphere and to its (guardian) deity.

10. Having offered (the oblation) to Agni Svi-shṭakṛit (with the verse), 'Ever new,' &c., he then places the remainder of the sacrificial viands into a goblet (kamsa) or a cup (kamasa), pours seasoning, that is fit for sacrifices, over them, and eats fifteen morsels of ordinary size,

11. The first (saying, 'I offer) thee to Prâna,' the second (saying, 'I offer) thee to Apâna,' the third (saying, 'I offer) thee to Vyâna,' the fourth (saying, 'I offer) thee to Udâna,' the fifth (saying, 'I offer) thee to Samâna.' If there are only four (mouthfuls, he eats) the first reciting two (texts); if there are three, (he eats) the first two reciting two (texts) with each; if there are two, (he eats) the first reciting two (texts and) the second reciting three texts; (if there is only) one, (he recites) all (the five texts) together.

12. Having drunk water (with the text), 'Thou

10. Taitt. Samhitâ II, 3, 5, 3.

11. This is an imitation of the Prânâgni-hotra described above, II, 7, 12.

12. Taitt. Samhitâ III, 1, 8, 1. The seven Anuvâkas are Taitt. Âranyaka X, 51-57. One oblation is to be offered with each Anuvâka.

art water used for moistening Soma,' &c., he then offers the (following) additional oblations of clarified butter, with the seven Anuvâkas (beginning), 'May my Prâna, Apâna, Vyâna, Udâna, and Samâna be purified;' 'May my voice, mind, eye, ear,' &c.; 'May my head, hands, feet;' 'May my skin;' 'May the sense of hearing, touch;' 'May earth, water;' 'May that which consists of food.'

13. (The ceremonies) beginning with the muttering (of sacred texts) and ending with the gift of a cow as a fee are known.

14. He worships the sun with (three verses) addressed to Sûrya and the moon with (three verses) addressed to Kandramas.

15. When he goes to rest, he mutters (the verse), 'O fire, keep thou good watch,'

16. When he awakes (in the morning, the verse), 'O fire, thou art the protector of vows.'

17. Let him not talk with women and Sûdras addressing them first; let him not look at urine and ordure.

18. If he has seen any impure substance, he mutters (the text), 'Unrestrained (was) the internal organ, wretched my eye; the sun is the most

13. Govinda here mentions that the whole of the ceremonies alluded to are the uttaram dârvihomikam tantram.

14. As Govinda states, the former verses are 'ud vayam tamahas pari,' Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 1, 7, 4; 'ud u tyam gâtavedasam,' ibid. I, 1, 8, 4; 'Āitram devânām,' ibid. I, 4, 43, 1; while the verses addressed to the moon are 'navo navo,' ibid. II, 4, 14, 1; 'sa Āitram,' Rig-veda VI, 6, 7; and 'atrâha gor,' Taitt. Brâhmana I, 5, 8, 1.

15. Taitt. Samhitâ I, 2, 3, 1.

16. Taitt. Samhitâ, loc. cit.

18. Taitt. Samhitâ III, 1, 1, 2.

[14]

X

excellent among the lights of heaven; O initiation, mayest thou not forsake me.'

19. On the first day of the latter half (of the month he eats) fourteen mouthfuls.

20. Thus (he takes every day) one (mouthful) less up to the day of the new moon.

21. On the day of the new moon there is not (even) one mouthful (left to take).

22. On the first day of the first half (of the month) one (mouthful may be eaten), on the second two.

23. Thus he daily increases (his meal) by one (mouthful) up to the day of the full moon.

24. On the day of the full moon he offers a Sthâlpâka to Agni, to the lunar day whichever it may be, and to the lunar mansions as well as to their (guardian) deities.

25. Having offered a burnt oblation to (the lunar mansion) Abhigit (which stands) before Sronâ, and to its (guardian) deity, he must give a cow to the Brâhmanas.

26. That is the ant-shaped lunar penance; (that which is performed in the) inverted (order is called) the barleycorn-shaped (lunar penance).

27. A sinner who has performed either of these two (penances) becomes free from all mortal sins (pâtaka).

28. They declare that the (Kândrâyana) shall be performed for the sake of the fulfilment of wishes of all kinds.

29. 'Thereby man obtains every wish which he may conceive.'

30. 'Thereby the sages formerly purified themselves and accomplished their objects. That (rite) procures wealth, spiritual merit, sons, cattle, long life, heavenly bliss, and fame; it secures the fulfilment of all desires.'

31. 'He who studies this, becomes the companion of the lunar constellations, of sun and moon, and dwells in their world.'

PRASNA III, ADHYÂYA 9.

1. Now, therefore, we will explain the rule of the Anasnatpârâyana (recitation of the whole Veda during a fast).

2. Let him wear a clean garment or a dress made of bark (or grass).

3. Let him desire food, fit for a sacrifice, or water and fruit.

4. Going forth from the village in an easterly or northerly direction, smearing a quadrangular sthandîla, 'a bull's hide' in size, with cowdung, sprinkling it, drawing the marks on it, sprinkling it with water, heaping fuel on the fire and scattering (Kusa grass) around it, he offers burnt oblations to the following deities, to Agni Svâhâ, to Pragâpati

9. 2. M. and the MSS. of the commentary read kiravâsâh instead of kiravâsâh, 'clad with a garment of bark or grass,' and Govinda explains the var. lect. by 'dressed in old clothes.'

3. This rule refers to the case only where the performer of the vow is unable to bear the prolonged fasting.

4. A sthandîla is the raised mound, four fingers high, which is used as the altar for the Grîhya ceremonies. Regarding the term, 'a bull's hide,' see Vishnu XCII, 2. The marks (lakshana) are the lines which must be drawn on the altar; see e.g. Âsvalâyana Grîhya-sûtra I, 3, 1.

Svâhâ, to Soma Svâhâ, to all the gods Svâhâ, to Svayambhu, to the Rikas, to the Yagus, to the Sâmans, to the Atharvans, to faith, to right knowledge, to wisdom, to fortune, to modesty, to Savitri, to the Sâvitri (verse), to Sadasaspati, and to Anumati.

5. Having offered (these oblations), he must begin with the beginning of the Veda and continuously recite (it).

6. Let him not interrupt (the recitation) by talking, nor by stopping.

7. Now if he converses in between or stops, let him thrice suppress his breath, and begin just there where he left off.

8. If he has forgotten (a passage), he shall recite for as long a time as he does not recollect it, what (he may know, Rik-verses) for Rik-verses, (Yagus-formulas) for Yagus-formulas, (Sâmans) for Sâmans.

9. He may (also) recite the Brâhmaṇa of that (forgotten passage) or (the passage from the Anukramant regarding) its metre and its deities.

10. Let him recite the Samhitâ of (his) Veda twelve (times). He thereby removes (faults committed by) studying on forbidden (days, by) angering his teacher, (and through) improper acts. His (knowledge of the) Veda is sanctified, is purified.

11. (If he reads) more than that, a cumulation (of rewards will be the result).

12. If he recites the Samhitâ of the Veda another twelve (times), he gains thereby the world of Usanas.

13. If he recites the Samhitâ of the Veda another

6. 'By talking, i. e. by uttering words not connected with the Veda.'—Govinda.

twelve (times), he gains thereby the world of Brihaspati.

14. If he recites the Samhitâ of the Veda another twelve (times), he gains thereby the world of Pragâpati.

15. If, fasting, he recites the Samhitâ one thousand (times), he becomes one with Brahman, resplendent like Brahman (and) Brahman (itself).

16. If he subsists during a year on food obtained by begging, he gains (the power of) supernatural vision.

17. If during six months he subsists on barley-gruel, during four months on water and barley-flour, during two months on fruit, (and) during one month on water, or performs Krikkhra penances of twelve days, he (obtains the power of) suddenly disappearing, and sanctifies seven descendants, seven ancestors, and himself as the fifteenth, and (any) company (of Brâhmanas) which he may enter.

18. They call that the ladder of the gods.

19. By means of that the gods reached their divine station and the sages the position of Rishis.

20. The periods for beginning this sacrifice, forsooth, are three, the time of the morning libation, the time of the midday libation, and the last part of the night, (the Muhûrta) sacred to Brahman.

21. Pragâpati, forsooth, proclaimed this (rite) to the seven Rishis, the seven Rishis to Mahâgagñu, and Mahâgagñu to the Brâhmanas.

18. Govinda explains nihsrenîm, 'the ladder,' by nihsreyasahetum, 'a cause of supreme bliss.'

21. The name of the Rishi who proclaimed it to the Brâhmanas is not certain. The Dekhan MSS. read Mahâgagru and Mahâgagnu, M. Mahâgagñu, the I. O. copy of the commentary Mahâyagñu and Mahâgagñu, and the Telugu copy Mahâgagñu.

PRASNA III, ADHYĀYA 10.

1. The law of castes and of orders has been declared.

2. Now, indeed, man (in) this (world is polluted) by a vile action or acts wrongly, (e. g.) sacrifices for men unworthy to offer a sacrifice, accepts presents from those whose gifts ought not to be accepted, eats the food of those whose food ought not to be eaten, (and) practises what is forbidden.

3. They are in doubt if he shall perform a penance for such (a deed) or if he shall not do it.

4. (They declare that he shall not do it) because the deed does not perish.

5. (The correct opinion is) that he shall perform (a penance).

6. It is declared in the Veda, 'Let him offer a Punastoma; (those who offer it, may) again come to (partake of) the libations of Soma.'

7. 'He who offers a horse-sacrifice conquers all sin, he effaces the guilt of the murder of a Brāhmaṇa.'

10. 1. As stated formerly, Sacred Books of the East, vol. ii, p. li, this chapter is borrowed from Gautama XIX. I have therefore adopted the same division of the Sūtras as in the translation of the latter work.

2. I read, with the MSS. of the commentary, atha khalvayam puruṣo yāpyena karmanā mithyā vākaraty ayāgyam vā yāgayaty apratigrāhyasya vā pratigrīhṇāty anāsyānnasya vānnam asnāty ākarāṇīyena vākarati. M. reads yāgayitvā, and the Dekhan MSS. yāgayitvā and pratigrīhya.

5. The Dekhan MSS. read kūryād ity eva, M. kūryād eva, and Govinda kuryāt tv eva.

6. All the MSS. of the text omit the word vigṛhṇāyate, 'it is declared in the Veda,' which is given by Govinda.

7. All the MSS. of the text give at the beginning of this Sūtra

8. Moreover, 'He who is being accused (of a heinous crime) shall perform an Agnishrut sacrifice.

9. Reciting the Veda, austerity, a sacrifice, fasting, giving gifts are the means for expiating such (a blamable act).

10. The purificatory (texts are), the Upanishads, the initial (verses) of the Vedas, the ends of the Vedas (vedântas), the Samhitâs of all the Vedas, (the Anuvâkas called) Madhu, (the hymn of) Aghamarshana, the Atharvasiras, (the Anuvâkas called the) Rudras, the Purusha hymn, the two Sâmans (called) Râgina and Rauhineya, the Bṛihat (Sâman) and the Rathantara, the Purushagati (Sâman), the Mahânâmnîs, the Mahâvairâga (Sâman), the Mahâdivâkīrtya (Sâman), any of the Gyeshtha Sâmans, the Bahishpavamâna Sâman, the Kûshmândîs, the Pâvamânîs, and the Sâvitṛi.

11. To live on milk alone, as if one were fasting, to eat vegetables only, to eat fruit only, (to live on) gruel prepared of a handful of barley-grains, to eat gold, to eat clarified butter (are the modes of subsistence) which purify.

12. All mountains, all rivers, holy lakes, bathing-places, the dwellings of Rishis, cowpens, (holy) plains and temples of the gods (are) places (which destroy sin).

athâpy udâharanti, 'now they quote also,' which Govinda omits, and which is inappropriate, because the following passages are taken from the Veda.

10. The word vedâdayaḥ, which occurs also in some MSS. of Vasishtha (XXII, 9), must be explained, according to the analogy of karmâdi, 'the beginning of the sacrifices' (Sâyana on Taitt. Âr. II, 7, 5), by 'the initial verses of the Vedas.' The Pâvamânîs are added on the authority of Govinda alone.

12. 'Kshetra, (holy) plains, e.g. the Kurukshetra.'—Govinda.

13. Abstention from injuring living beings, truthfulness, abstention from theft (or unrighteously appropriating anything), bathing in the morning, at noon, and in the evening, obedience towards Gurus, continence, sleeping on the ground, dressing in one garment only, and abstaining from food (are the various kinds of) austerity.

14. Gold, a cow, a dress, a horse, land, sesamum, clarified butter, and food (are) the gifts.

15. A year, six months, four (months), three (months), two (months), one (month), twenty-four days, twelve days, six days, three days, a day and a night, (and) one day are the periods (for penances).

16. These (acts) may be optionally performed if no (particular penance) has been prescribed,

17. (Viz.) for great crimes difficult (penances) and for trivial faults easy ones.

18. The Krikkhra and the Atikrikkhra, as well as the Kândrâyana, are penances for all (offences).

PRASNA IV, ADHYĀYA 1.

1. We will separately explain the various penances for the several offences, both heavier and lighter ones.

2. Let him prescribe whatever may be befitting for each (case),—heavier (penances) for great (crimes) and easier ones for trivial (faults).

3. Let him perform the penances according to the rule given in the Institutes (of the Sacred Law in cases) where an offence has been committed with the organ or with the feet (and) the arms, through

3. The construction is certainly elliptical. I understand tatra with the first half-verse. Govinda separates the two half-verses, yad upasthakṛtām papam, &c., from the first, and reads at the end thoughts or speech, through the ear, the skin, the nose or the eye.

4. Or, in (the case of) transgressions committed through the organ of vision, of hearing, of sensation, of smelling, and through thoughts, he also becomes pure by three suppressions of the breath.

5. In case (he commits the offences) of eating the food of a Sûdra or of cohabiting with a Sûdra female, severally, he must perform, during seven days, seven suppressions of the breath on each day.

6. For partaking of food unfit for eating or drinking, and for selling forbidden merchandise, excepting honey, meat, clarified butter, oil, pungent condiments and bad food, and for similar (offences), he must perform, during twelve days, twelve suppressions of the breath on each day.

7. For other transgressions excepting mortal sins (pâtaka), crimes causing loss of caste (patantya), and the minor faults (called upapâtaka), he must perform, during half a month, twelve suppressions of the breath on each day.

8. For other transgressions excepting mortal sins of the half-verse prânâyâmân samâkaret, 'one should perform suppressions of the breath (in even or equal numbers).'

5. Govinda tries to reconcile this rule with the one given above, I, 1, 2, 7, by assuming that the word Sûdra denotes here a Brâhmana who lives like a Sûdra and neglects his sacred duties.

6. I read, conjecturally, dvâdarâham, 'twelve days.' The MSS. of the text have dvâdasa dvâdarâham, or corruptions pointing to this reading, and C. I. reads ardhamâsam. Regarding avarâna, 'bad food,' see note on Âpastamba II, 6, 15, 16.

7. I read, conjecturally, ardhamâsam, 'half a month;' D. has ardhamâsân; K. dvâdarâham; M. dvâdarârdhamâsam; C. I. dvâdarârdhamâsân, which is explained by shamâsân.

8. I read with M. dvâdasa dvâdarâhân. D. K. have dvâdarâham. The commentary omits the Sûtra altogether.

and crimes causing loss of caste, he must perform, during twelve periods of twelve days, twelve suppressions of the breath on each day.

9. For other transgressions excepting mortal sins he must perform, during twelve half-months, twelve suppressions of the breath on each day.

10. But for mortal sins he must perform, during a year, twelve suppressions of the breath on each day.

11. Let him give his daughter, while she still goes naked, to a man who has not broken the vow of chastity and who possesses good qualities, or even to one destitute of good qualities; let him not keep (the maiden) in (his house) after she has reached the age of puberty.

12. He who does not give away a marriageable daughter during three years doubtlessly contracts a guilt equal to (that of) destroying an embryo.

13. Such will be the case if anybody asks her in marriage, and also if nobody demands her. Manu has declared that at each appearance of the menses (the father incurs the guilt of) a mortal sin.

14. Three years let a marriageable damsel wait for the order of her father. But after (that) time let her choose for herself in the fourth year a husband (of) equal (rank). If no man (of) equal (rank) be found, she may take even one destitute of good qualities.

15. If a damsel has been abducted by force, and has not been wedded with sacred texts, she may lawfully be given to another man; she is even like a maiden.

9. I read with D., K., and M., dvâdarârdhamâsân. The commentary omits also this Sûtra.

11. Vasishṭha XVII, 67-71, and above.

15. Vasishṭha XVII, 73.

16. If, after (a damsel) has been given away, or even after (the nuptial sacrifices) have been offered, the husband dies, she who (thus) has left (her father's house) and has returned, may be again wedded according to the rule applicable to second weddings, provided the marriage had not been consummated.

17. He who does not approach, during three years, a wife who is marriageable, incurs, without doubt, a guilt equal to that of destroying an embryo.

18. But the ancestors of that man who does not approach his wife who bathed after her temporary uncleanness, though he dwells near her, lie during that month in the menstrual excretions (of the wife).

19. They declare that the guilt of the husband who does not approach his wife in due season, of him who approaches her during her temporary uncleanness, and of him who commits an unnatural crime (with her), is equally (great).

20. Let him proclaim in the village a wife who, being obdurate against her husband, makes herself sterile, as one who destroys embryos, and drive her from his house.

21. But for the transgression of that husband who does not approach a wife who bathed after temporary uncleanness, (the performance of) one hundred suppressions of the breath is prescribed (as a penance).

16. Vasishṭha XVII, 74.

21. The MSS. of the text read, ritusnâtâm tu yo bhâryâm niyâtâm brahma-kârinim | niyamâtikrame tasya prânâyâmasatam smritam. The commentary omits the first half of the verse altogether. The latter, as read in the MSS., gives no sense. It seems to me that

22. Seated with Kusa grass in his hands, let him repeatedly suppress his breath, and again and again recite purificatory texts, the Vyâhr̥tis, the syllable Om, and the daily portion of the Veda.

23. Always intent on the practice of Yoga, let him again and again suppress his breath. (Thus) he performs the highest austerity up to the ends of his hair and up to the ends of his nails.

24. Through the obstruction (of the respiration) air is generated, through air fire is produced, then through heat water is formed; hence he is internally purified by (those) three.

25. Through the practice of Yoga (true) knowledge is obtained, Yoga is the sum of the sacred law, all good qualities are gained through Yoga; therefore let him always be absorbed in the practice of Yoga.

26. The Vedas likewise begin with the syllable Om, and they end with the syllable Om. The syllable Om and the Vyâhr̥tis are the eternal, everlasting Brahman.

27. For him who is constantly engaged in (reciting) the syllable Om, the seven Vyâhr̥tis, and the three-footed Gâyatrī, no danger exists anywhere.

28. If, restraining his breath, he thrice recites the Gâyatrī together with the syllable Om and with the (text called) Śiras, that is called one suppression of breath.

29. But sixteen suppressions of breath, accomeither its end must have been samnidhau nopagakkhati (as in Sūtra 17), or that a whole half-verse has been lost.

22-24. Vasishṭha XXV, 4-6.

26. Vasishṭha XXV, 10.

28. Vasishṭha XXV, 13.

25. Vasishṭha XXV, 8.

27. Vasishṭha XXV, 9.

29. Vasishṭha XXVI, 4.

panied by (the recitation of) the Vyâhr̥itis and of the syllable Om, repeated daily, purify after a month even the slayer of a learned Brâhmana.

30. That is the highest austerity, that is the best description of the sacred law. That, indeed, is the best means of removing all sin.

PRASNA IV, ADHYÂYA 2.

1. We will separately explain the various penances for the several offences, both heavier and lighter ones.

2. Let him prescribe whatever may be befitting for each (case),—heavier penances for great (crimes), and lighter ones for trivial (faults).

3. Let him perform the penances according to the rule given in the Institutes of the Sacred Law.

4. He who is about to accept gifts, or he who has accepted gifts, must repeatedly recite the four R̥ik-verses (called) Taratsamand̥is.

5. But in case one has eaten any kind of forbidden food, or that given by a person whose food must not be eaten, the means of removing the guilt is to sprinkle water (over one's head) while one recites the Taratsamand̥i R̥ikas.

6. But we will, hereafter, declare another rule for (the expiation of) the murder of a learned Brâhmana, whereby (men) are freed also from mortal sins of all (kinds).

7. Let him (perform), during twelve nights, sup-

4. Gautama XXIV, 2. The gift is, of course, one which ought not to be accepted.

5. Rig-veda IX, 58. Mârganam, literally 'rubbing,' means sprinkling the head with a handful of water.—Govinda.

pressions of the breath (and) mutter purificatory texts, the Vyâhr̥itis, the syllable Om, (and) the Aghamarshaṇa hymn, (living) on milk;

8. Or (he becomes) pure if he bathes, and during three (days and) nights subsists on air and (remains dressed) in wet clothes.

9. But if he has repeatedly committed forbidden acts of all kinds, and has (afterwards) worshipped reciting the Vâruṇī (texts), he is freed from all sin.

10. Now a student who has broken his vow (avakṛ̥ṇin) shall heap fuel on the fire on the night of the new moon, perform the preparatory ceremonies required for a Darvīthoma, and offer two oblations of clarified butter (reciting the following texts): 'O Lust, I have broken my vow, my vow I have broken, O Lust, to Lust Svâhâ;' 'O Lust, I have done evil, I have done evil, O Lust, to Lust Svâhâ.'

11. After he has made the offering, he shall address the fire, closely joining his hands and turning sideways, (with the following texts): 'May the Maruts grant me, may Indra, may Bṛ̥haspati, may this fire grant me long life and strength, make me long-lived.' The Maruts, forsooth, give back to him the vital airs, Indra gives back to him strength, Bṛ̥haspati the lustre of Brahman, Fire all the remainder. (Thus) his body is made whole, and he attains the full length of life. Let him next address (the gods) with three (repetitions of the texts).

9. 'Upasthâna, "worshipping," i. e. sprinkling one's head with a handful of water.'—Govinda.

10. A repetition of the rule given above, II, 1, 1, 34; see also III, 4.

For the gods are trebly true. (All that) has been declared in the Veda.

12. He who considers himself defiled by minor offences (upapâtaka), will be freed from all guilt if he offers burnt oblations according to this same rule;

13. Or if he has partaken of food unfit to be eaten or to be drunk or of forbidden food, and if he has committed sinful acts or performed sinful rites either unintentionally or intentionally, and if he has had connexion with a female of the Sûdra caste or committed an unnatural crime, he becomes pure by bathing (and reciting) the Ablînga (verses) and (those called) Vârunis.

14. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'If he has partaken of food unfit to be eaten or to be drunk, or of forbidden food, and if he has committed forbidden acts or performed forbidden rites, he will, nevertheless, be freed from (crimes) committed intentionally which are similar to mortal sins, nay, even from mortal sins (pâtaka).'

15. Or let him fast during three (days and) nights, bathe thrice a day, and, suppressing his breath, thrice recite the Aghamarshana. Manu has declared that that is equal (in efficacy) to the final bath at a horse-sacrifice.

12. Gautama XXV, 6.

13. Govinda gives, like Haradatta on Gautama XXV, 7, as an instance of a doshavat karma, 'a sinful rite,' the abhiâra or 'magic rite in order to harm enemies.' The expression has, however, in our Sûtra, a wider sense.

14. I. e. if he performs the penance prescribed in the preceding Sûtra.

15. Vasishtha XXVI, 8; Gautama XXIV, 10.

16. And it is declared in the Veda, '(That is) the ancient purificatory rite, which is widely known (in the Institutes of the Sacred Law); purified thereby man conquers sin. May we, sanctified by this holy means of purification, conquer our enemy, sin.'

PRASNA IV, ADHYĀYA 3.

1. We will explain the (secret) penances which are not prescribed (by others, but by the offender himself, and) particularly what shall be done in (case) faults (have been committed) by men who, with concentrated minds, (are) intent (on the performance of their duties).

2. (Such a man) may sip water, (in order to atone) for all mortal sins, reciting the syllable Om and all the Vyāhritis.

3. When he sips water the first time, he gladdens the Rig-veda, the second time the Yagur-veda, the third time the Sāma-veda.

4. When he wipes (his lips) the first time, he gladdens the Atharva-veda, the second time the Itihāsas and Purāṇas.

5. When he sprinkles water on the right hand, the feet, the head, the heart, the nostrils, the eyes, the ears, and the navel, he gladdens the trees and herbs and all deities. Therefore he is freed from all sin by sipping water.

3. 1. Vasishṭha XXV, 1-2. The whole Adhyāya is left out in the Dekhan MSS., including K. The omission may have been caused by the circumstance that the initial verses of Adhyāyas 3 and 4 are identical.

2. Gautama XXV, 9; Vasishṭha XXV, 4.

3-5. See the rules for sipping water, given above, I, 5, 8, 19-26.

6. Or let him offer in the fire eight pieces of sacred fuel, reciting (the following) eight (texts): 'Thou art the expiation of sin committed by the gods, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of sin committed by men, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of sin committed by the manes, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of sin committed by myself, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of the sin which we have committed either by day or by night, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of the sin which we have committed either sleeping or waking, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of the sin which we have committed either intentionally or unintentionally, Svâhâ;,' 'Thou art the expiation of every sin, Svâhâ.'

7. When he has offered (these eight oblations) he will be freed from all guilt.

8. Now they quote also (the following verse): 'The Aghamarshana, the Devakṛita, the Suddhāvatis, the Taratsamâs, the Kûshmândîs, the Pâvamânts, the Virâgâs, the Mrityulângala, the Durgâ (Sâvitṛî), the Vyâhṛitis, and the Rudras (are texts) which are very efficacious for effacing sin.'

PRASNA IV, ADHYÂYA 4.

1. We will explain the (secret) penances which are not prescribed (by others, but by the offender himself, and) particularly what shall be done in (case) faults (have been committed) by men who, with concentrated minds, (are) intent (on the performance of their duties).

6. Gautama XXV, 10. The Mantras occur Taitt. Âranyaka X, 59.

8. Vishnu LVI, 3, and note; Vasishṭha XXVIII, 10-15.

2. He who, standing in water, thrice recites that (hymn of) Aghamarshana (which begins), 'Both right and truth,' will be freed from all guilt.

3. He who, standing in water, thrice recites the verse, 'This spotted bull,' &c., will be freed from all guilt ;

4. He who, standing in water, thrice recites the verse, 'Freed from the post as it were,' will be freed from all guilt.

5. He who, standing in water, thrice recites the verse, 'A swan dwelling in purity,' will be freed from all guilt ;

6. Or, he who, standing in water, thrice recites the Sāvitrī, foot by foot, half verse by half verse, and afterwards entire, will be freed from all guilt ;

7. Or, he who, standing in water, thrice recites the Vyāhṛitis, both separately and altogether, will be freed from all guilt ;

8. Or, he who, standing in water, thrice recites the syllable Om alone, will be freed from all guilt.

9. Let him not teach these Institutes of the Sacred Law to one who is neither his son nor his pupil, nor has resided (in his house) less than a year.

10. The fee (for teaching it) is one thousand (panas, or) ten cows and a bull, or the worship of the teacher.

PRASNA IV, ADHYĀYA 5.

1. Now, therefore, I will proclaim by what rites, connected with the Sāman, Rik, Yagus, and Atharva-

4. 2. Taitt. Āranyaka X, 1, 13.

3. Taitt. Āranyaka I, 5, 3, 1.

4. Taitt. Brāhmaṇa II, 4, 4, 9.

5. Taitt. Samhitā I, 8, 15, 2.

9. Vasishṭha XXIV, 6-7.

5. 1. All the Dekkhan MSS., including K., have been copied from vedas, (man) quickly attains the wishes of his heart.

2. Having purified his body by muttered prayers, burnt oblations, Ishṭis, restraints, and the like, he will accomplish all his objects. He will not attain success in any other way.

3. A Brāhmaṇa, who is going to mutter prayers, to offer burnt oblations or Ishṭis, or to practise restraints, shall, first, during the bright half of the month, on a lucky day and under a lucky constellation, cause his hair and beard to be cut.

4. Let him bathe in the morning, at noon, and in the evening; let him beware of anger and untruth; let him not address women and Sūdras; let him be continent, and subsist solely on food fit for offerings.

5. Avoiding to sleep in the day-time, let him worship cows, Brāhmaṇas, manes, and gods. As long as he is engaged in muttering prayers, offering Homas and Ishṭis, and practising restraints, let him stand during the day and sit during the night.

6. The Krikkhra (penance) revealed by Pragâpati lasts twelve days, (which are divided into four separate) periods of three days; (during the first period of three days he eats) in the day-time (only, during the second) at night (only, during the third he subsists on) food given without asking, (and during the fourth) finally (he lives on) air.

a MS. the leaves of which were out of order. After the first words of ver. 1, they have kshīram dadhisarpiḥ kusodakam, which belongs to ver. 26, and they go on with the text down to IV, 7, 7, after which the end of IV, 5, 1 and 2-25 are given.—‘Yantra, “restraints,” i.e. Krikkhras and the like, (which are called so) on account of the restraint of the senses (required for them).’—Govinda.

3-5. Vasishṭha XXIV, 5.

6. Vasishṭha XXI, 20. Repeated, see above, II, 1, 2, 38.

7. (If one eats on) one (day in) the morning (only), and (on the following day) at night (only, on the next day food) given without asking, (and on the fourth day) subsists on air, and repeats this three times, that is called the Krikkhra (penance) of children.

8. (If) one eats one mouthful only at each (meal), following, during (three) periods of three days, the rules given above, and subsists during another period of three days on air, that is called the Atikrikkhra penance.

9. (If) during those (first) three periods of three days one partakes of water only, and subsists afterwards (during three days) on air, that third (variety) must be known to be the most efficacious Krikhrâतिक्रिक्क़्र penance.

10. If one drinks hot milk, (hot) clarified butter, (and a hot) decoction of Kusa grass, each during three days, and fasts during another three days, that is called the Taptakrikkhra.

11. (If one lives during one day) on cow's urine, (during one day) on cowdung, (during one day) on milk, (during one day) on sour milk, (during one day) on clarified butter, (during one day) on a decoction of Kusa grass, and during one (day and) night on air, that is called the Sântâpana Krikkhra.

12. Let him take the cow's urine, reciting the Gâyatri; the cowdung, (reciting the text), 'Gandha-

7. Vasishtha XXIII, 43; see above, II, 1, 2, 39.

8. Vasishtha XXIV, 2-3; see above, II, 1, 2, 40.

9. See above, II, 1, 2, 41.

10. See above, II, 1, 2, 37.

11. Vasishtha XXVII, 13; Vishnu XLVI, 19.

12. The texts quoted are found, Taitt. Âranyaka X, 1, 10; III, 17; Taitt. Samhitâ I, 5, 11, 4, 7; I, 1, 10, 3; VII, 1, 11, 1.

dvârâm;' the milk, (reciting the verse), 'Âpyâyasva;' the sour milk, reciting (the verse), 'Dadhikrâvnâ;' the clarified butter, (saying), 'Sukram asi;' the decoction of Kusa grass (with the text), 'Devasya tvâ;'

13. (And mix together) one part of cow's urine, half as much cowdung, three parts of milk, two of sour milk, one part of clarified butter, and one part of water boiled with Kusa grass; a Sâmtâpana Krikkhra (performed) in this manner will purify even a Svapâka.

14. He who subsists during five (days and) nights on cow's urine, cowdung, milk, sour milk, and clarified butter will be purified by (that) Pañkagavya (the five products of the cow).

15. If, self-restrained and attentive, he fasts during twelve days, that is called a Parâka Krikkhra, which destroys all sin.

16. If he subsists on cow's urine and the other (substances named above), one day on each, and continues (this mode of life) during thrice seven days, the theologians call that a Mahâsâmtâpana Krikkhra.

17. If he daily adds to his food one mouthful during the bright (half of the month) and diminishes it daily by one mouthful during the dark (half of the month), and keeps two fasts in the two halves of the month, that is called a Kândrâyana.

18. If, with concentrated mind, a Brâhmana eats four mouthfuls in the morning and four mouthfuls when the sun has set, he will perform the Kândrâyana of children.

13. Vasishtha XXVII, 13.

14. Vasishtha XXVII, 14.

15. Vishnu XLVI, 18.

16. Vishnu XLVI, 20.

17. Vasishtha XXVII, 21; see above, III, 8.

18. Vishnu XLVII, 8.

19. If, self-restrained, he daily eats, during a month, at midday eight mouthfuls of food, fit for a sacrifice, he will perform the Kāndrāyana of ascetics.

20. But a Brāhmaṇa who eats anyhow, during a month, thrice eighty mouthfuls of food, fit for a sacrifice, goes to the world of the moon.

21. As the rising moon frees the world from the fear of darkness, even so a Brāhmaṇa who performs a Kāndrāyana removes the fear of sin.

22. He who lives one day on (rice)-grains, three days on oil-cakes, five days on buttermilk mixed with water, seven days on water, and (one day) on air, (performs) the guilt-destroying Tulāpuruṣa.

23. Living on barley-gruel (yāvaka) removes the guilt of corporeal beings after seven days, and so does a fast of seven days ; that has been recognised by wise men.

24. By dressing in wet clothes, by living in the open air, and by exposing himself to the sun during the light halves of the months Pausha (December-January), Bhādrapada (August-September), and Gyeshtha (May-June), a Brāhmaṇa is freed from (all) sin excepting crimes causing loss of caste (patantiya).

25. (If one swallows) cows' urine, cowdung, milk,

19. Vishṇu XLVII, 7.

20. Vishṇu XLVII, 9. Govinda places this verse before Sūtra 19.

22. Vishṇu XLVII, 22.

24. The meaning is that the performer is to stand in wet clothes during the first half of the month Pausha, in the cold season ; to live in the open air during the first half of Bhādrapada, in the rainy season ; and to allow himself to be broiled by the sun in Gyeshtha, the hottest time of the hot season.

25. I doubt if the reading of Govinda, yavātāmena (explained sour milk, clarified butter, and a decoction of Kusa grass, mixed with barley gruel, that is the most sanctifying Brahmakûrka.

26. He who fasts on the new moon day and eats sesamum grains on the full moon day, will be freed in the course of a year from the sins which he committed in the bright and the dark halves of the month.

27. He who lives on alms obtained from Agni-hotrins is purified in one month; (he who obtains his food) from a Yâyâvara, in ten days; he who receives it from a hermit in the forest, in five days;

28. (He who lives) on food given by a person who has a store sufficient for one day only, will be purified in one day; he who drinks water given by a person subsisting by the Kapota-vritti (pigeon-life), is purified in three (days).

29. If one recites the whole Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, and Sâma-veda, or thrice reads one of these Vedas and fasts, (that is) a most efficient means of purification.

30. Now if one is in haste to finish, one may live on air during a day, and pass the night standing in water, that is equal (in efficacy) to a Prâgâpatya (Krikkhra).

31. He who at sunrise mutters the Gâyatri one thousand and eight times, is free from all sin, provided he has not slain a learned Brâhmana.

by yavâgûh) samyuktam, 'mixed with barley-gruel,' is correct. All the MSS. of the text have yavânâm ekasamyukto, which I do not understand. Govinda has Brahmakrikkhra instead of Brahmakûrka. But see the Petersb. Dict. s. v. brahmakûrka.

28. Regarding the Kapota-vritti, see above, III, 2, 15.

30. Vasishtha XXVII, 17. Govinda adds after kartum, 'to finish,' 'the rites connected with the Vedas' (Sûtra 1).

32. He who distributes food, speaks the truth, and has compassion on all living beings, is more (holy) than all those who have been purified by the restraints mentioned above.

PRASNA IV, ADHYĀYA 6.

1. The (eleven Anuvākas called) Rudras together with (the ten hymns) seen by Madhukṛṇḍas, the Gâyatrī with the syllable Om, and likewise the seven Vyâhr̥tis (are the texts) which should be muttered (and) which remove guilt.

2. The Mr̥gâreshī, the Pavitreshī, the Trihavis, the Pāvamant̥ are the Ish̥tis which efface sin, if they are (each) combined with the Vaisvânara (Dvâdasa-kapāla).

3-4. Learn, also, the following most excellent secret; he will be freed from all sins of all kinds who sprinkles himself with water, reciting the Pavitras, who mutters the eleven (Anuvākas called) Rudras, who offers burnt oblations of butter, reciting the Pavitras, and gives gold, a cow, and sesamum (to Brâhmanas).

5. He who partakes of boiled barley-gruel, mixed with cow's urine, liquid cowdung, sour milk, milk, and butter, is quickly freed from sin.

6. Both he who has begotten a child on a Sûdra woman and he who has had connexion with a female,

6. 1. The hymns are Rig-veda I, 1-10.

2. Regarding the Mr̥gâreshī, see Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 7, 15. In explanation of the term Trihavis, Govinda adds the word Savaneshī.

5. Yâvaka, translated, as usually, by barley-gruel, can also denote, as Govinda points out, other dishes made of barley, intercourse with whom is forbidden (agamyâ), are purified (if they live) according to this rule during seven days.

6. See above, II, 1, 2, 7, 10, 13-14.

7. (That is likewise) the remedy when one has swallowed semen, ordure, and urine, or eaten the food of persons whose food must not be eaten, (and also) when a younger brother has kindled the sacred fire, has offered a Srauta sacrifice, or taken a wife before the elder.

8. He who has committed even a great number of (wicked) actions, excepting mortal sins, will be freed (by that rule) from all guilt. That is the statement of the virtuous.

9. But (this) ordinance, which is based on the authority of the sacred texts, is stated (to be that) through which Bharadvâga and others became equal to Brahman.

10. Through the performance of these rites a Brâhmaṇa, whose heart is full of peace, obtains whatever desires he may have in his heart.

PRASNA IV, ADHYÂYA 7.

1. The wishes of a Brâhmaṇa who has left off evil deeds and is (ever) engaged in holy works are fulfilled even without (the practice of) restraints.

2. Upright Brâhmaṇas quickly accomplish what-

7. See above, II, I, 1, 21, 39-40. I follow the reading of M. and of the commentary, paryâdhânegyayor etat parivitte ka bhe-shagam. The reading of the Dekhan MSS. is etat patite kaiva bhoganam, 'that food must be eaten . . . , and when one has become an outcast.'

7. 1. Yantrâni, 'restraints,' i.e. Krikṣhras, the fasts, and other practices described in the preceding chapters.

ever they wish in their hearts, if they are purified by honest actions.

3. Thus a wise man should practise those restraints until he has purified his bodily frame.

4. He who has been purified by those restraints should, after fasting three (days and) nights, begin the performance of that sacred rite through which he wishes to gain the fulfilment of his desires,—

5. (Reciting) the Kshâpavitra, the Sahasrâksha, the Mrigâra, the two Ganas (called) Amhomuk, the Pâvamanis, the Kûshmândis, and the Rikas, addressed to Vaisvânara,

6. (And) offering with (each of) these (Mantras) boiled rice and clarified butter during seven days, in the morning, at midday, and in the evening, keeping a rigid silence, living on food fit for a sacrifice, restraining his senses and his actions,

7. He is freed from all crimes, even mortal sins, after looking on a cross-road at a pot filled with water, (and reciting the text), 'Simhe me manyuk.'

8. He is freed from the multitude of sins, committed unintentionally in old age, in youth, and in infancy, and even from those belonging to former births;

9. After feeding at the end (of the seven days) Brâhmanas with milk and rice, well mixed with

5. According to Govinda the Kshâpavitra, or as the Dekhan MSS. read, Kshmâpavitra, occurs in the Sûtrapâtha of the Taittirîyas, consists of six verses, and begins 'Agne naya.' The text meant must be similar to Taitt. Samhitâ I, 1, 14, 3. The Sahasrâksha is the Purushasûkta. The Mrigâra consists of the Yâgyânuvâkyâs of the Mrigâreshî, Taitt. Samhitâ IV, 7, 15. The two Ganas called Amhomuk are found Taitt. Samhitâ II, 3, 13, 1, 'yâ vâm indrâvarunau' and 'yo vâm indrâvarunau.' The verses addressed to Agni Vaisvânara are the first eight of Taitt. Samhitâ I, 5, 11.

butter, and distributing to them after their dinner cows, land, sesamum, and gold,

10. A Brâhmaṇa becomes internally pure, his guilt being consumed like fuel, and fit for the performance of rites which secure the fulfilment of wishes and of rites like the kindling of the sacred fire.

PRAŚNA IV, ADHYĀYA 8.

1. He who, through excessive greed or carelessness, performs this rite for others, is tainted by sin, and perishes like one who has swallowed poison.

2. A Brâhmaṇa who performs this rite for his teacher, his father, his mother, or for himself is resplendent like the sun. Therefore this rite may be performed for those (persons).

3. Ka (Pragâpati) purified by means of this rite the god with a thousand eyes (Sahasrâksha), Fire, Wind, the Sun, Soma, Yama, and other lords of the gods.

4. Whatever there is in these three worlds, famed as possessing a holy name, Brâhmaṇas and the rest, (all) that was produced by Ka through this rite of sanctification.

5. This sin-destroying secret of Pragâpati was first produced; thereafter thousands of purificatory rites came into existence.

6. He who performs those eight Ganâhomas on the (first) day of the year, of a half-year, of a season, or of a fortnight, sanctifies ten ancestors and ten descendants of his line;

7. And, while still on earth, he is known to the

8. 5. I.e. those mentioned V, 7, 5.

gods in heaven as a holy man, and (after death) that virtuous man rejoices for a very long time in heaven like a god.

8. If a Brāhmaṇa is unable to offer those eight Ganahomas, let him offer one; thereby his guilt is effaced.

9. He, also, whose sons or pupils offer those eight Ganahomas, is freed from his sin which is bought off by his having instructed (them).

10. Through a desire of removing one's guilt one even may cause (these oblations) to be offered by men who have been engaged for money, in case oneself is unable (to do it); a man need not torment himself.

11. Even among the virtuous a distribution of wealth is made (for the success) of holy rites; sometimes a man who is free from debt is (thereby) freed from guilt.

12. Liberated according to this rule from the ocean of guilt and debt, he considers himself pure and able to successfully perform the sacred rites.

13. But in the case of that pure mortal who, freed from all sin and debts, begins the sacred rites, they will succeed without any effort.

14. Let him daily (study and) teach this holy (rule) of Pragâpati, which the sage has proclaimed, let him remember it or hear it. (By doing that) he is freed from all guilt and will be exalted in Brahman's world.

10. The meaning is that in case a wealthy man is unable to bear 'the restraints,' he may hire others to perform the Homas. Though the hired performer will be guilty of a serious offence (Sûtra 1), the person who causes them to be performed will derive benefit from them.

15. Let him mutter during twelve days those sacred texts through which he wishes to accomplish (his desires), eating once (a day) at night boiled rice with clarified butter, with milk, or with sour milk.

16. (Let him offer) ten times a burnt oblation and sprinkle clarified butter. (That is) the preliminary worship (which must be performed) when one desires to accomplish one's objects through those sacred texts.

PARISHIṢṬĀ.

PRASNA VII, ADHYĀYA 5.

1. We will explain the rule for the adoption of a son.
2. Man, formed of virile seed and uterine blood, proceeds from his mother and father (as an effect) from its cause.
3. (Therefore) the father and the mother have power to give, to abandon, or to sell their (son).
4. But let him not give nor receive (in adoption) an only son ;
5. For he (must remain) to continue the line of the ancestors.
6. Let a woman neither give nor receive a son except with the permission of her husband.
7. He who is desirous of adopting (a son) procures two garments, two earrings, and a finger-ring ; a spiritual guide who has studied the whole Veda ; a layer of Kusa grass and fuel of Pālāsa wood and so forth.

5. 1. This chapter has been translated by Mr. Sutherland, Dattaka Mīmāṃsā V, 42, and Dattaka Kāndrikā II, 16, and by myself, Journal Bengal Br. Roy. As. Soc., vol. XXXV, p. 162.

2-6. Identical with Vasishṭha XV, 1-5. The best MS. omits the particle tu, 'but,' in Sūtra 6, while others have it.

7-8. Vasishṭha XV, 7. The translation of madhye by 'in their presence' rests on the authority of the *Saṃskāra*kaustubha 47 b, 11, where it is explained madhye [a] iti bandhusamaksham. The other explanation 'in the middle (of his dwelling),' to which the interpolated text of the Dattaka Mīmāṃsā and Dattaka Kāndrikā refers, is, however, also possible.

8. Then he convenes his relations, informs the king (of his intention to adopt) in (their) presence, feeds the (invited) Brâhmaṇas in the assembly or in (his) dwelling, and makes them wish him 'an auspicious day,' 'hail,' (and) 'prosperity.'

9. Then he performs the ceremonies which begin with the drawing of the lines on the altar and end with the placing of the water-vessels, goes to the giver (of the child) and should address (this) request (to him), 'Give me (thy) son.'

10. The other answers, 'I give (him).'

11. He receives (the child with these words), 'I take thee for the fulfilment of (my) religious duties; I take thee to continue the line (of my ancestors).'

12. Then he adorns him with the (above-mentioned) two garments, the two earrings, and the finger-ring, performs the rites which begin with the placing of the (pieces of wood called) paridhis (fences round the altar) and end with the Agni-mukha, and offers (a portion) of the cooked (food) in the fire.

13. Having recited the Puroṇuvâkyâ (verse), 'He who thinking of thee with a discerning mind,' &c., he offers an oblation, reciting the Yâgyâ (verse), 'To which performer of good deeds, thou, O Gâta-vedas,' &c.

14. Then he offers (oblations, reciting) the Vyâ-hṛîtis;—(the ceremonies) which begin the oblation to Agni Svishṭakṛit and end with the presentation

8. The ceremony alluded to is the so-called pun'yâhavâkanam.

12. The correct reading is pakvâg guhoti.

13. The two texts are found Taittirîya Samhitâ I, 4, 46, 1.

14. Vasishṭha XV, 7. The parenthetical phrase occurs frequently in the Dharma-sûtra; see e. g. III, 4, 3.

of a cow as a fee (to the officiating priest are) known;—

15. And presents (to the spiritual guide) as a sacrificial fee those two dresses, those two earrings, and that finger-ring (with which he had adorned the child).

16. If after the performance of these (rites) a legitimate son of his own body is born (to the adopter, then the adopted son) receives a fourth (of the legitimate son's) share. Thus says Baudhâyana.

16. Vasishtha XV, 9.

INDEX
TO VOLS. II AND XIV.

INDEX TO VOLS. II AND XIV.

Ap. = Āpastamba ; Ga. = Gautama ; Va. = Vasishṭha ; Ba. = Baudhāyana.

- Abhivasta, Ap. I, 3, 25 ; 21, 8 ; 24, 6-25 ; 26, 6 ; 29, 8-14, 17. Ga. II, 35 ; xvii, 17 ; xix, 10. Va. xiv, 2 ; xxii, 7 ; xxiii, 14. Ba. I, 11, 35.
- Abortion, Ap. I, 21, 8 ; 24, 8. Ga. xxi, 9 ; xxii, 13. Va. xxviii, 7.
- Adoption, Va. xv, 1-10. Ba. Par. vii, 4.
- forbidden, Ap. II, 13, 11. See Son adopted.
- Adultery, Ap. I, 21, 9-10.
- penances for, Ap. I, 25, 1-2, 10 ; 28, 15, 18, 20 ; II, 26, 24-27, 1. Ga. I, xxii, 1-17, 23, 26-27, 35. Va. v, 3 ; xx, 13-16 ; xxi, 1-10, 12, 13, 16-17. Ba. II, 1, 13-15 ; 2, 13-14 ; 3, 48-51 ; 4, 15.
- punishments for, Ap. II, 26, 18-27 ; 27, 8-13. Ga. xii, 2-3. Ba. I, 18, 18 ; II, 3, 52-4, 3. See Guru, Wife, repudiation of.
- Agamyā (females not to be approached), enumeration, Ba. II, 4, 11.
- Aghamarshaṇa penance, Ba. III, 5.
- Agnīdhra priest, seat of, Ba. I, 15, 25.
- Agnihotra sacrifice, Ap. I, 14, 1. Va. ix, 10. Ba. II, 4, 23.
- Agnihotrin, Ap. II, 7, 13 ; 9, 13. Va. vi, 21 ; viii, 9 ; xxv, 2. Ba. II, 13, 8 ; IV, 5, 27.
- Agnishṭoma sacrifice, Ap. II, 7, 4. Ga. viii, 20. Ba. II, 4, 23.
- Agnishṭut sacrifice, Ga. xix, 10 ; xxii, 10. Va. xxii, 7. Ba. II, 1, 4 ; III, 10, 8.
- Agnyādheya sacrifice, Ga. viii, 19. Va. viii, 20. Ba. I, 13, 10 ; II, 4, 22-23.
- Āgrahāyaṇī, Ga. viii, 18. Va. xi, 43.
- Āgrayana sacrifice, Ga. viii, 19. Va. xi, 46. Ba. II, 4, 23.
- Agriculture, Ap. II, 10, 7. Ga. x, 5, 49. Va. II, 19, 31-36. Ba. I, 10, 28-30 ; II, 4, 20-21.
- Ahimsakā mode of life, Ba. III, 2, 13.
- Ātārya, etymology of, Ap. I, 1, 13. See Teacher and Spiritual Guide.
- Ambashṭha caste, Ga. iv, 16. Va. xviii, 18. Ba. I, 16, 7, 9 ; 17, 3, 9, 12.
- Anarṇatpārāyana penance, Ap. I, 27, 9. Va. iv, 32 ; xx, 46.
- description of, Ba. III, 9.
- Andhra (Āndhra), vol. ii, pp. xxv, xxx-xxxvii.
- Āṅga, country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
- Āṅgas, of Veda, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ga. viii, 5 ; xi, 19 ; xv, 28. Va. III, 19-20, 23 ; xiii, 7. Ba. II, 14, 2, 6.
- enumeration of, Ap. II, 8, 10-11.
- Animals, eatable and forbidden, Ap. I, 17, 29-39. Ga. xvii, 27-38. Va. xiv, 39-48. Ba. I, 12, 1-8.
- slaying of, Va. iv, 5-8.
- penance for slaying, Ap. I, 25, 13-26, 2. Ga. xxii, 18-22, 24-25. Va. xxi, 18, 23-27. Ba. I, 19, 6.
- penance for bite of, Ga. xxiii, 7. Va. xxiii, 31. Ba. I, 11, 38-41.
- Animal sacrifices, Va. xi, 46. Ba. I, 9 ; II, 4, 23. See Nirūdba-parubandha.
- Anvashṭakī, Va. xi, 43.
- Apapātra (low-caste), vol. ii, p. 11 ; Ap. I, 15, 29 ; 21, 6 ; II, 17, 20. Va. xx, 16. Ba. I, 21, 15 ; 2, 13 ; II, 2, 13.

- Âpastamba, vol. ii, pp. ix-xliv. Ba. II, 10, 14.
 — age of, vol. ii, pp. xxxvii-xliii.
 — home of, vol. ii, pp. xxxii-xliv.
 — works of, vol. ii, pp. xi-xiv.
 Âpastambha, vol. ii, p. xxxiii; vol. xiv, p. xlii.
 Âpastambins (-bîya), vol. ii, p. xv.
 Âptoryâma sacrifice, Ga. VIII, 20.
 Ârattas, Ba. I, 2, 14.
 Arghya, Ga. V, 32. See Honey-mixture.
 Arms, trade of, Ap. I, 18, 19; II, 10, 6; 17, 21. Ga. XIII, 13-23. Va. III, 25; XIV, 5. Ba. I, 2, 3; 18, 3.
 Ârsha marriage, Ap. II, 11, 18. Ga. IV, 8, 30. Va. I, 32. Ba. I, 20, 4.
 Arthasâstra, vol. ii, p. xxix.
 Artisan, Ga. X, 31; XI, 21; Va. XIX, 28.
 Ârya (Âryan), Ap. I, 3, 40; 12, 6, 8-10; 21, 13, 17; 28, 11; 29, 9; II, 10, 11. Ga. VI, 11; IX, 65, 69; X, 61, 67; XII, 2; XXII, 5. Ba. I, 10, 20; II, 2, 18. See Caste, three first or twice-born.
 Âryavarta, boundaries of, Va. I, 8-15. Ba. I, 2, 9-12.
 Ascetic, Ap. II, 9, 13; 21, 1; 26, 14. Ga. III, 2; XII, 38. Va. XI, 17, 34; XIX, 37; XXI, 33. Ba. I, 19, 13; II, 13, 7.
 — duties of, Ap. II, 21, 9-17. Ga. III, 11-25. Va. VI, 19-20; X. Ba. II, 11, 16-26, 18.
 — rites on entering order of, Ba. II, 17.
 Ashrakâ, Ap. I, 10, 2. Ga. VIII, 18; XVI, 38-39. Va. XIII, 22. Ba. II, 15, 9.
 Assassin. See Self-defence.
 Assault, Ap. I, 26, 6. Ga. XXI, 20-22. Va. XIX, 9. Ba. II, 1, 7.
 Assault-of-arms, Ap. II, 25, 14.
 Assembly legal. See Parishad.
 Assessors, Ga. XIII, 11.
 Astrologer, Ga. XIII, 1. Brâhmana not to be an, Va. X, 21. Ba. II, 2, 16.
 Astronomy, a Vedânga, Ap. II, 8, 11.
 Âsura marriage, Ap. II, 12, 1. Ga. IV, 11. Ba. I, 20, 7, 13; 21, 2-3. See Mânusha marriage.
 Aroka, king, vol. ii, p. xxxiv.
 Asuâikara crimes, Ap. I, 21, 12-19. Ba. II, 2, 15-16.
 — penances for, Ap. I, 29, 17-18; II, 12, 22-23. Ba. II, 2, 17.
 Âsvalâyana, Ba. II, 10, 14.
 Asvins, Ba. II, 16, 2.
 Atharvasîras Upanishad, vol. ii, p. lvi. Ga. XIX, 12. Va. XXII, 9; XXVIII, 14.
 Atharva-veda, vol. ii, pp. xxiv-xxv, xxix. Ap. II, 29, 12. Ba. IV, 3, 4; 5, 1.
 Atheist, Ap. I, 20, 5. Ga. xv, 16; XXI, 1. Va. I, 23; XII, 41. Ba. I, 10, 25.
 — penance for, Va. XXI, 29-30.
 Atikrikkbra penance, Ga. XIX, 20; XXV, 18-19. Va. XIV, 33; XX, 8, 10, 19; XXI, 16, 30; XXII, 16. Ba. II, 1, 7; 4, 12; III, 10, 18.
 — description of, Va. XXIV, 1-2. Ba. II, 2, 40; IV, 5, 8.
 Atirâtra sacrifice, Ap. II, 7, 4. Ga. VIII, 20.
 Atithi, etymology of, Va. VIII, 7. See Guest.
 Âtman. See Soul.
 Âtreya, vol. xiv, p. xl.
 Âtreya, etymology of, Va. XX, 35-36. See Murder, penance for.
 Aukheyas, vol. ii, p. xv.
 Aukhya, vol. xiv, p. xxxvi.
 Aupagandhani, vol. xiv, p. xl. Ba. II, 3, 33.
 Austerity, Ga. XIX, 11, 15. Va. XX, 47; XXII, 8. Ba. III, 9, 9, 13.
 Avakîrmin. See Student, penances for.
 Avantî, country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
 Avaras, men of later times, vol. ii, pp. xvii, xxxvii. Ap. p. 19; II, 13, 10.
 Âyogava caste, Ga. IV, 17. Ba. I, 16, 8; 17, 1, 8.
 Bali offering, Ap. I, 12, 16; II, 3, 12-15, 18-4, 9. Ga. II, 4; V, 9-17. Va. XI, 4. Ba. II, 5, 11; vol. xiv, p. 257.
 Barbarians, Ap. I, 32, 18. Ga. IX, 16. Va. VI, 41.
 Bathing, rule of, Ap. I, 2, 30; II, 22, 14. Ga. IX, 2, 61. Va. VI, 15. Ba. I, 3, 39; II, 5, 1-7; 6, 3, 24-25; 7, 3, 8.
 — a penance, Ap. I, 25, 10, &c. Ga.

- xix, 15, &c. Va. xxiii, 33, &c.
 Ba. iii, 10, 13, &c.
 Baudhāyana, vol. ii, pp. xv-xvi, xviii-xxiii; vol. xiv, pp. xxix-xlv.
 — age of, vol. ii, pp. xlix, li; vol. xiv, p. xliii.
 — home of, vol. xiv, p. xli.
 — works of, vol. xiv, p. xxx.
 — quoted, Ba. I, 5, 13; 6, 15; 7, 8; II, 10, 14; III, 5, 7; 6, 13. Ba. Par. vii, 4, 16.
 Baudhāyanins (-īyas), vol. ii, p. xv; vol. xiv, pp. xli-xlii.
 Begging, Ap. I, 3, 25-4, 4; II, 10, 1-3. Ga. II, 35-41; III, 14-15. Va. VII, 9; XI, 68-70; XII, 2-3. Ba. I, 3, 16-18; 5, 8-11; II, 11, 22; 18, 4-6, 14.
 Bestial crime, Ga. xxii, 36; xxiii, 12. Va. xxiii, 5-6.
 Bhāllavins, Va. I, 14-15. Ba. I, 2, 11-12.
 Bhāradvāga, vol. ii, pp. xvi, xxiii.
 Bhāradvāgins, vol. ii, p. xv.
 Bhaviṣhyat-purāṇa, vol. ii, p. xxviii. Ap. II, 24, 6.
 Bhikṣu, vol. ii, p. lv. Ga. III, 2. Ba. II, 11, 12.
 Bhrigyakastha caste, Ga. IV, 20.
 Blind man, excluded from inheritance, Ba. II, 3, 38.
 Bodhāyana, vol. xiv, p. xliii.
 Boundary, Va. xv, 18. See Land.
 Brahmakūṛka penance, Ba. IV, 5, 25.
 Brahmakārin. See Student.
 Brāhma marriage, Ap. II, 11, 17. Ga. IV, 6, 33. Va. I, 30. Ba. I, 20, 2.
 — offspring of, Va. III, 19.
 Brahman, offering to. See Veda-study.
 — priest, Ba. I, 15, 21, 23.
 — slayers of, Ap. I, 1, 27.
 Brāhmaṇa, quoted, Ap. I, 9-10; 3, 9, 26; 7, 7, 11, 10, 8; 12, 1-2, 10, 14; 17, 28; II, 7, 15; 13, 6. Ba. II, 11, 7.
 Brāhmaṇa caste, duties, livelihood, and occupations, Ap. I, 18, 3-8, 13-15; 20, 19-21, 4; 29, 4. Ga. II, 20; VII, 4-23; VIII, 1-11; IX, 1-6, 40. Va. II, 13-14, 22-47; III, 1-11, 24; VI, 23, 25, 33-44; VIII, 17; X, 31; XI, 45-48. Ba. I, 10, 24-30; 18, 2; II, 2, 13, 16, 26-29; 3, 1; 4, 16-21.
 — special rules for initiation, studentship, impurity, &c., Ap. I, 18, 21; 2, 33, 38, 40-41; 3, 28; 5, 16; 14, 23, 26. Ga. I, 5-6, 15-20, 22, 24, 26. Va. III, 26, 31; XI, 49, 52, 55, 58, 64, 67-68, 71. Ba. I, 3, 1-15, 17.
 Brāhmaṇa caste, rank and prerogatives, Ap. I, 1, 3-4; 14, 25; 30, 20, 22; 31, 6; II, 4, 16; 11, 5-6; 12, 5-8; 26, 10. Ga. V, 43-44; VIII, 12-13; IX, 12; X, 44; XI, 1, 7, 12-14; XIII, 26; XIV, 46; XVIII, 24-29. Va. I, 39-40, 43-46; III, 14; VI, 11; XI, 13; XII, 28-30. Ba. I, 18, 1-11; II, 6, 30; 7, 38.
 — feeding of and gifts to, Ap. II, 15, 12-13; 17, 4-22; 18, 10; 20, 2-4, 6; 25, 11; 26, 1-2. Ga. V, 20-21; X, 9; XV, 5, 7-14; XVIII, 31. Va. VI, 25, 30; VIII, 6; XI, 17-20, 27, 29. Ba. II, 5, 19; 11, 5; 14, 2-5.
 — property inherited by Brāhmaṇas only, Ga. xxviii, 41. Va. xvii, 84-86. Ba. I, 13, 14.
 — punishments of, Ap. II, 26, 11-13, 17-19. Ga. XII, 11, 16, 46-47. Ba. I, 18, 17-18; II, 4, 1.
 — wives of, Va. I, 24-26. Ba. I, 16, 2.
 — marriages lawful for, Ba. I, 20, 10.
 — murder of, Ap. I, 24, 7-25; 25, 11-12; 28, 21-29, 1. Ga. XXI, 1; XXII, 1-13; XXIV, 6-12. Va. XX, 23-28, 34, 37; XXV, 4. Ba. I, 18, 18-19; 19, 5; II, 1, 2-6; IV, 1, 29; 2, 6-8.
 — other offences against, Ga. xxi, 17, 20-22; xxii, 28. Ba. II, 1, 7. See Srottriya.
 Brahmānvādhāna rite, Ba. II, 17, 18-19.
 Bride, Va. XIII, 60.
 Bridegroom, Va. xi, 2. Ba. II, 6, 30.
 Brother, Ap. I, 14, 9. Ga. VI, 3, 8. Ba. I, 3, 33.
 — inherits sister's fee, Ga. xxviii, 25.
 — eldest inherits brother's estate, Ga. xxviii, 27.
 — younger brother sacrificing, marrying, &c. before elder, Ap. II, 12, 22. Ga. xv, 18; xviii, 20. Va. I, 18; xx, 7-8. Ba. II, 1, 39-40; IV, 6, 7. See Sons, eldest, &c.

- Buddhists, vol. ii, p. lv.
 Bukkarāya, king, vol. xiv, p. xlii.
- Caste, four original, Ap. I, 1, 3-7. Va. II, 1. Ba. I, 16, 1.
 — three first or twice-born, Ap. II, 25, 13; 26, 4; 27, 8-15. Va. II, 2-3. See Ārya.
 — mixed, Ga. IV, 16-28. Va. XVIII. Ba. I, 16, 6-17, 15.
 — change of, Ga. IV, 22-24.
 — duties of all, Va. IV, 5.
 — exclusion from, Ga. XX, 1-9. Va. XV, 11-16. Ba. II, 1, 36.
 — origin of, Ga. IV, 24. Va. IV, 1-3. Ba. I, 18, 1-6.
 — re-admission into, Ga. XX, 10-16. Va. XV, 17-21.
 Central India, vol. ii, p. xxxii.
 Conduct, rule of, Va. VI, 1-9.
 — how settled, Ap. I, 20, 1-9; II, 29, 14.
 — penance for violation of, Ga. XXV, 7.
 Connubial intercourse, duty of, Ap. I, 32, 1-2; II, 1, 9, 16-2, 1. Ga. V, 1-2; IX, 28-29. Va. XII, 6-7, 21. Ba. I, 21, 18; IV, 1, 16-21. XXVIII, 30-31.
 Countries, law of, Ap. II, 15, 1. Ga. XI, 20. Va. I, 17. Ba. I, 2, 1-8.
 Cows, Ap. I, 17, 30-31; 26, 1; 30, 20; 31, 8-12; II, 8, 5-7. Ga. VII, 8; IX, 12, 19, 23; X, 18; XVII, 30; XXII, 18; XXIII, 12. Va. IV, 8; VI, 11; XII, 9; XIV, 30, 45-46; XXI, 18; XXIII, 6. Ba. II, 4, 18; 6, 17, 18, 30.
 Crimes, classification of, Ap. I, 21, 7-19. Ga. XXI. Va. I, 19-23. Ba. II, 2, 1, 12, 15.
 Cultivator, law affecting, Ap. II, 28, 1-2. Ga. X, 24-25; XI, 21.
 Custom, law of, Ap. II, 15, 1. Ga. XI, 20. Va. I, 17. Ba. I, 2, 1-12.
- Daiva marriage, Ap. II, 11, 19. Ga. IV, 9, 31. Va. I, 31. Ba. I, 20, 5.
 Dakshinā. See Sacrificial fee.
 Damage, done by cattle, Ap. II, 28, 5. Ga. XII, 19-26.
 Dancing, where to take place, Ap. II, 25, 4.
 Darapūṣṭamāsa sacrifices, Ga. VIII, 19. Ba. II, 4, 23.
- Dattaka. See Son adopted.
 Daughter, duty of marrying, Ga. XVIII, 20-23. Va. XVII, 67-70. Ba. IV, 1, 11-6.
 — crime of selling, Ap. II, 13, 11. Va. I, 36-38. Ba. I, 21, 2-3; II, 2, 27. See Āsura marriage.
 — inherits from father, Ap. II, 14, 4.
 — from mother, Ga. XXVIII, 24. Va. XVII, 46. Ba. II, 3, 43.
 — mother inherits from, Ga. XXVIII, 25.
 — appointed, Ga. XXVIII, 18-19. Va. XVII, 45-46. Ba. II, 3, 16.
 Daushyanta caste, Ga. IV, 16.
 Deaf man, free from taxes, Ap. II, 26, 16.
 Debts, Ga. XII, 40-41. Va. XVI, 31.
 — Brāhmana's three, Va. XI, 47-48. Ba. II, 16, 4-8.
 Defamation, Ap. I, 26, 3-4, 7; II, 27, 14. Ga. XII, 1, 8-14; XXI, 10, 17-18; XXIII, 27-28; XXV, 7. Va. XIX, 9; XXIII, 38-40. Ba. II, 2, 33-34.
 Dekhan, Ba. I, 2, 13.
 Deposits, Ga. XII, 42. Va. XVI, 18. Ba. II, 2, 3.
 Desastha Brāhmins, vol. ii, p. xxxi.
 Devapāla, vol. ii, p. xxxiii.
 Dharmaśāstra, Ga. XI, 19.
 — reading, a penance, Va. XXVII, 19.
 — rule for teaching, Va. XXIV, 6-7. Ba. IV, 2, 9-10.
 Dhīvara caste, Ga. IV, 19.
 Dhruvā mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 16; 2, 7-10.
 Documents, Va. XV, 10, 14-15.
 Domestic priest, Ap. II, 10, 14-16. Ga. XI, 12-17. Va. XIX, 3-6, 41-42. Ba. I, 18, 7-8.
 Dowry, Va. XIII, 53.
 Dravida, vol. ii, pp. xxv, xxxiv-xxxv.
 Dress, Ap. I, 2, 39-3, 9; 15, 1; 30, 10-14; II, 4, 21. Ga. I, 16-21; III, 18-19; IX, 3-6. Va. IX, 1; X, 9-10; XI, 61-67; XII, 14, 38-39. Ba. I, 3, 14; 5, 6; 13, 4-10; II, 6, 39-40; 6, 39; II, 15; 18, 44; 19, 21.
 Drinking spirituous liquor, Ap. I, 21, 8. Ga. II, 20; XXI, 1. Ba. I, 2, 4; 18, 18.
 — penance for, Ap. I, 25, 3, 10; 27, 10. Ga. XXIII, 10-12. Va. XX, 19, 22; XXVI, 5. Ba. II, 1, 18-22.

- Dumb man, free from taxes, Ap. II, 26, 16.
- Duty. See Taxes.
- Dvâdajâha sacrifice, Ap. II, 7, 4.
- Eating, rules of, Ap. I, 15, 16-20, 16; 31, 1; II, 1, 2-7. Ga. IX, 32, 56-59. Va. III, 69-70; VI, 20-22; XII, 18-20, 31, 35. Ba. I, 2, 2; II, 5, 21-6, 2; 12-13; 6, 39-40.
- Eka, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 7.
- Emigrant, property of, Ga. XIV, 44. Va. XIV, 19-20.
- wife of, Ga. XVIII, 15-17. Va. XVII, 75-80.
- Enasvin. See Sinful men.
- Etymology, a Vedânga, Ap. II, 8, 11.
- Eunuch, excluded from inheritance, Ap. II, 14, 1. Ga. XXVIII, 43. Va. XVII, 52-53; XIX, 35-36.
- Evidence, threefold, Va. XVI, 10. See Documents, Ordeals, Possession, Witness.
- venial false, Ga. XXIII, 29; Va. XVI, 33.
- Exclusion from inheritance, Ap. XIV, 1, 15. Ga. XXVIII, 23, 40, 43. Va. XVII, 52-53. Ba. II, 3, 37-40.
- Excommunication. See Caste.
- Excrements, voiding of, Ap. I, 30, 15-31, 3. Ga. IX, 12, 14, 37-43. Va. VI, 10-13; XII, 11, 13-17. Ba. I, 10, 10-14.
- Families, law of, Ap. II, 15, 1. Ga. IX, 20. Va. I, 17.
- Fasting, a penance, Ga. XIX, 11. Va. XXII, 8. Ba. III, 10, 9, &c.
- a punishment, Ap. I, 8, 30, &c.
- forbidden, Ba. II, 13, 8-9.
- Father, Ap. I, 1, 17; 10, 4; 14, 6; II, 10, 1. Va. IV, 21; XIII, 48. Ba. I, 11, 20; II, 3, 45.
- partition by, Ap. II, 13, 13-14, 1, 6-9. Ga. XXVIII, 2. Ba. I, 21, 12; II, 1, 25; 3, 2-8.
- partition against will of, Ga. XV.
- power over children, Ap. II, 13, 11. Va. XV, 2. Ba. Par. VII, 4, 3.
- over marriageable daughter lost, Ga. XVIII, 20. Va. XVII, 67-68. Ba. IV, 1, 14.
- to be cast off, Ga. XX, 1. Va. XIII, 47.
- to be maintained though out-cast, Ga. XXI, 15-16. See Parents, Son.
- Father-in-law, Ap. II, 8, 7. Ga. V, 27; VI, 9. Va. XIII, 41. Ba. I, 3, 45; II, 6, 30.
- Fellow-student, Ap. I, 7, 29; 10, 12; 11, 11. Ga. II, 40; III, 8; XIV, 20. Ba. I, 11, 30.
- Food, lawful and forbidden, Ap. I, 16, 21-31; 17, 5, 14-18, 16; II, 15, 14. Ga. IX, 38; XVII. Va. IV, 30; VI, 27-29; XIII, 1-11, 14-48. Ba. I, 9, 1-8; 10, 2-9; 12, 1-15.
- penance for eating forbidden, Ap. I, 26, 7; 27, 3-6. Ga. XXIII, 45, 23-26; XXIV, 3; XXV, 7. Va. IV, 31; XX, 17, 21; XXIII, 30; XXVII, 10-17. Ba. I, 12, 12-13; II, 5, 8; IV, 1, 5-6; 2, 5, 13-14; 6, 7.
- purifying, Ga. XIX, 13. Va. XXII, 11. Ba. III, 10, 11, &c.
- Fornication, Ap. II, 26, 18, 21. Ba. II, 2, 13.
- Funeral ceremonies, Ap. II, 15, 9-11. Ga. XIV, 37-42. Va. IV, 9-15, 36. Ba. I, 11, 24-26.
- Funeral sacrifices. See Srâddhas.
- Gambling, Ap. II, 25, 12-13. Ga. XXV, 18. Ba. II, 2, 16.
- Gazahomas, Ba. IV, 7, 5-7; 8, 1-11.
- Gandharva, Ap. I, 20, 6. Va. XXVIII, 6. Ba. II, 4, 5.
- Gândharva marriage, Ap. II, 11-20. Ga. IV, 10. Va. I, 33. Ba. I, 20, 6, 12, 16.
- Ganges, Va. I, 12. Ba. I, 2, 10.
- Garbhâdhâna, Ga. VIII, 4.
- Gautama, vol. ii, pp. xlii-lvi; vol. xiv, pp. xxi, xl.
- quoted, Va. IV, 34, 36. Ba. I, 2, 7; II, 4, 17.
- Gayâ, Va. XI, 43.
- Gâyatri. See Sâvitri.
- Gifts, Ap. I, 12, 16; 18, 1-19, 16; II, 10, 4; 15, 13. Ga. V, 21-23; X, 1; XIX, 11, 16. Va. II, 14, 15; VI, 26, 30-32; VIII, 13; XIV, 12-13; XX, 47; XXII, 8; XXVIII, 16-22; XXIX. Ba. I, 18, 2-4; II, 5, 19-20; 6, 41-42; III, 10, 9, 14.
- manner of making, Ap. II, 9, 8-9. Ga. V, 18-23. Ba. II, 7, 39-40.

- Gifts, penance for accepting, Ap. I, 28, 11. Ga. xxiv, 2. Ba. II, 5, 8; IV, 2, 4.
- Girdle, sacred, Ap. I, 2, 33-37. Ga. I, 15. Va. XI, 58-60. Ba. I, 3, 13.
- Godâna rite, Ga. II, 9.
- Godâvari river, vol. ii, p. xxxi.
- Gods, images of, Ap. I, 30, 20, 22. Ga. IX, 12.
- Gosava sacrifice, Va. xxii, 7. Ba. II, 1, 4.
- Govindasvâmin, vol. ii, p. xlix; vol. xiv, p. xlv.
- Grammar, a Vedânga, Ap. II, 8, 11. — study of, Va. X, 20.
- Guests, Ap. I, 15, 1; II, 4, 1, 11; II, 4, 11, 13-20; 6, 5-9, 4. Ga. V, 25-45. Va. VIII, 4-5, 11-15. Ba. II, 5, 11-18; 6, 36-37.
- Gugarât, vol. ii, p. xxxii.
- Guru (venerable person), Ap. I, 2, 29; 6, 29, 31, 33; 8, 14-15; 10, 2; 14, 6, 15-17; 15, 1; 21, 9; II, 15, 8. Ga. II, 14, 37; V, 21; VI, 3; IX, 64; XVII, 4; XX, 2, 6. Va. XIII, 24; XIV, 13; XVII, 56; XX, 1, 9-10. Ba. II, 2, 13; 4, 9; 5, 19.
- slaying a, Ap. I, 24, 24-25.
- adultery with wife of, Ap. I, 25, 1-2, 10; 28, 15-18. Ga. XXI, 1, 8; XXIII, 8-12; XXIV, 10-12. Va. I, 20; XX, 13-14; XXVI, 7-8. Ba. I, 18, 18; II, 1, 13-15; 4, 15.
- other offences against, Ga. XXI, 10; XXIII, 30-31. Va. I, 23; XXI, 28. See Teacher, Parents.
- Gaiminîya school, vol. ii, p. xlix.
- Ganaka, vol. ii, p. xxxviii; p. 131. Ba. II, 3, 34.
- Gâtakarman, Ga. VIII, 14.
- Gyeshîbasâman, he who knows, Ap. II, 17, 22. Ga. XV, 28. Va. III, 19. Ba. II, 14, 2.
- Hair, arrangement of, Ap. I, 2, 31-32. Ga. I, 27; III, 11-12, 24. Va. II, 21; VII, 11; IX, 1; X, 6. Ba. II, 11, 15, 18.
- Haradatta, vol. ii, pp. xliii-xliv, lvii.
- Harihara king, vol. ii, p. xxxiii.
- Hârîta, vol. ii, p. xxvi; vol. xiv, p. xx. — quoted, Ap. I, 13, 10; 18, 2; 19, 12; 28, 1, 6; 29, 12, 16. Va. II, 6. Ba. II, 2, 21.
- Herdsmen, law affecting, Ap. II, 28, 3-9. Ga. XI, 21; XII, 20.
- Hermit, Ap. I, 18, 31; II, 9, 13; 21, 1. Ga. III, 2. Ba. II, 11, 12; 13, 7; 17, 6; III, 1, 8; IV, 5, 27. — classes of, Ba. III, 3, 9-15.
- duties of, Ap. II, 21, 18; 23, 2. Ga. III, 26-35. Va. VI, 19-20; IX. Ba. II, 11, 14-15; III, 3, 18-4, 22.
- penance for, Va. XXI, 32.
- Himâlaya, Va. I, 8-9. Ba. I, 2, 9.
- Hiranyakesin, vol. ii, pp. xiii, xvi, xxiii-xxiv; vol. xiv, p. xxxvi. Ba. II, 10, 14.
- Homicide, Ap. I, 21, 8; 29, 2-3; II, 27, 16-17. See Murder.
- Honey-mixture, Ap. II, 8, 5-9. Ga. V, 27-30. Va. XI, 1-2. Ba. II, 6, 36-37.
- Horse-sacrifice, Ap. I, 24, 22. Ga. XIX, 9; XXIII, 9. Va. XI, 78; XXII, 6. Ba. II, 1, 4-5; III, 10, 7.
- Hotri priest, seat of, Ba. I, 15, 24.
- House, dispute about, Va. XVI, 12-13.
- Householder, duties of, Ap. II, 1, 1-13, 23; 20, 10-20. Ga. IV-V. Va. VI, 19-20; VIII; XI. Ba. II, 4, 22-5, 9; 13, 7-9.
- Husband and wife, rights of, Ap. II, 14, 16-18; 27, 1-7; 29, 3-4. Ga. VI, 6; XVIII, 1-3. Va. V, 1-2; XXI, 9-10; XXVIII, 7. Ba. II, 3, 44-47; 4, 6. See Wife.
- Idiot, excluded from inheritance, Ga. XXVIII, 43. Ba. II, 3, 38.
- son of, inherits, Ga. XXVIII, 44.
- Impure substances, penances for swallowing, Ga. XXIII, 3. Va. XX, 20. Ba. II, 2, 36; IV, 6, 7.
- touching, Va. XXIII, 24-25.
- Impurity through births and deaths, Ap. I, 15, 18; II, 15, 2-8, 20-26. Ga. XIV. Va. IV, 16-37. Ba. I, 11, 1-8, 17-23, 27-32. See Purification.
- Incest, Ap. I, 21, 8. Ga. XXI, 1-8; XXIII, 12. Va. XX, 15. Ba. II, 2, 13; 4, 11-12.
- Indivisible property, Ga. XXVIII, 46-48.
- Infants, Ap. II, 15, 20-26. Ga. II,

- 1-5; XIV, 44. Va. II, 6-7; XIX, 37. Ba. I, 3, 6; II, 3-4.
- Inheritance, Ap. II, 13, 2, 13-14, 14. Ga. XXVIII, 1-47. Va. XV, 9; XVII, 1-54, 81-87. Ba. I, 11, 11, 16; II, 32-43. See Brother, Daughter, Mother, Sakulya, Sapinda, Son, Wife, Pupil, Teacher, Officiating priest, King, Exclusion from inheritance, Coparcener, Indivisible property, Partition, Re-united coparcener.
- Initiation, Ap. I, 1, 5, 8-21. Ga. I, 5-14. Va. II, 3; XI, 49-73. Ba. I, 3, 7-12.
- neglect of, Ap. I, 1, 22-2, 10. Ga. XXI, 11. Va. XI, 74-79. Ba. I, 16, 16.
- second, Ga. XXII, 2. Va. XX, 17-20; XXIII, 30. Ba. II, 1, 19-21.
- Interest, Ga. XII, 29-36. Va. II, 43-51. Ba. I, 10, 22-25.
- Judge, Ap. II, 29, 5-6. Ga. XIII, 26-31. Ba. I, 19, 8-9.
- Judicial procedure, Ap. II, 11, 1-3; 29, 6-9. Ga. XI, 19-25; XIII. Va. XVI. Ba. I, 18, 7-16.
- Kâlakavana, Va. I, 8. Ba. I, 2, 9.
- Kâleyas (Kâletas), vol. ii, p. xv.
- Kaliṅga, vol. ii, pp. xxxiv-xxxvi. Ba. I, 2, 14-15.
- Kalpa, a Vedāṅga, Ap. II, 8, 11.
- Kalpa-sūtras, vol. ii, p. xi. Ap. II, 8, 12-13.
- Kânarâ country, vol. ii, p. xxxi.
- Kanva, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 3; 28, 1.
- Kânva, vol. ii, p. xxvi; vol. xiv, p. xxxvi. Ap. I, 19, 7. Ba. II, 10, 14.
- Kânvâyana, vol. xiv, p. xxxvi.
- Kapila, son of Prahlâda, Ba. II, 11, 28.
- Kapotâ mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 16; 2, 15; IV, 5, 28.
- Karana caste, Ga. IV, 21.
- Kârankara country, Ba. I, 2, 14.
- Karnâṭaka Brâhmans, vol. ii, p. xxxi.
- Karshâpana, Va. XIX, 37.
- Kâsakrîtsna, vol. xiv, p. xl.
- Kâsyapa, Ba. I, 21, 2.
- Kâṭbaka, vol. ii, p. xxxiii; vol. xiv, p. xvi.
- quoted, Va. XII, 24; XXX, 5.
- Kâtya, Ba. I, 3, 46.
- Kâtyâyana, vol. ii, p. xxxv.
- Kauddâlî mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 16; 2, 5-6.
- Kautsa, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 4; 28, 1.
- Ketalaputra, vol. ii, p. xxxv.
- Khândîkiya school, vol. ii, pp. xv-xvii.
- King, Ap. I, 31, 5; 8, 23; II, 8, 6-7; 11, 5. Ga. V, 30-31; VI, 13, 24-25; VIII, 1-3; IX, 63; XII, 2; XIII, 11, 13; XIV, 10, 45; XXI. Va. II, 49-50; III, 4, 13; XIII, 59; XVI, 17. Ba. II, 4, 15; 6, 30; 7, 15.
- duties of, Ap. II, 7, 12; 10, 14; 11, 1-4; 25, 1-29, 10. Ga. X, 7-48; XI; XIII, 26; XVIII, 30-32. Va. I, 41-43; XVI, 2-9, 21-26; XIX. Ba. I, 18-19.
- takes heirless property, Ap. II, 14, 5. Ga. XXVIII, 42. Va. XVII, 83-86. Ba. I, 13, 15-16.
- — property without owner, Va. XIX, 19-20. See Domestic priest, Minister, Officials, Pardon, Punishment.
- Krikkbra penance, Ap. I, 25, 8; 27, 6, 8; 28, 20. Ga. XIX, 20; XXIII, 32; XXVII, 2. Va. XX, 6-10, 12, 16, 19; XXI, 13, 16, 18, 24-27, 29, 32; XII, 16; XXIII, 19; XXVII, 20. Ba. I, 12, 12; II, 1, 7, 19, 23, 38-40; 2, 33-34; 3, 48, 50; 4, 12; III, 10, 8.
- description of, Ap. I, 27, 7; Ga. XXVI, 1-17. Va. XXI, 20; XXIII, 42-43; XXIV, 4-5. Ba. I, 12, 12; II, 2, 38, 42-45; IV, 5, 6-7.
- Krikkbâtikrikkbra penance, Ga. XXVI, 20. Va. XXIV, 3. Ba. II, 2, 41; IV, 5, 9.
- Krishnala, Ga. X, 18.
- Krishnapandita Dharmâdhikârin, vol. xiv, pp. xxvii-xxviii.
- Kshâtra marriage, Va. I, 34. See Râkshasa marriage.
- Kshatriya caste, Ap. I, 1, 3-4; 14, 25, 18, 9; II, 4, 18, 25-27. Ga. V, 44; VI, 18; VII, 6. Va. II, 1-2. Ba. I, 5, 9; 6, 9; II, 1, 21; 4, 16-17.
- duties and occupations, Ap. II, 10, 6, 10-11. Ga. VII, 26; X, 19, 41. Va. I, 24; II, 15-17, 24-40; III, 25. Ba. I, 16, 3; 18, 3; 20, 12.

- Kshatriya caste, special rules for initiation, studentship, saluting, &c., Ap. I, 1, 5, 18, 21; 2, 34, 38, 40; 3, 1, 5, 9, 29; 5, 16; 14, 23, 27. Ga. I, 11, 13, 15-17, 23, 26; V, 41; XIV, 2. Va. III, 27, 32; XI, 53, 56, 59, 62, 65, 67, 69. Ba. I, 3, 8, 10, 15, 17; 8, 23.
- murder of, Ap. I, 24, 1-9. Ga. XXII, 14. Va. XX, 31, 34, 38. Ba. I, 18, 20-19, 1; II, 1, 8.
- punishments of, Ga. XII, 8-9, 14, 16. Va. XXI, 3. Ba. I, 18, 19.
- Kshatri caste, Ga. IV, 18. Ba. I, 16, 8; 17, 1, 7, 10-11.
- Kukkuraka caste, Ba. I, 16, 8, 12; 17, 1, 14.
- Kunika, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 7.
- Kūshmāṇḍa penance, rule of, Ba. III, 6.
- Kutsa, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 7.
- Kaitrī rite, Ga. III, 18.
- Kakraṭara beggars, Ba. III, 1, 1, 5.
- Kāṇḍāla (Kāṇḍāla) caste, Ap. I, 9, 15, 17; II, 6, 8-9; 9, 5-6. Ga. IV, 17-18, 28; XIV, 30; XV, 24; XVI, 19. Va. XI, 9; XIII, 11; XVIII, 1; XXIV, 33-34, 4. Ba. I, 9, 5, 7; 16, 8, 17, 1, 7; II, 4, 13-14.
- Kāṇḍrāyana penance, Ga. XIX, 20. Va. XXI, 13; XXII, 16; XXIII, 16; XXVII, 20. Ba. II, 3, 49; 4, 12; III, 10, 18.
- description of, Ga. XXVII; Va. XXIV, 45-47; XXVII, 21. Ba. III, 8; IV, 5, 17-21.
- Karanavyūha, vol. ii, pp. xv, xxx-xxxI, xlvii.
- Kāturmāsya-kāṇḍa quoted, Va. I, 37.
- sacrifice, Ap. I, 10, 1. Ga. VIII, 19. Va. XI, 46. Ba. II, 4, 23.
- Kāula rite, Ga. VIII, 14.
- Kolas, vol. ii, pp. xxxv-xxxvi.
- Land, dispute about, Va. XVI, 13.
- Law, sources of the, Ap. I, 1, 1-2; 20, 7-8; II, 15, 1; 29, 13-15. Ga. I, 1-4; VI, 22; XI, 20; XXVIII, 48-52. Va. I, 1-18. Ba. I, 1-2.
- institutes of. See Dharmasāstra.
- Lending money. See Usury.
- Limitation, law of, Ga. XXI, 37-39. Va. XVI, 16-18.
- Livelihood, various means of, Ba. III, 1-3. See Occupations.
- Mādhava-Sāyana, vol. xiv, p. xlii.
- Madhuparka. See Honey-mixture.
- Mādhyaṇdina-jākhā, vol. ii, pp. xxv, xxxix.
- Madman, excluded from inheritance, Ap. II, 14, 1. Va. XVII, 54; XIX, 35-36.
- Magadha country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
- Māgadha caste, Ga. IV, 17-18. Ba. 16, 8; 17, 1, 7.
- Magic rites and incantations, Ap. I, 26, 7; 29, 15. Ga. XI, 17; XXV, 7. Ba. II, 2, 16.
- Mahābhārata, vol. xiv, p. xli.
- Mahādeva, commentator, vol. ii, p. xvi.
- Mahāgagṇu, Ba. III, 9, 21.
- Mahāpātaka crimes, Ga. XXI, 1-10; XXVI, 22. Va. I, 19-22; XX, 13-47.
- Mahārṇava, vol. ii, pp. xxxi-xxxii.
- Mahāsāmtapana penance, Ba. IV, 5, 16.
- Mahāyagña. See Sacrifices great.
- Māhishya caste, Ga. IV, 20.
- Maintenance, Ap. I, 28, 9; II, 26, 22. Ga. XXI, 15; XXVIII, 43. Va. XVII, 54; XIX, 30-36. Ba. II, 1, 37; 3, 37, 42.
- Maitrāyaṇya school, vol. ii, p. xxxii; vol. xiv, pp. xvi, xxi.
- Mānava school, vol. ii, pp. ix-xi, xxxii; vol. xiv, p. xviii.
- sūtra, vol. ii, pp. ix, lvii; vol. xiv, p. xviii. Va. IV, 5-8.
- Manes, libations to. See Tarpana.
- oblations to. See Śrāddha.
- Manu, vol. ii, p. lvii; vol. xiv, pp. xvii-xx.
- quoted, Ga. XXI, 7. Va. I, 17; III, 2; XI, 23; XIII, 16; XIX, 37.
- referred to, Ap. II, 14, 11; 16, 1. Ga. XXIII, 28. Va. XII, 16; XXIII, 43. Ba. II, 3, 2; IV, 1, 13; 2, 15.
- Mānusha marriage, Va. I, 35. See Āsura marriage.
- Marāṭhā Brāhmins, vol. ii, pp. xxxi-xxxii.
- Marriage, expenses of, Ap. II, 10, 1. Ga. V, 21; XVIII, 24-28. Ba. II, 5, 19.
- forbidden degrees and impediments, Ap. II, 11, 15-16. Ga.

- IV, 2. Va. VIII, 1-2. Ba. I, 2, 2; II, 1, 37-38.
- Marriage, intermarriage between different castes forbidden, Ap. II, 13, 4-5.
- permitted, Ga. IV, 16. Va. I, 24-25. Ba. I, 16, 2-5.
- rites, Ap. II, 11, 17-12, 4. Ga. IV, 6-15. Va. I, 27-35. Ba. I, 20, 1-21, 23.
- second of infant widows, Va. XVII, 72-74. Ba. IV, 1, 16. See Woman remarried.
- time of, for females, Ga. XVIII, 20-23. Va. XVII, 69-71. Ba. IV, 1, 11-14.
- Mâsha, Ga. XII, 29. Va. II, 51.
- Maternal uncle, Ap. I, 14, 11. Ga. V, 27; VI, 7, 9. Va. XI, 2; XIII, 41. Ba. I, 3, 45; II, 6, 30.
- Mâtridatta, vol. ii, p. xxiii.
- Maudgalya, Ba. II, 4, 8.
- Measures and weights, Va. XIX, 13.
- Merchants, to decide their own disputes, Ga. X, 35.
- Metrics, a Vedânga, Ap. II, 8, 11.
- Mîmâmsâ, vol. ii, pp. xxi, xxvii, pp. 15, 134; vol. xiv, p. I. Ap. II, 8, 13. Va. III, 20. Ba. I, 1, 8.
- Ministers, royal, Va. XVI, 2.
- Minors, Ga. X, 48. Va. XVI, 7-9, 16. Ba. II, 3, 36.
- Mitramîra, date of, vol. ii, pp. xlii-xliv.
- Mother, Ap. I, 1, 17; 2, 5, 15-16; 10, 14; 14, 6; II, 10, 1. Ga. II, 51; VI, 7; XIV, 16; XXVIII, 24. Va. IV, 21; XIII, 48. Ba. I, 11, 20, 22; II, 1, 25.
- inherits from daughter, Ga. XXVIII, 25-26.
- outcast, Ap. I, 28, 9. Ga. XXI, 15. Va. XIII, 47. Ba. II, 3, 42.
- power over children, Va. XV, 2, 5. Ba. Par. VII, 4, 2, 5.
- succession to, Ga. XXVIII, 24. Va. XVII, 46. Ba. II, 3, 43.
- Mukhenâdayin hermits, Ba. III, 3, 9, 12.
- Murder, penances and punishments for, Ap. I, 24, 1-25; 25, 11-12; 28, 21-29, 1. Ga. XXII, 1-17, 23, 26-27; XXIV, 6-10. Va. XX, 23-40; XXV, 4. Ba. I, 18, 18-19, 5; II, 1, 2-12; IV, 1, 29; 2, 6-8. See Homicide.
- Mûrdhâvasikta caste, Ga. IV, 19.
- Music, Ap. II, 25, 13.
- Nandivarman, Pallava-malla, vol. xiv, p. xlii.
- Narmadâ river, vol. ii, p. xxxi.
- Nirûdhasubandha sacrifice, Ga. VIII, 19.
- Nishâda caste, Ga. IV, 16. Va. XVIII, 8. Ba. I, 16, 7, 11; 17, 3, 13-14; II, 3, 30, 32.
- Niyoga (appointment of widows), Ga. XVIII, 4, 14; XXVIII, 22. Va. XVII, 58-66. Ba. II, 4, 9-10.
- forbidden, vol. ii, pp. xxiv-xxv. Ap. II, 27, 2-7.
- Northern Brâhmins, vol. ii, p. xxxiii; vol. xiv, p. xli. Ap. II, 17, 7. Ba. I, 2.
- Nyâya. See Mîmâmsâ.
- Oath of witnesses, Ga. XIII, 12-13.
- Occupations of castes, Ap. I, 1, 6; 20, 10-20; II, 10, 4-9. Ga. VII, 4-26; IX, 1, 7-30; X. Va. II, 13-51. Ba. I, 10, 21-30; 18, 1-6; II, 4, 16-21. See Livelihood.
- Officials, royal, Ap. II, 26, 4-8. Ga. VI, 13; XII, 38. Va. XV, 21-26.
- Officiating priests, Ap. II, 8, 6-7; 10, 8-9; 11, 19; 27, 18. Ga. V, 27-29; VI, 9; XI, 18; XIV, 1; XV, 14; XXI, 12. Va. XI, 2; XIII, 50. Ba. I, 3, 45; II, 2, 13, 29; 13, 5-10; 15, 9, 17; II, 6, 30.
- Om, syllable, Ap. I, 13, 6-8. Ga. I, 57. Va. XXV, 9-13. Ba. II, 11, 6; 18, 25-26; IV, 1, 27-28.
- Ordeals, Ap. II, 11, 3; 29, 6.
- Orders, four, Ap. II, 21, 1-5. Ga. III, 2. Va. VII, 1-2. Ba. II, 11, 12.
- comparison of four, Ap. II, 23-24. Ga. III, 36. Ba. II, 11, 9-34.
- Outcasts, Ap. I, 9, 9; II, 2, 7. Ga. II, 35; IV, 27; XV, 24. Va. XI, 9; XIII, 51-52; XIV, 2; XVII, 20. Ba. II, 1, 20; 6, 22.
- definition of term, Ga. XXI, 6, 8-10, 13-14.
- excluded from inheritance, Ap. II, 141. Va. XVII, 53. Ba. II, 3, 40.
- intercourse with forbidden, Ap. I, 21, 5; 28, 6-10. Ga. XXI, 3;

- xxii, 33. Va. I, 20-22; xx, 45-46; xxiii, 36. Ba. II, 2, 18-25, 35; 3, 41; 5, 8-9.
- Outcasts, marriage with daughter of, permitted, Va. XIII, 53. See Abhisasta caste, exclusion from, readmission into.
- Paiśāka marriage, vol. ii, p. xxiv. Ga. IV, 13; Ba. I, 20, 9, 13.
- Pākayagñas, Ap. I, 26, 8. Ga. VIII, 18; x, 65. Va. xxvi, 10. Ba. I, 5, 12.
- Pālanī mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 16; 2, 13.
- Pallavas, vol. ii, p. xxxiii; vol. xiv, p. xlii.
- Pāndya, vol. ii, pp. xxxiv-xxxv.
- Pāṇini, vol. ii, pp. xxxv, xxxix-xlii.
- Paṅgāb, vol. ii, p. xxxiii.
- Pañcakavya (the five products of the cow), Va. xxvii, 14. Ba. IV, 1, 14.
- Pañktidūṣhāna (defilers of the company), Ap. II, 17, 21. Ga. xv, 16-19, 30-31.
- Pañktipāvana (sanctifiers of the company), Ap. II, 17, 22. Ga. xv, 28, 31. Va. III, 19. Ba. II, 14, 2.
- Parāka penance, Ba. IV, 5, 15.
- Pārāva caste, Ga. IV, 16-21. Va. xviii, 9-10. Ba. I, 17, 4; II, 3, 30.
- Pardon, right of, Ap. II, 27, 20. Ga. XII, 52; XIV, 43. Va. xv, 19; XIX, 40.
- Parents, Ap. II, 15, 6. Ga. VI, 3; XIV, 15. Va. IV, 20-21. Ba. I, 11, 19-23. See Father, Mother.
- Pāripātra mountains, Va. I, 18. Ba. I, 2, 9.
- Parishad (legal assembly), Ga. xxviii, 48-49. Va. III, 5-7, 20. Ba. I, 1, 7-16.
- Partition, Ap. II, 13, 13-14, 1, 6-9. Ga. xv, 19; xxviii, 1-17. Va. xvii, 40-51. Ba. II, 3, 2-13. See Coparcener, Indivisible property, Sons.
- Parva days, Ap. I, 26, 14; II, 1, 4; 3, 8. Va. XII, 21. Ba. I, 5, 7; 21, 17, 19-22.
- Pārvana-sthālpāka, Ga. VIII, 18.
- Pātaka crimes, Ba. IV, 1, 10; 2, 14; 3, 2.
- Patañjali, vol. ii, p. xxxix.
- Pataniya crimes, Ap. I, 21, 7-11; 28, 14. Ba. II, 2, 1-11; IV, 1, 10.
- Paulkasa caste, Ap. II, 2, 6.
- Pavitreshī, Va. xxii, 10. Ba. I, 2, 16-17.
- Penances, Ap. I, 18, 11-12; 25-29; II, 2, 9; 12, 15-18. Ga. XIX; xxii-xxiii. Va. IV, 32; XIV, 33; xviii, 16; XIX, 40-42; XX-xxiv. Ba. I, 2, 14-17; II, 37-41; 12, 12; 19, 16; II, 1, 1-2, 45; 3, 48-4, 15; III, 4-IV, 2.
- for secret crimes, Ga. xxiv-xxv. Va. xxv-xxviii. Ba. IV, 3-4.
- how imposed, Ap. II, 10, 12-16. Va. I, 16. Ba. I, 1, 14-15.
- Phonetics, a Vedāṅga, Ap. II, 8, 11.
- Physician, Ap. I, 18, 21; 19, 15. Ga. xvii, 17. Va. III, 3; XIV, 2.
- Pledge, Ga. XII, 32, 35, 42. Va. xvi, 16-18.
- Possession, evidence by, Va. xvi, 10.
- Pragāpati, the Lord of creatures, Ap. I, 19, 14; II, 4, 4; 7, 1; 24, 7, 13. Ga. v, 10. Va. XIV, 16, 24, 30. Ba. II, 7, 15; 12, 13; 18, 26; III, 9, 20; IV, 8, 3-5.
- Prāgapatya marriage, Ga. IV, 7. Ba. I, 20, 3.
- penance. See Krikkbra.
- Prāṇāgnihotra, description of, Ba. II, 12-13.
- Prāṇāyāma (suppressing the breath), a penance, Ap. II, 12, 15-18. Va. xxv, 3-5, 13, &c. Ba. IV, 1, 4-10, 20-29.
- Prāṇūna country, Ba. I, 2, 14.
- Prasritiyāvaka penance, Ba. III, 6.
- Pravrittāsin hermits, Ba. III, 3, 9, 11.
- Property, acquisition of, Ga. x, 39-42.
- given up, Va. xvi, 19-20.
- lost, Ga. x, 36-48.
- of persons unfit for legal business, Va. xv, 8.
- stolen, Ap. II, 26, 8. Ga. x, 46-47.
- Pulkasa caste, Ga. IV, 19. Va. xviii, 5. Ba. I, 16, 8, 11; 17, 1, 13.
- Pumsavana rite, Ga. xviii, 14.
- Punarbhū. See Woman remarried.
- Punastoma sacrifice, Ga. XIX, 7. Ba. I, 2, 14; III, 10, 6.

- Punishment, king's duty of, Ga. XII, 45-52. Va. XIX, 40-48. Ba. II, 1, 17. See Pardon.
- of sin after death, Ap. II, 2, 5-7; II, 11. Ga. XI, 30. Va. XX, 43-44; XXI, 11.
- Pupil, inherits, Ap. II, 14, 3. Va. XVII, 82. Ba. I, 11, 13. See Student, Teacher.
- Purāṇa, vol. ii, p. xxviii. Ap. I, 19, 13; 28, 7; II, 22, 24; 23, 3. Ga. VIII, 6; X, 19. Va. XXVII, 6. Ba. II, 10, 14; IV, 3, 4.
- Purification of persons, Ap. I, 15, 1-16, 15. Ga. I, 28, 35-44; II, 2; XIV, 30. Va. III, 26-43, 58-60; IV, 37; VI, 14-19. Ba. I, 8, 1-31; 9, 5; 10, 11-20, 34; 11, 36; 15, 4, 6.
- of things, Ap. I, 17, 8-13; II, 3, 9. Ga. I, 29-34. Va. III, 44-57, 59, 61-63; XIV, 23-24, 26. Ba. I, 8, 32-53; 9, 1-4, 7-12; 10, 1-9; 13, 11-14, 19.
- Purificatory texts, Ap. I, 2, 2, &c. Ga. XIX, 12; Va. XXII, 9; XXVIII, 10-15. Ba. III, 10, 10; IV, 4, 8.
- Purohita. See Domestic priest.
- Pushkarasādi, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 7; 28, 1.
- Rāgputānā, vol. ii, p. xxxii.
- Rākshasa marriage, Ap. II, 12, 2. Ga. IV, 12. Ba. I, 20, 8, 12. See Kshātra marriage.
- Rāmaka caste, vol. xiv, p. xxv. Va. XVIII, 4.
- Rāzāyāniya school, vol. ii, pp. xlv, xlviii.
- Rathakāra (carpenter) caste, vol. xiv, p. xxxviii. Ba. I, 3, 9; 17, 1, 6.
- Re-united coparcener, Ga. XXVIII, 28. Va. XVI, 16.
- Rewards after death, Ap. II, 2, 2-4; II, 10. Ga. XI, 29.
- Rig-veda, vol. ii, p. xxiv; vol. xiv, pp. xi-xii, xiv, xl. Ga. XVI, 21. Va. XIII, 30. Ba. II, 10, 14; IV, 3, 3; 5, 29.
- Rigvedins, vol. xiv, pp. xiii-xv.
- Rishi, vol. ii, pp. xvii, xxxvii. Ap. I, 5, 4-5; 13, 1; II, 23, 4-5; 24, 13-14. Ga. III, 29; IV, 3; XVIII, 6; IX, 14. Va. IV, 65; XI, 48; XII, 51; XXII, 12; XXIII, 47. Ba. II, 5, 4; 6, 36; 10, 14; 11-15; III, 9, 19, 21; 10, 12.
- Rishi, persons descended from the same Rishi inherit, Ga. XXVIII, 21.
- Rites procuring success, Ba. IV, 5-8.
- Roads near fields and houses, Va. XV, 11-12.
- Romaka, vol. xiv, p. xxv, p. 94.
- Sacraments, enumeration of, Ga. VIII, 14-21.
- Sacred fire, duty of kindling, Ga. V, 7-9. Va. VIII, 3; XI, 45. Ba. I, 5, 6; II, 4, 22.
- rule for kindling, Ap. II, 1, 13.
- extinguishing or neglecting, Ap. I, 18, 32. Ga. XXII, 34. Va. I, 18; XXI, 27.
- Sacred learning, goddess of, Va. II, 8-12.
- Sacrificer and his wife, Ba. I, 13, 5; 15, 10, 17, 21, 26.
- Sacrifices, great daily, Ap. I, 12, 15. Ga. V, 3-5. Ba. II, 11, 1-8.
- śrauta, Ap. II, 10, 1; Ga. V, 21; VIII, 19-20; IX, 54; XVIII, 24-27. Va. XI, 45-48. Ba. I, 13-15; II, 4, 23.
- Sacrificial fee (present), Ap. II, 9, 9. Ga. XXV, 6. Va. XV, 16. Ba. I, 20, 4; III, 4, 3; 7, 14; 8, 13.
- Sacrificial thread (string), Ap. I, 31, 8; II, 4, 22. Ga. I, 36. Va. XII, 14. Ba. I, 5, 5; 8, 5-10.
- Sages. See Rishis.
- Sagotra relation, Ap. II, 11, 15; 27, 2. Ga. XVIII, 6. Va. VIII, 1.
- inherits, Ga. XXVIII, 21.
- penance for marrying, Ba. II, 1, 37-38.
- Sakulya relation, Ba. I, 11, 10, 12.
- Sale of children, forbidden, Ap. II, 13, 11-12.
- permitted, Va. XV, 2. Ba. Par. VII, 4, 2. See Daughter, Son bought.
- Saluting, Ap. I, 5, 12-23; 14, 7-30. Ga. II, 30-34; V, 41-42; VI. Va. XIII, 41-46. Ba. I, 3, 25-33, 44-45; II, 6, 38.
- Samānapravara relation, Ga. IV, 2; XVIII, 1. Va. VIII, 1.
- Sāmāns, vol. ii, p. xlvii; vol. xiv, pp. xvii, xxxix. Ap. I, 10, 17-18. Ga. XVI, 21. Va. XIII, 30. Ba. I, 21, 5.

- Sâma-veda, vol. ii, pp. xlii-xlix; vol. xiv, pp. xvii, xxxix. Va. III, 19. Ba. II, 10, 14; IV, 3, 3; 5, 1.
- Sâma-vidhâna, vol. ii, p. xlvii.
- Samprakshâlânî mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 7; 2, 11.
- Samskâras. See Sacraments.
- Sâmtapana penance, Ba. IV, 5, 13.
- Samûhâ mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 7; 2, 12.
- Sandhyâ worship, Ap. I, 30, 8. Ga. II, 10-11. Ba. II, 7.
- Sapinda relation, Ap. II, 11, 16; 15, 2, 11. Ga. XIV, 1, 20, 34, 44; XV, 13; XVIII, 6. Va. IV, 16, 33; VIII, 2. Ba. I, 11, 1.
- definition of, Ga. XIV, 13. Va. IV, 17-19. Ba. I, 11, 2, 9.
- inherits, Ap. II, 14, 2. Ga. XXVIII, 21. Va. XVII, 81. Ba. I, 11, 11.
- Sarasvatî river, Va. I, 8, 15. Ba. I, 2, 9, 12.
- Sarvaprishthâ sacrifice, Ba. I, 2, 14.
- Satyâshâdha. See Hiranyakesin.
- Satyâshâdbins, vol. ii, p. xvi.
- Sautrâmanî sacrifice, Ga. VIII, 20.
- Sauvîra country, Ba. I, 2, 13-14.
- Savarna caste, Ga. IV, 16. Ba. I, 16, 6.
- Sâvitri verse, Ap. I, 1, 9, 23; 26, 14; 27, 1. Ga. I, 12, 55; XIX, 12; XX, 8; 21, 11; 23, 21; 24, 11. Va. II, 3; XI, 74, 76; XXI, 6-8; XXII, 9; XXIII, 20, 35; XXV, 9, 12-13; XXVII, 18. Ba. I, 16, 16; II, 7, 5-7; 17, 14, 41; IV, 1, 27-28, &c.
- Sâyana. See Mâdhava.
- Sea, going to, Ba. I, 2, 4; II, 2, 2.
- Self-defence, Ga. VII, 25. Va. III, 15-18, 24. Ba. I, 18, 12-13.
- Shannivartanî mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 7; 2, 1-4.
- Shodasin sacrifice, Ga. VIII, 19.
- Siddhoûkshâ mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 7; 2, 16-17.
- Sîmantonnayana rite, Ga. VIII, 14.
- Sîmhavarman II, king, vol. ii, p. xxxiii.
- Sindh country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
- Sinful men (enasvinab), Ap. II, 12, 22. Ga. I, 18.
- Singing, Ap. II, 25, 13.
- Sipping water, Ap. I, 4, 20-21; 15, 1-16, 14. Ga. I, 28, 36; IX, 10-11. Va. III, 26-40, 42. Ba. I, 7, 3; 8, 12-23, 26, 29.
- Sleeping, rules regarding, Ap. I, 4, 22, 28; 32, 11, 15-16. Ga. IX, 60.
- at sunrise or sunset, Ap. II, 12, 13-14. Ga. XXIII, 21. Va. I, 18; XX, 4-5.
- Smriti (tradition), Ap. II, 4, 24; 15, 26. Ga. I, 2. Va. I, 4. Ba. I, 1, 3.
- Snâtaka (he who has completed his studentship), Ap. II, 8, 6; 27, 20. Ga. VI, 24; XV, 28. Va. XI, 2. Ba. II, 14, 2.
- definition of term, Ap. I, 30, 1-5.
- duties, Ap. I, 30, 6-32, 29. Ga. IX. Va. XII. Ba. I, 5; II, 5, 10-6, 42.
- Soma-sacrifice, Ap. I, 24, 6, 24; 27, 2. Ga. VIII, 20. Va. VIII, 10; XI, 46. Ba. I, 13, 7, 9, 31.
- Son, adopted, Ga. XXVIII, 32. Va. XV, 6-10; XVII, 28-29. Ba. II, 3, 20, 31. Ba. Par. VII, 4, 16.
- begot on widow or wife, Ap. II, 13, 6-7. Ga. XVIII, 8-14; XXVIII, 23, 32. Va. XVII, 6-10, 14, 63-64. Ba. II, 3, 18-19, 31, 34-35.
- born after partition, Ga. XXVIII, 29.
- born secretly, Ga. XXVIII, 32. Va. XVII, 24. Ba. II, 3, 22, 31.
- bought, Ga. XXVIII, 33. Va. XVII, 31-32. Ba. II, 3, 28, 32.
- cast off, Ga. XXVIII, 32. Va. XVII, 36-37. Ba. II, 3, 23, 31.
- effecting partition against father's will, Ga. XV, 19.
- eldest (share), Ap. I, 13, 13; 14, 5-6, 10, 12-13. Ga. XXVIII, 3, 5-9. Va. XVII, 42-43. Ba. II, 3, 4, 6, 9, 12.
- legitimate, Ap. II, 13, 1-12. Ga. XXVIII, 32, 34. Va. XVII, 13. Ba. II, 3, 11, 14-15, 31, 33.
- made, Ga. XXVIII, 32. Ba. II, 3, 21, 31.
- middlemost (share), Ga. XXVIII, 6. Va. XVII, 44.
- not liable for father's debt, Va. XVI, 31.
- of appointed daughter, Ga. XXVIII, 33. Va. XVII, 17. Ba. II, 3, 15-16, 31.
- of pregnant bride, Ga. XXVIII, 33. Va. XVII, 27. Ba. II, 3, 25, 32.
- of remarried woman, Ga. XXV, 18;

- xxviii, 33. Va. xvii, 18-20.
Ba. II, 3, 27, 32.
Son of Sûdrâ wife, Ga. xxviii, 39, 45.
Va. xvii, 38. Ba. II, 3, 28, 32.
— of unmarried daughter, Ga.
xxviii, 33. Va. xvii, 22-23.
Ba. II, 3, 24, 32.
— only son not to be adopted, Va.
xv, 3-4. Ba. Par. VII, 4, 4-5.
— self-given, Ga. xxviii, 33. Va.
xvii, 33-35. Ba. II, 3, 28, 32.
— youngest (share), Ga. xxviii, 7.
Va. xvii, 44.
Sons by several wives of equal caste (shares), Ga. xxviii, 14-17.
— by wives of different castes
(shares), Ga. xxviii, 35-38.
Va. xvii, 47-50. Ba. II, 3, 10, 12.
— by wives of higher caste, Ga.
xxviii, 45.
— inherit equally, Ap. II, 13, 2; 14,
1; 11, 14. Ba. II, 3, 3.
— merit and duty of begetting, Ap.
II, 24, 1-4. Va. xvii, 1-5. Ba.
II, 11, 33-34; 16, 2-14.
— not to take property of outcast parents, Ga. xxi, 16.
Soul, knowledge of, Ap. I, 22-23.
Va. x, 13; xxx.
Spiritual guide (teacher), Ap. II, 18,
12-13. Va. xx, 3.
Spring-festival, Ap. I, 11, 20.
Staff of student, Ap. I, 2, 38. Ga. I, 22. Va. xi, 52-57. Ba. I, 3, 15.
Sthâlpâka, Ap. II, 1, 10; 29, 17. Ba.
I, 5, 6.
Student, Ap. II, 6, 1-2, 12-13; 21, 1, 5; 26, 13. Ga. III, 1; x, 12;
xiv, 1. Va. VII, 2; xi, 5. Ba.
II, 17, 2.
— duties of, Ap. I, 2, 11-7, 19; 13, 9-20; 14, 3-5; II, 9, 13. Ga.
I, 46-54; II, 7-51. Va. vi, 19-
21; VII, 7-17. Ba. I, 2-4; II, 13, 7-9.
— penances for, Ap. I, 26, 8-27, 2.
Ga. I, 58-61; xxiii, 16-20;
xxv, 1-6. Va. xxiii, 1-4, 7-9;
11-13. Ba. II, 1, 25-35; III, 4;
IV, 2, 10-11.
— professed, Ap. II, 21, 6-7. Ga. III,
4-9. Va. VII, 4-6. Ba. II, 11, 13.
— returned home, Ap. I, 7, 20-8, 31;
13, 5; 14, 7-30; 18, 9-12. Ba.
I, 5.
Suicide, Ap. I, 28, 17. Ga. xiv, 12.
Va. xxiii, 14-21.
Surâshtra country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
Surety, Ga. xii, 41. Va. xv, 31.
Sûta caste, Ga. IV, 17, 18. Va.
xviii, 6. Ba. I, 17, 1, 8.
Sâlikî, vol. xiv, p. xl.
Sâliṇa (householder), Ba. II, 12, 1;
17, 3; III, 1, 1-3.
Sâṅkhâyaṇa, vol. ii, p. xiii.
Satapatha-brâhmaṇa, vol. ii, p. xxxix;
vol. xiv, pp. xvii, xxxix.
Sâryâyanins, vol. ii, p. xv.
Saunaka, Ba. II, 10, 14.
Siloṅkâḥa mode of life, Ba. III, 1, 16;
2, 14.
Siras, text, Va. xxi, 6-8; xxv, 13.
Ba. IV, 1, 28.
— vows, vol. xiv, p. xvii. Va. xxvi,
12. Ba. II, 14, 2.
Sishṭas, Va. I, 5-6; vi, 42-43. Ba. I,
1, 4-6; 2, 8; II, 2, 22; III, 2, 26.
Sîru Âṅgîrasa, Ba. I, 3, 47.
Sisukrikkâra penance, Va. xxiii, 42-
43. Ba. IV, 5, 7.
Srâddha (sacrifice to the Manes),
Ap. I, 10, 26, 28; II, 16, 1-2.
Ga. VIII, 18; xv; xvi, 34. Va.
xiii, 15-16. Ba. II, 14-15.
— daily, Ap. I, 13, 1; II, 4, 5-6; 18,
4-16. Va. xi, 5. Ba. II, 11,
1, 3.
— materials for, Ap. II, 16, 23-17, 3; 18, 1-3. Ga. xv, 6, 15.
— monthly, Ap. II, 18, 17; 19, 19-21; 20, 1-2.
— persons to be fed, Ap. II, 17, 4-23.
Ga. xv, 5, 7-11, 16-30. Va. xi,
17-20, 27-29. Ba. II, 14, 2-6,
15, 10-11.
— special rites, Ap. II, 18, 19-19, 17, 22; 20, 3-20.
— time for, Ap. II, 16, 4-22; 17, 23-
25. Ga. xv, 2-5. Va. xi, 16,
36, 43-44.
Srâmanaka, rule or sūtra, Ga. III, 27.
Va. xi, 10. Ba. II, 11, 15.
Srâvaṇî rite, Ga. VIII, 18.
Srotîya (a learned Brâhmaṇa), Ap.
I, 3, 34; 10, 11-13; 14, 13, 30;
19, 33; 24, 24; II, 7, 17; 14, 13;
17, 22; 26, 10. Ga. v, 20, 30-
32; vi, 17, 25; x, 9; XII, 38;
xiv, 28; xv, 9; xxii, 30; xxviii,
50-52. Va. III, 8, 19; v, 9; xi,

- 5, 17; XVI, 18, 30; XIX, 23, 37. Ba. I, 19, 13; 21, 4; II, 5, 15, 19.
- Srotriya, definition of, Ap. II, 6, 4.
- inherits Brâhman property, Ga. XXVIII, 41.
- Sûdra caste:—
- duties and position, Ap. I, 1, 3-7; 3, 41; 5, 16; 9, 9-11; 14, 29; 17, 1; 26, 9; II, 3, 4-9; 4, 19-20; 6, 9-10; II, 26, 15. Ga. V, 42; VI, 10-11; X, 42, 50-65; XII, 13; XIII, 13; XIV, 5; XVI, 19; XVIII, 24. Va. II, 1, 20; III, 34; IV, 24; XI, 10; XVI, 30; XVIII, 12-14; XXVII, 16. Ba. I, 8, 22-23; 10, 20; 16, 1, 5; 18, 5-6; 20, 13-15; 21, 15; II, 5, 14; III, 8, 18.
- knowledge of, Ap. II, 29, 11.
- murder of, Ap. I, 24, 3. Ga. XXII, 16. Va. X, 33, 40. Ba. I, 18, 5; II, 1, 10.
- penances and punishments for, Ap. I, 26, 4; II, 27, 9-16. Ga. XII, 1-7, 12, 15. Va. XXI, 1, 5. Ba. I, 19, 3; II, 3, 52.
- food and gifts of, Ap. I, 7, 20-21; 16, 22; 18, 13-15; 21, 17; II, 18, 2. Ga. IX, 11; XVII, 5; XX, 1. Va. IV, 26-29; XIV, 4. Ba. II, 3, 1; III, 6, 5; IV, 1, 5.
- connexion or marriage of Āryans with, females, Ap. I, 19, 33; II, 17, 21; 27, 8. Ga. XV, 18, 22; XXV, 7. Va. I, 25; XIV, 11; XVIII, 17-18. Ba. II, 1, 7-8, 11; 6, 32; IV, 1, 5; 2, 13; 6, 6.
- connexion or marriage of Āryan women with, Ap. I, 21, 13; 26, 7. Va. XXI, 12.
- sacrificing for, teaching and serving, Ga. XX, 1. Va. III, 3; XV, 11. Ba. II, 1, 6. See Son of Sûdra wife.
- Sunabrepa, Va. XVII, 31, 34-35.
- Svapâka caste, Va. XXVII, 13. Ba. I, 16, 9; 17, 11; IV, 5, 13.
- Svetaketu, vol. ii, pp. xxvi, xxxvii-xxxix. Ap. I, 5, 6; 13, 18.
- Taittirîya-âraṇyaka, vol. ii, pp. xxv, xlviii, lvi; vol. xiv, pp. xvii, xxxix.
- brâhmana, vol. ii, p. xxv.
- samhitâ, vol. xiv, p. xxxix.
- veda, vol. ii, p. xxxii.
- Taptakrikkbra penance, Va. XXI, 18; XXIII, 16.
- description of, Va. XXI, 20. Ba. II, 2, 37; IV, 5, 10.
- Tarpasa, Ga. IV, 5. Ba. II, 9-10.
- Taxes, Ap. II, 26, 9-17. Ga. X, 24-35. Va. I, 42-44; XIX, 15, 23-24, 26-28, 37. Ba. I, 18, 1, 14-15.
- Teacher, Ap. I, 1, 14-17; 2, 11-7, 31; 10, 4; 13, 9-20; 14, 6; II, 5, 2-11; 8, 6; 27, 20. Ga. I, 45-61; II, 18, 21-29, 37-40, 50; III, 5-6; V, 27; VI, 3; XI, 31-32; XIV, 28. Va. VII, 4-6, 10, 12-14; XIII, 39, 48, 50. Ba. I, 3, 21-22, 25-32, 35-38; 4, 1-2; 11, 28.
- definition of term, Ap. I, 1, 10-13. Ga. I, 9-10. Va. II, 3-5; III, 21.
- duties of, Ap. I, 8, 24-31; 32, 1-15; II, 5, 16-6, 2. Ga. II, 42-44; XV, 14; XVI, 3-4.
- inherits, Ap. II, 14, 3. Va. XVII, 82. Ba. I, 11, 13.
- non-Brâhmanical, Ap. II, 4, 25-27. Ga. VII, 1-3. Ba. I, 3, 41-43.
- penance for, Va. XXIII, 10. Ba. II, 1, 23-24.
- Teacher's fee, Ap. I, 7, 19-22; II, 10, 1. Ga. II, 48.
- son, Ap. I, 7, 30, 9; II, 18, 31-32; III, 7; XIV, 28. Va. XIII, 40. Ba. I, 3, 36, 44; 11, 28.
- teacher, Ap. I, 8, 19-21. Va. XIII, 54.
- wives, Ap. I, 7, 27. Ga. II, 18, 31-34; XIV, 28. Va. XIII, 40, 42. Ba. I, 3, 33-34.
- Theft, definition of, Ap. I, 28, 1-5. Ga. XII, 49-50.
- penances for, Ap. I, 25, 4-8, 10. Ga. XXIV, 10-12. Va. XX, 41-42; XXVI, 6. Ba. II, 1, 16-17; 2, 3, 10.
- punishments for, Ap. II, 27, 16-17; 28, 10-12. Ga. XII, 15-18, 43-45. Va. XIX, 38. Ba. I, 18, 18.
- Times of distress, Ap. I, 20, 10-21, 4; II, 4, 25-27. Ga. VII; IX, 37. Va. II, 22-39. Ba. I, 3, 41-44; 4, 16-21.
- Tîrthas, Va. III, 26, 64-68. Ba. I, 8, 14-16.
- Tolls, Va. XIX, 25.

- Toyâhâra hermits, Ba. III, 3, 9, 13.
- Trade, Ap. I, 20, 10-21, 4. Ga. VII, 8-21; X, 5, 4, 49. Va. II, 19, 24-39. Ba. I, 2, 4; 18, 14-15; II, 2, 4, 26-29.
- Treasure-trove, Ga. X, 43-45. Va. III, 13-14.
- Trimadhu, } Ap. II, 17, 22. Ga.
Trinâdiketa, } XV, 28. Va. III, 19.
- Trisuparva, } Ba. II, 14, 2.
- Tulâpurusha penance, Ba. IV, 5, 22.
- Twilight devotions. See Sandhyâ worship.
- Uddâlaka penance, Va. XI, 76-77.
- Ugra caste, Ap. I, 7, 20-21; 18, 1. Ga. IV, 16. Va. XVIII, 8. Ba. I, 16, 7, 10; 17, 1, 5, 9, 11.
- Ukthya sacrifice, Ap. II, 7, 4. Ga. VIII, 20.
- Unmaggaka hermits, Ba. III, 3, 9-10.
- Unnatural crime, Ap. I, 26, 7. Ga. XXV, 7. Va. XII, 22. Ba. IV, 1, 19; 2, 13.
- Upâdhyâya (sub-teacher), Ap. I, 9, 1-2; 10, 2. Ga. XVI, 1, 40, 44. Va. XIII, 1-4. Ba. I, 12, 16; 21, 12 (note).
- Upanishad, Ap. II, 5, 1. Ga. XIX, 12. Va. XXII, 9. Ba. II, 18, 15; III, 10, 10.
- Upapâtaka crimes, Ga. XX, 17; XXI, 11; XXII, 34. Va. I, 23. Ba. II, 2, 12-14; IV, 1, 7-8.
- Upâvrit country, Ba. I, 2, 13.
- Uśanas, vol. ii, p. xlv; vol. xiv, p. xli. Ba. II, 4, 26.
- Usurer, usury, Ap. I, 18, 22; 27, 10; II, 10, 7. Ga. X, 6, 49; XV, 18. Va. II, 40-43; XIV, 3. Ba. I, 10, 21-25.
- Utathya, vol. ii, p. xlvii.
- Vâgasaneyaka, vol. ii, p. xxv. Ap. I, 17, 31. Va. XII, 31; XIV, 46.
- Vâgasaneyi-brâhmaṇa, vol. ii, p. xxv; vol. xiv, p. xxxix. Ap. I, 12, 3.
- śākha, Va. VIII, 19; XXIII, 13.
- Vaidehaka caste, Ga. IV, 17, 20. Ba. I, 16, 8; 17, 1, 10, 12.
- Vaikhâṇasa. See Hermit.
- Vaiṇa caste, Ap. II, 2, 6. Va. XVIII, 2. Ba. I, 16, 8, 10; 17, 1, 12.
- Vaiṣvadeva sacrifice, Ap. I, 13, 1; II, 3, 1-16; 4, 13; 9, 5. Ga. V, 3, 9-10. Va. XI, 3. Ba. II, 3, 5, 11; 6, 11, 1-2.
- Vaiṣvânara offering, Va. XXII, 10. Ba. I, 2, 15, 17.
- Vaiśya caste, duties, occupations, and position, Ap. I, 1, 3-5, 18, 21; 2, 36-38, 40; 3, 2, 6, 29; 5, 16; 14, 23, 28; II, 4, 18, 25-27; 10, 7. Ga. I, 11, 14-17, 21, 23-24, 26; X, 1, 42, 49; XIV, 3, 24. Va. I, 24; II, 18-19, 22; III, 24, 28; XI, 51, 54, 57, 60, 63, 66-67, 70, 73. Ba. I, 3, 9, 11, 15, 17; 10, 21; 16, 4; 18, 4; 20, 13-14; II, 4, 18.
- murder of, Ap. I, 24, 2. Ga. XXII, 15. Va. XX, 32, 34, 39. Ba. I, 19, 2; II, 1, 9.
- punishments for, Ga. XII, 10, 14, 16. Va. XXI, 2, 4.
- Vamśa-brâhmaṇa, vol. ii, p. xlv.
- Vaṅga country, Ba. I, 2, 14.
- Vârshyâyasi, vol. ii, p. xxvi. Ap. I, 19, 5, 8; 28, 1.
- Vasishṭha, Va. II, 51; XXIV, 5; XXX, 11.
- Vâsishṭha Dharmaśāstra, vol. xiv, pp. xi-xxviii.
- Vasso of Buddhists, vol. ii, p. lv, p. 191.
- Vâyubhaksha hermits, Ba. III, 1, 9, 14.
- Vâyū-purâṇa, vol. ii, p. xxix.
- Veda, authority of, Ap. I, 1, 2, 13, 21; II, 23, 9. Ga. I, 1; VI, 23. Va. I, 4. Ba. I, 1, 1.
- definition of, Ap. II, 8, 13.
- divulging or selling, Ga. XX, 1. Ba. I, 11, 36.
- neglect of, Ap. I, 21, 8. Ga. XXI, 11; XXII, 34. Va. I, 18; XX, 12. Ba. I, 10, 26.
- purifying power of, Ga. XIX, 11-12. Va. XXII, 8-9; XXVII, 1-9. Ba. III, 10, 9-10.
- recitation of. See Veda-study.
- Vedânta, vol. ii, p. xxvii. Ga. XIX, 12; Va. XXII, 9. Ba. III, 10, 10.
- Veda-study, duty of, Ap. II, 10, 4; 21, 4. Ga. X, 1. Va. II, 14, 16, 18; III, 1-12; XI, 48. Ba. I, 1, 10-14; 10, 26-30; II, 18, 24-25.
- duration of annual term, Ap. I, 9, 1-3. Ga. XVI, 1-2. Va. XIII, 1, 5-7. Ba. I, 12, 16.

- Veda-study, interruptions of, Ap. I, 9, 11, 11-38. Ga. I, 58-61; XVI, 5-49. Va. XIII, 8-40; XVIII, 12-13; XXIII, 36. Ba. I, 21, 4-22.
- private daily, Ap. I, 11, 22-12, 16; 13, 1; 15, 1; 18, 33; II, 5, 3; 21, 10; 22, 19. Ga. V, 4, 9; IX, 26. Ba. II, 11, 1, 6-8.
- Vedotsarga, Ap. I, 10, 2. Ga. XVI, 40.
- Vigñāneśvara, vol. ii, p. xliii; vol. xiv, p. xxv.
- Vindhya mountains, Va. I, 9.
- Vivagit sacrifice, Ga. V, 20. Ba. II, 5, 19.
- Vows for the Veda, Ap. I, 13, 9. Ga. VIII, 15.
- Vrātapati-īshri, Va. XXII, 10. Ba. I, 2, 17.
- Vrātya, vol. ii, p. xxv. Ba. I, 16, 16; 17, 15.
- Vrātyastoma, Ga. XIX, 8. Va. XI, 79.
- Vrishaparvan, Ba. II, 4, 26.
- Vyāhritis, vol. ii, p. lxviii. Ap. I, 2, 3. Ga. I, 51; XXV, 8. Va. XV, 6; XXIII, 23, 46, &c. Ba. I, 6, 6; II, 7, 2; II, 6, &c.
- Wages, lost, Va. XVI, 16.
- Waterpot, duty of carrying, Ba. I, 5, 4; 6; 7.
- Way, right of, Ap. II, 11, 5-9. Ga. VI, 23-25. Va. XIII, 58-60. Ba. II, 6, 30.
- Weights. See Measures.
- Widow, Ga. XVIII, 4-14; XXXVIII, 22. Va. XVII, 55-56. Ba. II, 4, 7-10. See Niyoga, Son begotten on.
- Wife, duties and position of, Ap. II, 1, 1; 14, 16-18; 27, 2-7; 29, 3-4. Ga. XVIII, 1-3.
- duty of guarding, Ap. II, 13, 7. Ba. II, 3, 34-35; 4, 2.
- of emigrant, Ga. XVIII, 15-17. Va. XVII, 75-80.
- inherits, Ap. II, 14, 9. Ga. XXVIII, 21.
- Wife, qualifications required, Ap. II, 13, 1-9; IV, 1-5. Va. VIII, 1-2.
- repudiation and supersession, Ap. I, 28, 19; II, 11, 12-14. Va. XIII, 49; XXI, 9-10. Ba. II, 4, 6; IV, 1, 20.
- Wives, all mothers through one son, Va. XVII, 11.
- of several castes, Ga. IV, 16. Va. I, 24-25. Ba. I, 16, 2-5. See Adultery, Connubial intercourse, Husband, Marriage, Śūdra caste.
- Witnesses, Ap. II, 11, 3; 29, 7-10. Ga. XIII, 1-25. Va. XVI, 10, 13-14, 27-36. Ba. I, 19, 7-16.
- Woman, duties and position, Ap. I, 14, 21, 23, 30; II, 11, 7; 15, 10, 18; 26, 11; 29, 11, 15. Ga. XVIII, 1-3. Va. III, 34; V, 1-2; XXVIII, 1-9. Ba. I, 8, 22-23; II, 3, 44-47; 4, 4-5.
- menstruating, Ap. I, 9, 13. Ga. XIV, 30; XXIII, 34; XXIV, 4-5. Va. IV, 37; V, 5-9; XXVIII, 1-6. Ba. I, 11, 34-35; 19, 5; II, 1, 12.
- murder of, Ap. I, 25, 5, 9. Ga. XXII, 12, 17, 26-27. Ba. I, 11, 34-35; 19, 3, 5; II, 1, 11.
- property of, Va. XVI, 16. Ga. XXVIII, 24.
- remarried, Va. XVII, 19-20. See Son of remarried woman.
- Yāgñavalkya, vol. ii, p. xxxviii. Ba. II, 9, 14.
- Yagur-veda, Ga. XVI, 21. Va. XIII, 30. Ba. II, 10, 14; IV, 3, 3; 5, 1.
- Black, vol. ii, pp. xi, xvi, xxxi.
- White, vol. ii, p. xxxii.
- Yama, Va. XI, 20; XIV, 30; XIX, 48; XX, 2.
- Yamunā river, Va. I, 12. Ba. I, 2, 10.
- Yavana caste, vol. ii, p. lvi. Ga. IV, 21.
- Yâyâvaras, Ba. II, 12, 1; 17, 3; III, 1, 4, 16; IV, 5, 27.
- Yoga, Ap. I, 23, 6. Va. XXV, 5-8. Ba. IV, 1, 23-25.

ADDITIONS AND CORRECTIONS

TO VOLS. II AND XIV.

VOL. II.

- Page xxxii, note 1. Maitrāyaṇīyas still exist in Gugarât, see Report on Sanskrit MSS. for 1879-80; Schröder, Maitrāyaṇī Samhitā, pp. xxii-xxiii.
- P. xxxii, l. 1. Rão Sâheb V. N. Mândlik, Vyavahâra Mayûkha and Yâgñavalkya, p. 300, has challenged the accuracy of my statement regarding the prevalence of the Âpastamba Sâkhâ in Bombay. He, however, admits that some Devashtas and Drâvidas actually follow the Sâkhâ. His dissent really refers to the Koṅkanasthas, the division to which he himself belongs. Among the latter those who originally were Âpastambīyas have partly gone over to the Hairanyakeśas. But in the old list of the Koṅkanastha families (see Elph. Coll. collection of 1867-68, Cl. xii, no. 5) which I procured from Mr. Limaye of Ashre, the families which really are Âpastambīyas are carefully enumerated. Both in Pune and Bombay I have met with a number of Brâhmanas, who called themselves sometimes Devashtas and sometimes Koṅkanasthas, and were able and willing to recite portions of the Âpastamba Sûtras for a small consideration.
- P. xxxvii, note 1. The date of the Kârikâ vṛtti has been shown by Professor Max Müller to be about 650 A. D.
- P. xlix, l. 10, for Baudhâyaṇa I, 1, 21, read Baudhâyaṇa I, 1, 2-6.
- P. xlix, l. 28, for Baudhâyaṇa I, 1, 17-24, read Baudhâyaṇa I, 1, 2, 1-8.
- P. li, note 1, l. 5 seqq., for Baudhâyaṇa III, 5, read Baudhâyaṇa III, 10.
- P. 78, l. 32 (Ap. I, 9, 23, 28, note), for Baudhâyaṇa, Pr. I, Adhy. 10, read Baudhâyaṇa I, 10, 19, 1.
- P. 90, l. 33 (Ap. I, 10, 29, 9, note), for Baudhâyaṇa Pr. I, Adhy. 12, read Baudhâyaṇa II, 1, 2, 18.
- P. 176, l. 20 (Ga. I, 28, note), read Vasishṭha III, 43.
- P. 206, l. 33 (Ga. VI, 5, note), for Manu III, 123, read Manu II, 123.
- P. 210, l. 18 (Ga. VII, 17), for others read for another.
- P. 222, l. 13 (Ga. IX, 61), read Nor shall he bathe, &c.
- P. 254, l. 9 (Ga. XV, 17), read Whosoever lives, &c.
- P. 291, l. 2-3, for Defiled by, &c., read Oh lust, I have been incontinent, incontinent, &c.; oh lust, I have committed evil, I have committed evil, oh lust, &c.

VOL. XIV.

- P. 24, l. 25 (Va. III, 56, note), for Baudhâyaṇa I, 5, 52, read Baudhâyaṇa I, 5, 9, 11.
- P. 50, l. 9 (Va. XI, 7). Govindasvâmin on Baudhâyaṇa II, 7, 13, 3 gives for pradâtâb the reading pragâtâb, '(newly)-confined women,' which seems to be the correct one. Owing to the peculiar Indian pronunciation of ga as a d mouillé, da sometimes occurs by mistake for ga in Sanskrit MSS. In Prakrit words da is also sometimes the representative of ga.

- P. 99, l. 3 (Va. XIX, 23), for pradâtâb read pragâtâb, '(newly)-confined women.'
- P. 102, l. 12 (Va. XIX, 48), read for a sacrificial session.
- P. 111, l. 27 (Va. XXI, 6, note). The Siras text occurs Taitt. Âr. x, 35.
- P. 122, l. 19 (Va. XXIII, 39), dele which does not cause loss of caste.
- P. 127, l. 31 (Va. XXVI, 8), for Manu LI, 251, read Manu XI, 251.
- P. 206, l. 19 (Ba. I, 11, 20, 12), for the sixth read the fifth.
- P. 207, l. 1 (Ba. I, 11, 20, 13), for the fifth read the sixth.
- P. 223, l. 33 (Ba. II, 1, 2, 41, note), add at end: But the word refers to the numeration of the Krikkbra penances, given Gautama XXVI, 20, and its occurrence shows that Baudhâyana simply copied Gautama.
- P. 267-268 (Ba. II, 8, 14, 7, note), dele note and substitute: 'The Agni-mukha is a term denoting the last of the offerings which precede the Pradhânahoma. See Baudhâyana Grîhya-sûtra I, 4, end, and 5.'

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.		II Class.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	.	.	.	क	𐬕	𐬑	𐬑	𐬑	𐬑	k
2 " aspirata	kh	.	.	.	ख	𐬖	𐬒	𐬒	𐬒	𐬒	kh
3 Media	g	.	.	.	ग	𐬗	𐬓	𐬓	𐬓	𐬓	.
4 " aspirata	gh	.	.	.	घ	𐬘	𐬔	𐬔	𐬔	𐬔	.
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	𐬙	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	.
6 Nasalis	h (ng)	.	.	.	ङ	{ 3 (ng) 𐬚 (N)
7 Spiritus asper	h	.	.	.	ह	𐬛 (hv)	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	𐬜	h, hs
8 " lenis	,
9 " asper faucalis	'h
10 " lenis faucalis	'h
11 " asper fricatus	'h
12 " lenis fricatus	'h
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	.	.	.	च	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	𐬞	k
14 " aspirata	kh	.	.	.	छ	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	𐬟	kh
15 Media	g	.	.	.	ज	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	𐬠	.
16 " aspirata	gh	.	.	.	झ	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	𐬡	.
17 " Nasalis	ñ	.	.	.	ञ	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	𐬢	.

CONSONANTS (generalised).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.				Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y		य	𐬨𐬀	𐬨	ي	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	(y)	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀
20 " lenis	(y)	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀
21 " asper assibilatus	s	...		श	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀
22 " lenis assibilatus	z	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t		त	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th		थ	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ת	th
25 " assibilata	TH
26 Media	d		द	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ד	...
27 " aspirata	dh		ध	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ד	...
28 " assibilata	DH
29 Nasalis	n		न	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l		ल	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	l	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀
32 " mollis 2	L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s		स	𐬨𐬀	𐬨𐬀	ש	s
34 " asper 2	s (ʃ)
35 " lenis	z
36 " asperimus 1	z (ʃ)
37 " asperimus 2	z (ʃ)

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
1 Neutralis	0
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ē
3 " labialis	ō
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			अ	𐬀	𐬀	𐬀	ا	א	...
5 " longa	ā	(a)		...	𐬁	𐬁	𐬁
6 Palatalis brevis	i			इ	𐬂	𐬂	𐬂
7 " longa	ī	(i)		...	𐬃	𐬃	𐬃
8 Dentalis brevis	u			उ
9 " longa	ū
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			र
11 " longa	rī
12 Labialis brevis	u	(u)
13 " longa	ū
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e	(e)
15 " longa	é (ai)
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	āi	(ai)
17 " "	ei (ēi)
18 " "	oi (ōu)
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o
20 " longa	ō (au)	(o)
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	āu	(au)
22 " "	eu (ēu)
23 " "	ou (ōu)
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä
25 Palatalis fracta	ī
26 Labialis fracta	ū
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ō

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
BERKELEY

Return to desk from which borrowed.
This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

26 May '50 JJ

18 Jan 58 MF

Goodwin
FEB 18 1958

43
APR 18 1958

May 18 in blue

REC'D LD

MAY 14 1958

20 Feb '59 BR

REC'D LD

JUL 11 1959

24 Jan '60 CR

REC'D LD

JAN 21 1960

5 Jan '60 LOX

REC'D LD

JAN 18 1961

76 Mar '65 VE

REC'D

MAR 16 '65 -9

LD 21-100m-11, '49 (B7146s16) 476

YC 54595

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

UC-NRLF

B 3 021 316

THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST

London

HENRY FROWDE

OXFORD UNIVERSITY PRESS WAREHOUSE

AMEN CORNER

THE Müller
· SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST·

TRANSLATED

BY VARIOUS ORIENTAL SCHOLARS

·15·

AND EDITED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

VOL. XV

Oxford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1884

[All rights reserved]

685
M946
v.15

30/155

THE UPANISHADS

TRANSLATED BY

F. MAX MÜLLER

PART II

THE KATHA-UPANISHAD

THE MUNDAKA-UPANISHAD

THE TAITTIRĪYAKA-UPANISHAD

THE BRĪHADĀRAṆYAKA-UPANISHAD

THE SVETĀSVATARA-UPANISHAD

THE PRASŌA-UPANISHAD

THE MAITRĀYANA-BRĀHMAṆA-UPANISHAD

Orford

AT THE CLARENDON PRESS

1884

[All rights reserved]

CONTENTS.

	PAGE
INTRODUCTION	ix ✓
Katha -upanishad	xxi +
Mundaka -upanishad	xxvi
Taittirīyaka -upanishad	xxvii ✓
Bṛihadâraṇyaka -upanishad	xxx +
Svetâsvatara -upanishad	xxxix
Prasṇa -upanishad	xlii ✓
Maitrâyaṇa-brâhmana -upanishad	xliii ✓
TRANSLATION OF THE KATHA -UPANISHAD
	1 ✓
TRANSLATION OF THE MUNDAKA -UPANISHAD
	27 ✓
TRANSLATION OF THE TAITTIRĪYAKA -UPANISHAD
	45
TRANSLATION OF THE BṚHADÂRANYAKA -UPANISHAD
	73 ✓
TRANSLATION OF THE SVETÂSVATARA -UPANISHAD
	231
TRANSLATION OF THE PRASṆA -UPANISHAD
	271 ✓
TRANSLATION OF THE MAITRÂYAṆA-BRÂHMANA -UPANISHAD 287

Transliteration of Oriental Alphabets adopted for the Translations of the Sacred Books of the East 347

INTRODUCTION.

THIS second volume completes the translation of the principal Upanishads to which Śaṅkara appeals in his great commentary on the Vedānta-Sūtras¹, viz. :

1. Khândogya-upanishad,
- 2. Talavakâra or Kena-upanishad,
3. Aitareya-upanishad,
4. Kaushîtaki-upanishad,
- 5. Vâgasaneyi or Îsâ-upanishad,
6. Katha-upanishad, ✓
- 7. Mundaka-upanishad, ✓
8. Taittirîyaka-upanishad, ✓
9. Bṛihadâraṇyaka-upanishad, ✓
10. Svetâsvatara-upanishad,
11. Prasṇa-upanishad.

These eleven have sometimes² been called the old and genuine Upanishads, though I should be satisfied to call them the eleven classical Upanishads, or the fundamental Upanishads of the Vedānta philosophy.

Vidyâranya³, in his 'Elucidation of the meaning of all the Upanishads,' Sarvopaniṣhadarthânubhûti-prakâsa, confines himself likewise to those treatises, dropping, however, the Îsâ, and adding the Maitrâyaṇa-upanishad, of which I have given a translation in this volume, and the Nṛsiṃhottara-tapanîya-upanishad, the translation of which had to be reserved for the next volume.

¹ See Deussen, Vedānta, Einleitung, p. 38. Śaṅkara occasionally refers also to the Pañḍgi, Agnirahasya, Gâbâla, and Nârâyanya Upanishads.

² Deussen, loc. cit. p. 82.

³ I state this on the authority of Professor Cowell. See also Fitzedward Hall, Index to the Bibliography of the Indian Philosophical Systems, pp. 116 and 236.

It is more difficult to determine which of the Upanishads were chosen by Saṅkara or deserving the honour of a special commentary. We possess his commentaries on the eleven Upanishads mentioned before¹, with the exception of the Kaushîtaki²-upanishad. We likewise possess his commentary on the Mândûkya-upanishad, but we do not know for certain whether he left commentaries on any of the other Upanishads. Some more or less authoritative statements have been made that he wrote commentaries on some of the minor Upanishads, such as the Atharvasiras, Atharva-sikhâ, and the Nṛisimhatâpanî³. But as, besides Saṅkarâkârya, the disciple of Govinda, there is Saṅkarânanda, the disciple of Ânandâtman, another writer of commentaries on the Upanishads, it is possible that the two names may have been confounded by less careful copyists⁴.

With regard to the Nṛisimhatâpanî all uncertainty might seem to be removed, after Professor Râmamaya Tarkaratna has actually published its text with the commentary of Saṅkarâkârya in the Bibliotheca Indica, Calcutta, 1871. But some uncertainty still remains. While at the end of each Khanda of the Nṛisimha-pûrvatâpanî we read that the Bhâshya was the work of the Paramahansa-parivrâgakâkârya Srî-Saṅkara, the pupil of Govinda, we have no such information for the Nṛisimha-uttaratâpanî, but are told on the contrary that the words Srî-Govindabhagavat &c. have been added at the end by the editor, because he thought fit to do so. This is, to say the least, very suspicious, and we must wait for further confirmation. There is another commentary on this Upanishad by Nârâyanabhattacha, the son of Bhattacha Ratnâkara⁵, who is well known as the author of Dîpikâs on several Upanishads.

¹ They have been published by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica.

² Dr. Weber's statement that Saṅkara wrote a commentary on the Kaushîtaki-upanishad has been corrected by Deussen, loc. cit. p. 39.

³ See Deussen, loc. cit. p. 39.

⁴ A long list of works ascribed to Saṅkara may be seen in Regnaud, Philosophie de l'Inde, p. 34, chiefly taken from Fitzedward Hall's Index of Indian Philosophical Systems.

⁵ See Tarkaratna's Vigrahâpana, p. 3, l. 5.

I subjoin a list of thirty of the smaller Upanishads, published by Professor Rāmamaya Tarkaratna in the Bibliotheca Indica, with the commentaries of Nārāyaṇabhāṭṭa.

1. Sira-upanishad, pp. 1-10; Dīpikā by Nārāyaṇa, pp. 42-60.
2. Garbha-upanishad, pp. 11-15; " pp. 60-73.
3. Nāḍavindu-upanishad, pp. 15-17; " pp. 73-78.
4. Brahmavindu-upanishad, pp. 18-20; " pp. 78-82.
5. Amṛtavindu-upanishad, pp. 21-25; " pp. 83-101.
6. Dhyānavindu-upanishad, pp. 26-28; " pp. 102-114.
7. Tegovindu-upanishad, pp. 29-30; " pp. 114-118.
8. Yogasikhā-upanishad, pp. 31-32; " pp. 118-122.
9. Yogatattva-upanishad, pp. 33-34; " pp. 122-127.
10. Sannyāsa-upanishad, pp. 35-39; " pp. 128-184.
11. Āruneya-upanishad, pp. 39-41; " pp. 184-196.
12. Brahmayidyā-upanishad, pp. 197-203; " ibidem.
13. Kshurikā-upanishad, pp. 203-218; " "
14. Kūlikā-upanishad, pp. 219-228; " "
15. Atharvasikhā-upanishad, pp. 229-238; " "
16. Brahma-upanishad, pp. 239-259; " "
17. Prāṇāgnihotra-upanishad, pp. 260-271; " "
18. Nīlarudra-upanishad, pp. 272-280; " "
19. Kanthasruti-upanishad, pp. 281-294; " "
20. Pinda-upanishad, pp. 295-298; " "
21. Ātma-upanishad, pp. 299-303; " "
22. Rāmapūrvatāpanīya-upanishad,
pp. 304-358; " "
23. Rāmottaratāpanīya-upanishad,
pp. 359-384; " "
24. Hanumadukta-Rāma-upanishad,
pp. 385-393; " "
25. Sarvopanishat-sāraḥ, pp. 394-404; " "
26. Hamsa-upanishad, pp. 404-416; " "
27. Paramahamsa-upanishad, pp. 417-436; " "
28. Gābāla-upanishad, pp. 437-455; " "
29. Kaivalya-upanishad, pp. 456-464; " "
- Kaivalya-upanishad, pp. 465-479; Dīpikā by Saṅkarānanda, "
30. Garuḍa-upanishad, pp. 480 seq.; Dīpikā by Nārāyaṇa, "

We owe to the same editor in the earlier numbers of the Bibliotheca the following editions :

Nṛisimhapûrvatâpanî-upanishad, with commentary.

Nṛisimhottaratâpanî-upanishad, with commentary.

Shatākra-upanishad, with commentary by Nârâyana.

Lastly, Haraṅdra Vidyâbhūṣaṇa and Visvanâtha Sâstrî have published in the Bibliotheca Indica an edition of the Gopâlatâpanî-upanishad, with commentary by Visvesvara.

These editions of the text and commentaries of the Upanishads are no doubt very useful, yet there are many passages where the text is doubtful, still more where the commentaries leave us without any help.

Whatever other scholars may think of the difficulty of translating the Upanishads, I can only repeat what I have said before, that I know of few Sanskrit texts presenting more formidable problems to the translator than these philosophical treatises. It may be said that most of them had been translated before. No doubt they have been, and a careful comparison of my own translation with those of my predecessors will show, I believe, that a small advance, at all events, has now been made towards a truer understanding of these ancient texts. But I know full well how much still remains to be done, both in restoring a correct text, and in discovering the original meaning of the Upanishads ; and I have again and again had to translate certain passages tentatively only, or following the commentators, though conscious all the time that the meaning which they extract from the text cannot be the right one.

As to the text, I explained in my preface to the first volume that I attempted no more than to restore the text, such as it must have existed at the time when Saṅkara wrote his commentaries. As Saṅkara lived during the ninth century A.D.¹, and as we possess no MSS. of so early a date, all reasonable demands of textual criticism would thereby seem to be satisfied. Yet, this is not quite so. We may draw such a line, and for the present keep within it, but scholars who hereafter take up the study of the ¹ India, What can it teach us? p. 360.

Upanishads will probably have to go beyond. Where I had an opportunity of comparing other commentaries, besides those of Saṅkara, it became quite clear that they often followed a different text, and when, as in the case of the Maitrāyaṇa-brāhmaṇa-upanishad, I was enabled to collate copies which came from the South of India, the opinion which I have often expressed of the great value of Southern MSS. received fresh confirmation. The study of Grantha and other Southern MSS. will inaugurate, I believe, a new period in the critical treatment of Sanskrit texts, and the text of the Upanishads will, I hope, benefit quite as much as later texts by the treasures still concealed in the libraries of the Dekhan.

The rule which I have followed myself, and which I have asked my fellow translators to follow, has been adhered to in this new volume also, viz. whenever a choice has to be made between what is not quite faithful and what is not quite English, to surrender without hesitation the idiom rather than the accuracy of the translation. I know that all true scholars have approved of this, and if some of our critics have been offended by certain unidiomatic expressions occurring in our translations, all I can say is, that we shall always be most grateful if they would suggest translations which are not only faithful, but also idiomatic. For the purpose we have in view, a rugged but faithful translation seems to us more useful than a smooth but misleading one.

However, we have laid ourselves open to another kind of censure also, namely, of having occasionally not been literal enough. It is impossible to argue these questions in general, but every translator knows that in many cases a literal translation may convey an entirely wrong meaning. I shall give at least one instance.

My old friend, Mr. Nehemiah Goreh—at least I hope he will still allow me to call him so—in the ‘Occasional Papers on Missionary Subjects,’ First Series, No. 6, quotes, on p. 39, a passage from the Khândogya-upanishad, translates it into English, and then remarks that I had not translated it accurately. But the fault seems to me to lie entirely with him, in attempting to translate a passage without considering the whole chapter of which it forms a part. Mr. Nehemiah Goreh states the beginning of the story rightly when he says that a youth by name Sveta-ketu went, by the advice of his father, to a teacher to study under him. After spending twelve years, as was customary, with the teacher, when he returned home he appeared rather elated. Then the father asked him:

Uta tam âdesam aprâksho¹ yenâsrutam srutam bhavaty amatam matam avigñâtam vigñâtam iti?

I translated this: 'Have you ever asked for that instruction by which we hear what cannot be heard, by which we perceive what cannot be perceived, by which we know what cannot be known?'

Mr. Nehemiah Goreh translates: 'Hast thou asked (of thy teacher) for that instruction by which what is not heard becomes heard, what is not comprehended becomes comprehended, what is not known becomes known?'

I shall not quarrel with my friend for translating man by to comprehend rather than by to perceive. I prefer my own translation, because manas is one side of the common sensory (antaḥkaraṇa), buddhi, the other; the original difference between the two being, so far as I can see, that the manas originally dealt with percepts, the buddhi with concepts². But the chief difference on which my critic lays stress is that I translated asrutam, amatam, and avigñâtam not by 'not heard, not comprehended, not known,' but by 'what cannot be heard, what cannot be perceived, what cannot be known.'

Now, before finding fault, why did he not ask himself what possible reason I could have had for deviating from the original, and for translating avigñâta by unknowable or what cannot be known, rather than by unknown, as every one would be inclined to translate these words at first sight? If he had done so, he would have seen in a moment, that without the change which I introduced in the idiom, the translation would not have conveyed the sense of the original, nay, would have conveyed no sense at all. What could Sveta-ketu have answered, if his father had asked him, whether he had not asked for that instruction by which what is not heard becomes heard, what is not comprehended becomes comprehended, what is not known becomes known? He would have answered, 'Yes, I have asked for it; and from the first day on which I learnt the Sikshâ, the A B C, I have every day heard something which I had not heard before, I have comprehended something which I had not comprehended before, I have known something which I had not known before.' Then why does he say in reply, 'What is that instruction?' Surely Mr. Nehemiah Goreh knew that the instruction which the father refers to, is the instruction regarding Brahman, and that in all which follows the father tries to lead his son by slow degrees to a knowledge of Brahman¹. Now that Brahman is called again and again 'that which cannot be seen, cannot be heard, cannot be perceived, cannot be conceived,' in the ordinary sense of these words; can be learnt, in fact, from the Veda only². It was in order to bring out this meaning that I translated asrutam not by 'not heard,' but by 'not hearable,' or, in better English, by 'what cannot be heard'³.

¹ Mr. Nehemiah Goreh writes aprâkshyo, and this is no doubt the reading adopted by Roer in his edition of the Khândogya-upanishad in the Bibliotheca Indica, p. 384. In Śaṅkara's commentary also the same form is given. Still grammar requires aprâksho.

² The Pañcadāśī (I, 20) distinguishes between manas and buddhi, by saying, mano vimarsarūpam syād buddhiḥ syān nistayātmikā, which places the difference between the two rather in the degree of certainty, ascribing deliberation to manas, decision to buddhi.

¹ In the Vedânta-Sâra, Sadânanda lays great stress on the fact that in this very chapter of the Khândogya-upanishad, the principal subject of the whole chapter is mentioned both in the beginning and in the end. Tatra prakaraṇapratipâdyasyârthasya tadâdyantayor upâdânam upakramasamhâram. Yathâ Khândogyaashashânaprapâhake prakaraṇapratipâdyasyâdvityavastuna ekam evâdvityam (VI, 2, 1) ityâdâv âitadâtmyam idam sarvam (VI, 16, 3) ity ante ka pratipâdanam. 'The beginning with and ending with' imply that the matter to be declared in any given section is declared both at the beginning and at the end thereof:—as, for instance, in the sixth section of the Khândogya-upanishad, 'the Real, besides which there is nought else'—which is to be explained in that section—is declared at the outset in the terms, 'One only, without a second,' and at the end in the terms 'All this consists of That.'

² Vedânta-Sâra, No. 118, tatraivâdvityavastuno mânântarâvishayikarânam.

³ See Mund. Up. I, 1, 6, adresyam agrâhyam.

Any classical scholar knows how often we must translate invictus by invincible, and how Latin tolerates even invictissimus, which we could never render in English by 'the most unconquered,' but 'the unconquerable.' English idiom, therefore, and common sense required that aviḡñāta should be translated, not by inconceived, but by inconceivable, if the translation was to be faithful, and was to give to the reader a correct idea of the original.

Let us now examine some other translations, to see whether the translators were satisfied with translating literally, or whether they attempted to translate thoughtfully.

Anquetil Duperron's translation, being in Latin, cannot help us much. He translates: 'Non auditum, auditum fiat; et non scitum, scitum; et non cognitum, cognitum.'

Rajendralal Mitra translates: 'Have you enquired of your tutor about that subject which makes the unheard-of heard, the unconsidered considered, and the unsettled settled?'

He evidently knew that Brahman was intended, but his rendering of the three verbs is not exact.

Mr. Gough (p. 43) translates: 'Hast thou asked for that instruction by which the unheard becomes heard, the unthought thought, the unknown known?'

But now let us consult a scholar who, in a very marked degree, always was a thoughtful translator, who felt a real interest in the subject, and therefore was never satisfied with mere words, however plausible. The late Dr. Ballantyne, in his translation of the *Vedānta-Sāra*¹, had occasion to translate this passage from the Khândogya-upanishad, and how did he translate it? 'The eulogizing of the subject is the glorifying of what is set forth in this or that section (of the Veda); as, for example, in that same section, the sixth chapter of the Khândogya-upanishad, the glorifying of the Real, besides whom there is nought else, in the following terms: "Thou, O disciple, hast asked for that instruction whereby the unheard-of becomes heard, the inconceivable becomes conceived, and the unknowable becomes thoroughly known.”’

¹ Lecture on the Vedānta, embracing the text of the Vedānta-Sāra, Allahabad, 1851, p. 69. Vedāntasāra, with Nṛsiṃha-Sarasvatī's Subodhinī, and Rāmatīrtha's Vidvanmanoraṅginī, Calcutta, 1860, p. 89. Here we find the right reading, aprākṣaḥ.

Dr. Ballantyne therefore felt exactly what I felt, that in our passage a strictly literal translation would be wrong, would convey no meaning, or a wrong meaning; and Mr. Nehemiah Goreh will see that he ought not to express blame, without trying to find out whether those whom he blames for want of exactness, were not in reality more scrupulously exact in their translation than he has proved himself to be.

Mr. Nehemiah Goreh has, no doubt, great advantages in interpreting the Upanishads, and when he writes without any theological bias, his remarks are often very useful. Thus he objects rightly, I think, to my translation of a sentence in the same chapter of the Khândogya-upanishad, where the father, in answer to his son's question, replies: ‘Sad eva, Somya, idam agra âsîd ekam evâdvityam.’ I had tried several translations of these words, and yet I see now that the one I proposed in the end is liable to be misunderstood. I had translated: ‘In the beginning, my dear, there was that only which is, one only, without a second.’ The more faithful translation would have been: ‘The being alone was this in the beginning.’ But ‘the being’ does not mean in English that which is, τὸ ὄν, and therefore, to avoid any misunderstanding, I translated ‘that which is.’ I might have said, however, ‘The existent, the real, the true (satyam) was this in the beginning,’ just as in the Aitareya-upanishad we read: ‘The Self was all this, one alone, in the beginning¹.’ But in that case I should have sacrificed the gender, and this in our passage is of great importance, being neuter, and not masculine.

What, however, is far more important, and where Mr. Nehemiah Goreh seems to me to have quite misapprehended the original Sanskrit, is this, that sat, τὸ ὄν, and âtâmâ, the Self, are the subjects in these sentences, and not predicates. Now Mr. Nehemiah Goreh translates: ‘This was the existent one itself before, one only without a second;’ and he explains: 'This universe, before it was developed in the present form, was the existent one, Brahma, itself.' This cannot be. If 'idam,' this, i.e. the visible world, were the subject, how could the Upanishad go on and say, tad aikshata bahu syâm pragâyeyeti tat tego 'srigata, 'that thought, may I be many, may I grow forth. It sent forth fire.' This can be said of the Sat only, that is, the Brahman¹. Sat, therefore, is the subject, not idam, for a Vedântist may well say that Brahman is the world, or sent forth the world, but not that the world, which is a mere illusion, was, in the beginning, Brahman.

¹ Âtmâ vâ idam eka evâgra âsîd.

This becomes clearer still in another passage, Maitr. Up. VI, 17, where we read: Brahma ha vâ idam agra âsîd eko 'nantaḥ, 'In the beginning Brahman was all this. He was one, and infinite.' Here the transition from the neuter to the masculine gender shows that Brahman only can be the subject, both in the first and in the second sentence.

In English it may seem to make little difference whether we say, 'Brahman was this,' or 'this was Brahman.' In Sanskrit too we find, Brahma khalv idam vâva sarvam, 'Brahman indeed is all this' (Maitr. Up. IV, 6), and Sarvam khalv idam Brahma, 'all this is Brahman indeed' (Khând. Up. III, 14, 1). But the logical meaning is always that Brahman was all this, i.e. all that we see now, Brahman being the subject, idam the predicate. Brahman becomes idam, not idam Brahman.

Thus the Pañkadasî, I, 18, says:

Ekâdasendriyair yuktyâ sâstrenâpy avagamyate

Yâvat kimkîd bhaved etad idamsabdoditam gagat, which Mr. A. Venis (Pandit, V, p. 667) translates: 'Whatever may be apprehended through the eleven organs, by argument and revelation, i.e. the world of phenomena, is expressed by the word idam, this.' The Pañkadasî then goes on:

Idam sarvam purâ sṛishṭer ekam evâdvitīyakam

Sad evâsîn nâmarûpe nâstâm ity Âruner vakāḥ.

This Mr. Venis translates: 'Previous to creation, all this was the existent (sat), one only without a second : name and form were not :—this is the declaration of the son of Aruṇa.’

¹ Saṅkara says (p. 398, l. 5): ekam evâdvitīyam paramârthata idam buddhi-kâlê 'pi tat sad aikshata.

This is no doubt a translation grammatically correct, but from the philosophical standpoint of the Vedānta, what is really meant is that, before the srishā (which is not creation, but the sending forth of the world, and the sending forth of it, not as something real, but as a mere illusion), the Real alone, i. e. the Brahman, was, instead of this, i. e. instead of this illusory world. The illusion was not, but the Real, i. e. Brahman, was. What became, or what seemed to change, was Brahman, and therefore the only possible subject, logically, is Brahman, everything else being a predicate, and a phenomenal predicate only.

If I were arguing with a European, not with an Indian scholar, I should venture to go even a step further, and try to prove that the idam, in this and similar sentences, does not mean this, i. e. this world, but that originally it was intended as an adverb, meaning now, or here. This use of idam, unsuspected by native scholars, is very frequent in Vedic literature, and instances may be seen in Boehtlingk’s Dictionary. In that case the translation would be : ‘The real (rò ōv), O friend, was here in the beginning.’ This meaning of idam, however, would apply only to the earliest utterances of ancient Brahmvādins, while in later times idam was used and understood in the sense of all that is seen, the visible universe, just as iyam by itself is used in the sense of the earth.

However, difficulties of this kind may be overcome, if once we have arrived at a clear conception of the general drift of the Upanishads. The real difficulties are of a very different character. They consist in the extraordinary number of passages which seem to us utterly meaningless and irrational, or, at all events, so far-fetched that we can hardly believe that the same authors who can express the deepest thoughts on religion and philosophy with clearness, nay, with a kind of poetical eloquence, could have uttered in the same breath such utter rubbish. Some of the sacrificial technicalities, and their philosophical interpretations with which the Upanishads abound, may perhaps in time assume a clearer meaning, when we shall have more fully mastered the intricacies of the Vedic ceremonial. But there will always remain in the Upanishads a vast amount of what we can only call meaningless jargon, and for the presence of which in these ancient mines of thought I, for my own part, feel quite unable to account. 'Yes,' a friend of mine wrote to me, after reading some of the Sacred Books of the East, 'you are right, how tremendously ahead of other sacred books is the Bible. The difference strikes one as almost unfairly great.' So it does, no doubt. But some of the most honest believers and admirers of the Bible have expressed a similar disappointment, because they had formed their ideas of what a Sacred Book ought to be, theoretically, not historically. The Rev. J. M. Wilson, in his excellent Lectures on the Theory of Inspiration, p. 32, writes: 'The Bible is so unlike what you would expect; it does not consist of golden sayings and rules of life; give explanations of the philosophical and social problems of the past, the present, and the future; contain teachings immeasurably unlike those of any other book; but it contains history, ritual, legislation, poetry, dialogue, prophecy, memoirs, and letters; it contains much that is foreign to your idea of what a revelation ought to be. But this is not all. There is not only much that is foreign, but much that is opposed, to your preconceptions. The Jews tolerated slavery, polygamy, and other customs and cruelties of imperfect civilisation. There are the vindictive psalms, too, with their bitter hatred against enemies,—psalms which we chant in our churches. How can we do so? There are stories of immorality, of treachery, of crime. How can we read them?' Still the Bible has been and is a truly sacred, because a truly historical book, for there is nothing more sacred in this world than the history of man, in his search after his highest ideals. All ancient books which have once been called sacred by man, will have their lasting place in the history of mankind, and those who possess the courage, the perseverance, and the self-denial of the true miner, and of the true scholar, will find even in the darkest and dustiest shafts what they are seeking for,—real nuggets of thought, and precious jewels of faith and hope.

I.

THE KATHA-UPANISHAD.

THE Katha-upanishad is probably more widely known than any other Upanishad. It formed part of the Persian translation, was rendered into English by Rāmmohun Roy, and has since been frequently quoted by English, French, and German writers as one of the most perfect specimens of the mystic philosophy and poetry of the ancient Hindus.

It was in the year 1845 that I first copied at Berlin the text of this Upanishad, the commentary of Sāṅkara (MS. 127 Chambers¹), and the gloss of Gopālayogin (MS. 224 Chambers). The text and commentary of Sāṅkara and the gloss of Ānandagiri have since been edited by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica, with translation and notes. There are other translations, more or less perfect, by Rāmmohun Roy, Windischmann, Poley, Weber, Muir, Regnaud, Gough, and others. But there still remained many difficult and obscure portions, and I hope that in some at least of the passages where I differ from my predecessors, not excepting Sāṅkara, I may have succeeded in rendering the original meaning of the author more intelligible than it has hitherto been.

The text of the Katha-upanishad is in some MSS. ascribed to the Yagur-veda. In the Chambers MS. of the commentary also it is said to belong to that Veda², and in the Muktikopanishad it stands first among the Upanishads of the Black Yagur-veda. According to Colebrooke (Miscellaneous Essays, I, 96, note) it is referred to the Sāma-veda also. Generally, however, it is counted as one of the Ātharvāna Upanishads.

The reason why it is ascribed to the Yagur-veda, is probably because the legend of Nāṅketas occurs in the Brāhmaṇa of the Taittirīya Yagur-veda. Here we read (III, 1, 8):

Vāgasravasa, wishing for rewards, sacrificed all his wealth. He had a son, called Nāṣiketas. While he was still a boy, faith entered into him at the time when the cows that were to be given (by his father) as presents to the priests, were brought in. He said: 'Father, to whom wilt thou give me?' He said so a second and third time. The father turned round and said to him: 'To Death, I give thee.'

¹ MS. 133 is a mere copy of MS. 127.

² Yagurvede Kaṭhāvallībhāṣyam.

Then a voice said to the young Gautama, as he stood up: 'He (thy father) said, Go away to the house of Death, I give thee to Death.' Go therefore to Death when he is not at home, and dwell in his house for three nights without eating. If he should ask thee, 'Boy, how many nights hast thou been here?' say, 'Three.' When he asks thee, 'What didst thou eat the first night?' say, 'Thy offspring.' 'What didst thou eat the second night?' say, 'Thy cattle.' 'What didst thou eat the third night?' say, 'Thy good works.'

He went to Death, while he was away from home, and he dwelt in his house for three nights without eating. When Death returned, he asked: 'Boy, how many nights hast thou been here?' He answered: 'Three.' 'What didst thou eat the first night?' 'Thy offspring.' 'What didst thou eat the second night?' 'Thy cattle.' 'What didst thou eat the third night?' 'Thy good works.'

Then he said: 'My respect to thee, O venerable sir! Choose a boon.'

'May I return living to my father,' he said.

'Choose a second boon.'

'Tell me how my good works may never perish.'

Then he explained to him this Nāṣiketa fire (sacrifice), and hence his good works do not perish.

'Choose a third boon.'

'Tell me the conquest of death again.'

Then he explained to him this (chief) Nāṣiketa fire (sacrifice), and hence he conquered death again¹.

This story, which in the Brāhmaṇa is told in order to explain the name of a certain sacrificial ceremony called ¹ The commentator explains punar-mṛtyu as the death that follows after the present inevitable death.

Nâliketa, was used as a peg on which to hang the doctrines of the Upanishad. In its original form it may have constituted one Adhyâya only, and the very fact of its division into two Adhyâyas may show that the compilers of the Upanishad were still aware of its gradual origin. We have no means, however, of determining its original form, nor should we even be justified in maintaining that the first Adhyâya ever existed by itself, and that the second was added at a much later time. Whatever its component elements may have been before it was an Upanishad, when it was an Upanishad it consisted of six Vallîs, neither more nor less.

The name of vallî, lit. creeper, as a subdivision of a Vedic work, is important. It occurs again in the Taittiriya Upanishads. Professor Weber thinks that vallî, creeper, in the sense of chapter, is based on a modern metaphor, and was primarily intended for a creeper, attached to the sâkhâs or branches of the Veda¹. More likely, however, it was used in the same sense as parvan, a joint, a shoot, a branch, i. e. a division.

Various attempts have been made to distinguish the more modern from the more ancient portions of our Upanishad². No doubt there are peculiarities of metre, grammar, language, and thought which indicate the more primitive or the more modern character of certain verses. There are repetitions which offend us, and there are several passages which are clearly taken over from other Upanishads, where they seem to have had their original place. Thirty-five years ago, when I first worked at this Upanishad, I saw no difficulty in re-establishing what I thought the original text of the Upanishad must have been. I now feel that we know so little of the time and the circumstances when these half-prose and half-metrical Upanishads were first put together, that I should hesitate before expunging even the most modern-sounding lines from the original context of these Vedântic essays¹.

¹ History of Indian Literature, p. 93, note ; p. 157.

² Though it would be unfair to hold Professor Weber responsible for his remarks on this and other questions connected with the Upanishads published many years ago (Indische Studien, 1853, p. 197), and though I have hardly ever thought it necessary to criticise them, some of his remarks are not without their value even now.

The mention of Dhâtri, creator, for instance (Kath. Up. II, 20), is certainly startling, and seems to have given rise to a very early conjectural emendation. But dhâtri and vidhâtri occur in the hymns of the Rig-veda (X, 82, 2), and in the Upanishads (Maitr. Up. VI, 8); and Dhâtri, as almost a personal deity, is invoked with Pragâpati in Rig-veda X, 184, 1. Deva, in the sense of God (Kath. Up. II, 12), is equally strange, but occurs in other Upanishads also (Maitr. Up. VI, 23; Svetâsv. Up. I, 3). Much might be said about setu, bridge (Kath. Up. III, 2; Mund. Up. II, 2, 5), âdarsa, mirror (Kath. Up. VI, 5), as being characteristic of a later age. But setu is not a bridge, in our sense of the word, but rather a wall, a bank, a barrier, and occurs frequently in other Upanishads (Maitr. Up. VII, 7; Khând. Up. VIII, 4; Brih. Up. IV, 4, 22, &c.), while âdarsas, or mirrors, are mentioned in the Bṛihadâraṇyaka and the Srauta-sûtras. Till we know something more about the date of the first and the last composition or compilation of the Upanishads, how are we to tell what subjects and what ideas the first author or the last collector was familiar with? To attempt the impossible may seem courageous, but it is hardly scholarlike.

With regard to faulty or irregular readings, we can never know whether they are due to the original composers, the compilers, the repeaters, or lastly the writers of the Upanishads. It is easy to say that adresya (Mund. Up. I, 1, 6) ought to be adrisya; but who would venture to correct that form? Whenever that verse is quoted, it is quoted with adresya, not adrisya. The commentators themselves tell us sometimes that certain forms are either Vedic or due to carelessness (pramâdapâtḥa); but that very fact shows that such a form, for instance, as samîyâta (Khând. Up. I, 12, 3) rests on an old authority.

No doubt, if we have the original text of an author, and can prove that his text was corrupted by later compilers or copyists or printers, we have a right to remove those later alterations, whether they be improvements or corruptions. But where, as in our case, we can never hope to gain access to original documents, and where we can only hope, by pointing out what is clearly more modern than the rest or, it may be, faulty, to gain an approximate conception of what the original composer may have had in his mind, before handing his composition over to the safe keeping of oral tradition, it is almost a duty to discourage, as much as lies in our power, the work of reconstructing an old text by so-called conjectural emendations or critical omissions.

¹ See Regnaud, Le Pessimisme Brahmanique, Annales du Musée Guimet, 1880; tom. i, p. 101.

I have little doubt, for instance, that the three verses 16-18 in the first Valli of the Kaṭha-upanishad are later additions, but I should not therefore venture to remove them. Death had granted three boons to Naṅiketas, and no more. In a later portion, however, of the Upanishad (II, 3), the expression srīṅkā vittamayī occurs, which I have translated by 'the road which leads to wealth.' As it is said that Naṅiketas did not choose that srīṅkā, some reader must have supposed that a srīṅkā was offered him by Death. Srīṅkā, however, meant commonly a string or necklace, and hence arose the idea that Death must have offered a necklace as an additional gift to Naṅiketas. Besides this, there was another honour done to Naṅiketas by Mrityu, namely, his allowing the sacrifice which he had taught him, to be called by his name. This also, it was supposed, ought to have been distinctly mentioned before, and hence the insertion of the three verses 16-18. They are clumsily put in, for after punar evāha, 'he said again,' verse 16 ought not to have commenced by tam abravīt, 'he said to him.' They contain nothing new, for the fact that the sacrifice is to be called after Naṅiketas was sufficiently indicated by verse 19, 'This, O Naṅiketas, is thy fire which leads to heaven, which thou hast chosen as thy second boon.' But so anxious was the interpolator to impress upon his hearers the fact that the sacrifice should in future go by that name, that, in spite of the metre, he inserted tavaiva, 'of thee alone,' in verse 19.

II.

THE MUNDAKA-UPANISHAD.

THIS is an Upanishad of the Atharva-veda. It is a Mantra-upanishad, i. e. it has the form of a Mantra. But, as the commentators observe, though it is written in verse, it is not, like other Mantras, to be used for sacrificial purposes. Its only object is to teach the highest knowledge, the knowledge of Brahman, which cannot be obtained either by sacrifices or by worship (upâsana), but by such teaching only as is imparted in the Upanishad. A man may a hundred times restrain his breath, &c., but without the Upanishad his ignorance does not cease. Nor is it right to continue for ever in the performance of sacrificial and other good works, if one wishes to obtain the highest knowledge of Brahman. The Sannyâsin alone, who has given up everything, is qualified to know and to become Brahman. And though it might seem from Vedic legends that Grihasthas also who continued to live with their families, performing all the duties required of them by law, had been in possession of the highest knowledge, this, we are told, is a mistake. Works and knowledge can be as little together as darkness and light.

This Upanishad too has been often translated since it first appeared in the Persian translation of Dârâ Shukoh. My own copy of the text and Saṅkara's commentary from the MS. in the Chambers Collection was made in October 1844. Both are now best accessible in the Bibliotheca Indica, where Dr. Roer has published the text, the commentary by Saṅkara, a gloss by Ânandagñâna, and an English translation with notes.

The title of the Upanishad, Mundaka, has not yet been explained. The Upanishad is called Mundaka-upanishad, and its three chapters are each called Mundakam. Native commentators explain it as the shaving Upanishad, that is, as the Upanishad which cuts off the errors of the mind, like a razor. Another Upanishad also is called Kshurikâ, the razor, a name which is explained in the text itself as meaning an instrument for removing illusion and error. The title is all the more strange because Mundaka, in its commonest acceptation, is used as a term of reproach for Buddhist mendicants, who are called 'Shavelings,' in opposition to the Brāhmans, who dress their hair carefully, and often display by its peculiar arrangement either their family or their rank. Many doctrines of the Upanishads are, no doubt, pure Buddhism, or rather Buddhism is on many points the consistent carrying out of the principles laid down in the Upanishads. Yet, for that very reason, it seems impossible that this should be the origin of the name, unless we suppose that it was the work of a man who was, in one sense, a Mundaka, and yet faithful to the Brahmanic law.

III.

THE TAITTIRĪYAKA-UPANISHAD.

THE Taittirīyaka-upanishad seems to have had its original place in the Taittirīya-Āraṇyaka. This Āraṇyaka consists, as Rajendralal Mitra has shown in the Introduction to his edition of the work in the Bibliotheca Indica, of three portions. Out of its ten Prapāṭhakas, the first six form the Āraṇyaka proper, or the Karma-kāṇḍa, as Sāyana writes. Then follow Prapāṭhakas VII, VIII, and IX, forming the Taittirīyaka-upanishad; and lastly, the tenth Prapāṭhaka, the Yâgñīkī or Mahânârâyana-upanishad, which is called a Khila, and was therefore considered by the Brāhmans themselves as a later and supplementary work.

Saṅkara, in his commentary on the Taittirīyaka-upanishad, divides his work into three Adhyāyas, and calls the first Sikshā-vallī, the second the Brahmānanda-vallī, while he gives no special name to the Upanishad explained in the third Adhyāya. This, however, may be due to a mere accident, for whenever the division of the Taittirīyaka-upanishad into Vallīs is mentioned, we always have three¹, the ¹ Saṅkara (ed. Roer, p. 141) himself speaks of two Vallīs, teaching the paramātmagñāna (the Sikshā-vallī has nothing to do with this), and Anquetil has Anandbli = Ānanda-vallī, and Bharkbli = Bhrigu-vallī.

Sikshâ-vallî, the Brahmananda-vallî, and the Bhrîgu-vallî¹. Properly, however, it is only the second Anuvâka of the seventh Prapâthaka which deserves and receives in the text itself the name of Sikshâdhyâya, while the rest of the first Vallî ought to go by the name of Sâmhîta-upanishad², or Sâmhîti-upanishad.

Sâyana³, in his commentary on the Taittirîya-âraṇyaka, explains the seventh chapter, the Sikshâdhyâya (twelve anuvâkas), as Sâmhîti-upanishad. His commentary, however, is called Sikshâ-bhâshya. The same Sâyana treats the eighth and ninth Prapâthakas as the Vârûṇy-upanishad⁴.

The Ânanda-vallî and Bhrîgu-vallî are quoted among the Upanishads of the Âtharvâṇa⁵.

At the end of each Vallî there is an index of the Ânuvâkas which it contains. That at the end of the first Vallî is intelligible. It gives the Pratîkas, i. e. the initial words, of each Anuvâka, and states their number as twelve. At the end of the first Anuvâka, we have the final words 'satyam vadishyâmi,' and pañka ka, i. e. five short paragraphs at the end. At the end of the second Anuvâka, where we expect the final words, we have the initial, i. e. śikshâm, and then pañka, i. e. five sections in the Anuvâka. At the end of the third Anuvâka, we have the final words, but no number of sections. At the end of the fourth Anuvâka, we have the final words of the three sections, followed by one paragraph; at the end of the fifth Anuvâka, three final words, and two paragraphs, though the first paragraph belongs clearly to the third section. In the sixth Anuvâka, we have the final words of the two Anuvâkas, and one paragraph. In the seventh Anuvâka, there is the final word

¹ The third Vallî ends with Bhrîgur ity upanishat.

² See Taittirîyaka-upanishad, ed. Roer, p. 12.

³ See M. M., Alphabetisches Verzeichniss der Upanishads, p. 144.

⁴ The Anukramanî of the Âtreya school (see Weber, Indische Studien, II, p. 208) of the Taittirîyaka gives likewise the name of Vârûṇî to the eighth and ninth Prapâthaka, while it calls the seventh Prapâthaka the Sâmhîti, and the tenth Prapâthaka the Yâgñîki-upanishad. That Anukramanî presupposes, however, a different text, as may be seen both from the number of Anuvâkas, and from the position assigned to the Yâgñîkî as between the Sâmhîti and Vârûṇî Upanishads.

⁵ See M. M., Alphabetisches Verzeichniss der Upanishads.

sarvam, and one paragraph added. In the eighth Anuvāka, we have the initial word, and the number of sections, viz. ten. In the ninth Anuvāka, there are the final words of one section, and six paragraphs. In the tenth Anuvāka, there is the initial word, and the number of paragraphs, viz. six. In the eleventh Anuvāka, we have the final words of four sections, and seven paragraphs, the first again forming an integral portion of the last section. The twelfth Anuvāka has one section, and five paragraphs. If five, then the sānti would here have to be included, while, from what is said afterwards, it is clear that as the first word of the Valli is sam naḥ, so the last is vaktāram.

In the second Valli the index to each Anuvāka is given at the end of the Valli.

1st Anuvāka : pratīka : *brahma*vid, and some other catchwords, idam, ayam, idam. Number of sections, 21.

2nd Anuvāka : pratīka : annād, and other catchwords ; last word, pukkha. Sections, 26.

3rd Anuvāka : pratīka : prāṇam, and other catchwords ; last word, pukkha. Sections, 22.

4th Anuvāka : pratīka : yataḥ, and other catchwords ; last word, pukkha. Sections, 18.

5th Anuvāka : pratīka : viḡṇānam, and other catchwords ; last word, pukkha. Sections, 22.

6th Anuvāka : pratīka : asanneva, then atha (deest in Taitt. Ār. 7). Sections, 28.

7th Anuvāka : pratīka : asat. Sections, 16.

8th Anuvāka : pratīka : bhīṣhāsmāt, and other catchwords ; last word, upasaṅkrāmati. Sections, 51.

9th Anuvāka : pratīka : yataḥ—kutasthana ; then tam (deest in Taitt. Ār.). Sections, 11.

In the third Valli the Anukramanī stands at the end.

1. The first word, bhrīguḥ, and some other catchwords. Sections, 13.

2. The first word, annam. Sections, 12.

3. The first word, prāṇam. Sections, 12.

4. The first word, manah. Sections, 12.

5. The first word, viḡṇānam, and some other words. Sections, 12.

6. The first word, ânanda, and some other words. Sections, 10.
7. The first words, annam na nindyât, prânah, sarîram. Sections, 11.
8. The first words, annam na parikakshita, âpo gyoiti. Sections, 11.
9. The first words, annam bahu kurvita prithivim âkâsa. Sections, 11.
10. The first words, na kañkana. Sections 61. The last words of each section are given for the tenth Anuvâka.

IV.

THE BRĪHADĀRANYAKA-UPANISHAD.

THIS Upanishad has been so often edited and discussed that it calls for no special remarks. It forms part of the Satapatha-brâhmana. In the Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ of that Brâhmana, which has been edited by Professor Weber, the Upanishad, consisting of six adhyâyas, begins with the fourth adhyâya (or third prapâthaka) of the fourteenth book.

There is a commentary on the Brihadâranyaka-upanishad by Dvivedasrînârâyanasûnu Dvivedagaṅga, which has been carefully edited by Weber in his great edition of the Satapatha-brâhmana from a MS. in the Bodleian Library, formerly belonging to Dr. Mill, in which the Upanishad is called Mâdhyandiniya-brâhmana-upanishad.

In the Kânva-sâkhâ the Brihadâranyaka-upanishad forms the seventeenth book of the Satapatha-brâhmana, consisting of six adhyâyas.

As Sâṅkara's commentary and the gloss of Ânandatîrtha, edited by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica, follow the Kânva-sâkhâ, I have followed the same text in my translation.

Besides Dr. Roer's edition of the text, commentary, and gloss of this Upanishad, there is Poley's edition of the text. There is also a translation of it by Dr. Roer, with large extracts from Sâṅkara's commentary.

V.

THE SVETĀSVATARA-UPANISHAD.

THE Svetāsvatara-upanishad has been handed down as one of the thirty-three Upanishads of the Taittirīyas, and though this has been doubted, no real argument has ever been brought forward to invalidate the tradition which represents it as belonging to the Taittirīya or Black Yagur-veda.

It is sometimes called Svetāsvatārāzām Mantropanishad (p. 274), and is frequently spoken of in the plural, as Svetāsvataropanishadaḥ. At the end of the last Adhyāya we read that Svetāsvatara told it to the best among the hermits, and that it should be kept secret, and not be taught to any one except to a son or a regular pupil. It is also called Svetāsva¹, though, it would seem, for the sake of the metre only. The Svetāsvataras are mentioned as a Sākhā², subordinate to the Karakas; but of the literature belonging to them in particular, nothing is ever mentioned beyond this Upanishad.

Svetāsvatara means a white mule, and as mules were known and prized in India from the earliest times, Svetāsvatara, as the name of a person, is no more startling than Svetāsra, white horse, an epithet of Arguna. Now as no one would be likely to conclude from the name of one of the celebrated Vedic Rishis, Syāvāsra, i.e. black horse, that negro influences might be discovered in his hymns, it is hardly necessary to say that all speculations as to Christian influences, or the teaching of white Syro-Christian missionaries, being indicated by the name of Svetāsvatara, are groundless³.

The Svetāsvatara-upanishad holds a very high rank among the Upanishads. Though we cannot say that it is quoted by name by Bādarāyaṇa in the Vedānta-sūtras, it is distinctly referred to as sruta or revealed¹. It is one of the twelve Upanishads chosen by Vidyâranya in his Sarvopaniṣad-arthânabhûtiprakâṣa, and it was singled out by Saṅkara as worthy of a special commentary.

¹ Vākaspatyam, p. 1222.

² Catal. Bodl. p. 271 a; p. 222 a.

³ See Weber, Ind. Stud. I, pp. 400, 421.

The Svetâsvatara-upaniṣad seems to me one of the most difficult, and at the same time one of the most interesting works of its kind. Whether on that and on other grounds it should be assigned to a more ancient or to a more modern period is what, in the present state of our knowledge, or, to be honest, of our ignorance of minute chronology during the Vedic period, no true scholar would venture to assert. We must be satisfied to know that, as a class, the Upanishads are presupposed by the Kalpa-sûtras, that some of them, called Mantra-upaniṣads, form part of the more modern Samhitâs, and that there are portions even in the *Rig-veda-samhitâ*² for which the name of Upanishad is claimed by the Anukramanîs. We find them most frequent, however, during the Brâhmaṇa-period, in the Brâhmaṇas themselves, and, more especially, in those portions which are called Âranyakas, while a large number of them is referred to the Atharva-veda. That, in imitation of older Upanishads, similar treatises were composed to a comparatively recent time, has, of course, long been known³.

But when we approach the question whether among the ancient and genuine Upanishads one may be older than the other, we find that, though we may guess much, we can prove nothing. The Upanishads belonged to Parishads or settlements spread all over India. There is a stock of ideas, even of expressions, common to most of them. Yet, the ideas collected in the Upanishads cannot all have grown up in one and the same place, still less in regular succession. They must have had an independent growth, determined by individual and local influences, and opinions which in one village might seem far advanced, would in another be looked upon as behind the world. We may admire the ingeniousness of those who sometimes in this, sometimes in that peculiarity see a clear indication of the modern date of an Upanishad, but to a conscientious scholar such arguments are really distasteful for the very sake of their ingeniousness. He knows that they will convince many who do not know the real difficulties; he knows they will have to be got out of the way with no small trouble, and he knows that, even if they should prove true in the end, they will require very different support from what they have hitherto received, before they can be admitted to the narrow circle of scientific facts.

¹ See Deussen, Vedânta, p. 24; Ved. Sûtra I, 1, 11; I, 4, 8; II, 3, 22.

² See Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. lxvi.

³ Loc. cit. p. lxvii.

While fully admitting therefore that the Svetâsvatara-upanishad has its peculiar features and its peculiar difficulties, I must most strongly maintain that no argument that has as yet been brought forward, seems to me to prove, in any sense of the word, its modern character.

It has been said, for instance, that the Svetâsvatara-upanishad is a sectarian Upanishad, because, when speaking of the Highest Self or the Highest Brahman, it applies such names to him as Hara (I, 10), Rudra (II, 17; III, 2; 4; IV, 12; 21; 22), Siva (III, 14; IV, 10), Bhagavat (III, 14), Agni, Âditya, Vâyu, &c. (IV, 2). But here it is simply taken for granted that the idea of the Highest Self was developed first, and, after it had reached its highest purity, was lowered again by an identification with mythological and personal deities. The questions whether the conception of the Highest Self was formed once and once only, whether it was formed after all the personal and mythological deities had first been merged into one Lord (Pragâpati), or whether it was discovered behind the veil of any other name in the mythological pantheon of the past, have never been mooted. Why should not an ancient Rîshi have said: What we have hitherto called Rudra, and what we worship as Agni, or Siva, is in reality the Highest Self, thus leaving much of the ancient mythological phraseology to be used with a new meaning? Why should we at once conclude that late sectarian worshippers of mythological gods replaced again the Highest Self, after their fathers had discovered it, by their own sectarian names? If we adopt the former view, the Upanishads, which still show these rudera of the ancient temples, would have to be considered as more primitive even than those in which the idea of the Brahman or the Highest Self has reached its utmost purity..

It has been considered a very strong argument in support of the modern and sectarian character of the Svetâsvatara-upanishad, that 'it inculcates what is called Bhakti¹, or implicit reliance on the favour of the deity worshipped.' Now it is quite true that this Upanishad possesses a very distinct character of its own, by the stress which it lays on the personal, and sometimes almost mythical character of the Supreme Spirit; but, so far from inculcating bhakti, in the modern sense of the word, it never mentions that word, except in the very last verse, a verse which, if necessary, certain critics would soon dispose of as a palpable addition. But that verse says no more than this: 'If these truths (of the Upanishad) have been told to a high-minded man, who feels the highest devotion for God, and for his Guru as for God, then they will shine forth indeed.' Does that prove the existence of Bhakti as we find it in the *Sândilya-sûtras*²?

Again, it has been said that the Svetâsvatara-upanishad is sectarian in a philosophical sense, that it is in fact an Upanishad of the Sâṅkhya system of philosophy, and not of the Vedânta. Now I am quite willing to admit that, in its origin, the Vedânta philosophy is nearer to the Vedic literature than any other of the six systems of philosophy, and that if we really found doctrines, peculiar to the Sâṅkhya, and opposed to the Vedânta, in the Svetâsvatara-upanishad, we might feel inclined to assign to our Upanishad a later date. But where is the proof of this?

No doubt there are expressions in this Upanishad which remind us of technical terms used at a later time in the Sâṅkhya system of philosophy, but of Sâṅkhya doctrines, which I had myself formerly suspected in this Upanishad,

¹ Weber, Ind. Stud. I, 422; and History of Indian Literature, p. 238.

² The Aphorisms of Sândilya, or the Hindu Doctrine of Faith, translated by E. B. Cowell, Calcutta, 1878.

I can on closer study find very little. I think it was Mr. Gough who, in his Philosophy of the Upanishads, for the first time made it quite clear that the teaching of our Upanishad is, in the main, the same as that of the other Upanishads. 'The Svetâsvatara-upanishad teaches,' as he says, 'the unity of souls in the one and only Self; the unreality of the world as a series of figments of the self-feigning world-fiction; and as the first of the fictitious emanations, the existence of the Demiurgos or universal soul present in every individual soul, the deity that projects the world out of himself, that the migrating souls may find the recompense of their works in former lives.'

I do not quite agree with this view of the Îsvara, whom Mr. Gough calls the Demiurgos, but he seems to me perfectly right when he says that the Svetâsvatara-upanishad propounds in Sâṅkhya terms the very principles that the Sâṅkhya philosophers make it their business to subvert. One might doubt as to the propriety of calling certain terms 'Sâṅkhya terms' in a work written at a time when a Sâṅkhya philosophy, such as we know it as a system, had as yet no existence, and when the very name sâṅkhya meant something quite different from the Sâṅkhya system of Kapila. Sâṅkhya is derived from saṅkhyâ, and that meant counting, number, name, corresponding very nearly to the Greek λόγος. Sâṅkhya, as derived from it, meant originally no more than theoretic philosophy, as opposed to yoga, which meant originally practical religious exercises and penances, to restrain the passions and the senses in general. All other interpretations of these words, when they had become technical names, are of later date.

But even in their later forms, whatever we may think of the coincidences and differences between the Sâṅkhya and Vedânta systems of philosophy, there is one point on which they are diametrically opposed. Whatever else the Sâṅkhya may be, it is dualistic; whatever else the Vedânta may be, it is monistic. In the Sâṅkhya, nature, or whatever else we may call it, is independent of the purusha; in the Vedânta it is not. Now the Svetâsvatara-upanishad states distinctly that nature, or what in the Sâṅkhya philosophy is intended by Pradhâna, is not an independent power, but a power (sakti) forming the very self of the Deva. 'Sages,' we read, 'devoted to meditation and concentration, have seen the power belonging to God himself, hidden in its own qualities.'

What is really peculiar in the Svetâsvatara-upanishad is the strong stress which it lays on the personality of the Lord, the Īsvara. Deva, in the passage quoted, is perhaps the nearest approach to our own idea of a personal God, though without the background which the Vedânta always retains for it. It is God as creator and ruler of the world, as Īsvara, lord, but not as Paramâtman, or the Highest Self. The Paramâtman constitutes, no doubt, his real essence, but creation and creator have a phenomenal character only¹. The creation is mâyâ, in its original sense of work, then of phenomenal work, then of illusion. The creator is mâyin, in its original sense of worker or maker, but again, in that character, phenomenal only². The Gunas or qualities arise, according to the Vedânta, from prakṛiti or mâyâ, within, not beside, the Highest Self, and this is the very idea which is here expressed by 'the Self-power of God, hidden in the gunas or determining qualities.' How easily that sakti or power may become an independent being, as Mâyâ, we see in such verses as:

Sarvabhūteshu sarvâtman yâ saktir aparâbhavâ
Gurûsrayâ namas tasyai sarvatâyai paresvara³.

But the important point is this, that in the Svetâsvatara-upanishad this change has not taken place. Throughout the whole of it we have one Being only, as the cause of everything, never two. Whatever Sâṅkhya philosophers of a later date may have imagined that they could discover in that Upanishad in support of their theories⁴, there is not one passage in it which, if rightly interpreted, not by itself, but in connection with the whole text, could be quoted in

¹ Prathamam Īsvarâtmanâ mâyirūpenâvatishkate brahma; see p. 280, l. 5.

² Mâyâ sṛigate sarvam etat.

³ See p. 279, l. 5. Sarvâtman seems a vocative, like paresvara.

⁴ See Sarvadarsanaśaṅgraha, p. 152.

support of a dualistic philosophy such as the Sāṅkhya, as a system, decidedly is.

If we want to understand, what seems at first sight contradictory, the existence of a God, a Lord, a Creator, a Ruler, and at the same time the existence of the super-personal Brahman, we must remember that the orthodox view of the Vedānta¹ is not what we should call Evolution, but Illusion. Evolution of the Brahman, or Parināma, is heterodox, illusion or Vivarta is orthodox Vedānta. Brahman is a concept involving such complete perfection that with it evolution, or a tendency towards higher perfection, is impossible. If therefore there is change, that change can only be illusion, and can never claim the same reality as Brahman. To put it metaphorically, the world, according to the orthodox Vedāntin, does not proceed from Brahman as a tree from a germ, but as a mirage from the rays of the sun. The world is, as we express it, phenomenal only, but whatever objective reality there is in it, is Brahman, 'das Ding an sich,' as Kant might call it.

Then what is Īsvara or Deva, the Lord or God? The answers given to this question are not very explicit. Historically, no doubt, the idea of the Īsvara, the personal God, the creator and ruler, the omniscient and omnipotent, existed before the idea of the absolute Brahman, and after the idea of the Brahman had been elaborated, the difficulty of effecting a compromise between the two ideas, had to be overcome. Īsvara, the Lord, is Brahman, for what else could he be? But he is Brahman under a semblance, the semblance, namely, of a personal creating and governing God. He is not created, but is the creator, an office too low, it was supposed, for Brahman. The power which enabled Īsvara to create, was a power within him, not independent of him, whether we call it Devātmasakti, Māyā, or Prakṛiti. That power is really inconceivable, and it has assumed such different forms in the mind of different Vedāntists, that in the end Māyā herself is represented as the creating power, nay, as having created Īsvara himself.

¹ Vedāntaparibhāṣā, in the Pandit, vol. iv, p. 496.

In our Upanishad, however, Īsvara is the creator, and though, philosophically speaking, we should say that he was conceived as phenomenal, yet we must never forget that the phenomenal is the form of the real, and Īsvara therefore an aspect of Brahman¹. 'This God,' says Pramāda Dāsa Mitra², 'is the spirit conscious of the universe. Whilst an extremely limited portion, and that only of the material universe, enters into my consciousness, the whole of the conscious universe, together, of course, with the material one that hangs upon it, enters into the consciousness of God.' And again, 'Whilst we (the *gīvātman*s) are subject to Mâyā, Mâyā is subject to Īsvara. If we truly know Īsvara, we know him as Brahman; if we truly know ourselves, we know ourselves as Brahman. This being so, we must not be surprised if sometimes we find Īsvara sharply distinguished from Brahman, whilst at other times Īsvara and Brahman are interchanged.'

Another argument in support of the sectarian character of the Svetāsvatara-upanishad is brought forward, not by European students only, but by native scholars, namely, that the very name of Kapila, the reputed founder of the Sāṅkhya philosophy, occurs in it. Now it is quite true that if we read the second verse of the fifth Adhyāya by itself, the occurrence of the word Kapila may seem startling. But if we read it in connection with what precedes and follows, we shall see hardly anything unusual in it. It says :

'It is he who, being one only, rules over every germ (cause), over all forms, and over all germs; it is he who, in the beginning, bears in his thoughts the wise son, the fiery, whom he wished to look on while he was born.'

Now it is quite clear to me that the subject in this verse is the same as in IV, 11, where the same words are used, and where yo yonim yonim adhitishthaty ekaḥ refers clearly to Brahman. It is equally clear that the prasūta, the son, the offspring of Brahman, in the Vedānta sense, can only be the same person who is elsewhere called Hiraṇyagarbha, the personified Brahman. Thus we read before, III, 4, 'He the creator and supporter of the gods, Rudra, the great seer (maharshi), the lord of all, formerly gave birth to Hiranyagarbha;' and in IV, 11, we have the very expression which is used here, namely, 'that he saw Hiranyagarbha being born.' Unfortunately, a new adjective is applied in our verse to Hiranyagarbha, namely, kapila, and this has called forth interpretations totally at variance with the general tenor of the Upanishad. If, instead of kapilam, reddish, fiery¹, any other epithet had been used of Hiranyagarbha, no one, I believe, would have hesitated for a moment to recognise the fact that our text simply repeats the description of Hiranyagarbha in his relation to Brahman, for the other epithet rishim, like maharshim, is too often applied to Brahman himself and to Hiranyagarbha to require any explanation.

¹ Savishesam Brahma, or sabalam Brahma.

² Journal of the Royal Asiatic Society, 1878, p. 40.

But it is a well known fact that the Hindus, even as early as the Brâhmana-period, were fond of tracing their various branches of knowledge back to Brahman or to Brahman Svayambhû and then through Pragâpati, who even in the Rig-veda (X, 121, 10) replaces Hiranyagarbha, and sometimes through the Devas, such as Mrityu, Vâyu, Indra, Agni², &c., to the various ancestors of their ancient families.

In the beginning of the Mundakopanishad we are told that Brahman told it to Atharvan, Atharvan to Ângir, Ângir to Satyavâha Bhâradvâga, Bhâradvâga to Ângiras, Ângiras to Saunaka. Manu, the ancient lawgiver, is called both Hairanyagarbha and Svâyambhuva, as descended from Svayambhu or from Hiranyagarbha³. Nothing therefore was more natural than that the same tendency should have led some one to assign the authorship of a great philosophical system like the Sâṅkhya to Hiranyagarbha, if not to Brahman Svayambhû. And if the name of Hiranyagarbha had been used already for the ancestors of other sages, and the inspirers of other systems, what could be more natural than that another name of the same Hiranyagarbha should be chosen, such as Kapila. If we are told that Kapila handed his knowledge to Âsuri, Âsuri to Pañkasikha, this again is in perfect keeping with the character of literary tradition in India. Âsuri occurs in the Vamsas of the Satapatha-brâhmana (see above, pp. 187, 226); Pañkasikha¹, having five tufts, might be either a general name or a proper name of an ascetic, Buddhist or otherwise. He is quoted in the Sâṅkhya-sûtras, V, 32; VI, 68.

¹ Other colours, instead of kapila, are nîla, harita, lohitaṅksha; see IV, 1; 4.

² See Vamsa-brâhmana, ed. Burnell, p. 10; Brihadâranyaka-up. pp. 185, 224.

³ See M. M., India, p. 372.

But after all this was settled, after Kapila had been accepted, like Hiranyagarbha, as the founder of a great system of philosophy, there came a reaction. People had now learnt to believe in a real Kapila, and when looking out for credentials for him, they found them wherever the word Kapila occurred in old writings. The question whether there ever was a real historical person who took the name of Kapila and taught the Sâṅkhya-sûtras, does not concern us here. I see no evidence for it. What is instructive is this, that our very passage, which may have suggested at first the name of Kapila, as distinct from Hiranyagarbha Kapila, was later on appealed to to prove the primordial existence of a Kapila, the founder of the Sâṅkhya philosophy. However, it requires but a very slight acquaintance with Sanskrit literature and very little reflection in order to see that the author of our verse could never have dreamt of elevating a certain Kapila, known to him as a great philosopher, if there ever was such a man, to a divine rank². Hiranyagarbha kapila may have given birth to Kapila, the hero of the Sâṅkhya philosophers, but Kapila, a real human person, was never changed into Hiranyagarbha kapila.

Let us see now what the commentators say. Saṅkara first explains kapilam by kanakam³ kapilavarnam Hiranyagarbham. Kapilo 'graga iti purâṇavakânât. Kapilo Hiranyagarbho vâ nirdisyate. But he afterwards quotes some verses in support of the theory that Kapila was a

¹ For fuller information on Pañkasikha, Kapila, &c., see F. Hall's Preface to Sâṅkhya-pravakana-bhâshya, p. 9 seq.; Weber, Ind. Stud. I, p. 433.

² Weber, Hist. of Indian Literature, p. 236.

³ This ought to be Kanakavarnam, and I hope will not be identified with the name of Buddha in a former existence.

Paramarshi, a portion of Vishnu, intended to destroy error in the Kṛita Yuga, a teacher of the Sāṅkhya philosophy.

Vigñānātman explains the verse rightly, and without any reference to Kapila, the Sāṅkhya teacher.

Saṅkarānanda goes a step further, and being evidently fully aware of the misuse that had been made of this passage, even in certain passages of the Mahābhārata (XII, 13254, 13703), and elsewhere, declares distinctly that kapila cannot be meant for the teacher of the Sāṅkhya (na tu sāṅkhyapranetā kapilaḥ, nāmamātrasāmyena tad-grahane syād atiprasaṅgaḥ). He is fully aware of the true interpretation, viz. avyākṛitasya prathamakāryabhūtam kapilam vikītravarṇam gñānakriyāsaktyātmakam Hiranyagarbham ityārthaḥ, but he yields to another temptation, and seems to prefer another view which makes Kapila Vāsudevasyāvatārabhūtam Sagaraputrānām dagdhāram, an Avatāra of Vāsudeva, the burner of the sons of Sagara. What vast conclusions may be drawn from no facts, may be seen in Weber's Indische Studien, vol. i, p. 430, and even in his History of Indian Literature, published in 1878.

Far more difficult to explain than these supposed allusions to the authors and to the teaching of the Sāṅkhya philosophy are the frequent references in the Svetāsvatara-upanishad to definite numbers, which are supposed to point to certain classes of subjects as arranged in the Sāṅkhya and other systems of philosophy. The Sāṅkhya philosophy is fond of counting and arranging, and its very name is sometimes supposed to have been chosen because it numbers (saṅkhyā) the subjects of which it treats. It is certainly true that if we meet, as we do in the Svetāsvatara-upanishad, with classes of things¹, numbered as one, two, three, five, eight, sixteen, twenty, forty-eight, fifty and more, and if some of these numbers agree with those recognised in the later Sāṅkhya and Yoga systems, we feel doubtful as to whether these coincidences are accidental, or whether, if not accidental, they are due to borrowing on the part of those later systems, or on the part of the Upanishads. I feel it impossible to come to a decision on this point. Even so early as the hymns of the Rig-veda we meet with these numbers assigned to days and months and seasons, rivers and countries, sacrifices and deities. They clearly prove the existence of a considerable amount of intellectual labour which had become fixed and traditional before the composition of certain hymns, and they prove the same in the case of certain Upanishads. But beyond this, for the present, I should not like to go; and I must say that the attempts of most of the Indian commentators at explaining such numbers by a reference to later systems of philosophy or cosmology, are generally very forced and unsatisfactory.

¹ See I, 4; 5; VI, 3.

One more point I ought to mention as indicating the age of the Svetâsvatara-upanishad, and that is the obscurity of many of its verses, which may be due to a corruption of the text, and the number of various readings, recognised as such, by the commentators. Some of them have been mentioned in the notes to my translation.

The text of this Upanishad was printed by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica, with Saṅkara's commentary. I have consulted besides, the commentary of Vigñânâtman, the pupil of Paramahansa-parivrâgakâkârya-srîmag-Gñânottamâkârya, MS. I. O. 1133; and a third commentary, by Saṅkarânanda, the pupil of Paramahansa-parivrâgakâkâryânandâtman, MS. I. O. 1878. These were kindly lent me by Dr. Rost, the learned and liberal librarian of the India Office.

VI.

PRASŪA-UPANISHAD.

THIS Upanishad is called the Prasūa or Shat-prasūa-upanishad, and at the end of a chapter we find occasionally iti prasūaprativakānam, i. e. thus ends the answer to the question. It is ascribed to the Atharva-veda, and occasionally to the Pippalâda-sâkhâ, one of the most important sâkhâs of that Veda. Pippalâda is mentioned in the Upanishad as the name of the principal teacher.

Saṅkara, in the beginning of his commentary, says:

Mantroktasyârthasya vistarânuvâdîdam Brâhmaṇam ârabhyate, which would mean 'this Brâhmaṇa is commenced as more fully repeating what has been declared in the Mantra.' This, however, does not, I believe, refer to a Mantra or hymn in the Atharva-veda-saṃhitâ, but to the Mundaka-upanishad, which, as written in verse, is sometimes spoken of as a Mantra, or Mantropanishad. This is also the opinion of Ânandagiri, who says, 'one might think that it was mere repetition (punarukti), if the essence of the Self, which has been explained by the Mantras, were to be taught here again by the Brâhmaṇa.' For he adds, 'by the Mantras "Brahma devânâm," &c.,' and this is evidently meant for the beginning of the Mundaka-upanishad, 'Brahmâ devânâm.' Ânandagiri refers again to the Mundaka in order to show that the Prasṇa is not a mere repetition, and if Saṅkara calls the beginning of it a Brâhmaṇa, this must be taken in the more general sense of 'what is not Mantra¹.' Mantropanishad is a name used of several Upanishads which are written in verse, and some of which, like the Îśâ, have kept their place in the Samhitâs.

VII.

MAITRÂYANA-BRÂHMAṆA-UPANISHAD.

IN the case of this Upanishad we must first of all attempt to settle its right title. Professor Cowell, in his edition and translation of it, calls it Maitri or Maitrâyanyâ-upanishad, and states that it belongs to the Maitrâyanyâ-sâkhâ of the Black Yagur-veda, and that it formed the concluding portion of a lost Brâhmaṇa of that Sâkhâ, being preceded by the sacrificial (karma) portion, which consisted of four books.

In his MSS. the title varied between Maitry-upanishad and Maitrî-sâkhâ-upanishad. A Poona MS. calls it Maitrâyanyâ-sâkhâ-upanishad, and a MS. copied for Baron von Eckstein, Maitrâyanyâ-upanishad. I myself in the Alphabetical List of the Upanishads, published in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, called it, No. 104, Maitrâyana or Maitri-upanishad, i.e. either the Upanishad of the Maitrâyanas, or the Upanishad of Maitri, the principal teacher.

¹ Mantravyatiriktabhâge tu brâhmaṇasabdak, Rig-veda, Sâyana's Introduction, vol. i, p. 23.

In a MS. which I received from Dr. Burnell, the title of our Upanishad is Maitrâyani-brâhmana-upanishad, varying with Maitrâyani-brâhmana-upanishad, and Srîyagussâkhâyâm Maitrâyaniya-brâhmana-upanishad.

The next question is by what name this Upanishad is quoted by native authorities. Vidyâranya, in his *Sarvopanishad-arthânubhûtiprakâsa*¹, v. 1, speaks of the Maitrâyaniyanâmni yâgushî sâkhâ, and he mentions Maitra (not Maitri) as the author of that Sâkhâ (vv. 55, 150).

In the *Muktikâ-upanishad*² we meet with the name of Maitrâyani as the twenty-fourth Upanishad, with the name of Maitreyî as the twenty-ninth; and again, in the list of the sixteen Upanishads of the Sâma-veda, we find Maitrâyani and Maitreyî as the fourth and fifth.

Looking at all this evidence, I think we should come to the conclusion that our Upanishad derives its name from the Sâkhâ of the Maitrâyanas, and may therefore be called Maitrâyana-upanishad or Maitrâyani Upanishad. Maitrâyana-brâhmana-upanishad seems likewise correct, and Maitrâyani-brâhmana-upanishad, like Kaushîtaki-brâhmana-upanishad and Vâgasaneyi-samhitopanishad, might be defended, if Maitrâyanin were known as a further derivative of Maitrâyana. If the name is formed from the teacher Maitri or Maitra, the title of Maitri-upanishad would also be correct, but I doubt whether Maitri-upanishad would admit of any grammatical justification³.

Besides this Maitrâyana-brâhmana-upanishad, however, I possess a MS. of what is called the Maitreyopanishad, sent to me likewise by the late Dr. Burnell. It is very short, and contains no more than the substance of the first Prapâṭhaka of the Maitrâyana-brâhmana-upanishad. I give the text of it, as far as it can be restored from the one MS. in my possession :

¹ See Cowell, Maitr. Up. pref. p. iv.

² Calcutta, 1791 (1869), p. 4; also as quoted in the Mahāvākya-ratnâvalī, p. 2^b.

³ Dr. Burnell, in his Tanjore Catalogue, mentions, p. 35^a, a Maitrâyani-brâhmanopanishad, which can hardly be a right title, and p. 36^b a Maitrâyaniya and Maitreyībrâhmana.

Harih Om. Bṛihadratho vai nāma rāgā vairāgye putram nidhāpayitvedam aśāsvatam manyamānaḥ sarīram vairāgyam upeto 'ranyam nirgagāma. Sa tatra paramam tapa¹ ādityam udikshamāna ūrdhvas tishṭhaty. Ante sahasrasya muner antikam āgagāma². Atha Bṛihadratho brahmavit-pravaram munīndram sampūgya stutvā bahusāḥ pranāmam akarot. So 'bravid agnir ivādhūmakas tegasā nirdahann ivātmavid Bhagavān khākāyanya, uttishṭhottishṭha varam vrinīshveti rāgānam abravīt³. Sa tasmai punar namaskri-tyovāka, Bhagavan nā(ha)mātmavit tvam tattvavik khu-rumo vayam; sa tvam no brūhity etad vratam purastād asakyam mā prikkha prasānam Aikshvākānyān kāmān vrinīshveti Sākāyanyaḥ. Sarīrasya sarīre (sic) karanāv abhimriśyamāno rāgemām gāthām gagāda. 1

Bhagavann, asthikarmasnāyumaggāmāmsasuklasanīta-sreshmāsrudashikāvinmūtrapittakaphasamghāte durgandhe nīksāre 'smiñ kharīre kim kāmabhogaiḥ. 2

Kāmakrodhalobhamohabhayavishādersheshṭaviyogānish-tasamprayogakshutpipāsāgarāmṛityurogasokādyair abhiha-te 'smiñ kharīre kim kāmabhogaiḥ. 3

Sarvam kedam kshayishnu pasyāmo yatheme dāmsama-sakādayas *trinavan*⁴ nasyata yodbhūtapradhvamsinaḥ. 4

Atha kim etair vā pare 'nye dhamartharās (sic) kakra-vartinaḥ Sudyumnabhūridyumnakuvalayāsvayauvanāsva-vaddhriyāsvāsvapatih sasabindur hariskandro 'mbarīsho nanukastvayātir yayātir anaranyokshasenādayo maruta-bharataprabhṛitayo rāgāno mishato bandhuvargasya ma-hatim sriyam tyaktvāsmāl lokād amum lokam prayānti. 5.

Atha kim etair vā pare 'nye gandharvāsurasayaksharāksha-sabhūtaganapisākoragrahādīnām nirodhanam pasyāmaḥ. 6

Atha kim etair vānyānām soshanam mahārnāvānām

¹ One expects āsthāya.

² This seems better than the Maitrāyana text. He went near a Muni, viz. Sākāyanya.

³ This seems unnecessary.

⁴ There may be an older reading hidden in this, from which arose the reading of the Maitrāyana B. U. trinavanaspatayodbhūtapradhvamsinaḥ, or yodbhūtapradhvamsinaḥ.

sikharinâm prapatanam dhruvasya prakalanam vâtarûnâm nimagganam prithivyâh sthânâpasaranam surânâm. So 'ham ity etadvidhe 'smin samsâre kim kâmapabhogair yair evâsritasya sakrid âvartanam drisyata ity uddhartum arhasi tyandodapânabheka ivâham asmin sam Bhagavas tvam gatis tvam no gatih iti. 7

Ayam¹ agnir vaisvânaro yo 'yam antaḥ purushe yenedam annam pakṣyate yad idam adyate tasyaisha ghosho bhavati yam etat karnâv apidhâya srinoti, sa yadotkramishyan² bhavati nainam ghosham srinoti. 8

Yathâ³ nirindhano vahniḥ svayonâv upasâmyati. 9⁴

Sa sivaḥ so 'nte vaisvânaro bhûtvâ sa dagdhvâ sarvâni bhûtâni prithivyapsu praliyate⁵, âpas tegasi liyante⁶, tego vâyau praliyate⁷, vâyur âkâse vilîyate⁸, âkâsam indriyeshv, indriyâni tanmâtreshu, tanmâtrâni bhûtâdau vilîyante⁹, bhûtâdi mahati vilîyate¹⁰, mahân avyakte vilîyate¹¹, avyaktam akshare vilîyate¹², aksharam tamasi vilîyate¹³, tama ekîbhavati parasmin, parastân na¹⁴ san nâsan na sad ityetan nirvânânam anurâsanam iti vedânusâsanam.

We should distinguish therefore between the large Maitrâ-yana-brâhmana-upanishad and the smaller Maitreyopani-shad. The title of Maitreyî-brâhmana has, of course, a totally different origin, and simply means the Brâhmana which tells the story of Maitreyî¹⁵.

As Professor Cowell, in the Preface to his edition and translation of the Maitrâyana-brâhmana-upanishad, has discussed its peculiar character, I have little to add on that subject. I agree with him in thinking that this Upanishad has grown, and contains several accretions. The Sanskrit commentator himself declares the sixth and seventh chapters to be Khilas or supplementary. Possibly the Maitreya-upanishad, as printed above, contains the earliest framework. Then we have traces of various recensions.
Professor Cowell (Preface, p. vi) mentions a MS., copied

¹ Maitr. Up. II, 6; p. 32.

² kramishyân, m.

³ Yadhâ, m.

⁴ Maitr. Up. VI, 34; p. 178.

⁵ lipiyate.

⁶ lipyante.

⁷ liyyate.

⁸ liyyate.

⁹ liyante.

¹⁰ liyyate.

¹¹ lipiyate.

¹² liyyate.

¹³ liyyate.

¹⁴ tânasannâ.

¹⁵ See Khând. Up. p. 623.

for Baron Eckstein, apparently from a Telugu original, which contains the first five chapters only, numbered as four. The verses given in VI, 34 (p. 177), beginning with atreme slokâ bhavanti, are placed after IV, 3. In my own MS. these verses are inserted at the beginning of the fifth chapter¹. Then follows in Baron Eckstein's MS. as IV, 5, what is given in the printed text as V, 1, 2 (pp. 69-76). In my own MS., which likewise comes from the South, the Upanishad does not go beyond VI, 8, which is called the sixth chapter and the end of the Upanishad.

We have in fact in our Upanishad the first specimen of that peculiar Indian style, so common in the later fables and stories, which delights in enclosing one story within another. The kernel of our Upanishad is really the dialogue between the Vâlakhilyas and Pragâpati Kratu. This is called by the commentator (see p. 331, note) a Vyâkhyâna, i. e. a fuller explanation of the Sûtra which comes before, and which expresses in the few words, 'He is the Self, this is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman,' the gist of the whole Upanishad.

This dialogue, or at all events the doctrine which it was meant to illustrate, was communicated by Maitri (or Maitra) to Sâkâyanya, and by Sâkâyanya to King Brihadratha Aikshvâka, also called Marut (II, 1; VI, 30). This dialogue might seem to come to an end in VI, 29, and likewise the dialogue between Sâkâyanya and Brihadratha; but it is carried on again to the end of VI, 30, and followed afterwards by a number of paragraphs which may probably be considered as later additions.

But though admitting all this, I cannot bring myself to follow Professor Cowell in considering, as he does, even the earlier portion of the Upanishad as dating from a late period, while the latter portions are called by him comparatively modern, on account of frequent Vaishnava quotations. What imparts to this Upanishad, according to my opinion, an exceptionally genuine and ancient character, is the preservation in it of that peculiar Sandhi which, thanks to the labours of Dr. von Schroeder, we now know to be characteristic of the Maitrāyaṇa-sākhā. In that Sākhā final unaccented a and e are changed into ā, if the next word begins with an accented vowel, except a. Before initial a, however, e remains unchanged, and a becomes o, and the initial a is sometimes elided, sometimes not. Some of these rules, it must be remembered, run counter to Pāṇini, and we may safely conclude therefore that texts in which they are observed, date from the time before Pāṇini. In some MSS., as, for instance, in my own MS. of the Maitrāyaṇa-brāhmaṇa-upanishad, these rules are not observed, but this makes their strict observation in other MSS. all the more important. Besides, though to Dr. von Schroeder belongs, no doubt, the credit of having, in his edition of the Maitrāyaṇi Samhitā, first pointed out these phonetic peculiarities, they were known as such to the commentators, who expressly point out these irregular Sandhis as distinctive of the Maitrāyaṇi sākhā. Thus we read Maitr. Up. II, 3 (p. 18), that tigmategasā ūrdhvaretaso, instead of tigmategasa, is evamvidha etakkkākhāsanketapāthas kkhāndasakh sarvatra, i.e. is throughout the Vedic reading indication of that particular Sākhā, namely, the Maitrāyaṇi.

¹ See p. 303, note 1; p. 305, note 1; p. 312, note 1.

A still stranger peculiarity of our Sākhā is the change of a final t before initial s into ñ. This also occurs in our Upanishad. In VI, 8, we read svāñ sarīrād; in VI, 27, yañ sarīrasya. Such a change seems phonetically so unnatural, that the tradition must have been very strong to perpetuate it among the Maitrāyaṇas.

Now what is important for our purposes is this, that these phonetic peculiarities run through all the seven chapters of our Upanishad. This will be seen from the following list :

I. Final a changed into ā before initial vowel¹ :

II, 3, tigmategasā ūrdhvaretaso (Comm. etakkkākhā-sanketapāthas kkhāndasakh sarvatra).

II, 5, vibodhā evam. II, 7, avasthitā iti.

¹ I have left out the restriction as to the accent of the vowels, because they are disregarded in the Upanishad. It should be observed that this peculiar Sandhi occurs in the Upanishad chiefly before iti.

- III, 5, etair abhibhûâtâ iti. IV, 1, vidyatâ iti.
 VI, 4, prañavâ iti; bhûmyâdayâ eko.
 VI, 6, âdityâ iti; âhavanîyâ iti; sûryâ iti; ahañkârâ iti; vyânâ iti. VI, 7, bhargâ iti.
 VI, 7, sannivishâtâ iti. VI, 23, devâ oñkâro.
 VI, 30, prâyâtâ iti. VI, 30, vinirgatâ iti.

II. Final e before initial vowels becomes â. For instance:

- I, 4, drîsyatâ iti. II, 2, nishpadyatâ iti.
 III, 2, âpadyatâ iti. III, 2, pushkarâ iti.
 IV, 1, vidyatâ iti. VI, 10, bhuñktâ iti.
 VI, 20, asnutâ iti. VI, 30, ekâ âhur.

Even pragrîhya e is changed to â in—

VI, 23, etâ upâsita, i. e. ete uktalakshane brahmañi.

In VI, 31, instead of te etasya, the commentator seems to have read te vâ etasya.

III. Final as before â, u, and au becomes a, and is then contracted. For instance:

- I, 4, vanaspatayodbhûta, instead of vanaspataya udbhûta. (Comm. Sandhis khandaso vâ, ukâro vâtra lupto drashavyah.)
 II, 6, devaushnyam, instead of deva aushnyam.
 (Comm. Sandhis khandasah.)
 VI, 24, atamâvishîtam, instead of atama-âvishîtam (Comm. Sandhis khandasah); cf. Khând. Up.
 VI, 8, 3, asanâyeti (Comm. visarganiyalopah).

IV. Final e before i becomes a, and is then contracted. For instance:

- VI, 7, âtmâ ganîteti for ganîta iti. (Comm. gânîte, gânâti.) VI, 28, avataiva for avata iva. (Comm. Sandhivridhî khandase.)

V. Final au before initial vowels becomes â. For instance:

- II, 6, yena vâ etâ anugrîhâtâ iti.
 VI, 22, asâ abhidhyâtâ.

On abhibhûyamânay iva, see p. 295, note 2.

V, 2, asâ âtmâ (var. lect. asâv âtmâ).

VI. Final o of atho produces elision of initial ā. For instance :

III, 2, atho 'bhibhûtatvât. (Comm. Sandhis khândasaḥ.) Various reading, ato 'bhibhûtatvât.

VI, 1, so antar is explained as sa u.

VII. Other irregularities :

VI, 7, âpo pyâyanât, explained by pyâyanât and âpyâyanât. Might it be, âpo 'py ayanât?

VI, 7, âtmano tmâ netâ.

II, 6, so tmânam abhidhyâtvâ.

VI, 35, dvidharmondham for dvidharmândham. (Comm. khândasa.)

VI, 35, tegasendham, i.e. tegasâ-iddhan. (In explaining other irregular compounds, too, as in I, 4, the commentator has recourse to a khândasa or prâmâdika licence.)

VI, 1, hiranyavasthât for hiranyâvasthât. Here the dropping of a in avasthât is explained by a reference to Bhâguri (vashî Bhâgurir allopam avâpyor upasargayoh). See Vopadeva III, 171.

VIII. Vislish/apâtha :

VII, 2, brahmadhiyâlambana. (Comm. vislish/apâthas khândasaḥ.)

VI, 35, apyay aṅkurâ for apy aṅkurâ. (Comm. yakârah pramâdapatḥitaḥ.)

On the contrary VI, 35, vliyânte for vilîyante.

If on the grounds which we have hitherto examined there seems good reason to ascribe the Maitrâyaṇa-brâhmana-upanishad to an early rather than to a late period, possibly to an ante-Pâvînean period, we shall hardly be persuaded to change this opinion on account of supposed references to Vaishṇava or to Bauddha doctrines which some scholars have tried to discover in it.

As to the worship of Vishṇu, as one of the many manifestations of the Highest Spirit, we have seen it alluded to in other Upanishads, and we know from the Brâhmanas that the name of Vishṇu was connected with many of the earliest Vedic sacrifices.

As to Bauddha doctrines, including the very name of Nirvâna (p. xlvi, l. 19), we must remember, as I have often remarked, that there were Bauddhas before Buddha. Bṛihaspati, who is frequently quoted in later philosophical writings as the author of an heretical philosophy, denying the authority of the Vedas, is mentioned by name in our Upanishad (VII, 9), but we are told that this Bṛihaspati, having become Sukra, promulgated his erroneous doctrines in order to mislead the Asuras, and thus to insure the safety of Indra, i.e. of the old faith.

The fact that the teacher of King Bṛihadhratha in our Upanishad is called Sâkâyanya, can never be used in support of the idea that, being a descendant of *Sâka*¹, he must have been, like Sâkyamuni, a teacher of Buddhist doctrines. He is the very opposite in our Upanishad, and warns his hearers against such doctrines as we should identify with the doctrines of Buddha. As I have pointed out on several occasions, the breaking through the law of the Āśramas is the chief complaint which orthodox Brâhman make against Buddhists and their predecessors, and this is what Sâkâyanya condemns. A Brâhman may become a Sannyâsin, which is much the same as a Buddhist Bhikshu, if he has first passed through the three stages of a student, a householder, and a Vânaprastha. But to become a Bhikshu without that previous discipline, was heresy in the eyes of the Brâhman, and it was exactly that heresy which the Bauddhas preached and practised. That this social laxity was gaining ground at the time when our Upanishad was written is clear (see VII, 8). We hear of people who wear red dresses (like the Buddhists) without having a right to them; we even hear of books, different from the Vedas, against which the true Brâhman are warned. All this points to times when what we call Buddhism was in the air, say the sixth century B. C., the very time to which I have always assigned the origin of the genuine and classical Upanishads.

The Upanishads are to my mind the germs of Buddhism, while Buddhism is in many respects the doctrine of the Upanishads carried out to its last consequences, and, what is important, employed as the foundation of a new social system. In doctrine the highest goal of the Vedānta, the knowledge of the true Self, is no more than the Buddhist Samyaksambodhi; in practice the Sannyâsin is the Bhikshu, the friar, only emancipated alike from the tedious discipline of the Brâhmanic student, the duties of the Brâhmanic householder, and the yoke of useless penances imposed on the Brâhmanic dweller in the forest. The spiritual freedom of the Sannyâsin becomes in Buddhism the common property of the Saṅgha, the Fraternity, and that Fraternity is open alike to the young and the old, to the Brâhman and the Sûdra, to the rich and the poor, to the wise and the foolish. In fact there is no break between the India of the Veda and the India of the Tripitaka, but there is an historical continuity between the two, and the connecting link between extremes that seem widely separated must be sought in the Upanishads¹.

¹ Sâkâyanya means a grandson or further descendant of Sâka; see Ganaratnâvali (Baroda, 1874), p. 57ⁿ.

F. MAX MÜLLER.

OXFORD, February, 1884.

¹ As there is room left on this page, I subjoin a passage from the Abhidharma-kosha-vyākhyâ, ascribed to the Bhagavat, but which, as far as style and thought are concerned, might be taken from an Upanishad: Uktam hi Bhagavatâ: Prithivî bho Gautama kutra pratish/ñitâ? Prithivî Brâhmana abmandale pratish/ñitâ. Abmandalam bho Gautama kva pratish/ñitam? Vâyau pratish/ñitam. Vâyur bho Gautama kva pratish/ñitâ? Âkâse pratish/ñitâ. Âkâsam bho Gautama kutra pratish/ñitam? Atisarasi Mahâbrâhmana, atisarasi Mahâbrâhmana. Âkâsam Brâhmanâpratish/ñitam, anâlambanam iti vistara. Tas-mâd asty âkâsam iti Vaibhâshikâ. (See Brâhad-Âr. Up. III, 6, 1. Burnouf, Introduction à l'histoire du Bouddhisme, p. 449.)

'For it is said by the Bhagavat: "O Gautama, on what does the earth rest?" "The earth, O Brâhmana, rests on the sphere of water." "O Gautama, on what does the sphere of water rest?" "It rests on the air." "O Gautama, on what does the air rest?" "It rests on the ether (âkâsa)." "O Gautama, on what does the ether rest?" "Thou goest too far, great Brâhmana; thou goest too far, great Brâhmana. The ether, O Brâhmana, does not rest. It has no support." Therefore the Vaibhâshikas hold that there is an ether,' &c.

KATHA-UPANISHAD.

KATHA-UPANISHAD.

FIRST ADHYÂYA.

FIRST VALLÎ.

1. VÂGASRAVASA¹, desirous (of heavenly rewards), surrendered (at a sacrifice) all that he possessed. He had a son of the name of Naïketas.

2. When the (promised) presents were being given (to the priests), faith entered into the heart of Naïketas, who was still a boy, and he thought :

3. 'Unblessed², surely, are the worlds to which a man goes by giving (as his promised present at a sacrifice) cows which have drunk water, eaten hay, given their milk³, and are barren.'

4. He (knowing that his father had promised to give up all that he possessed, and therefore his son also) said to his father : 'Dear father, to whom wilt thou give me ?'

¹ Vâgasravasa is called Âruni Auddâlaki Gautama, the father of Naïketas. The father of Svetaketu, another enlightened pupil (see Khând. Up. VI, 1, 1), is also called Âruni (Uddâlaka, comm. Kaush. Up. I, 1) Gautama. Svetaketu himself is called Âruneya, i. e. the son of Âruni, the grandson of Aruna, and likewise Auddâlaki. Auddâlaki is a son of Uddâlaka, but Saṅkara (Kâth. Up. I, 11) takes Auddâlaki as possibly the same as Uddâlaka. See Brîh. Âr. Up. III, 6, 1.

² As to ānanda, unblessed, see Brîh. Âr. Up. IV, 4, 11; Vâgas. Samh. Up. 3 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 311).

³ Ānandagiri explains that the cows meant here are cows no longer able to drink, to eat, to give milk, and to calve.

He said it a second and a third time. Then the father replied (angrily):

‘I shall give thee¹ unto Death.’

(The father, having once said so, though in haste, had to be true to his word and to sacrifice his son.)

5. The son said: ‘I go as the first, at the head of many (who have still to die); I go in the midst of many (who are now dying). What will be the work of Yama (the ruler of the departed) which to-day he has to do unto me²?’

¹ Dadāmi, I give, with the meaning of the future. Some MSS. write dāsyāmi.

² I translate these verses freely, i. e. independently of the commentator, not that I ever despise the traditional interpretation which the commentators have preserved to us, but because I think that, after having examined it, we have a right to judge for ourselves. Śaṅkara says that the son, having been addressed by his father full of anger, was sad, and said to himself: ‘Among many pupils I am the first, among many middling pupils I am the middlemost, but nowhere am I the last. Yet though I am such a good pupil, my father has said that he will consign me unto death. What duty has he to fulfil toward Yama which he means to fulfil to-day by giving me to him? There may be no duty, he may only have spoken in haste. Yet a father’s word must not be broken.’ Having considered this, the son comforted his father, and exhorted him to behave like his forefathers, and to keep his word. I do not think this view of Śaṅkara’s could have been the view of the old poet. He might have made the son say that he was the best or one of the best of his father’s pupils, but hardly that he was also one of his middling pupils, thus implying that he never was among the worst. That would be out of keeping with the character of Naṭiketas, as drawn by the poet himself. Naṭiketas is full of faith and wishes to die, he would be the last to think of excuses why he should not die. The second half of the verse may be more doubtful. It may mean what Śaṅkara thinks it means, only that we should get thus again an implied complaint of Naṭiketas against his father, and this is not in keeping with his character. The mind of Naṭiketas is bent on what is to come, on what he will see after death, and on what Yama will do unto him. ‘What has Yama to do,’ he asks, ‘what can he do, what is it that he will to-day do unto

6. 'Look back how it was with those who came before, look forward how it will be with those who come hereafter. A mortal ripens like corn, like corn he springs up again ¹.'

(Naïketas enters into the abode of Yama Vaivasvata, and there is no one to receive him. Thereupon one of the attendants of Yama is supposed to say :)

7. 'Fire enters into the houses, when a Brâhmana enters as a guest². That fire is quenched by this peace-offering ;—bring water, O Vaivasvata ³!

8. 'A Brâhmana that dwells in the house of a foolish man without receiving food to eat, destroys his hopes and expectations, his possessions, his righteousness, his sacred and his good deeds, and all his sons and cattle ⁴.'

(Yama, returning to his house after an absence of three nights, during which time Naïketas had received no hospitality from him, says :)

9. 'O Brâhmana, as thou, a venerable guest, hast dwelt in my house three nights without eating, me?' This seems to me consistent with the ancient story, while Saṅkara's interpretations and interpolations savour too much of the middle ages of India.

¹ Sasya, corn rather than grass; śā, śīov, Benfey; Welsh haidd, according to Rhys; different from sash-pa, ces-pes, Benfey.

² Cf. Vasishṭha XI, 13; Sacred Books of the East, vol. xiv, p. 51.

³ Vaivasvata, a name of Yama, the ruler of the departed. Water is the first gift to be offered to a stranger who claims hospitality.

⁴ Here again some words are translated differently from Saṅkara. He explains âsâ as asking for a wished-for object, pratikshâ as looking forward with a view to obtaining an unknown object. Saṅgata he takes as reward for intercourse with good people; sūnritâ, as usual, as good and kind speech; ishâ as rewards for sacrifices; pūrta as rewards for public benefits.

therefore choose now three boons. Hail to thee!
and welfare to me!

10. Naïketas said: 'O Death, as the first of the three boons I choose that Gautama, my father, be pacified, kind, and free from anger towards me; and that he may know me and greet me, when I shall have been dismissed by thee.'

11. Yama said: 'Through my favour Auddālaki Āruṇi, thy father, will know thee, and be again towards thee as he was before. He shall sleep peacefully through the night, and free from anger, after having seen thee freed from the mouth of death.'

12. Naïketas said: 'In the heaven-world there is no fear; thou art not there, O Death, and no one is afraid on account of old age. Leaving behind both hunger and thirst, and out of the reach of sorrow, all rejoice in the world of heaven.'

13. 'Thou knowest, O Death, the fire-sacrifice⁽²⁾ which leads us to heaven; tell it to me, for I am full of faith. Those who live in the heaven-world reach immortality, — this I ask as my second boon.'

14. Yama said: 'I tell it thee, learn it from me, and when thou understandest that fire-sacrifice which leads to heaven, know, O Naïketas, that it is the attainment of the endless worlds, and their firm support, hidden in darkness¹.'

15. Yama then told him that fire-sacrifice, the beginning of all the worlds², and what bricks are required for the altar, and how many, and how they are to be placed. And Nâiketas repeated all as it had been told to him. Then Mrityu, being pleased with him, said again :

¹ The commentator translates: 'I tell it thee, attend to me who knows the heavenly fire.' Here the nom. sing. of the participle would be very irregular, as we can hardly refer it to bravīmi. Then, 'Know this fire as a means of obtaining the heavenly world, know that fire as the rest or support of the world, when it assumes the form of Virāg, and as hidden in the heart of men.'

² Saṅkara: the first embodied, in the shape of Virāg.

16. The generous¹, being satisfied, said to him : 'I give thee now another boon ; that fire-sacrifice shall be named after thee, take also this many-coloured chain².'

17. 'He who has three times performed this Nâiketa-rite, and has been united with the three (father, mother, and teacher), and has performed the three duties (study, sacrifice, almsgiving) overcomes birth and death. When he has learnt and understood this fire, which knows (or makes us know) all that is born of Brahman³, which is venerable and divine, then he obtains everlasting peace.'

18. 'He who knows the three Nâiketa fires, and knowing the three, piles up the Nâiketa sacrifice, he, having first thrown off the chains of death, rejoices in the world of heaven, beyond the reach of grief.'

19. 'This, O Nâiketas, is thy fire which leads to heaven, and which thou hast chosen as thy second boon. That fire all men will proclaim⁴. Choose now, O Nâiketas, thy third boon.'

20. Nâiketas said : 'There is that doubt, when a man is dead,—some saying, he is ; others, he is not. This I should like to know, taught by thee ; this is the third of my boons.'

21. Death said : 'On this point even the gods

(3)

¹ Verses 16-18 seem a later addition.

² This arises probably from a misunderstanding of verse II, 3.

³ Gâtavedas.

⁴ Tavaiva is a later addition, caused by the interpolation of verses 15-18.

have doubted formerly ; it is not easy to understand. That subject is subtle. Choose another boon, O Naïketas, do not press me, and let me off that boon.'

22. Naïketas said: 'On this point even the gods have doubted indeed, and thou, Death, hast declared it to be not easy to understand, and another teacher like thee is not to be found :—surely no other boon is like unto this.'

23. Death said: 'Choose sons and grandsons who shall live a hundred years, herds of cattle, elephants, gold, and horses. Choose the wide abode of the earth, and live thyself as many harvests as thou desirest.'

24. 'If you can think of any boon equal to that, choose wealth, and long life. Be (king), Naïketas, on the wide earth¹. I make thee the enjoyer of all desires.'

25. 'Whatever desires are difficult to attain among mortals, ask for them according to thy wish ;—these fair maidens with their chariots and musical instruments,—such are indeed not to be obtained by men,—be waited on by them whom I give to thee, but do not ask me about dying.'

26. Naïketas said: 'These things last till to-morrow, O Death, for they wear out this vigour of all the senses. Even the whole of life is short. Keep thou thy horses, keep dance and song for thyself.'

27. 'No man can be made happy by wealth. Shall we possess wealth, when we see thee? Shall we live, as long as thou rulest? Only that boon (which I have chosen) is to be chosen by me.'

¹ Mahâbhūmau, on the great earth, has been explained also by mahâ bhūmau, be great on the earth. It is doubtful, however, whether mahâ for mahân could be admitted in the Upanishads, and whether it would not be easier to write mahân bhūmau.

28. 'What mortal, slowly decaying here below, and knowing, after having approached them, the freedom from decay enjoyed by the immortals, would delight in a long life, after he has pondered on the pleasures which arise from beauty and love ¹?'

29. 'No, that on which there is this doubt, O Death, tell us what there is in that great Hereafter. Naïketas does not choose another boon but that which enters into the hidden world.'

¹ A very obscure verse. Saṅkara gives a various reading kva tadâsthaḥ for kvadhaḥsthaḥ, in the sense of 'given to these pleasures,' which looks like an emendation. I have changed agîryatâm into agâryatâm, and take it for an acc. sing., instead of a gen. plur., which could hardly be governed by upetya.

SECOND VALLÎ.

1. Death said: 'The good is one thing, the pleasant another; these two, having different objects, chain a man. It is well with him who clings to the good; he who chooses the pleasant, misses his end.'

2. 'The good and the pleasant approach man: the wise goes round about them and distinguishes them. Yea, the wise prefers the good to the pleasant, but the fool chooses the pleasant through greed and avarice.'

3. 'Thou, O Naïketas, after pondering all pleasures that are or seem delightful, hast dismissed them all. Thou hast not gone into the road¹ that leadeth to wealth, in which many men perish.'

4. 'Wide apart and leading to different points are these two, ignorance, and what is known as wisdom. I believe Naïketas to be one who desires knowledge, for even many pleasures did not tear thee away².'

5. 'Fools dwelling in darkness, wise in their own conceit, and puffed up with vain knowledge, go round and round, staggering to and fro, like blind men led by the blind³.'

6. 'The Hereafter never rises before the eyes of the careless child, deluded by the delusion of wealth. "This is the world," he thinks, "there is no other;"—thus he falls again and again under my sway.'

7. 'He (the Self) of whom many are not even able

¹ Cf. I, 16.

² The commentator explains lolupantaḥ by vikṣhedam kritavantaḥ. Some MSS. read lolupante and lolupanti, but one expects either lolupyante or lolupati.

³ Cf. Mund. Up. II, 8.

to hear, whom many, even when they hear of him, do not comprehend; wonderful is a man, when found, who is able to teach him (the Self); wonderful is he who comprehends him, when taught by an able teacher¹.'

8. 'That (Self), when taught by an inferior man, is not easy to be known, even though often thought upon²; unless it be taught by another, there is no way to it, for it is inconceivably smaller than what is small³.'

9. 'That doctrine is not to be obtained⁴ by argument, but when it is declared by another, then, O dearest, it is easy to understand. Thou hast obtained it now⁵; thou art truly a man of true resolve. May we have always an inquirer like thee⁶!'

10. Nâziketas said: 'I know that what is called a treasure is transient, (for that eternal is not obtained by things which are not eternal). Hence the Nâziketa fire(-sacrifice) has been laid by me (first); then, by means of transient things, I have obtained what is not transient (the teaching of Yama)⁷.'

11. Yama said: 'Though thou hadst seen the fulfilment of all desires, the foundation of the world, the endless rewards of good deeds, the shore where

¹ Cf. Bhag. Gîtâ II, 29.

² Cf. Mund. Up. II, 4.

³ I read anupramânât. Other interpretations: If it is taught by one who is identified with the Self, then there is no uncertainty. If it has been taught as identical with ourselves, then there is no perception of anything else. If it has been taught by one who is identified with it, then there is no failure in understanding it (agati).

⁴ Âpaneyâ; should it be âpanâya, as afterwards sugñânâya?

⁵ Because you insist on my teaching it to thee.

⁶ Unless no is negative, for Yama, at first, does not like to communicate his knowledge.

⁷ The words in parentheses have been added in order to remove the otherwise contradictory character of the two lines.

there is no fear, that which is magnified by praise, the wide abode, the rest¹, yet being wise thou hast with firm resolve dismissed it all.'

12. 'The wise who, by means of meditation on his Self, recognises the Ancient, who is difficult to be seen, who has entered into the dark, who is hidden in the cave, who dwells in the abyss, as God, he indeed leaves joy and sorrow far behind².'

13. 'A mortal who has heard this and embraced it, who has separated from it all qualities, and has thus reached the subtle Being, rejoices, because he has obtained what is a cause for rejoicing. The house (of Brahman) is open, I believe, O Naïketas.'

14. Naïketas said: 'That which thou seest as neither this nor that, as neither effect nor cause, as neither past nor future, tell me that.'

15. Yama said: 'That word (or place) which all the Vedas record, which all penances proclaim, which men desire when they live as religious students, that word I tell thee briefly, it is Om³.'

16. 'That (imperishable) syllable means Brahman, that syllable means the highest (Brahman); he who knows that syllable, whatever he desires, is his.'

17. 'This is the best support, this is the highest support; he who knows that support, is magnified in the world of Brahmā.'

18. 'The knowing (Self) is not born, it dies not; it sprang from nothing, nothing sprang from it. The

¹ Cf. Khând. Up. VII, 12, 2.

² Yama seems here to propound the lower Brahman only, not yet the highest. Deva, God, can only be that as what the Old, i. e. the Self in the heart, is to be recognised. It would therefore mean, he who finds God or the Self in his heart. See afterwards, verse 21.

³ Cf. Svet. Up. IV, 9; Bhag. Gitâ VIII, 11.

Ancient is unborn, eternal, everlasting; he is not killed, though the body is killed ¹.'

19. 'If the killer thinks that he kills, if the killed thinks that he is killed, they do not understand; for this one does not kill, nor is that one killed.'

20. 'The Self ², smaller than small, greater than great, is hidden in the heart of that creature. A man who is free from desires and free from grief, sees the majesty of the Self by the grace of the Creator ³.'

21. 'Though sitting still, he walks far; though lying down, he goes everywhere ⁴. Who, save myself, is able to know that God who rejoices and rejoices not?'

22. 'The wise who knows the Self as bodiless within the bodies, as unchanging among changing things, as great and omnipresent, does never grieve.'

23. 'That Self ⁵ cannot be gained by the Veda, nor by ~~understanding~~ ^{intellect}, nor by much learning. He whom the Self chooses, by him the Self can be gained. The Self chooses him (his body) as his own.'

24. 'But he who has not first turned away from his wickedness, who is not tranquil, and subdued, or whose mind is not at rest, he can never obtain the Self (even) by knowledge.'

25. 'Who then knows where He is, He to whom the Brahmans and Kshatriyas are (as it were) but food ⁶, and death itself a condiment?'

¹ As to verses 18 and 19, see Bhag. Gîtâ II, 19, 20.

² Cf. Svet. Up. III, 20; Taitt. Âr. X, 12, 1.

³ The commentator translates 'through the tranquillity of the senses,' i. e. dhâtuprasâdât, taking prasâda in the technical sense of samprasâda. As to kratu, desire, or rather, will, see Brîh. Âr. IV, 4, 5.

⁴ Cf. Tal. Up. 5.

⁵ Cf. I, 7-9; Mund. Up. III, 2, 3; Bhag. Gîtâ I, 53.

⁶ In whom all disappears, and in whom even death is swallowed up.

Doctrine of Intellect

THIRD VALLÎ.

1. 'There are the two¹, drinking their reward in the world of their own works, entered into the cave (of the heart), dwelling on the highest summit (the ether in the heart). Those who know Brahman call them shade and light; likewise, those householders who perform the Trinâkiketa sacrifice.'

2. 'May we be able to master that Nâkiketa rite which is a bridge for sacrificers; also that which is the highest, imperishable Brahman for those who wish to cross over to the fearless shore².'

3. 'Know the Self to be sitting in the chariot, the body to be the chariot, the intellect (buddhi) the charioteer, and the mind the reins³.'

4. 'The senses they call the horses, the objects of the senses their roads. When he (the Highest Self) is in union with the body, the senses, and the mind, then wise people call him the Enjoyer.'

5. 'He who has no understanding and whose mind

¹ The two are explained as the higher and lower Brahman, the former being the light, the latter the shadow. Rita is explained as reward, and connected with sukṛita, lit. good deeds, but frequently used in the sense of svakṛita, one's own good and evil deeds. The difficulty is, how the highest Brahman can be said to drink the reward (ritapa) of former deeds, as it is above all works and above all rewards. The commentator explains it away as a metaphorical expression, as we often speak of many, when we mean one. (Cf. Mund. Up. III, 1, 1.) I have joined sukṛitasya with loke, loka meaning the world, i. e. the state, the environment, which we made to ourselves by our former deeds.

² These two verses may be later additions.

³ The simile of the chariot has some points of similarity with the well-known passage in Plato's Phædros, but Plato did not borrow this simile from the Brahmins, as little as Xenophon need have consulted our Upanishad (II, 2) in writing his prologue of Prodikos.

(the reins) is never firmly held, his senses (horses) are unmanageable, like vicious horses of a charioteer.'

6. 'But he who has understanding and whose mind is always firmly held, his senses are under control, like good horses of a charioteer.'

7. 'He who has no understanding, who is unmindful and always impure, never reaches that place, but enters into the round of births.'

8. 'But he who has understanding, who is mindful and always pure, reaches indeed that place, from whence he is not born again.'

9. 'But he who has understanding for his charioteer, and who holds the reins of the mind, he reaches the end of his journey, and that is the highest place of Vishnu.'

10. 'Beyond the senses there are the objects, beyond the objects there is the mind, beyond the mind there is the intellect, the Great Self is beyond the intellect.'

11. 'Beyond the Great there is the Undeveloped, beyond the Undeveloped there is the Person (purusha). Beyond the Person there is nothing—this is the goal, the highest road.'

12. 'That Self is hidden in all beings and does not shine forth, but it is seen by subtle seers through their sharp and subtle intellect.'

13. 'A wise man should keep down speech and mind¹; he should keep them within the Self which is knowledge; he should keep knowledge within the Self which is the Great; and he should keep that (the Great) within the Self which is the Quiet.'

14. 'Rise, awake! having obtained your boons²,

¹ Saṅkara interprets, he should keep down speech in the mind.

² Comm., excellent teachers.

understand them! The sharp edge of a razor is difficult to pass over; thus the wise say the path (to the Self) is hard.'

15. 'He who has perceived that which is without sound, without touch, without form, without decay, without taste, eternal, without smell, without beginning, without end, beyond the Great, and unchangeable, is freed from the jaws of death.'

16. 'A wise man who has repeated or heard the ancient story of Naïketas told by Death, is magnified in the world of Brahman.'

17. 'And he who repeats this greatest mystery in an assembly of Brâhmans, or full of devotion at the time of the Srâddha sacrifice, obtains thereby infinite rewards.'

SECOND ADHYÂYA:

FOURTH VALLÎ.

1. Death said: 'The Self-existent pierced the openings (of the senses) so that they turn forward: therefore man looks forward, not backward into himself. Some wise man, however, with his eyes closed and wishing for immortality, saw the Self behind.'

2. 'Children follow after outward pleasures, and fall into the snare of wide-spread death. Wise men only, knowing the nature of what is immortal, do not look for anything stable here among things unstable.'

3. 'That by which we know form, taste, smell, sounds, and loving touches, by that also we know what exists besides. This is that (which thou hast asked for).'

4. 'The wise, when he knows that that by which he perceives all objects in sleep or in waking is the great omnipresent Self, grieves no more.'

5. 'He who knows this living soul which eats honey (perceives objects) as being the Self, always near, the Lord of the past and the future, henceforward fears no more. This is that.'

6. 'He who (knows) him¹ who was born first from the brooding heat¹ (for he was born before the water), who, entering into the heart, abides therein, and was perceived from the elements. This is that.'

¹ The first manifestation of Brahman, commonly called Hiranyagarbha, which springs from the tapas of Brahman. Afterwards only water and the rest of the elements become manifested. The text of these verses is abrupt, possibly corrupt. The two accusatives, tish/hantam and tish/hantim, seem to me to require veda to be supplied from verse 4.

7. '(He who knows) Aditi also, who is one with all deities, who arises with Prâna (breath or Hiranya-garbha), who, entering into the heart, abides therein, and was born from the elements. This is that.'

8. 'There is Agni (fire), the all-seeing, hidden in the two fire-sticks, well-guarded like a child (in the womb) by the mother, day after day to be adored by men when they awake and bring oblations. This is that.'

9. 'And that whence the sun rises, and whither it goes to set, there all the Devas are contained, and no one goes beyond. This is that².'

10. 'What is here (visible in the world), the same is there (invisible in Brahman); and what is there, the same is here. He who sees any difference here (between Brahman and the world), goes from death to death.'

11. 'Even by the mind this (Brahman) is to be obtained, and then there is no difference whatsoever. He goes from death to death who sees any difference here.'

12. 'The person (purusha), of the size of a thumb³, stands in the middle of the Self (body?), as lord of the past and the future, and henceforward fears no more. This is that.'

13. 'That person, of the size of a thumb, is like a light without smoke, lord of the past and the future, he is the same to-day and to-morrow. This is that.'

¹ Cf. srishâkrama.

² Cf. V, 8.

³ Svet. Up. III, 13.

14. 'As rain-water that has fallen on a mountain-ridge runs down the rocks on all sides, thus does he, who sees a difference between qualities, run after them on all sides.'

15. 'As pure water poured into pure water remains the same, thus, O Gautama, is the Self of a thinker who knows.' ✓

FIFTH VALLÎ.

1. 'There is a town with eleven¹ gates belonging to the Unborn (Brahman), whose thoughts are never crooked. He who approaches it, grieves no more, and liberated (from all bonds of ignorance) becomes free. This is that.'

2. 'He (Brahman)² is the swan (sun), dwelling in the bright heaven; he is the Vasu (air), dwelling in the sky; he is the sacrificer (fire), dwelling on the hearth; he is the guest (Soma), dwelling in the sacrificial jar; he dwells in men, in gods (vara), in the sacrifice (ṛita), in heaven; he is born in the water, on earth, in the sacrifice (ṛita), on the mountains; he is the True and the Great.'

3. 'He (Brahman) it is who sends up the breath (prâna), and who throws back the breath (apâna). All the Devas (senses) worship him, the adorable (or the dwarf), who sits in the centre.'

4. 'When that incorporated (Brahman), who dwells in the body, is torn away and freed from the body, what remains then? This is that.'

5. 'No mortal lives by the breath that goes up and by the breath that goes down. We live by another, in whom these two repose.'

6. 'Well then, O Gautama, I shall tell thee this mystery, the old Brahman, and what happens to the Self, after reaching death.'

¹ Seven apertures in the head, the navel, two below, and the one at the top of the head through which the Self escapes. Cf. Svet. Up. III, 18; Bhag. Gitâ V, 13.

² Cf. Rig-veda IV, 40, 5.

7. 'Some enter the womb in order to have a body, as organic beings, others go into inorganic matter, according to their work and according to their knowledge ¹.'

8. (He, the highest Person, who is awake in us while we are asleep, shaping one lovely sight after another, that indeed is the Bright, that is Brahman, that alone is called the Immortal.) All worlds are contained in it, and no one goes beyond. This is that ².'

9. 'As the one fire, after it has entered the world, though one, becomes different according to whatever it burns, thus the one Self within all things becomes different, according to whatever it enters, and exists also without ³.'

10. 'As the one air, after it has entered the world, though one, becomes different according to whatever it enters, thus the one Self within all things becomes different, according to whatever it enters, and exists also without.'

11. 'As the sun, the eye of the whole world, is not contaminated by the external impurities seen by the eyes, thus the one Self within all things is never contaminated by the misery of the world, being himself without ⁴.'

12. 'There is one ruler, the Self within all things, who makes the one form manifold. The wise who perceive him within their Self, to them belongs eternal happiness, not to others ⁵.'

13. 'There is one eternal thinker, thinking non-

¹ Cf. Brīh. Âr. II, 2, 13.

² Cf. IV, 9; VI, 1.

³ Cf. Brīh. Âr. II, 5, 19.

⁴ Cf. Bhag. Gītā XIII, 52.

⁵ Cf. Svet. Up. VI, 12.

SIXTH VALLÎ.

1. 'There is that ancient tree¹, whose roots grow upward and whose branches grow downward;—that² indeed is called the Bright³, that is called Brahman, that alone is called the Immortal⁴. All worlds are contained in it, and no one goes beyond. This is that.'

2. 'Whatever there is, the whole world, when gone forth (from the Brahman), trembles in its breath⁵. That Brahman is a great terror, like a drawn sword. Those who know it become immortal.'

3. 'From terror of Brahman fire burns, from terror the sun burns, from terror Indra and Vâyû, and Death, as the fifth, run away⁶.'

4. 'If a man could not understand it before the falling asunder of his body, then he has to take body again in the worlds of creation⁷.'

¹ The fig-tree which sends down its branches so that they strike root and form new stems, one tree growing into a complete forest.

² Cf. Bhag. Gitâ XV, 1-3.

³ Cf. V, 8.

⁴ The commentator says that the tree is the world, and its root is Brahman, but there is nothing to support this view in the original, where tree, roots, and branches are taken together as representing the Brahman in its various manifestations.

⁵ According to the commentator, in the highest Brahman.

⁶ Cf. Taïtt. Up. II, 8, 1.

⁷ The commentator translates: 'If a man is able to understand (Brahman), then even before the decay of his body, he is liberated. If he is not able to understand it, then he has to take body again in the created worlds.' I doubt whether it is possible to supply so much, and should prefer to read iha ken nâsakad, though I find it difficult to explain how so simple a text should have been misunderstood and corrupted.

5. 'As in a mirror, so (Brahman may be seen clearly) here in this body; as in a dream, in the world of the Fathers; as in the water, he is seen about in the world of the Gandharvas; as in light and shade ¹, in the world of Brahmâ.'

6. 'Having understood that the senses are distinct² (from the Âtman), and that their rising and setting (their waking and sleeping) belongs to them in their distinct existence (and not to the Âtman), a wise man grieves no more.'

7. 'Beyond the senses is the mind, beyond the mind is the highest (created) Being³, higher than that Being is the Great Self, higher than the Great, the highest Undeveloped.'

8. 'Beyond the Undeveloped is the Person, the all-pervading and entirely imperceptible. Every creature that knows him is liberated, and obtains immortality.'

9. 'His form is not to be seen, no one beholds him with the eye. He is imagined by the heart, by wisdom, by the mind. Those who know this, are immortal⁴.'

10. 'When the five instruments of knowledge stand still together with the mind, and when the intellect does not move, that is called the highest state.'

11. 'This, the firm holding back of the senses, is what is called Yoga. He must be free from thoughtlessness then, for Yoga comes and goes ⁵.'

¹ Roer: 'As in a picture and in the sunshine.'

² They arise from the elements, ether, &c.

³ Buddhi or intellect, cf. III, 10.

⁴ Much better in Svet. Up. IV, 20: 'Those who know him by the heart as being in the heart, and by the mind, are immortal.'

⁵ Saṅkara explains apyaya by apâya.

12. 'He (the Self) cannot be reached by speech, by mind, or by the eye. How can it be apprehended except by him who says: "He is?"'

13. 'By the words "He is," is he to be apprehended, and by (admitting) the reality of both (the invisible Brahman and the visible world, as coming from Brahman). When he has been apprehended by the words "He is," then his reality reveals itself.'

14. 'When all desires that dwell in his heart cease, then the mortal becomes immortal, and obtains Brahman.'

15. 'When all the ties¹ of the heart are severed here on earth, then the mortal becomes immortal—here ends the teaching².'

16. 'There are a hundred and one arteries of the heart³, one of them penetrates the crown of the head⁴. Moving upwards by it, a man (at his death) reaches the Immortal⁵; the other arteries serve for departing in different directions.'

17. 'The Person not larger than a thumb, the inner Self, is always settled in the heart of men⁶. Let a man draw that Self forth from his body with steady-

¹ Ignorance, passion, &c. Cf. Mund. Up. II, 1, 10; II, 2, 9.

² The teaching of the Vedānta extends so far and no farther. (Cf. Prasna Up. VI, 7.) What follows has reference, according to the commentator, not to him who knows the highest Brahman, for he becomes Brahman at once and migrates no more; but to him who does not know the highest Brahman fully, and therefore migrates to the Brahmaloka, receiving there the reward for his partial knowledge and for his good works.

³ Cf. Khând. Up. VIII, 6, 6.

⁴ It passes out by the head.

⁵ The commentator says: He rises through the sun (Mund. Up. I, 2, 11) to a world in which he enjoys some kind of immortality.

⁶ Svet. Up. III, 13.

ness, as one draws the pith from a reed¹. Let him know that Self as the Bright, as the Immortal; yes, as the Bright, as the Immortal².

18. Having received this knowledge taught by Death and the whole rule of Yoga (meditation, ~~etc.~~)
 ✕ Naïketa became free from passion³ and death, and obtained Brahman. Thus it will be with another also who knows thus what relates to the Self.

19. May He protect us both! May He enjoy us both! May we acquire strength together! May our knowledge become bright! May we never quarrel⁴! Om! Peace! peace! peace! Harih, Om!

¹ Roer: 'As from a painter's brush a fibre.'

² This repetition marks, as usual, the end of a chapter.

³ Viraga, free from vice and virtue. It may have been vigara, free from old age. See, however, Mund. Up. I, 2, 11.

⁴ Cf. Taitt. Up. III, 1; III, 10, note.

MUNDAKA-UPANISHAD.

MUNDAKA-UPANISHAD.

FIRST MUNDAKA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. BRAHMÂ was the first of the Devas, the maker of the universe, the preserver of the world. He told the knowledge of Brahman, the foundation of all knowledge, to his eldest son Atharva¹.

2. Whatever Brahmâ told Atharvan, that knowledge of Brahman Atharvan formerly told to Ângir; he told it to Satyavâha Bhâradvâga, and Bhâradvâga told it in succession to Ângiras.

3. Saunaka, the great householder, approached Ângiras respectfully and asked: 'Sir, what is that through which, if it is known, everything else becomes known?'

4. He said to him: 'Two kinds of knowledge must be known, this is what all who know Brahman tell us, the higher and the lower knowledge.'

5. 'The lower knowledge is the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, Sâma-veda, Atharva-veda, Sikshâ (phonetics), Kalpa (ceremonial), Vyâkarana (grammar), Nirukta (etymology), Khandas (metre), Gyotisha (astronomy)²;

¹ The change between Atharva and Atharvan, like that between Nâkiketas and Nâkiketa, shows the freedom of the phraseology of the Upanishad, and cannot be used for fixing the date of the constituent elements of the Upanishad.

² Other MSS. add here itihâsa-purâna-nyâya-mimâmsâ-dharma-sâstrâni.

but the higher knowledge is that by which the Indestructible (Brahman) is apprehended.'

6. 'That which cannot be seen, nor seized, which has no family and no caste¹, no eyes nor ears, no hands nor feet, the eternal, the omnipresent (all-pervading), infinitesimal, that which is imperishable, that it is which the wise regard as the source of all beings.'

7. 'As the spider sends forth and draws in its thread, as plants grow on the earth, as from every man hairs spring forth on the head and the body, thus does everything arise here from the Indestructible.'

8. 'The Brahman swells by means of brooding (penance)²; hence is produced matter (food); from matter breath³, mind, the true⁴, the worlds (seven), and from the works (performed by men in the worlds), the immortal (the eternal effects, rewards, and punishments of works).'

¹ I translate varṇa by caste on account of its conjunction with gotra. The commentator translates, 'without origin and without qualities.' We should say that which belongs to no genus or species.

² I have translated tapas by brooding, because this is the only word in English which combines the two meanings of warmth and thought. Native authorities actually admit two roots, one tap, to burn, the other tap, to meditate; see commentary on Parāśara-smṛiti, p. 39^b (MS. Bodl.), Tapaḥ krikkhṛakandrāyanādirūpenāhāravarganam. Nanu Vyāsenā tapo 'nyathā smaryate, tapaḥ svadharma-vartitvam saukam saṅganibarhanam iti; nāyam doshaḥ, krikkhṛāder api svadharma viśeshāt. Tapa samtāpa ity asmād dhātor utpannasya tapaḥ-sabdasya dehasoshane vṛttir mukhyā... Yat tu tattraivoktam, ko 'yam mokshaḥ katham tena samsāram pratipannavān ity ālokanam arthagrāhāḥ tapaḥ samsanti panditā iti so 'nya eva tapaḥ-sabdaḥ, tapa āloka ity asmād dhātor utpannaḥ.

³ Hiranyagarbha, the living world as a whole. Comm.

⁴ Satya, if we compare Kaṭh. VI, 7 and III, 10, seems to mean buddhi. Here it is explained by the five elements.

9. 'From him who perceives all and who knows all, whose brooding (penance) consists of knowledge, from him (the highest Brahman) is born that Brahman¹, name, form², and matter (food).'

¹ Hiranyagarbha. Comm.

² Nāmarūpam, a very frequent concept in Buddhistic literature.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. This is the truth¹: the sacrificial works which they (the poets) saw in the hymns (of the Veda) have been performed in many ways in the Tretâ age². Practise³ them diligently, ye lovers of truth, this is your path that leads to the world of good works⁴!

2. When the fire is lighted and the flame flickers, let a man offer his oblations between the two portions of melted butter, as an offering with faith.

3. If a man's Agnihotra sacrifice⁵ is not followed

¹ In the beginning of the second Khanda the lower knowledge is first described, referring to the performance of sacrifices and other good deeds. The reward of them is perishable, and therefore a desire is awakened after the higher knowledge.

² The Tretâ age is frequently mentioned as the age of sacrifices. I should prefer, however, to take tretâ in the sense of trayî vidyâ, and santata as developed, because the idea that the Tretâ age was distinguished by its sacrifices, seems to me of later origin. Even the theory of the four ages or yugas, though known in the Ait. Brâhmaṇa, is not frequently alluded to in the older Upanishads. See Weber, Ind. Stud. I, p. 283.

³ The termination tha for ta looks suspiciously Buddhistic; see 'Sanskrit Texts discovered in Japan,' J. R. A. S. 1880, p. 180.

⁴ Svakṛita and sukrîta are constantly interchanged. They mean the same, good deeds, or deeds performed by oneself and believed to be good.

⁵ At the Agnihotra, the first of all sacrifices, and the type of many others, two portions of âgrya are sacrificed on the right and left side of the Âhavanîya altar. The place between the two is called the Âvâpasthâna, and here the oblations to the gods are to be offered. There are two oblations in the morning to Sûrya and Pragâpati, two in the evening to Agni and Pragâpati. Other sacrifices, such as the Darśa and Pûṛnamâsa, and those mentioned in verse 3, are connected with the Agnihotra.

by the new-moon and full-moon sacrifices, by the four-months' sacrifices, and by the harvest sacrifice, if it is unattended by guests, not offered at all, or without the Vaisvadeva ceremony, or not offered according to rule, then it destroys his seven worlds ¹.

4. Kâlî (black), Karâlî (terrific), Manogavâ (swift as thought), Sulohitâ (very red), Sudhûmravarnâ (purple), Sphulînginî (sparkling), and the brilliant Visvarûptî ² (having all forms), all these playing about are called the seven tongues (of fire).

5. If a man performs his sacred works when these flames are shining, and the oblations follow at the right time, then they lead him as sun-rays to where the one Lord of the Devas dwells.

6. Come hither, come hither! the brilliant oblations say to him, and carry the sacrificer on the rays of the sun, while they utter pleasant speech and praise him, saying: 'This is thy holy Brahma-world (Svarga), gained by thy good works.'

7. But frail, in truth, are those boats, the sacrifices, the eighteen, in which this lower ceremonial has been told³. Fools who praise this as the highest good, are subject again and again to old age and death.

¹ The seven worlds form the rewards of a pious sacrificer, the first is Bhuh, the last Satya. The seven worlds may also be explained as the worlds of the father, grandfather, and great-grandfather, of the son, the grandson, and great-grandson, and of the sacrificer himself.

² Or Visvarukî, if there is any authority for this reading in Mahîdhara's commentary to the Vâgas. Samhitâ XVII, 79. The Râjah of Besmah's edition has visvarukî, which is also the reading adopted by Rammohun Roy, see Complete Works, vol. i, p. 579.

³ The commentator takes the eighteen for the sixteen priests, the sacrificer, and his wife. But such an explanation hardly yields a satisfactory meaning, nor does plava mean perishable.

8. Fools dwelling in darkness, wise in their own conceit, and puffed up with vain knowledge, go round and round staggering to and fro, like blind men led by the blind¹.

9. Children, when they have long lived in ignorance, consider themselves happy. Because those who depend on their good works are, owing to their passions, improvident, they fall and become miserable when their life (in the world which they had gained by their good works) is finished.

10. Considering sacrifice and good works as the best, these fools know no higher good, and having enjoyed (their reward) on the height of heaven, gained by good works, they enter again this world or a lower one.

11. But those² who practise ~~penance~~ and faith in the forest, tranquil, wise, and living on alms, depart free from passion through the sun to where that immortal Person dwells whose nature is imperishable³.

12. Let a Brâhmana, after he has examined all these worlds which are gained by works, acquire freedom from all desires. Nothing that is eternal (not made) can be gained by what is not eternal (made). Let him, in order to understand this, take

¹ Cf. Kaṭh. Up. II, 5.

² According to the commentator, this verse refers to those who know the uselessness of sacrifices and have attained to a knowledge of the qualified Brahman. They live in the forest as Vânaprasthas and Samnyâsins, practising tapas, i.e. whatever is proper for their state, and sraddhâ, i.e. a knowledge of Hiraṇyagarbha. The wise are the learned Grîhasthas, while those who live on alms are those who have forsaken their family.

³ That person is Hiraṇyagarbha. His immortality is relative only, it lasts no longer than the world (samsâra).

fuel in his hand and approach a Guru who is learned and dwells entirely in Brahman.

13. To that pupil who has approached him respectfully, whose thoughts are not troubled by any desires, and who has obtained perfect peace, the wise teacher truly told that knowledge of Brahman through which he knows the eternal and true Person.

SECOND MUNDAKA.

FIRST KHANDA.

1. This is the truth. As from a blazing fire sparks, being like unto fire¹, fly forth a thousandfold, thus are various beings brought forth from the Imperishable, my friend, and return thither also.

2. That heavenly Person is without body, he is both without and within, not produced, without breath and without mind, pure, higher than the high Imperishable².

3. From him (when entering on creation) is born breath, mind, and all organs of sense, ether, air, light, water, and the earth, the support of all.

4. Fire (the sky) is his head, his eyes the sun and the moon, the quarters his ears, his speech the Vedas disclosed, the wind his breath, his heart the universe; from his feet came the earth; he is indeed the inner Self of all things³.

5. From him comes Agni (fire)⁴, the sun being the fuel; from the moon (Soma) comes rain (Parganya); from the earth herbs; and man gives seed unto the woman. Thus many beings are begotten from the Person (purusha).

6. From him come the Rik, the Sâman, the

¹ Cf. Brîh. Âr. II, 1, 20.

² The high Imperishable is here the creative, the higher the non-creative Brahman.

³ Called Vishnu and Virâg by the commentators.

⁴ There are five fires, those of heaven, rain, earth, man, and woman. Comm.

Yagush, the Dīkshâ (initiatory rites), all sacrifices and offerings of animals, and the fees bestowed on priests, the year too, the sacrificer, and the worlds, in which the moon shines brightly and the sun.

7. From him the many Devas too are begotten, the Sâdhyas (genii), men, cattle, birds, the up and down breathings, rice and corn (for sacrifices), penance, faith, truth, abstinence, and law.

8. The seven senses (prâṇa) also spring from him, the seven lights (acts of sensation), the seven kinds of fuel (objects by which the senses are lighted), the seven sacrifices (results of sensation), these seven worlds (the places of the senses, the worlds determined by the senses) in which the senses move, which rest in the cave (of the heart), and are placed there seven and seven.

9. Hence come the seas and all the mountains, from him flow the rivers of every kind ; hence come all herbs and the juice through which the inner Self subsists with the elements.

10. The Person is all this, sacrifice, penance, Brahman, the highest immortal ; he who knows this hidden in the cave (of the heart), he, O friend, scatters the knot of ignorance here on earth.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. Manifest, near, moving in the cave (of the heart) is the great Being. In it everything is centred which ye know as moving, breathing, and blinking, as being and not-being, as adorable, as the best, that is beyond the understanding of creatures.

¶ 2. That which is brilliant, smaller than small, that on which the worlds are founded and their inhabitants, that is the indestructible Brahman, that is the breath, speech, mind; that is the true, that is the immortal. That is to be hit. Hit it, O friend!

3. Having taken the Upanishad as the bow, as the great weapon, let him place on it the arrow, sharpened by devotion! Then having drawn it with a thought directed to that which is, hit the mark, O friend, viz. that which is the Indestructible!

4. Om is the bow, the Self is the arrow, Brahman is called its aim. It is to be hit by a man who is not thoughtless; and then, as the arrow (becomes one with the target), he will become one with Brahman.

¶ 5. In him the heaven, the earth, and the sky are woven, the mind also with all the senses. Know him alone as the Self, and leave off other words! He is the bridge of the Immortal.

6. He moves about becoming manifold within the heart where the arteries meet, like spokes fastened to the nave. Meditate on the Self as Om! Hail to you, that you may cross beyond (the sea of) darkness!

¶ 7. He who understands all and who knows all, he to whom all this glory in the world belongs, the Self, is placed in the ether, in the heavenly city of Brahman (the heart). He assumes the nature of mind, and becomes the guide of the body of the senses. He subsists in food, in close proximity to the heart. The wise who understand this, behold the Immortal which shines forth full of bliss.

8. The fetter of the heart is broken, all doubts are solved, all his works (and their effects) perish when He has been beheld who is high and low (cause and effect)¹.

9. In the highest golden sheath there is the Brahman without passions and without parts. That is pure, that is the light of lights, that is it which they know who know the Self.

10. The ² sun does not shine there, nor the moon and the stars, nor these lightnings, and much less this fire. When he shines, everything shines after him; by his light all this is lighted ³.

11. That immortal Brahman is before, that Brahman is behind, that Brahman is right and left. It has gone forth below and above; Brahman alone is all this, it is the best.

¹ Cf. Kaṭh. Up. VI, 15.

² Kaṭh. Up. V, 15.

³ Svet. Up. VI, 14; Bhag. Gītā IX, 15, 6.

THIRD MUNDAKA.

FIRST KHANDA.

Story of two birds
 1. Two birds, inseparable friends, cling to the same tree. One of them eats the sweet fruit, the other looks on without eating¹.

2. On the same tree man sits grieving, immersed, bewildered by his own impotence (an-īśā). But when he sees the other lord (īśa) contented and knows his glory, then his grief passes away².

3. When the seer sees the brilliant maker and lord (of the world) as the Person who has his source in Brahman, then he is wise, and shaking off good and evil, he reaches the highest oneness, free from passions;

4. For he is the Breath shining forth in all beings, and he who understands this becomes truly wise, not a talker only. He revels in the Self, he delights in the Self, and having performed his works (truthfulness, penance, meditation, &c.) he rests, firmly established in Brahman, the best of those who know Brahman³.

¹ Cf. Rv. I, 164, 20; Nir. XIV, 30; Svet. Up. IV, 6; Kath. Up. III, 1.

² Cf. Svet. Up. IV, 7.

³ The commentator states that, besides âtmaratiḥ kriyâvân, there was another reading, viz. âtmaratikriyâvân. This probably owed its origin to a difficulty felt in reconciling kriyâvân, performing acts, with the brahmavidâm varishṭhaḥ, the best of those who know Brahman, works being utterly incompatible with a true knowledge of Brahman. Kriyâvân, however, as Saṅkara points out, may mean here simply, having performed meditation and other acts conducive to a knowledge of Brahman. Probably truthfulness,

5. By truthfulness, indeed, by penance, right know-^{truth}ledge, and abstinence must that Self be gained; the Self whom spotless anchorites gain is pure, and like a light within the body. Him, go
Self

6. The true prevails, not the untrue; by the true the path is laid out, the way of the gods (devayānaḥ), on which the old sages, satisfied in their desires, proceed to where there is that highest place of the True One.

7. That (true Brahman) shines forth grand, divine, inconceivable, smaller than small; it is far beyond what is far and yet near here, it is hidden in the cave (of the heart) among those who see it even here.

8. He is not apprehended by the eye, nor by speech, nor by the other senses, not by penance or good works¹. When a man's nature has become purified by the serene light of knowledge, then he sees him, meditating on him as without parts.

9. That subtle Self is to be known by thought (ketas) there where breath has entered fivefold; for every thought of men is interwoven with the senses, and when thought is purified, then the Self arises.

10. Whatever state a man whose nature is purified imagines, and whatever desires he desires (for himself or for others)², that state he conquers and penance, &c., mentioned in the next following verse, are the kriyās or works intended. For grammatical reasons also this reading is preferable. But the last foot esha brahma vidām varish/haḥ is clearly defective. If we examine the commentary, we see that Śaṅkara read brahmanish/haḥ, and that he did not read esha, which would give us the correct metre, brahmanish/ho brahma vidām varish/haḥ.

¹ Cf. Kaṭh. Up. VI, 12.

² Cf. Bṛh. Âr. I, 4, 15.

those desires he obtains. Therefore let every man who desires happiness worship the man who knows the Self¹.

SECOND KHANDA.

1. He (the knower of the Self) knows that highest home of Brahman², in which all is contained and shines brightly. The wise who, without desiring happiness, worship that Person³, transcend this seed, (they are not born again.)

2. He who forms desires in his mind, is born again through his desires here and there. But to him whose desires are fulfilled and who is conscious of the true Self (within himself) all desires vanish, even here on earth.

3. That Self⁴ cannot be gained by the Veda, nor by understanding, nor by much learning. He whom the Self chooses, by him the Self can be gained. The Self chooses him (his body) as his own.

4. Nor is that Self to be gained by one who is destitute of strength, or without earnestness, or without right meditation. But if a wise man strives after it by those means (by strength, earnestness, and right meditation), then his Self enters the home of Brahman.

5. When they have reached him (the Self), the sages become satisfied through knowledge, they are conscious of their Self, their passions have passed

¹ All this is said by the commentator to refer to a knowledge of the conditioned Brahman only.

² See verse 4.

³ The commentator refers purusha to the knower of the Self.

⁴ Ka/h. Up. II, 23.

away, and they are tranquil. The wise, having reached Him who is omnipresent everywhere, devoted to the Self, enter into him wholly.

6. Having well ascertained the object of the knowledge of the Vedânta¹, and having purified their nature by the Yoga² of renunciation, all anchorites, enjoying the highest immortality, become free at the time of the great end (death) in the worlds of Brahmâ.

7. Their fifteen parts³ enter into their elements, their Devas (the senses) into their (corresponding) Devas⁴. Their deeds and their Self with all his knowledge become all one in the highest Imperishable.

8. As the flowing rivers disappear in the sea⁵, losing their name and their form, thus a wise man, freed from name and form, goes to the divine Person, who is greater than the great⁶.

9. He who knows that highest Brahman, becomes even Brahman. In his race no one is born ignorant of Brahman. He overcomes grief, he overcomes evil; free from the fetters of the heart, he becomes immortal.

10. And this is declared by the following Rik-verse: 'Let a man tell this science of Brahman to those only who have performed all (necessary) acts, who are versed in the Vedas, and firmly established in (the lower) Brahman, who themselves offer as

¹ Cf. Taitt. Âr. X, 12, 3; Svet. Up. VI, 22; Kaiv. Up. 3; see Weber, Ind. Stud. I, p. 288.

² By the Yoga system, which, through restraint (yoga), leads a man to true knowledge.

³ Cf. Prasna Up. VI, 4.

⁴ The eye into the sun, &c.

⁵ Cf. Prasna Up. VI, 5.

⁶ Greater than the conditioned Brahman. Comm.

(an oblation the one Rishi (Agni), full of faith, and by whom the rite of (carrying fire on) the head has been performed, according to the rule (of the Ātharvanas).'

11. The Rishi Āngiras formerly told this true (science¹); a man who has not performed the (proper) rites, does not read it. Adoration to the highest Rishis! Adoration to the highest Rishis!

¹ To Saunaka, cf. I, 1, 3.

5

TAITTIRÎYAKA-UPANISHAD.

TAITTIRĪYAKA-UPANISHAD.

FIRST VALLĪ,

OR, THE CHAPTER ON ŚIKSHĀ (PRONUNCIATION).

FIRST ANUVĀKA¹.

1. HARIH, Om! May ^{NIGHT} Mitra ^{DAY} be propitious to us, and ^{EYE-SUN} Varuṇa, ^{STRENGTH} Aryaman also, ^{INTELLECT} Indra, Brihaspati, and the wide-striding Vishṇu². ^{FEET}

Adoration to Brahman! Adoration to thee, O Vāyu (air)! Thou indeed art the visible Brahman. I shall proclaim thee alone as the visible Brahman. I shall proclaim the right. I shall proclaim the true (scil. Brahman).

(1-5)³ May it protect me! May it protect the teacher! yes, may it protect me, and may it protect the teacher! Om! Peace! peace! peace!

¹ This invocation is here counted as an Anuvāka; see Taitt. Âr., ed. Rajendralal Mitra, p. 725.

² This verse is taken from Rîg-veda-samhitâ I, 90, 9. The deities are variously explained by the commentators: Mitra as god of the Prâṇa (forth-breathing) and of the day; Varuṇa as god of the Apâna (off-breathing) and of the night. Aryaman is supposed to represent the eye or the sun; Indra, strength; Brihaspati, speech or intellect; Vishṇu, the feet. Their favour is invoked, because it is only if they grant health that the study of the highest wisdom can proceed without fail.

³ Five short sentences, in addition to the one paragraph. Such sentences occur at the end of other Anuvākas also, and are counted separately.

SECOND ANUVÂKA.

1. Om¹! Let us explain Śikshâ, the doctrine of pronunciation, viz. letter, accent, quantity, effort (in the formation of letters), modulation, and union of letters (sandhi). This is the lecture on Śikshâ.

THIRD ANUVÂKA.

1. May glory come to both of us (teacher and pupil) together! May Vedic light belong to both of us!

Now let us explain the Upanishad (the secret meaning) of the union (samhitâ)², under five heads, with regard to the worlds, the heavenly lights, knowledge, offspring, and self (body). People call these the great Samhitâs.

First, with regard to the worlds. The earth is the former element, heaven the latter, ether their union;

2. That union takes place through Vâyu (air). So much with regard to the worlds.

Next, with regard to the heavenly lights. Agni (fire) is the former element, Âditya (the sun) the latter, water their union. That union takes place through lightning. So much with regard to the heavenly lights.

Next, with regard to knowledge. The teacher is the former element,

3. The pupil the latter, knowledge their union. That union takes place through the recitation of the Veda. So much with regard to knowledge.

Next, with regard to offspring. The mother is the former element, the father the latter, offspring their union. That union takes place through procreation. So much with regard to offspring.

¹ Cf. Rig-veda-prâtisâkhya, ed. M. M., p. iv seq.

² Cf. Aitareya-âranyaka III, 1, 1 (Sacred Books, vol. i, p. 247).

4. Next, with regard to the self (body). The lower jaw is the former element, the upper jaw the latter, speech their union. That union takes place through speech. So much with regard to the Self. These are the great Samhitâs. He who knows these Samhitâs (unions), as here explained, becomes united with offspring, cattle, Vedic light, food, and with the heavenly world.

FOURTH ANUVÂKA.

1. May he¹ who is the strong bull of the Vedas, assuming all forms, who has risen from the Vedas, from the Immortal, may that Indra (lord) strengthen me with wisdom! May I, O God, become an upholder of the Immortal!

May my body be able, my tongue sweet, may I hear much with my ears! Thou (Om) art the shrine (of Brahman), covered by wisdom. Guard what I have learnt².

She (Sri, happiness) brings near and spreads,

2. And makes, without delay, garments for herself, cows, food, and drink at all times; therefore bring that Sri (happiness) hither to me, the woolly, with

¹ The next verses form the prayer and oblation of those who wish for wisdom and happiness. In the first verse it is supposed that the Om is invoked, the most powerful syllable of the Vedas, the essence extracted from all the Vedas, and in the end a name of Brahman. See Khând. Up. p. 1 seq.

² Here end the prayers for the attainment of wisdom, to be followed by oblations for the attainment of happiness.

her cattle¹! Svâhâ²! May the Brahman-students come to me, Svâhâ! May they come from all sides, Svâhâ! May they come forth to me, Svâhâ! May they practise restraint, Svâhâ! May they enjoy peace, Svâhâ!

3. May I be a glory among men, Svâhâ! May I be better than the richest, Svâhâ! May I enter into thee, O treasure (Om), Svâhâ! Thou, O treasure³, enter into me, Svâhâ! In thee, consisting of a thousand branches, in thee, O treasure, I am cleansed, Svâhâ! As water runs downward, as the months go to the year, so, O preserver of the world, may Brahman-students always come to me from all sides, Svâhâ!

(1) Thou art a refuge! Enlighten me! Take possession of me!

FIFTH ANUVÂKA.

1. Bhû, Bhuvas, Suvas⁴, these are the three sacred interjections (vyâhrîti). Mâhâlamasya taught a fourth, viz. Mahas, which is Brahman, which is the Self. The others (devatâs) are its members.

Bhû is this world, Bhuvas is the sky, Suvas is the other world.

2. Mahas is the sun. All the worlds are increased by the sun. Bhû is Agni (fire), Bhuvas is Vâyû (air), Suvas is Âditya (sun). Mahas is the moon. All the heavenly lights are increased by the moon.

¹ The construction is not right. Woolly, lomasâ, is explained as 'possessed of woolly sheep.'

² With the interjection Svâhâ each oblation is offered.

³ Bhaga, here explained as bhagavat.

⁴ The text varies between Bhû, Bhuvas, Suvas, Mahas, and Bhû, Bhuvar, Suvar, Mahar.

Bhû is the Rik-verses, Bhuvas is the Sâman-verses, Suvas is the Yagus-verses.

3. Mahas is Brahman. All the Vedas are increased by the Brahman.

(1-2) Bhû is Prâna (up-breathing), Bhuvas is Apâna (down-breathing), Suvas is Vyâna (back-breathing). Mahas is food. All breathings are increased by food.

Thus there are these four times four, the four and four sacred interjections. He who knows these,

(1-2) Knows the Brahman. All Devas bring offerings to him.

SIXTH ANUVÂKA.

1. There is the ether within the heart, and in it there is the Person (purusha) consisting of mind, immortal, golden.

Between the two palates there hangs the uvula, like a nipple—that is the starting-point of Indra (the lord)¹. Where the root of the hair divides, there he opens the two sides of the head, and saying Bhû, he enters Agni (the fire); saying Bhuvas, he enters Vâyu (air);

2. Saying Suvas, he enters Âditya (sun); saying Mahas, he enters Brahman. He there obtains lordship, he reaches the lord of the mind. He becomes lord of speech, lord of sight, lord of hearing, lord of knowledge. Nay, more than this. There is the Brahman whose body is ether, whose nature is true, rejoicing in the senses (prâna), delighted in the mind, perfect in peace, and immortal.

(1) Worship thus, O Prâñnayogya !

¹ Cf. I, 4, 1.

SEVENTH ANUVÂKA.

1. 'The earth, the sky, heaven, the four quarters, and the intermediate quarters,'—'Agni (fire), Vâyu (air), Âditya (sun), Kândramas (moon), and the stars,'—'Water, herbs, trees, ether, the universal Self (virâg),'—so much with reference to material objects (bhûta).

Now with reference to the self (the body): 'Prâna (up-breathing), Apâna (down-breathing), Vyâna (back-breathing), Udâna (out-breathing), and Samâna (on-breathing),'—'The eye, the ear, mind, speech, and touch,'—'The skin, flesh, muscle, bone, and marrow.' Having dwelt on this (fivefold arrangement of the worlds, the gods, beings, breathings, senses, and elements of the body), a Rishi said: 'Whatever exists is fivefold (pânkta)¹.'

(1) By means of the one fivefold set (that referring to the body) he completes the other fivefold set.

EIGHTH ANUVÂKA.

1. Om means Brahman. 2. Om means all this. 3. Om means obedience. When they have been told, 'Om, speak,' they speak. 4. After Om they sing Sâmans. 5. After Om they recite hymns. 6. After Om the Adhvaryu gives the response. 7. After Om the Brahman-priest gives orders. 8. After Om he (the sacrificer) allows the performance of the Agnihotra. 9. When a Brâhmana is going to begin his lecture, he says, 10. 'Om, may I acquire Brahman (the Veda).' He thus acquires the Veda.

¹ Cf. Brîh. Âr. Up. I, 4, 17.

NINTH ANUVÂKA¹.

1. (What is necessary?) The right, and learning and practising the Veda. The true, and learning and practising the Veda. Penance, and learning and practising the Veda. Restraint, and learning and practising the Veda. Tranquillity, and learning and practising the Veda. The fires (to be consecrated), and learning and practising the Veda. The Agnihotra sacrifice, and learning and practising the Veda. Guests (to be entertained), and learning and practising the Veda. Man's duty, and learning and practising the Veda. Children, and learning and practising the Veda.

(1-6) Marriage, and learning and practising the Veda. Children's children, and learning and practising the Veda.

Satyavaças Râthîlara thinks that the true only is necessary. Taponitya Paurasishîi thinks that penance only is necessary. Nâka Maudgalya thinks that learning and practising the Veda only are necessary,—for that is penance, that is penance.

TENTH ANUVÂKA.

1. 'I am he who shakes the tree (i.e. the tree of the world, which has to be cut down by knowledge).

2. My glory is like the top of a mountain. 3. I, whose pure light (of knowledge) has risen high, am that which is truly immortal, as it resides in the sun.

¹ This chapter is meant to show that knowledge alone, though it secures the highest object, is not sufficient by itself, but must be preceded by works. The learning of the Veda by heart and the practising of it so as not to forget it again, these two must always have been previously performed.

4. I am the brightest treasure. 5. I am wise, immortal, imperishable¹. 6. This is the teaching of the Veda, by the poet Trisanku.

ELEVENTH ANUVĀKA.

1. After having taught the Veda, the teacher instructs the pupil: 'Say what is true! Do thy duty! Do not neglect the study of the Veda! After having brought to thy teacher his proper reward, do not cut off the line of children! Do not swerve from the truth! Do not swerve from duty! Do not neglect what is useful! Do not neglect greatness! Do not neglect the learning and teaching of the Veda!

2. 'Do not neglect the (sacrificial) works due to the Gods and Fathers! (Let thy mother be to thee like unto a god! Let thy father be to thee like unto a god! Let thy teacher be to thee like unto a god! Let thy guest be to thee like unto a god! Whatever actions are blameless, those should be regarded, not others. Whatever good works have been performed by us, those should be observed by thee,

3. 'Not others. And there are some Brāhmaṇas better than we. They should be comforted by thee by giving them a seat. Whatever is given should be given with faith, not without faith,—with joy, with modesty, with fear, with kindness. If there should be any doubt in thy mind with regard to any sacred act or with regard to conduct,—

¹ This verse has been translated as the commentator wishes it to be understood, in praise of that knowledge of Self which is only to be obtained after all other duties, and, more particularly, the study of the Veda, have been performed. The text is probably corrupt, and the interpretation fanciful.

4. 'In that case conduct thyself as Brâhmanas who possess good judgment conduct themselves therein, whether they be appointed or not¹, as long as they are not too severe, but devoted to duty. And with regard to things that have been spoken against, as Brâhmanas who possess good judgment conduct themselves therein, whether they be appointed or not, as long as they are not too severe, but devoted to duty,

(1-7) Thus conduct thyself. 'This is the rule. This is the teaching. This is the true purport (Upanishad) of the Veda. This is the command. Thus should you observe. Thus should this be observed.'

TWELFTH ANUVÂKA.

1. May Mitra be propitious to us, and Varuna, Aryaman also, Indra, Brihaspati, and the wide-striding Vishnu! Adoration to Brahman! Adoration to thee, O Vâyu! Thou indeed art the visible Brahman. I proclaimed thee alone as the visible Brahman.

(1-5) I proclaimed the right. I proclaimed the true. It protected me. It protected the teacher. Yes, it protected me, it protected the teacher. Om! Peace! peace! peace!

¹ Aparaprayuktâ iti svatantrâh. For other renderings, see Weber, Ind. Stud. II, p. 216.

SECOND VALLĪ,

OR, THE CHAPTER ON ÂNANDA (BLISS).

Hariḥ, Om! May it (the Brahman) protect us both (teacher and pupil)! May it enjoy us both! May we acquire strength together! May our knowledge become bright! May we never quarrel! Peace! peace! peace¹!

FIRST ANUVÂKA.

He who knows the Brahman attains the highest (Brahman). On this the following verse is recorded:

‘He who knows Brahman, which is (i. e. cause, not effect), which is conscious, which is without end, as hidden in the depth (of the heart), in the highest ether, he enjoys all blessings, at one with the omniscient Brahman.’

¶ From that Self² (Brahman) sprang ether (ākāśa, that through which we hear); from ether air (that through which we hear and feel); from air fire (that through which we hear, feel, and see); from fire water (that through which we hear, feel, see, and taste); from water earth (that through which we hear, feel, see, taste, and smell). From earth herbs, from herbs food, from food seed, from seed man. Man thus consists of the essence of food. This is his head, ¹ Not counted here as an Anuvâka. The other Anuvâkas are divided into a number of small sentences.

² Compare with this srīṣhāikrama, Khând. Up. VI, 2; Ait. Âr. II, 4, 1.

this his right arm, this his left arm, this his trunk (âtman), this the seat (the support)¹.

On this there is also the following Sloka :

SECOND ANUVĀKA.

¶ 'From food² ~~are produced all creatures~~ which dwell on eārth. Then they live by food, and in the end they return to food. For food is the oldest of all beings, and therefore it is called panacea (sarvaushadha, i. e. consisting of all herbs, or quieting the heat of the body of all beings).'

¶ They who worship food as Brahman³, obtain all food. ~~For food is the oldest of all beings~~, and therefore it is called panacea. From food all creatures are produced; by food, when born, they grow. Because it is fed on, or because it feeds on beings, therefore it is called food (annā).

¶ Different from this, which consists of the essence of food, is the other, the inner Self, which consists of breath. The former is filled by this. It also has the shape of man. Like the human shape of the former is the human shape of the latter. Prâna (up-breathing) is its head. Vyâna (back-breathing) is its right arm. Apâna (down-breathing) is its left arm. Ether is its trunk. The earth the seat (the support).

¶ On this there is also the following Sloka :

¹ The text has 'the tail, which is his support.' But pratishhâ seems to have been added, the Anuvâka ending originally with puṣṭhâ, which is explained by nâbher adhistâd yad aṅgam. In the Persian translation the different members are taken for members of a bird, which is not unlikely.

² Anna is sometimes used in the more general sense of matter.

³ Worship consisting in the knowledge that they are born of food, live by food, and end in food, which food is Brahman.

THIRD ANUVĀKA.

‘The Devas breathe after breath (prāṇa), so do men and cattle. Breath is the life of beings, therefore it is called sarvâyusha (all-enlivening).’

¶ They who worship breath as Brahman, obtain the full life. For breath is the life of all beings, and therefore it is called sarvâyusha. The embodied Self of this (consisting of breath) is the same as that of the former (consisting of food).

¶ Different from this, which consists of breath, is the other, the inner Self, which consists of mind. The former is filled by this. It also has the shape of man. Like the human shape of the former is the human shape of the latter. Yagus is its head. Rik is its right arm. Sâman is its left arm. The doctrine (âdesa, i.e. the Brâhmaṇa) is its trunk. The Atharvângiras (Atharva-hymns) the seat (the support).

On this there is also the following Sloka :

FOURTH ANUVĀKA¹.

¶ ‘He who knows the bliss of that Brahman, from whence all speech, with the mind, turns away unable to reach it, he never fears.’ The embodied Self of this (consisting of mind) is the same as that of the former (consisting of breath).

¶ Different from this, which consists of mind, is the other, the inner Self, which consists of understanding. The former is filled by this. It also has the shape of man. Like the human shape of the former is the human shape of the latter. Faith is its head. What is right is its right arm. What is true is its left arm.

¹ Cf. II, 9.

Absorption (yoga) is its trunk. The great (intellect?) is the seat (the support).

On this there is also the following Śloka :

FIFTH ANUVĀKA.

‘Understanding performs the sacrifice, it performs all sacred acts. All Devas worship understanding as Brahman, as the oldest. If a man knows understanding as Brahman, and if he does not swerve from it, he leaves all evils behind in the body, and attains all his wishes.’ The embodied Self of this (consisting of understanding) is the same as that of the former (consisting of mind).

¶ Different from this, which consists of understanding, is the other inner Self, which consists of bliss. The former is filled by this. It also has the shape of man. Like the human shape of the former is the human shape of the latter. Joy is its head. Satisfaction its right arm. Great satisfaction is its left arm. Bliss is its trunk. Brahman is the seat (the support).

On this there is also the following Śloka :

SIXTH ANUVĀKA.

‘He who knows the Brahman as non-existing, becomes himself non-existing. He who knows the Brahman as existing, him we know himself as existing.’ The embodied Self of this (bliss) is the same as that of the former (understanding).

Thereupon follow the questions of the pupil :

‘Does any one who knows not, after he has departed this life, ever go to that world? Or does he who knows, after he has departed, go to that world¹?’

¹ As he who knows and he who knows not, are both sprung from Brahman, the question is supposed to be asked by the pupil, whether both will equally attain Brahman.

The answer is : He wished, may I be many¹, may I grow forth. He brooded over himself (like a man performing penance). After he had thus brooded, he sent forth (created) all, whatever there is. Having sent forth, he entered into it. Having entered it, he became sat (what is manifest) and tyat (what is not manifest), defined and undefined, supported and not supported, (endowed with) knowledge and without knowledge (as stones), real and unreal². The Sattya (true) became all this whatsoever, and therefore the wise call it (the Brahman) Sat-tya (the true).

On this there is also this Sloka :

SEVENTH ANUVÂKA.

‘In the beginning this was non-existent (not yet defined by form and name). From it was born what exists. That made itself its Self, therefore it is called the Self-made³.’ That which is Self-made is a flavour⁴ (can be tasted), for only after perceiving a flavour can any one perceive pleasure. Who could breathe, who could breathe forth, if that bliss (Brah-

¹ In the Khândogya-upanishad VI, 2, 1, where a similar account of the creation is given, the subject is spoken of as tad, neuter. It is said there : ‘In the beginning there was that only which is, one only, without a second. It willed, may I be many,’ &c. (Cf. Brh. Âr. Up. vol. ii, p. 52.)

² What appears as real and unreal to the senses, not the really real and unreal.

³ Cf. Ait. Up. I, 2, 3.

⁴ As flavour is the cause of pleasure, so Brahman is the cause of all things. The wise taste the flavour of existence, and know that it proceeds from Brahman, the Self-made. See Kaushîtaki-upanishad I, 5 ; Sacred Books, vol. i, p. 277.

man) existed not in the ether (in the heart)? For he alone causes blessedness.

When he finds freedom from fear and rest in that which is invisible, incorporeal, undefined, unsupported, then he has obtained the fearless. For if he makes but the smallest distinction in it, there is fear for him¹. But that fear exists only for one who thinks himself wise², (not for the true sage.)

On this there is also this S'loka :

EIGHTH ANUVÂKA.

(1) 'From terror of it (Brahman) the wind blows, from terror the sun rises; from terror of it Agni and Indra, yea Death runs as the fifth³.'

Now this is an examination of (what is meant by) Bliss (ânanda):

Let there be a noble young man, who is well read (in the Veda), very swift, firm, and strong, and let the whole world be full of wealth for him, that is one measure of human bliss.

One hundred times that human bliss (2) is one measure of the bliss of human Gandharvas (genii),

¹ Fear arises only from what is not ourselves. Therefore, as soon as there is even the smallest distinction made between our Self and the real Self, there is a possibility of fear. The explanation ud=api, aram=alpam is very doubtful, but recognised in the schools. It could hardly be a proverbial expression, 'if he makes another stomach' meaning as much as, 'if he admits another person.' According to the commentator, we should translate, 'for one who knows (a difference), and does not know the oneness.'

² I read manvânasya, the commentator amanvânasya.

³ Kath. Up. VI, 3.

and likewise of a great sage (learned in the Vedas) who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of human Gandharvas is one measure of the bliss of divine Gandharvas (genii), and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of divine Gandharvas is one measure of the bliss of the Fathers, enjoying their long estate, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of the Fathers is one measure of the bliss of the Devas, born in the Āgāna heaven (through the merit of their lawful works), (3) and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of the Devas born in the Āgāna heaven is one measure of the bliss of the sacrificial Devas, who go to the Devas by means of their Vaidik sacrifices, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of the sacrificial Devas is one measure of the bliss of the (thirty-three) Devas, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of the (thirty-three) Devas is one measure of the bliss of Indra, (4) and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of Indra is one measure of the bliss of Bṛihaspati, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of Bṛihaspati is one measure of the bliss of Pragāpati, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

¶ One hundred times that bliss of Pragāpati is one measure of the bliss of Brahman, and likewise of a great sage who is free from desires.

(5) He¹ who is this (Brahman) in man, and he who is that (Brahman) in the sun, both are one².

¹ Cf. III, 10, 4.

² In giving the various degrees of happiness, the author of the Upanishad gives us at the same time the various classes of human and divine beings which we must suppose were recognised in his time. We have Men, human Gandharvas, divine Gandharvas, Fathers (pitara ġiralokakâh), born Gods (âgânagâ devâh), Gods by merit (karmadevâh), Gods, Indra, Brihaspati, Pragâpati, Brahman. Such a list would seem to be the invention of an individual rather than the result of an old tradition, if it did not occur in a very similar form in the Satapatha-brâhmana, Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ XIV, 7, 1, 31, Kânva-sâkhâ (Brih. Âr.Up. IV, 3, 32). Here, too, the highest measure of happiness is ascribed to the Brahmaloka, and other beings are supposed to share a certain measure only of its supreme happiness. The scale begins in the Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ with men, who are followed by the Fathers (pitara ġitalokâh), the Gods by merit (karmadevâh), the Gods by birth (âgânadevâh, with whom the Srotriya is joined), the world of Gods, the world of Gandharvas, the world of Pragâpati, the world of Brahman. In the Brihadâranyaka-upanishad we have Men, Fathers, Gandharvas, Gods by merit, Gods by birth, Pragâpati, and Brahman. If we place the three lists side by side, we find—

TAITTIRÎYA-UPAN. SATAPATHA-BRÂH. BRIHADÂRAN.-UPAN.

Men	Men	Men
Human Gandharvas (and Srotriya)	—	—
Divine Gandharvas	—	—
Fathers (ġiraloka)	Fathers (ġitaloka)	Fathers (ġitaloka) Gandharvas
—	—	—
Gods by birth	Gods by merit	Gods by merit
Gods by merit	Gods by birth (and Srotriya)	Gods by birth (and Srotriya)
Gods	Gods	—
Indra	Gandharvas	—
Brihaspati	—	—
Pragâpati	Pragâpati	Pragâpati
Brahman	Brahman	Brahman.

The commentators do not help us much. Saṅkara on the Taitti-

He who knows this, when he has departed this world, reaches and comprehends the Self which consists of food, the Self which consists of breath, the Self which consists of mind, the Self which consists of understanding, the Self which consists of bliss.

On this there is also this Sloka :

rîyaka-upanishad explains the human Gandharvas as men who have become Gandharvas, a kind of fairies ; divine Gandharvas, as Gandharvas by birth. The Fathers or Manes are called Kīraloka, because they remain long, though not for ever, in their world. The âgânaga Gods are explained as born in the world of the Devas through their good works (smârta), while the Karmadevas are explained as born there through their sacred works (voidika). The Gods are the thirty-three, whose lord is Indra, and whose teacher Brîhaspati. Pragâpati is Virâg, Brahman Hiranyagarbha. Dvivedagaṅga, in his commentary on the Satapatha-brâhmana, explains the Fathers as those who, proceeding on the Southern path, have conquered their world, more particularly by having themselves offered in their life sacrifices to their Fathers. The Karmadevas, according to him, are those who have become Devas by sacred works (srauta), the Âgânadevas those who were gods before there were men. The Gods are Indra and the rest, while the Gandharvas are not explained. Pragâpati is Virâg, Brahman is Hiranyagarbha. Lastly, Śaṅkara, in his commentary on the Brîhadâranyaka-upanishad, gives nearly the same explanation as before ; only that he makes âgânadevâḥ still clearer, by explaining them as gods âgânataḥ, i. e. utpattitaḥ, from their birth.

The arrangement of these beings and their worlds, one rising above the other, reminds us of the cosmography of the Buddhists, but the elements, though in a less systematic form, existed evidently before. Thus we find in the so-called Gargî-brâhmana (Satapatha-brâhmana XIV, 6, 6, 1) the following succession : Water, air, ether^a, the worlds of the sky^b, heaven, sun, moon, stars, gods, Gandharvas^c, Pragâpati, Brahman. In the Kaushîtaki-upanishad I, 3 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 275) there is another series, the worlds of Agni, Vâyu, Varuṇa, Indra, Pragâpati, and Brahman. See Weber, Ind. Stud. II, p. 224.

^a Deest in Kânva-sâkhâ.

^b Between sky and sun, the Kânva-sâkhâ places the Gandharvaloka (Brîh. Âr. Up. III, 6, 1, p. 609).

^c Instead of Gandharvas, the Brîh. Âr. Up. places Indra.

NINTH ANUVÂKA¹.

‘He who knows the bliss of that Brahman, from whence all speech, with the mind, turns away unable to reach it, he fears nothing².’

He does not distress himself with the thought, Why did I not do what is good? Why did I do what is bad? He who thus knows these two (good and bad), frees himself. He who knows both, frees himself³. This is the Upanishad⁴.

¹ Cf. II, 4.

² Even if there is no fear from anything else, after the knowledge of Self and Brahman has been obtained, it might be thought that fear might still arise from the commission of evil deeds, and the omission of good works. Therefore the next paragraphs have been added.

³ The construction of these two sentences is not clear to me.

⁴ Here follows the Anukramanî, and in some MSS. the same invocation with which the next Vallî begins.

THIRD VALLĪ,

OR, THE CHAPTER OF BHRIGU.

Harīh, Om! May it (the Brahman) protect us both! May it enjoy us both! May we acquire strength together! May our knowledge become bright! May we never quarrel! Peace! peace! peace¹!

FIRST ANUVÂKA.

Bhrigu Vârûni went to his father Varûna, saying: 'Sir, teach me Brahman.' He told him this, viz. Food, breath, the eye, the ear, mind, speech.

Then he said again to him: 'That from whence these beings are born, that by which, when born, they live, that into which they enter at their death, try to know that. That is Brahman.'

He performed penance. Having performed penance—

SECOND ANUVÂKA.

He perceived that food is Brahman, for from food these beings are produced; by food, when born, they live; and into food they enter at their death.

Having perceived this, he went again to his father Varûna, saying: 'Sir, teach me Brahman.' He said to him: 'Try to know Brahman by penance, for penance is (the means of knowing) Brahman.'

He performed penance. Having performed penance—

¹ The same paragraph, as before (II, 1), occurs at the end of the Kat̥ha-upanishad, and elsewhere.

THIRD ANUVÂKA.

He perceived that breath¹ is Brahman, for from breath these beings are born ; by breath, when born, they live ; into breath they enter at their death.

Having perceived this, he went again to his father Varuna, saying : ' Sir, teach me Brahman.' He said to him : ' Try to know Brahman by penance, for penance is (the means of knowing) Brahman.'

He performed penance. Having performed penance—

FOURTH ANUVÂKA.

He perceived that mind (manas) is Brahman, for from mind these beings are born ; by mind, when born, they live ; into mind they enter at their death.

Having perceived this, he went again to his father Varuna, saying : ' Sir, teach me Brahman.' He said to him : ' Try to know Brahman by penance, for penance is (the means of knowing) Brahman.'

He performed penance. Having performed penance—

FIFTH ANUVÂKA.

He perceived that understanding (vigñâna) was Brahman, for from understanding these beings are born ; by understanding, when born, they live ; into understanding they enter at their death.

Having perceived this, he went again to his father Varuna, saying : ' Sir, teach me Brahman.' He said to him : ' Try to know Brahman by penance, for penance is (the means of knowing) Brahman.'

¹ Or life ; see Brîh. Âr. Up. IV, 1, 3.

He performed penance. Having performed penance—

SIXTH ANUVÂKA.

He perceived that bliss is Brahman, for from bliss these beings are born ; by bliss, when born, they live ; into bliss they enter at their death.

This is the knowledge of Bhrigu and Varuna¹, exalted in the highest heaven (in the heart). He who knows this becomes exalted, becomes rich in food, and able to eat food (healthy), becomes great by offspring, cattle, and the splendour of his knowledge (of Brahman), great by fame.

SEVENTH ANUVÂKA.

Let him never abuse food, that is the rule.

Breath is food², the body eats the food. The body rests on breath, breath rests on the body. This is the food resting on food³, rests exalted, becomes rich in food, and able to eat food (healthy), becomes great by offspring, cattle, and the splendour of his knowledge (of Brahman), great by fame.

EIGHTH ANUVÂKA.

Let him never shun food, that is the rule. Water is food, the light eats the food. The light rests on water, water rests on light. This is the food resting on food¹. He who knows this food resting on food, rests exalted, becomes rich in food, and able to eat food (healthy), becomes great by offspring, cattle, and the splendour of his knowledge (of Brahman), great by fame.

¹ Taught by Varuna, learnt by Bhrigu Vâruni.

² Because, like food, it is inside the body.

³ The interdependence of food and breath. The object of this discussion is to show (see Saṅkara's commentary, p. 135) that the world owes its origin to there being an enjoyer (subject) and what is enjoyed (object), but that this distinction does not exist in the Self.

NINTH ANUVÂKA.

Let him acquire much food, that is the rule. Earth is food, the ether eats the food. The ether rests on the earth, the earth rests on the ether. This is the food resting on food. He who knows this food resting on food, rests exalted, becomes rich in food, and able to eat food (healthy), becomes great by offspring, cattle, and the splendour of his knowledge (of Brahman), great by fame.

TENTH ANUVÂKA.

1. Let him never turn away (a stranger) from his house, that is the rule. Therefore a man should by all means acquire much food, for (good) people say (to the stranger): 'There is food ready for him.' If he gives food amply, food is given to him amply. If he gives food fairly, food is given to him fairly. If he gives food meanly, food is given to him meanly.

2. He who knows this, (recognises and worships Brahman²) as possession in speech, as acquisition and possession in up-breathing (prâna) and down-breathing (apâna); as action in the hands; as walking in the feet; as voiding in the anus. These are the human recognitions (of Brahman as manifested in human actions). Next follow the recognitions (of

¹ The interdependence of water and light.

² Brahmana upâsanaprakâraḥ.

Brahman) with reference to the Devas, viz. as satisfaction in rain; as power in lightning;

3. As glory in cattle; as light in the stars; as procreation, immortality, and bliss in the member; as everything in the ether. Let him worship that (Brahman) as support, and he becomes supported. Let him worship that (Brahman) as greatness (maha), and he becomes great. Let him worship that (Brahman) as mind, and he becomes endowed with mind.

4. Let him worship that (Brahman) as adoration, and all desires fall down before him in adoration. Let him worship that (Brahman) as Brahman, and he will become possessed of Brahman. Let him worship this as the absorption of the gods¹ in Brahman, and the enemies who hate him will die all around him, all around him will die the foes whom he does not love.

He² who is this (Brahman) in man, and he who is that (Brahman) in the sun, both are one.

5. He who knows this, when he has departed this world, after reaching and comprehending the Self which consists of food, the Self which consists of breath, the Self which consists of mind, the Self which consists of understanding, the Self which consists of bliss, enters and takes possession of these worlds, and having as much food as he likes, and assuming as many forms as he likes, he sits down singing this Sâman (of Brahman): 'Hâvu, hâvu, hâvu!

¹ Cf. Kaush. Up. II, 12. Here the absorption of the gods of fire, sun, moon, and lightning in the god of the air (vâyu) is described. Sâṅkara adds the god of rain, and shows that air is identical with ether.

² Cf. II, 8.

6. 'I am food (object), I am food, I am food! I am the eater of food (subject), I am the eater of food, I am the eater of food! I am the poet (who joins the two together), I am the poet, I am the poet! I am the first-born of the Right (rita). Before the Devas I was in the centre of all that is immortal. He who gives me away, he alone preserves me: him who eats food, I eat as food.

'I overcome the whole world, I, endowed with golden light ¹. He who knows this, (attains all this).' This is the Upanishad ².

¹ If we read suvarṇagyotiḥ. The commentator reads suvar na gyotiḥ, i. e. the light is like the sun.

² After the Anukramanī follows the same invocation as in the beginning of the third Vallī, 'May it protect us both,' &c.

BṚHADÂRANYAKA-UPANISHAD.

BRĪHADÂRANYAKA- UPANISHAD.

FIRST ADHYÂYA¹.

FIRST BRÂHMANA.

1. Verily² the dawn is the head of the horse which is fit for sacrifice, the sun its eye, the wind its breath, the mouth the Vaisvânara³ fire, the year the body of the sacrificial horse. Heaven is the back, the sky the belly, the earth the chest⁴, the quarters the two sides, the intermediate quarters the ribs, the members the seasons, the joints the months and half-months, the feet days and nights, the bones the stars, the ¹ It is the third Adhyâya of the Âranyaka, but the first of the Upanishad.

² This Brâhmana is found in the Mâdhyandina text of the Sata-patha, ed. Weber, X, 6, 4. Its object is there explained by the commentary to be the meditative worship of Virâg, as represented metaphorically in the members of the horse. Sâyana dispenses with its explanation, because, as part of the Brîhadâraṇyaka-upanishad, according to the Kânva-sâkhâ, it had been enlarged on by the Vârttikakâra and explained.

³ Agni or fire, as pervading everything, as universally present in nature.

⁴ Pâgasya is doubtful. The commentator suggests pâd-asya, the place of the feet, i. e. the hoof. The Greek Pēgastos, or ἵπποι πηγοί, throws no light on the word. The meaning of hoof would hardly be appropriate here, and I prefer chest on account of uras in I, 2, 3. Deussen (Vedânta, p. 8) translates, die Erde seiner Füße Schemel; but we want some part of the horse.

flesh the clouds. The half-digested food is the sand, the rivers the bowels¹, the liver and the lungs² the mountains, the hairs the herbs and trees. As the sun rises, it is the forepart, as it sets, the hindpart of the horse. When the horse shakes itself³, then it lightens; when it kicks, it thunders; when it makes water, it rains; voice⁴ is its voice.

2. Verily Day arose after the horse as the (golden) vessel⁵, called Mahiman (greatness), which (at the sacrifice) is placed before the horse. Its place is in the Eastern sea. The Night arose after the horse as the (silver) vessel, called Mahiman, which (at the sacrifice) is placed behind the horse. Its place is in the Western sea. Verily, these two vessels (or great-nesses) arose to be on each side of the horse.

As a racer he carried the Devas, as a stallion the Gandharvas, as a runner the Asuras, as a horse men. The sea is its kin, the sea is its birthplace.

SECOND BRÂHMANA⁶.

1. In the beginning there was nothing (to be per-

¹ Guda, being in the plural, is explained by nâḍī, channel, and sirâḥ; for we ought to read sirâ or hirâgrahane for sirâ, p. 22, l. 16.

² Klomânaḥ is explained as a plurale tantum (nityam bahuvāṇam ekasmin), and being described as a lump below the heart, on the opposite side of the liver, it is supposed to be the lungs.

³ 'When it yawns.' Ânandagiri.

⁴ Voice is sometimes used as a personified power of thunder and other aerial sounds, and this is identified with the voice of the horse.

⁵ Two vessels, to hold the sacrificial libations, are placed at the Asvamedha before and behind the horse, the former made of gold, the latter made of silver. They are called Mahiman in the technical language of the ceremonial. The place in which these vessels are set, is called their yonī. Cf. Vâgas. Samhitâ XXIII, 2.

⁶ Called the Agni-brâhmana, and intended to teach the origin of ceived) here whatsoever. By Death indeed all this was concealed,—by hunger; for death is hunger. Death (the first being) thought, ‘Let me have a body.’ Then he moved about, worshipping. From him thus worshipping water was produced. And he said: ‘Verily, there appeared to me, while I worshipped (ar̥kate), water (ka).’ This is why water is called ar-ka¹. Surely there is water (or pleasure) for him who thus knows the reason why water is called arka.

2. Verily water is arka. And what was there as the froth of the water, that was hardened, and became the earth. On that earth he (Death) rested, and from him, thus resting and heated, Agni (Virâḡ) proceeded, full of light.

3. That being divided itself threefold, Âditya (the sun) as the third, and Vâyu (the air) as the third². That spirit (prâṇa)³ became threefold. The head was the Eastern quarter, and the arms this and that quarter

Agni, the fire, which is here used for the Horse-sacrifice. It is found in the Satapatha-brâhmana, Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ X, 6, 5, and there explained as a description of Hiranyagarbha.

¹ We ought to read arkasyârkatvam, as in Poley’s edition, or ark-kasyârkkatvam, to make the etymology still clearer. The commentator takes arka in the sense of fire, more especially the sacrificial fire employed at the Horse-sacrifice. It may be so, but the more natural interpretation seems to me to take arka here as water, from which indirectly fire is produced. From water springs the earth; on that earth he (Mr̥tyu or Pragâpati) rested, and from him, while resting there, fire (Virâḡ) was produced. That fire assumed three forms, fire, sun, and air, and in that threefold form it is called prâṇa, spirit.

² As Agni, Vâyu, and Âditya.

³ Here Agni (Virâḡ) is taken as representing the fire of the altar at the Horse-sacrifice, which is called Arka. The object of the whole Brâhmana was to show the origin and true character of that fire (arka).

(i.e. the N. E. and S. E., on the left and right sides). Then the tail was the Western quarter, and the two legs this and that quarter (i.e. the N. W. and S. W.) The sides were the Southern and Northern quarters, the back heaven, the belly the sky, the dust the earth. Thus he (Mṛityu, as arka) stands firm in the water, and he who knows this stands firm wherever he goes.

4. He desired¹, 'Let a second body be born of me,' and he (Death or Hunger) embraced Speech in his mind. Then the seed became the year. Before that time there was no year. Speech² bore him so long as a year, and after that time sent him forth. Then when he was born, he (Death) opened his mouth, as if to swallow him. He cried Bhân! and that became speech³.

5. He thought, 'If I kill him, I shall have but little food.' He therefore brought forth by that speech and by that body (the year) all whatsoever exists, the Rik, the Yagus, the Sâman, the metres, the sacrifices, men, and animals.

And whatever he (Death) brought forth, that he resolved to eat (ad). Verily because he eats everything, therefore is Aditi (Death) called Aditi. He who thus knows why Aditi is called Aditi, becomes an eater of everything, and everything becomes his food⁴.

¹ He is the same as what was before called mṛityu, death, who, after becoming self-conscious, produced water, earth, fire, &c. He now wishes for a second body, which is the year, or the annual sacrifice, the year being dependent on the sun (Âditya).

² The commentator understands the father, instead of Speech, the mother.

³ The interjectional theory.

⁴ All these are merely fanciful etymologies of asvamedha and arka.

6. He desired to sacrifice again with a greater sacrifice. He toiled and performed penance. And while he toiled and performed penance, glorious power¹ went out of him. Verily glorious power means the senses (prāṇā). Then when the senses had gone out, the body took to swelling (śva-yitum), and mind was in the body.

7. He desired that this body should be fit for sacrifice (medhya), and that he should be embodied by it. Then he became a horse (aśva), because it swelled (aśvat), and was fit for sacrifice (medhya); and this is why the horse-sacrifice is called Aśva-medha.

Verily he who knows him thus, knows the Aśva-medha. Then, letting the horse free, he thought², and at the end of a year he offered it up for himself, while he gave up the (other) animals to the deities. Therefore the sacrificers offered up the purified horse belonging to Pragâpati, (as dedicated) to all the deities.

Verily the shining sun is the Aśvamedha-sacrifice, and his body is the year; Agni is the sacrificial fire (arka), and these worlds are his bodies. These two are the sacrificial fire and the Aśvamedha-sacrifice, and they are again one deity, viz. Death. He (who knows this) overcomes another death, death does not reach him, death is his Self, he becomes one of those deities.

¹ Or glory (senses) and power. Comm.

² He considered himself as the horse. Roer.

THIRD BRĀHMAṆA¹.

1. There were two kinds of descendants of Pragâpati, the Devas and the Asuras². Now the Devas were indeed the younger, the Asuras the elder ones³. The Devas, who were struggling in these worlds, said: 'Well, let us overcome the Asuras at the sacrifices (the Gyotishṭoma) by means of the udgîtha.'

2. They said to speech (Vâk): 'Do thou sing out for us (the udgîtha).' 'Yes,' said speech, and sang (the udgîtha). Whatever delight there is in speech, that she obtained for the Devas by singing (the three pavamânas); but that she pronounced well (in the other nine pavamânas), that was for herself. The Asuras knew: 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at the singer and pierced her with evil. That evil which consists in saying what is bad, that is that evil.

3. Then they (the Devas) said to breath (scent): 'Do thou sing out for us.' 'Yes,' said breath, and sang. Whatever delight there is in breath (smell), that he obtained for the Devas by singing; but that he smelled well, that was for himself. The Asuras knew: 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at the singer, and pierced him with evil. That evil which consists in smelling what is bad, that is that evil.

¹ Called the Udgîtha-brâhmana. In the Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ, the Upanishad, which consists of six adhyâyas, begins with this Brâhmana (cf. Weber's edition, p. 1047; Commentary, p. 1109).

² The Devas and Asuras are explained by the commentator as the senses, inclining either to sacred or to worldly objects, to good or evil.

³ According to the commentator, the Devas were the less numerous and less strong, the Asuras the more numerous and more powerful.

4. Then they said to the eye : 'Do thou sing out for us.' 'Yes,' said the eye, and sang. Whatever delight there is in the eye, that he obtained for the Devas by singing ; but that he saw well, that was for himself. The Asuras knew : 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at the singer, and pierced him with evil. That evil which consists in seeing what is bad, that is that evil.

5. Then they said to the ear : 'Do thou sing out for us.' 'Yes,' said the ear, and sang. Whatever delight there is in the ear, that he obtained for the Devas by singing ; but that he heard well, that was for himself. The Asuras knew : 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at the singer, and pierced him with evil. That evil which consists in hearing what is bad, that is that evil.

6. Then they said to the mind : 'Do thou sing out for us.' 'Yes,' said the mind, and sang. Whatever delight there is in the mind, that he obtained for the Devas by singing ; but that he thought well, that was for himself. The Asuras knew : 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at the singer, and pierced him with evil. That evil which consists in thinking what is bad, that is that evil.

Thus they overwhelmed these deities with evils, thus they pierced them with evil.

7. Then they said to the breath in the mouth¹ : 'Do thou sing for us.' 'Yes,' said the breath, and sang. The Asuras knew : 'Verily, through this singer they will overcome us.' They therefore rushed at him and pierced him with evil. Now as a ball of earth will be scattered when hitting a stone, thus they perished, scattered in all directions. Hence the Devas rose, the Asuras fell. He who knows this, rises by his self, and the enemy who hates him falls.

¹ This is the chief or vital breath, sometimes called mukhya.

8. Then they (the Devas) said: 'Where was he then who thus stuck to us¹?' It was (the breath) within the mouth (âsye 'ntar²), and therefore called Ayâsya; he was the sap (rasa) of the limbs (aṅga), and therefore called Âṅgirasa.

9. That deity was called Dûr, because Death was far (dûran) from it. From him who knows this, Death is far off.

10. That deity, after having taken away the evil of those deities, viz. death, sent it to where the end of the quarters of the earth is. There he deposited their sins. Therefore let no one go to a man, let no one go to the end (of the quarters of the earth³), that he may not meet there with evil, with death.

11. That deity, after having taken away the evil of those deities, viz. death, carried them beyond death.

12. He carried speech across first. When speech had become freed from death, it became (what it had been before) Agni (fire). That Agni, after having stepped beyond death, shines.

13. Then he carried breath (scent) across. When breath had become freed from death, it became ¹ Asakta from sañg, to embrace; cf. Rig-veda I, 33, 3. Here it corresponds to the German anhänglich.

² See Deussen, Vedânta, p. 359.

³ To distant people.

Vâyu (air). That Vâyu, after having stepped beyond death, blows.

14. Then he carried the eye across. When the eye had become freed from death, it became Âditya (the sun). That Âditya, after having stepped beyond death, burns.

15. Then he carried the ear across. When the ear had become freed from death, it became the quarters (space). These are our quarters (space), which have stepped beyond death.

16. Then he carried the mind across. When the mind had become freed from death, it became the moon (Kandramas). That moon, after having stepped beyond death, shines. Thus does that deity carry him, who knows this, across death.

17. Then breath (vital), by singing, obtained for himself eatable food. For whatever food is eaten, is eaten by breath alone, and in it breath rests¹.

The Devas said : 'Verily, thus far, whatever food there is, thou hast by singing acquired it for thyself. Now therefore give us a share in that food.' He said : 'You there, enter into me.' They said Yes, and entered all into him. Therefore whatever food is eaten by breath, by it the other senses are satisfied.

18. If a man knows this, then his own relations come to him in the same manner ; he becomes their supporter, their chief leader, their strong ruler². And if ever any one tries to oppose³ one who is possessed of such knowledge among his own relatives, then he will not be able to support his own belongings. But he who follows the man who is possessed of such knowledge, and who with his permission wishes to support those whom he has to support, he indeed will be able to support his own belongings.

¹ This is done by the last nine Pavamânas, while the first three were used for obtaining the reward common to all the prâṇas.

² Here annâda is well explained by anâmayâvin, and vyâdhirahita, free from sickness, strong.

³ Read pratipratiḥ ; see Poley, and Weber, p. 1180.

19. He was called Ayâsya Ângirasa, for he is the sap (rasa) of the limbs (aṅga). Verily, breath is the sap of the limbs. Yes, breath is the sap of the limbs. Therefore from whatever limb breath goes away, that limb withers, for breath verily is the sap of the limbs.

20. He (breath) is also Bṛihaspati, for speech is Bṛihati (Rig-veda), and he is her lord; therefore he is Bṛihaspati.

21. He (breath) is also Brahmanaspati, for speech is Brahman (Yagur-veda), and he is her lord; therefore he is Brahmanaspati.

He (breath) is also Sâman (the Udgîtha), for speech is Sâman (Sâma-veda), and that is both speech (sâ) and breath (ama)¹. This is why Sâman is called Sâman.

22. Or because he is equal (sama) to a grub, equal to a gnat, equal to an elephant, equal to these three worlds, nay, equal to this universe, therefore he is Sâman. He who thus knows this Sâman, obtains union and oneness with Sâman.

23. He (breath) is Udgîtha². Breath verily is Ut, for by breath this universe is upheld (uttabdha); and speech is Gîthâ, song. And because he is ut and gîthâ, therefore he (breath) is Udgîtha.

¹ Cf. Khând. Up. V, 2, 6.

² Not used here in the sense of song or hymn, but as an act of worship connected with the Sâman. Comm.

24. And thus Brahmadata Kaikitâneya (the grandson of Kikitâna), while taking Soma (râgan), said: 'May this Soma strike my head off, if Ayâsya Ângirasa sang another Udgîtha than this. He sang it indeed as speech and breath.'

25. He who knows what is the property of this Sâman, obtains property. Now verily its property is tone only. Therefore let a priest, who is going to perform the sacrificial work of a Sâma-singer, desire that his voice may have a good tone, and let him perform the sacrifice with a voice that is in good tone. Therefore people (who want a priest) for a sacrifice, look out for one who possesses a good voice, as for one who possesses property. He who thus knows what is the property of that Sâman, obtains property.

26. He who knows what is the gold of that Sâman, obtains gold. Now verily its gold is tone only. He who thus knows what is the gold of that Sâman, obtains gold.

27. He who knows what is the support of that Sâman, he is supported. Now verily its support is speech only. For, as supported in speech, that breath is sung as that Sâman. Some say the support is in food.

Next follows the Abhyâroha¹ (the ascension) of the Pavamâna verses. Verily the Prastotri begins to sing the Sâman, and when he begins, then let him (the sacrificer) recite these (three Yagus-verses):

'Lead me from the unreal to the real! Lead me

¹ The ascension is a ceremony by which the performer reaches the gods, or becomes a god. It consists in the recitation of three Yagus, and is here enjoined to take place when the Prastotri priest begins to sing his hymn.

from darkness to light! Lead me from death to immortality!’

Now when he says, ‘Lead me from the unreal to the real,’ the unreal is verily death, the real immortality. He therefore says, ‘Lead me from death to immortality, make me immortal.’

When he says, ‘Lead me from darkness to light,’ darkness is verily death, light immortality. He therefore says, ‘Lead me from death to immortality, make me immortal.’

When he says, ‘Lead me from death to immortality,’ there is nothing there, as it were, hidden (obscure, requiring explanation)¹.

28. Next come the other Stotras with which the priest may obtain food for himself by singing them. Therefore let the sacrificer, while these Stotras are being sung, ask for a boon, whatever desire he may desire. An Udgâtri priest who knows this obtains by his singing whatever desire he may desire either for himself or for the sacrificer. This (knowledge) indeed is called the conqueror of the worlds. He who thus knows this Sâman², for him there is no fear of his not being admitted to the worlds³.

¹ See Deussen, Vedânta, p. 86.

² He knows that he is the Prâna, which Prâna is the Sâman. That Prâna cannot be defeated by the Asuras, i.e. by the senses which are addicted to evil; it is pure, and the five senses finding refuge in him, recover there their original nature, fire, &c. The Prâna is the Self of all things, also of speech (Rig-yaguh-sâmodgîtha), and of the Sâman that has to be sung and well sung. The Prâna pervades all creatures, and he who identifies himself with that Prâna, obtains the rewards mentioned in the Brâhmaṇa. Comm.

³ In connection with lokagîti, lokyatâ is here explained, and may probably have been intended, as worthiness to be admitted to the highest world. Originally lokyatâ and alokyatâ meant right and wrong. See also I, 5, i7.

FOURTH BRÂHMANA ¹.

1. In the beginning this was Self alone, in the shape of a person (purusha). He looking round saw nothing but his Self. He first said, 'This is I;' therefore he became I by name. Therefore even now, if a man is asked, he first says, 'This is I,' and then pronounces the other name which he may have. And because before (pûrva) all this, he (the Self) burnt down (ush) all evils, therefore he was a person (pur-usha). Verily he who knows this, burns down every one who tries to be before him.

2. He feared, and therefore any one who is lonely fears. He thought, 'As there is nothing but myself, why should I fear?' Thence his fear passed away. For what should he have feared? Verily fear arises from a second only.

3. But he felt no delight. Therefore a man who is lonely feels no delight. He wished for a second. He was so large as man and wife together. He then made this his Self to fall in two (pat), and thence arose husband (pati) and wife (patnî). Therefore Yâgñavalkya said: 'We two² are thus (each of us) like half a shell³.' Therefore the void which was

¹ Called Purushavidhabrâhmana (Mâdhyandina-sâkhâ, p. 1050). See Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, vol. i, p. 24.

² The Comm. explains svaḥ by âtmanaḥ, of himself. But see Boehtlingk, Sanskrit Chrestomathie, p. 357.

³ Roer translates: 'Therefore was this only one half of himself, as a split pea is of a whole.' Brigala is a half of anything. Muir (Orig. Sansk. Texts, vol. i, p. 25) translates: 'Yâgñavalkya has said that this one's self is like the half of a split pea.' I have translated the sentence according to Professor Boehtlingk's conjecture (Chrestomathie, 2nd ed. p. 357), though the singular after the dual (svaḥ) is irregular.

there, is filled by the wife. He embraced her, and men were born.

4. She thought, 'How can he embrace me, after having produced me from himself? I shall hide myself.'

She then became a cow, the other became a bull and embraced her, and hence cows were born. The one became a mare, the other a stallion; the one a male ass, the other a female ass. He embraced her, and hence one-hoofed animals were born. The one became a she-goat, the other a he-goat; the one became a ewe¹, the other a ram. He embraced her, and hence goats and sheep were born. And thus he created everything that exists in pairs, down to the ants.

5. He knew, 'I indeed am this creation, for I created all this.' Hence he became the creation, and he who knows this lives in this his creation.

6. Next he thus produced fire by rubbing. From the mouth, as from the fire-hole, and from the hands he created fire². Therefore both the mouth and the hands are inside without hair, for the fire-hole is inside without hair.

And when they say, 'Sacrifice to this or sacrifice to that god,' each god is but his manifestation, for he is all gods.

Now, whatever there is moist, that he created from seed; this is Soma. So far verily is this universe either food or eater. Soma indeed is food, Agni eater. This is the highest creation of Brah-

¹ The reading avir itaro, i. e. itarâ u, is not found in the Kânva text. See Boehlingk, Chrestomathie, p. 357.

² He blew with the mouth while he rubbed with the hands.

man, when he created the gods from his better part¹, and when he, who was (then) mortal², created the immortals. Therefore it was the highest creation. And he who knows this, lives in this his highest creation.

7. Now all this was then undeveloped. It became developed by form and name, so that one could say, 'He, called so and so, is such a one³.' Therefore at present also all this is developed by name and form, so that one can say, 'He, called so and so, is such a one.'

He (Brahman or the Self) entered thither, to the very tips of the finger-nails, as a razor might be fitted in a razor-case, or as fire in a fire-place⁴.

He cannot be seen, for, in part only, when breathing, he is breath by name; when speaking, speech by name; when seeing, eye by name; when hearing, ear by name; when thinking, mind by name. All these are but the names of his acts. And he who worships (regards) him as the one or the other, does not know him, for he is apart from this (when qualified) by the one or the other (predicate). Let men worship him as Self, for in the Self all these are one. This Self is the footstep of everything, for through it one knows everything⁵. And as one can find again by footsteps what was lost, thus he who knows this finds glory and praise.

¹ Or, when he created the best gods.

² As man and sacrificer. Comm.

³ The Comm. takes asau-nâmâ as a compound, instead of idam-nâmâ. I read asau nâma, he is this by name, viz. Devadatta, &c. Dr. Boehtlingk, who in his Chrestomathie (2nd ed. p. 31) had accepted the views of the Commentator, informs me that he has changed his view, and thinks that we should read asaú nâma.

⁴ Cf. Kaush. Br. Up. VI, 19.

⁵ 'As one finds lost cattle again by following their footsteps, thus one finds everything, if one has found out the Self.' Comm.

8. This, which is nearer to us than anything, this Self, is dearer than a son, dearer than wealth, dearer than all else.

And if one were to say to one who declares another than the Self dear, that he will lose what is dear to him, very likely it would be so. Let him worship the Self alone as dear. He who worships the Self alone as dear, the object of his love will never perish¹.

9. Here they say: 'If men think that by knowledge of Brahman they will become everything, what then did that Brahman know, from whence all this sprang?'

10. Verily in the beginning this was Brahman, that Brahman knew (its) Self only, saying, 'I am Brahman.' From it all this sprang. Thus, whatever Deva was awakened (so as to know Brahman), he indeed became that (Brahman); and the same with Rishis and men. The Rishi Vâmadeva saw and understood it, singing, 'I was Manu (moon), I was the sun.' Therefore now also he who thus knows that he is Brahman, becomes all this, and even the Devas cannot prevent it, for he himself is their Self.

Now if a man worships another deity, thinking the deity is one and he another, he does not know. He is like a beast for the Devas. For verily, as many beasts nourish a man, thus does every man nourish the Devas. If only one beast is taken away, it is not pleasant; how much more when many are taken! Therefore it is not pleasant to the Devas that men should know this.

11. Verily in the beginning this was Brahman, one only. That being one, was not strong enough. It created still further the most excellent Kshatra (power), viz. those Kshatras (powers) among the Devas,—Indra, Varuṇa, Soma, Rudra, Parganya, Yama, Mrityu, Îsâna. Therefore there is nothing beyond the Kshatra, and therefore at the Râgasûya sacrifice the Brâhmaṇa sits down below the Kshatriya. He confers that glory on the Kshatra alone. But Brahman is (nevertheless) the birth-place of the Kshatra. Therefore though a king is exalted, he sits down at the end (of the sacrifice) below the Brahman, as his birth-place. He who injures him, injures his own birth-place. He becomes worse, because he has injured one better than himself.

¹ On rudh, to lose, see Taitt. Samh. II, 6, 8, 5, pp. 765, 771, as pointed out by Dr. Boehtlingk. On īsvaro (yat) tathaiva syât, see Boehtlingk, s. v.

12. He¹ was not strong enough. He created the Vis (people), the classes of Devas which in their different orders are called Vasus, Rudras, Âdityas, Visve Devas, Maruts.

13. He was not strong enough. He created the Sûdra colour (caste), as Pûshan (as nourisher). This earth verily is Pûshan (the nourisher); for the earth nourishes all this whatsoever.

14. He was not strong enough. He created still further the most excellent Law (dharma). Law is the Kshatra (power) of the Kshatra², therefore there is nothing higher than the Law. Thenceforth even a weak man rules a stronger with the help of the Law, as with the help of a king. Thus the Law is what is called the true. And if a man declares what is true, they say he declares the Law; and if he declares the Law, they say he declares what is true. Thus both are the same.

¹ Observe the change from tad, it, to sa, he.

² More powerful than the Kshatra or warrior caste. Comm.

15. There are then this Brahman, Kshatra, Vis, and Sūdra. Among the Devas that Brahman existed as Agni (fire) only, among men as Brāhmaṇa, as Kshatriya through the (divine) Kshatriya, as Vaisya through the (divine) Vaisya, as Sūdra through the (divine) Sūdra. Therefore people wish for their future state among the Devas through Agni (the sacrificial fire) only; and among men through the Brāhmaṇa, for in these two forms did Brahman exist.

Now if a man departs this life without having seen his true future life (in the Self), then that Self, not being known, does not receive and bless him, as if the Veda had not been read, or as if a good work had not been done. Nay, even if one who does not know that (Self), should perform here on earth some great holy work, it will perish for him in the end. Let a man worship the Self only as his true state. If a man worships the Self only as his true state, his work does not perish, for whatever he desires that he gets from that Self.

16. Now verily this Self (of the ignorant man) is the world¹ of all creatures. In so far as man sacrifices and pours out libations, he is the world of the Devas; in so far as he repeats the hymns, &c., he is the world of the Rishis; in so far as he offers cakes to the Fathers and tries to obtain offspring, he is the world of the Fathers; in so far as he gives shelter and food to men, he is the world of men; in so far as he finds fodder and water for the animals, he is the world of the animals; in so far as quadrupeds, birds, and even ants live in his houses, he is their world. And as every one wishes his own world not to be injured, thus all beings wish that he who knows this should not be injured. Verily this is known and has been well reasoned.

¹ Is enjoyed by them all. Comm.

17. In the beginning this was Self alone, one only. He desired, 'Let there be a wife for me that I may have offspring, and let there be wealth for me that I may offer sacrifices.' Verily this is the whole desire, and, even if wishing for more, he would not find it. Therefore now also a lonely person desires, 'Let there be a wife for me that I may have offspring, and let there be wealth for me that I may offer sacrifices.' And so long as he does not obtain either of these things, he thinks he is incomplete. Now his completeness (is made up as follows): mind is his self (husband); speech the wife; breath the child; the eye all worldly wealth, for he finds it with the eye; the ear his divine wealth, for he hears it with the ear. The body (âtman) is his work, for with the body he works. This is the fivefold¹ sacrifice, for fivefold is the animal, fivefold man, fivefold all this whatsoever. He who knows this, obtains all this.

FIFTH BRĀHMANA².

1. 'When the father (of creation) had produced by knowledge and penance (work) the seven kinds of food, one of his (foods) was common to all beings, two he assigned to the Devas, (1)

'Three he made for himself, one he gave to the animals. In it all rests, whatsoever breathes and breathes not. (2)

¹ Fivefold, as consisting of mind, speech, breath, eye, and ear. See Taitt. Up. I, 7, 1.

² Mādhyandina text, p. 1054.

‘Why then do these not perish, though they are always eaten? He who knows this imperishable one, he eats food with his face. (3)

‘He goes even to the Devas, he lives on strength.’ (4)

2. When it is said, that ‘the father produced by knowledge and penance the seven kinds of food,’ it is clear that (it was he who) did so. When it is said, that ‘one of his (foods) was common,’ then that is that common food of his which is eaten. He who worships (eats) that (common food), is not removed from evil, for verily that food is mixed (property)¹. When it is said, that ‘two he assigned to the Devas,’ that is the huta, which is sacrificed in fire, and the prahuta, which is given away at a sacrifice. But they also say, the new-moon and full-moon sacrifices are here intended, and therefore one should not offer them as an ishî or with a wish.

When it is said, that ‘one he gave to animals,’ that is milk. For in the beginning (in their infancy) both men and animals live on milk. And therefore they either make a new-born child lick ghrita (butter), or they make it take the breast. And they call a new-born creature ‘atrinâda,’ i. e. not eating herbs. When it is said, that ‘in it all rests, whatsoever breathes and breathes not,’ we see that all this, whatsoever breathes and breathes not, rests and depends on milk.

And when it is said (in another Brâhmana), that a man who sacrifices with milk a whole year², overcomes death again, let him not think so. No, on the very day on which he sacrifices, on that day he overcomes death again; for he who knows this, offers to the gods the entire food (viz. milk).

¹ It belongs to all beings.

² This would imply 360 sacrificial days, each with two oblations, i. e. 720 oblations.

When it is said, 'Why do these not perish, though they are always eaten,' we answer, Verily, the Person is the imperishable, and he produces that food again and again¹.

When it is said, 'He who knows this imperishable one,' then, verily, the Person is the imperishable one, for he produces this food by repeated thought, and whatever he does not work by his works, that perishes.

When it is said, that 'he eats food with his face,' then face means the mouth, he eats it with his mouth.

When it is said, that 'he goes even to the Devas, he lives on strength,' that is meant as praise.

3. When it is said, that 'he made three for himself,' that means that he made mind, speech, and breath for himself. As people say, 'My mind was elsewhere, I did not see; my mind was elsewhere, I did not hear,' it is clear that a man sees with his mind and hears with his mind². Desire, representation, doubt, faith, want of faith, memory³, forgetfulness, shame, reflexion, fear, all this is mind. Therefore even if a man is touched on the back, he knows it through the mind.

Whatever sound there is, that is speech. Speech indeed is intended for an end or object, it is nothing by itself.

¹ Those who enjoy the food, become themselves creators. Comm.

² See Deussen, Vedânta, p. 358.

³ Firmness, strength. Comm.

2 The up-breathing, the down-breathing, the back-breathing, the out-breathing, the on-breathing, all that is breathing is breath (prâna) only. Verily that Self consists of it; that Self consists of speech, mind, and breath.

4. These are the three worlds: earth is speech, sky mind, heaven breath.

5. These are the three Vedas: the Rig-veda is speech, the Yagur-veda mind, the Sâma-veda breath.

6. These are the Devas, Fathers, and men: the Devas are speech, the Fathers mind, men breath.

7. These are father, mother, and child: the father is mind, the mother speech, the child breath.

8. These are what is known, what is to be known, and what is unknown.

What is known, has the form of speech, for speech is known. Speech, having become this, protects man¹.

9. What is to be known, has the form of mind, for mind is what is to be known. Mind, having become this, protects man.

10. What is unknown, has the form of breath, for breath is unknown. Breath, having become this, protects man².

11. Of that speech (which is the food of Pragâ-pati) earth is the body, light the form, viz. this fire. And so far as speech extends, so far extends the earth, so far extends fire.

12. Next, of this mind heaven is the body, light the form, viz. this sun. And so far as this mind extends, so far extends heaven, so far extends the sun. If they (fire and sun) embrace each other, then wind is born, and that is Indra, and he is without a rival. Verily a second is a rival, and he who knows this, has no rival.

¹ 'The food (speech), having become known, can be consumed.' Comm.

² This was adhibhautika, with reference to bhûtas, beings. Next follows the adhidaivika, with reference to the devas, gods. Comm.

13. Next, of this breath water is the body, light the form, viz. this moon. And so far as this breath extends, so far extends water, so far extends the moon.

These are all alike, all endless. And he who worships them as finite, obtains a finite world, but he who worships them as infinite, obtains an infinite world.

14. That Pragâpati is the year, and he consists of sixteen digits. The nights¹ indeed are his fifteen digits, the fixed point² his sixteenth digit. He is increased and decreased by the nights. Having on the new-moon night entered with the sixteenth part into everything that has life, he is thence born again in the morning. Therefore let no one cut off the life of any living thing on that night, not even of a lizard, in honour (pûgârtham) of that deity.

15. Now verily that Pragâpati, consisting of sixteen digits, who is the year, is the same as a man who knows this. His wealth constitutes the fifteen digits, his Self the sixteenth digit. He is increased and decreased by that wealth. His Self is the nave, his wealth the felly. Therefore even if he loses everything, if he lives but with his Self, people say, he lost the felly (which can be restored again).

16. Next there are verily three worlds, the world of men, the world of the Fathers, the world of the Devas. The world of men can be gained by a son only, not by any other work. By sacrifice the world of the Fathers, by knowledge the world of the Devas is gained. The world of the Devas is the best of worlds, therefore they praise knowledge.

¹ Meant for nychthemera.

² When he is just invisible at the new moon.

17. Next follows the handing over. When a man thinks he is going to depart, he says to his son: 'Thou art Brahman (the Veda, so far as acquired by the father); thou art the sacrifice (so far as performed by the father); thou art the world.' The son answers: 'I am Brahman, I am the sacrifice, I am the world.' Whatever has been learnt (by the father) that, taken as one, is Brahman. Whatever sacrifices there are, they, taken as one, are the sacrifice. Whatever worlds there are, they, taken as one, are the world. Verily here ends this (what has to be done by a father, viz. study, sacrifice, &c.) 'He (the son), being all this, preserved me from this world¹,' thus he thinks. Therefore they call a son who is instructed (to do all this), a world-son (lokya), and therefore they instruct him.

When a father who knows this, departs this world, then he enters into his son together with his own spirits (with speech, mind, and breath). If there is anything done amiss by the father, of all that the son delivers him, and therefore he is called Putra, son². By help of his son the father stands firm in this world³. Then these divine immortal spirits (speech, mind, and breath) enter into him.

¹ Roer seems to have read samnaya, 'all this multitude.' I read, etan mâ sarvaṃ sann ayam ito 'bhunagad iti.

² The Comm. derives putra from pu (pâr), to fill, and tra (trâ), to deliver, a deliverer who fills the holes left by the father, a stop-gap. Others derive it from put, a hell, and trâ, to protect; cf. Manu IX, 138.

³ 'The manushya-loka, not the pitri-loka and deva-loka.' Comm.

18. From the earth and from fire, divine speech enters into him. And verily that is divine speech whereby, whatever he says, comes to be.

19. From heaven and the sun, divine mind enters into him. And verily that is divine mind whereby he becomes joyful, and grieves no more.

20. From water and the moon, divine breath (spirit) enters into him. And verily that is divine breath which, whether moving or not moving, does not tire, and therefore does not perish. He who knows this, becomes the Self of all beings. As that deity (Hiraṇyagarbha) is, so does he become. And as all beings honour that deity (with sacrifice, &c.), so do all beings honour him who knows this.

Whatever grief these creatures suffer, that is all one¹ (and therefore disappears). Only what is good approaches him; verily, evil does not approach the Devas.

21. Next follows the consideration of the observances² (acts). Pragâpati created the actions (active senses). When they had been created, they strove among themselves. Voice held, I shall speak; the eye held, I shall see; the ear held, I shall hear; and thus the other actions too, each according to its own act. Death, having become weariness, took them and seized them. Having seized them, death held them back (from their work). Therefore speech grows weary, the eye grows weary, the ear grows weary. But death did not seize the central breath. Then the others tried to know him, and said: 'Verily, he is the best of us, he who, whether moving or not, does not tire and does not perish. Well, let all of us assume his form.' Thereupon they all assumed his form, and therefore they are called after him 'breaths' (spirits).

¹ 'Individuals suffer, because one causes grief to another. But in the universal soul, where all individuals are one, their sufferings are neutralised.' Comm.

² The upâsana or meditative worship.

In whatever family there is a man who knows this, they call that family after his name. And he who strives with one who knows this, withers away and finally dies. So far with regard to the body.

22. Now with regard to the deities.

Agni (fire) held, I shall burn; Âditya (the sun) held, I shall warm; Kândramas (the moon) held, I shall shine; and thus also the other deities, each according to the deity. And as it was with the central breath among the breaths, so it was with Vâyû, the wind among those deities. The other deities fade, not Vâyû. Vâyû is the deity that never sets.

23. And here there is this Sloka :

'He from whom the sun rises, and into whom it sets' (he verily rises from the breath, and sets in the breath)

'Him the Devas made the law, he only is to-day, and he to-morrow also' (whatever these Devas determined then, that they perform to-day also¹).

Therefore let a man perform one observance only, let him breathe up and let him breathe down, that the evil death may not reach him. And when he performs it, let him try to finish it. Then he obtains through it union and oneness with that deity (with prâna).

¹ The prâna-vrata and vâyu-vrata. Comm.

SIXTH BRÂHMANA¹.

1. Verily this is a triad, name, form, and work. Of these names, that which is called Speech is the Uktha (hymn, supposed to mean also origin), for from it all names arise. It is their Sâman (song, supposed to mean also sameness), for it is the same as all names. It is their Brahman (prayer, supposed to mean also support), for it supports all names.

2. Next, of the forms, that which is called Eye is the Uktha (hymn), for from it all forms arise. It is their Sâman (song), for it is the same as all forms. It is their Brahman (prayer), for it supports all forms.

3. Next, of the works, that which is called Body is the Uktha (hymn), for from it all works arise. It is their Sâman (song), for it is the same as all works. It is their Brahman (prayer), for it supports all works.

That being a triad is one, viz. this Self; and the Self, being one, is that triad. This is the immortal, covered by the true. Verily breath is the immortal, name and form are the true, and by them the immortal is covered.

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1058.

SECOND ADHYĀYA¹.' FIRST BRĀHMAṆA².

1. There³ was formerly the proud Gārgya Bālāki⁴, a man of great reading. He said to Agātasatru of Kāśi, 'Shall I tell you Brahman?' Agātasatru said: 'We give a thousand (cows) for that speech (of yours), for verily all people run away, saying, Ganaka (the king of Mithilā) is our father (patron)⁵.'

2. Gārgya said: 'The person that is in the sun⁶, that I adore as Brahman.' Agātasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him

¹ Mādhyandina text, p. 1058.

² Whatever has been taught to the end of the third (according to the counting of the Upanishad, the first) Adhyāya, refers to avidyā, ignorance. Now, however, vidyā, the highest knowledge, is to be taught, and this is done, first of all, by a dialogue between Gārgya Dṛiṭabālāki and king Agātasatru, the former, though a Brāhmaṇa, representing the imperfect, the latter, though a Kshatriya, the perfect knowledge of Brahman. While Gārgya worships the Brahman as the sun, the moon, &c., as limited, as active and passive, Agātasatru knows the Brahman as the Self.

³ Compare with this the fourth Adhyāya of the Kaushītaki-upanishad, Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 300; Gough, Philosophy of the Upanishads, p. 144.

⁴ Son of Bālākā, of the race of the Gārgyas.

⁵ Ganaka, known as a wise and liberal king. There is a play on his name, which means father, and is understood in the sense of patron, or of teacher of wisdom. The meaning is obscure; and in the Kaush. Up. IV. 1, the construction is still more difficult. What is intended seems to be that Agātasatru is willing to offer any reward to a really wise man, because all the wise men are running after Ganaka and settling at his court.

⁶ The commentator expatiates on all these answers and brings them more into harmony with Vedānta doctrines. Thus he adds that the person in the sun is at the same time the person in the eye, who is both active and passive in the heart, &c.

verily as the supreme, the head of all beings, the king. Whoso adores him thus, becomes supreme, the head of all beings, a king.'

3. Gârgya said: 'The person that is in the moon (and in the mind), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâ-tasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as the great, clad in white raiment, as Soma, the king.' Whoso adores him thus, Soma is poured out and poured forth for him day by day, and his food does not fail¹.

4. Gârgya said: 'The person that is in the lightning (and in the heart), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâ-tasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as the luminous.' Whoso adores him thus, becomes luminous, and his offspring becomes luminous.

5. Gârgya said: 'The person that is in the ether (and in the ether of the heart), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâ-tasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him as what is full, and quiescent.' Whoso adores him thus, becomes filled with offspring and cattle, and his offspring does not cease from this world.

6. Gârgya said: 'The person that is in the wind (and in the breath), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâ-tasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him as Indra Vaikuntha, as the unconquerable army (of the Maruts).' Whoso adores him thus, becomes victorious, unconquerable, conquering his enemies.

¹ We miss the annasyâtmâ, the Self of food, mentioned in the Kaush. Up., and evidently referred to in the last sentence of our paragraph. Suta and prasuta, poured out and poured forth, are explained as referring to the principal and the secondary sacrifices.

7. Gārgya said : 'The person that is in the fire (and in the heart), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him : 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him as powerful.' Whoso adores him thus, becomes powerful, and his offspring becomes powerful.

8. Gārgya said : 'The person that is in the water (in seed, and in the heart), that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him : 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him as likeness.' Whoso adores him thus, to him comes what is likely (or proper), not what is improper ; what is born from him, is like unto him¹.

9. Gārgya said : 'The person that is in the mirror, that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him : 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as the brilliant.' Whoso adores him thus, he becomes brilliant, his offspring becomes brilliant, and with whomsoever he comes together, he outshines them.

10. Gārgya said : 'The sound that follows a man while he moves, that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him : 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as life.' Whoso adores him thus, he reaches his full age in this world, breath does not leave him before the time.

11. Gārgya said : 'The person that is in space, that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him : 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as the second who never leaves us.'

¹ Here the Kaush. Up. has the Self of the name, instead of pratirûpa, likeness. The commentator thinks that they both mean the same thing, because a name is the likeness of a thing. Another text of the Kaush. Up. gives here the Self of light. Pratirûpa in the sense of likeness comes in later in the Kaush. Up., § 11.

Whoso adores him thus, becomes possessed of a second, his party is not cut off from him.

12. Gârgya said: 'The person that consists of the shadow, that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as death.' Whoso adores him thus, he reaches his whole age in this world, death does not approach him before the time.

13. Gârgya said: 'The person that is in the body¹, that I adore as Brahman.' Agâtasatru said to him: 'No, no! Do not speak to me on this. I adore him verily as embodied.' Whoso adores him thus, becomes embodied, and his offspring becomes embodied ².

Then Gârgya became silent.

14. Agâtasatru said: 'Thus far only?' 'Thus far only,' he replied. Agâtasatru said: 'This does not suffice to know it (the true Brahman).' Gârgya replied: 'Then let me come to you, as a pupil.'

15. Agâtasatru said: 'Verily, it is unnatural that a Brâhmaṇa should come to a Kshatriya, hoping that he should tell him the Brahman. However, I shall make you know him clearly,' thus saying he took him by the hand and rose.

And the two together came to a person who was asleep. He called him by these names, 'Thou, great one, clad in white raiment, Soma, King³.' He did not rise. Then rubbing him with his hand, he woke him, and he arose.

¹ 'In the Âtman, in Pragâpati, in the Buddhi, and in the heart.' Comm.

² It is difficult to know what is meant here by âtman and âtmanvin. In the Kaush. Up. Agâtasatru refers to Pragâpati, and the commentator here does the same, adding, however, buddhi and hrîd. Gough translates âtmanvin by 'having peace of mind.' Deussen, p. 195, passes it over.

³ These names are given here as they occur in the Kaushîtaki-upanishad, not as in the Brîhadâraṇyaka-upanishad, where the

16. Agâtasatru said : 'When this man was thus asleep, where was then the person (purusha), the intelligent ? and from whence did he thus come back ?' Gârgya did not know this ?

17. Agâtasatru said : 'When this man was thus asleep, then the intelligent person (purusha), having through the intelligence of the senses (prâṇas) absorbed within himself all intelligence, lies in the ether, which is in the heart¹. When he takes in these different kinds of intelligence, then it is said that the man sleeps (svapiti)². Then the breath is kept in, speech is kept in, the ear is kept in, the eye is kept in, the mind is kept in.

18. But when he moves about in sleep (and dream), then these are his worlds. He is, as it were, a great king; he is, as it were, a great Brâhmaṇa ; he rises, as it were, and he falls. And as a great king might keep in his own subjects, and move about, according to his pleasure, within his own domain, thus does that person (who is endowed with intelligence) keep in the various senses (prâṇas) and move about, according to his pleasure, within his own body (while dreaming).

19. Next, when he is in profound sleep, and knows first name was atish/hâh sarveshâm bhûtânâm mûrdhâ râgâ. This throws an important light on the composition of the Upanishads.

¹ The ether in the heart is meant for the real Self. He has come to himself, to his Self, i.e. to the true Brahman.

² Svapiti, he sleeps, is explained as sva, his own Self, and apiti for apyeti, he goes towards, so that 'he sleeps' must be interpreted as meaning 'he comes to his Self.' In another passage it is explained by svam apito bhavati. See Sâṅkara's Commentary on the BrĪh. Âr. Up. vol. i, p. 372.

nothing, there are the seventy-two thousand arteries called Hita, which from the heart spread through the body¹. Through them he moves forth and rests in the surrounding body. And as a young man, or a great king, or a great Brāhmaṇa, having reached the summit of happiness, might rest, so does he then rest.

20. As the spider comes out with its thread, or as small sparks come forth from fire, thus do all senses, all worlds, all Devas, all beings come forth from that Self. The Upanishad (the true name and doctrine) of that Self is 'the True of the True.' Verily the senses are the true, and he is the true of the true.

SECOND BRĀHMAṆA².

1. Verily he who knows the babe³ with his place⁴, his chamber⁵, his post⁶, and his rope⁷, he keeps off the seven relatives⁸ who hate him. Verily by the young is meant the inner life, by his place this (body)⁹, by his chamber this (head), by his post the vital breath, by his rope the food.

2. Then the seven imperishable ones¹⁰ approach him. There are the red lines in the eye, and by them Rudra clings to him. There is the water

¹ 'Not the pericardium only, but the whole body.' Comm.

² Mādhyandina text, p. 1061.

³ The līṅgātman, or subtle body which has entered this body in five ways. Comm.

⁴ The body.

⁵ The head.

⁶ The vital breath.

⁷ Food, which binds the subtle to the coarse body.

⁸ The seven organs of the head through which man perceives and becomes attached to the world.

⁹ The commentator remarks that while saying this, the body and the head are pointed out by touching them with the hand (pāṇipeshapratibodhanena).

¹⁰ See before, I, 5, 1, 2. They are called imperishable, because they produce imperishableness by supplying food for the prāṇa, here called the babe.

in the eye, and by it Parganya clings to him. There is the pupil, and by it Âditya (sun) clings to him. There is the dark iris, and by it Agni clings to him. There is the white eye-ball, and by it Indra clings to him. With the lower eye-lash the earth, with the upper eye-lash the heaven clings to him. He who knows this, his food does never perish.

3. On this there is this Sloka :

‘There ¹ is a cup having its mouth below and its bottom above. Manifold glory has been placed into it. On its lip sit the seven Rishis, the tongue as the eighth communicates with Brahman.’ What is called the cup having its mouth below and its bottom above is this head, for its mouth (the mouth) is below, its bottom (the skull) is above. When it is said that manifold glory has been placed into it, the senses verily are manifold glory, and he therefore means the senses. When he says that the seven Rishis sit on its lip, the Rishis are verily the (active) senses, and he means the senses. And when he says that the tongue as the eighth communicates with Brahman, it is because the tongue, as the eighth, does communicate with Brahman.

4. These two (the two ears) are the Rishis Gautama and Bharadvâga; the right Gautama, the left Bharadvâga. These two (the eyes) are the Rishis Visvâmitra and Gamadagni; the right Visvâmitra, the left Gamadagni. These two (the nostrils) are the Rishis Vasishtha and Kasyapa; the right Vasishtha, the left Kasyapa. The tongue is Atri, for with the tongue food is eaten, and Atri is meant for Atti, eating. He who knows this, becomes an eater of everything, and everything becomes his food.

¹ Cf. Atharva-veda-samh. X, 8, 9.

THIRD BRÂHMANA¹.

1. There are two forms of Brahman, the material and the immaterial, the mortal and the immortal, the solid and the fluid, sat (being) and tya (that), (i.e. sat-tya, true)².

2. Everything except air and sky is material, is mortal, is solid, is definite. The essence of that which is material, which is mortal, which is solid, which is definite is the sun that shines, for he is the essence of sat (the definite).

3. But air and sky are immaterial, are immortal, are fluid, are indefinite. The essence of that which is immaterial, which is immortal, which is fluid, which is indefinite is the person in the disk of the sun, for he is the essence of tyad (the indefinite). So far with regard to the Devas.

4. Now with regard to the body. Everything except the breath and the ether within the body is material, is mortal, is solid, is definite. The essence of that which is material, which is mortal, which is solid, which is definite is the Eye, for it is the essence of sat (the definite).

5. But breath and the ether within the body are immaterial, are immortal, are fluid, are indefinite. The essence of that which is immaterial, which is immortal, which is fluid, which is indefinite is the person in the right eye, for he is the essence of tyad (the indefinite).

6. And what is the appearance of that person? Like a saffron-coloured raiment, like white wool,

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1062.

² Sat is explained by definite, tya or tyad by indefinite.

like cochineal, like the flame of fire, like the white lotus, like sudden lightning. He who knows this, his glory is like unto sudden lightning.

Next follows the teaching (of Brahman) by No, no¹! for there is nothing else higher than this (if one says): 'It is not so.' Then comes the name 'the True of the True,' the senses being the True, and he (the Brahman) the True of them.

FOURTH BRĀHMANA².

1. Now when Yâgñavalkya was going to enter upon another state, he said: 'Maitreyi³, verily I am going away from this my house (into the forest⁴). Forsooth, let me make a settlement between thee and that Kâtyâyani (my other wife).'

2. Maitreyi said: 'My Lord, if this whole earth, full of wealth, belonged to me, tell me, should I be immortal by it⁵?'

¹ See III, 9, 26; IV, 2, 4; IV, 4, 22; IV, 5, 15.

² Mādhyandina text, p. 1062. To the end of the third Brāhmaṇa of the second Adhyāya, all that has been taught does not yet impart the highest knowledge, the identity of the personal and the true Self, the Brahman. In the fourth Brāhmaṇa, in which the knowledge of the true Brahman is to be set forth, the Samnyāsa, the retiring from the world, is enjoined, when all desires cease, and no duties are to be performed (Samnyāsa, pāivrāgya). The story is told again with slight variations in the Brīhadāraṇyaka-upanishad IV, 5. The more important variations, occurring in IV, 5, are added here, marked with B. There are besides the various readings of the Mādhyandina-sâkhâ of the Satapatha-brāhmaṇa. See also Deussen, Vedānta, p. 185.

³ In Brīh. Up. IV, 5, the story begins: Yâgñavalkya had two wives, Maitreyi and Kâtyâyani. Of these Maitreyi was conversant with Brahman, but Kâtyâyani possessed such knowledge only as women possess.

⁴ Instead of udyâsyan, B. gives pravragishyan, the more technical term.

⁵ Should I be immortal by it, or no? B.

‘No,’ replied Yâgñavalkya; ‘like the life of rich people will be thy life. But there is no hope of immortality by wealth.’

3. And Maitreyi said: ‘What should I do with that by which I do not become immortal? What my Lord knoweth (of immortality), tell that to me¹.’

4. Yâgñavalkya replied: ‘Thou who art truly dear to me, thou speakest dear words². Come, sit down, I will explain it to thee, and mark well what I say.’

5. And he said: ‘Verily, a husband is not dear, that you may love the husband; but that you may love the Self, therefore a husband is dear.

‘Verily, a wife is not dear, that you may love the wife; but that you may love the Self, therefore a wife is dear.

‘Verily, sons are not dear, that you may love the sons; but that you may love the Self, therefore sons are dear.

‘Verily, wealth is not dear, that you may love wealth; but that you may love the Self, therefore wealth is dear³.

‘Verily, the Brahman-class is not dear, that you may love the Brahman-class; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Brahman-class is dear.

‘Verily, the Kshatra-class is not dear, that you may love the Kshatra-class; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Kshatra-class is dear.

‘Verily, the worlds are not dear, that you may love the worlds; but that you may love the Self, therefore the worlds are dear.

¹ Tell that clearly to me. B.

² Thou who art dear to me, thou hast increased what is dear (to me in this). B.

³ B. adds, Verily, cattle are not dear, &c.

‘Verily, the Devas are not dear, that you may love the Devas; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Devas are dear¹.

‘Verily, creatures are not dear, that you may love the creatures; but that you may love the Self, therefore are creatures dear.

‘Verily, everything is not dear that you may love everything; but that you may love the Self, therefore everything is dear.

‘Verily, the Self is to be seen, to be heard, to be perceived, to be marked, O Maitreyī! When we see, hear, perceive, and know the Self², then all this is known.

6. ‘Whosoever looks for the Brahman-class elsewhere than in the Self, was³ abandoned by the Brahman-class. Whosoever looks for the Kshatra-class elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Kshatra-class. Whosoever looks for the worlds elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the worlds. Whosoever looks for the Devas elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Devas⁴. Whosoever looks for creatures elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the creatures. Whosoever looks for anything elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by everything. This Brahman-class, this Kshatra-class, these worlds, these Devas⁵, these⁶ creatures, this everything, all is that Self.

7. ‘Now as⁷ the sounds of a drum, when beaten,

¹ B. inserts, Verily, the Vedas are not dear, &c.

² When the Self has been seen, heard, perceived, and known. B.

³ The commentator translates, ‘should be abandoned.’

⁴ B. inserts, Whosoever looks for the Vedas, &c.

⁵ B. adds, these Vedas.

⁶ B. has, all these creatures.

⁷ I construe sa yathâ with evam vai in § 12, looking upon cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the drum is seized or the beater of the drum ;

8. 'And as the sounds of a conch-shell, when blown, cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the shell is seized or the blower of the shell ;

9. 'And as the sounds of a lute, when played, cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the lute is seized or the player of the lute ;

¶ 10. 'As clouds of smoke proceed by themselves out of a lighted fire kindled with damp fuel, thus, verily, O Maitreyî, has been breathed forth from this great Being what we have as Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, Sâma-veda, Atharvângirasas, Itihâsa (legends), Purâna (cosmogonies), Vidyâ (knowledge), the Upanishads, Slokas (verses), Sûtras (prose rules), Anu-vyâkhyânas (glosses), Vyâkhyânas (commentaries)¹. From him alone all these were breathed forth.

¶ 11. 'As all waters find their centre in the sea, all touches in the skin, all tastes in the tongue, all smells in the nose, all colours in the eye, all sounds in the ear, all percepts in the mind, all knowledge in the heart, all actions in the hands, all movements in the feet, and all the Vedas in speech,—

§ 12. 'As a lump of salt², when thrown into water, becomes dissolved into water, and could not be taken

§ 11 as probably a later insertion. The sa is not the pronoun, but a particle, as in sa yadi, sa ket, &c.

¹ B. adds, what is sacrificed, what is poured out, food, drink, this world and the other world, and all creatures.

² See Khând. Up. VI, 13.

out again, but wherever we taste (the water) it is salt,—thus verily, O Maitreyī, does this great Being, endless, unlimited, consisting of nothing but knowledge¹, rise from out these elements, and vanish again in them. When he has departed, there is no more knowledge (name), I say, O Maitreyī.’ Thus spoke Yāgñavalkya.

13. Then Maitreyī said: ‘Here thou hast bewildered me, Sir, when thou sayest that having departed, there is no more knowledge².’

But Yāgñavalkya replied: ‘O Maitreyī, I say nothing that is bewildering. This is enough, O beloved, for wisdom³.

¶ ‘For when there is as it were duality, then one sees the other, one smells the other, one hears the other⁴, one salutes the other⁵, one perceives the other⁶, one knows the other; but when the Self only is all this, how should he smell another⁷, how should he see⁸ another⁹, how should he hear¹⁰ another, how should he salute¹¹ another, how should he perceive another¹², how should he know another? How should he know Him by whom he knows all this?

¹ As a mass of salt has neither inside nor outside, but is altogether a mass of taste, thus indeed has that Self neither inside nor outside, but is altogether a mass of knowledge. B.

² ‘Here, Sir, thou hast landed me in utter bewilderment. Indeed, I do not understand him.’ B.

¶ ³ Verily, beloved, that Self is imperishable, and of an indestructible nature. B.

⁴ B. inserts, one tastes the other.

⁵ B. inserts, one hears the other.

⁶ B. inserts, one touches the other.

⁷ See, B.

⁸ Smell, B.

⁹ B. inserts taste.

¹⁰ Salute, B.

¹¹ Hear, B.

¹² B. inserts, how should he touch another?

How, O beloved, should he know (himself), the Knower¹?

FIFTH BRĀHMANA².

1. This earth is the honey³ (madhu, the effect) of all beings, and all beings are the honey (madhu, the effect) of this earth. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this earth, and that bright immortal person incorporated in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

2. This water is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this water. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this water, and that bright, immortal person, existing as seed in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

¹ Instead of the last line, B. adds (IV, 5, 15): 'That Self is to be described by No, no! He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be comprehended; he is imperishable, for he cannot perish; he is unattached, for he does not attach himself; unfettered, he does not suffer, he does not fail. How, O beloved, should he know the Knower? Thus, O Maitreyî, thou hast been instructed. Thus far goes immortality.' Having said so, Yâgñavalkya went away (into the forest). 15. See also Khând. Up. VII, 24, 1.

² Mādhyandina text, p. 1064.

³ Madhu, honey, seems to be taken here as an instance of something which is both cause and effect, or rather of things which are mutually dependent on each other, or cannot exist without one other. As the bees make the honey, and the honey makes or supports the bees, bees and honey are both cause and effect, or at all events are mutually dependent on one other. In the same way the earth and all living beings are looked upon as mutually dependent, living beings presupposing the earth, and the earth presupposing living beings. This at all events seems to be the general idea of what is called the Madhuvidyâ, the science of honey, which Dadhyaṅk communicated to the Asvins.

3. This fire is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this fire. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this fire, and that bright, immortal person, existing as speech in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

4. This air is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this air. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this air, and that bright, immortal person existing as breath in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

5. This sun is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this sun. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this sun, and that bright, immortal person existing as the eye in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

6. This space (disa½, the quarters) is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this space. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this space, and that bright, immortal person existing as the ear in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

7. This moon is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this moon. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this moon, and that bright, immortal person existing as mind in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

8. This lightning is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this lightning. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this lightning, and that bright, immortal person existing as light in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

9. This thunder¹ is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this thunder. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this thunder, and that bright, immortal person existing as sound and voice in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

10. This ether is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this ether. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this ether, and that bright, immortal person existing as heart-ether in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

11. This law (dharma) is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this law. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this law, and that bright, immortal person existing as law in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

12. This true² (satyam) is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this true. Likewise this bright, immortal person in what is true, and that bright, immortal person existing as the true in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

13. This mankind is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this mankind. Likewise

¹ Stanayitnu, thunder, is explained by the commentator as Parganya.

² Satyam, the true, the real, not, as it is generally translated, the truth.

this bright, immortal person in mankind, and that bright, immortal person existing as man in the body (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

14. This Self is the honey of all beings, and all beings are the honey of this Self. Likewise this bright, immortal person in this Self, and that bright, immortal person, the Self (both are madhu). He indeed is the same as that Self, that Immortal, that Brahman, that All.

15. And verily this Self is the lord of all beings, the king of all beings. And as all spokes are contained in the axle and in the felly of a wheel, all beings, and all those selfs (of the earth, water, &c.) are contained in that Self.

16. Verily Dadhyaċ Âtharvana proclaimed this honey (the madhu-vidyâ) to the two Asvins, and a Rishi, seeing this, said (Rv. I, 116, 12):

‘O ye two heroes (Asvins), I make manifest that fearful deed of yours (which you performed) for the sake of gain¹, like as thunder² makes manifest the rain. The honey (madhu-vidyâ) which Dadhyaċ Âtharvana proclaimed to you through the head of a horse,’ . . .

17. Verily Dadhyaċ Âtharvana³ proclaimed this honey to the two Asvins, and a Rishi, seeing this, said (Rv. I, 117, 22);

‘O Asvins, you fixed a horse’s head on Âtharvana Dadhyaċ, and he, wishing to be true (to his promise), proclaimed to you the honey, both that of *Tvashtri*¹ and that which is to be your secret, O ye strong ones.'

¹ The translation here follows the commentary.

² Tanyatu, here explained as Parganya.

³ Saṅkara distinguishes here between Atharvana and Âtharvana, if the text is correct.

18. Verily Dadhyaċ Ātharvana proclaimed this honey to the two Asvins, and a Rīshi, seeing this, said :

'He (the Lord) made bodies with two feet, he made bodies with four feet. Having first become a bird, he entered the bodies as purusha (as the person).' This very purusha is in all bodies the purīsayā, i.e. he who lies in the body (and is therefore called purusha). There is nothing that is not covered by him, nothing that is not filled by him.

19. Verily Dadhyaċ Ātharvana proclaimed this honey to the two Asvins, and a Rīshi, seeing this, said (Rv. VI, 47, 18) :

'He (the Lord) became like unto every form², and this is meant to reveal the (true) form of him (the Ātman). Indra (the Lord) appears multiform through the Māyās (appearances), for his horses (senses) are yoked, hundreds and ten.'

This (Ātman) is the horses, this (Ātman) is the ten, and the thousands, many and endless. This is the Brahman, without cause and without effect, without anything inside or outside ; this Self is Brahman, omnipresent and omniscient. This is the teaching (of the Upanishads).

¹ Saṅkara explains Tvashtri as the sun, and the sun as the head of the sacrifice which, having been cut off, was to be replaced by the pravargya rite. The knowledge of this rite forms the honey of Tvashtri. The other honey which is to be kept secret is the knowledge of the Self, as taught before in the Madhu-brāhmaṇa.

² He assumed all forms, and such forms, as two-footed or four-footed animals, remained permanent. Comm.

SIXTH BRĀHMANA.

1. Now follows the stem ¹:

1. Pautimāshya from Gaupavana,
2. Gaupavana from Pautimāshya,
3. Pautimāshya from Gaupavana,
4. Gaupavana from Kausika,
5. Kausika from Kaundīnya,
6. Kaundīnya from Sāndīlya,
7. Sāndīlya from Kausika and Gautama,
8. Gautama

2. from Āgnivesya,

9. Āgnivesya from Sāndīlya and Ānabhimlāta,
10. Sāndīlya and Ānabhimlāta from Ānabhimlāta,
11. Ānabhimlāta from Ānabhimlāta,
12. Ānabhimlāta from Gautama,
13. Gautama from Saitava and Prākīnayogya,
14. Saitava and Prākīnayogya from Pârasarya,
15. Pârasarya from Bhâradvâga,
16. Bhâradvâga from Bhâradvâga and Gautama,
17. Gautama from Bhâradvâga,

¹ The line of teachers and pupils by whom the Madhukānda (the fourth Brāhmaṇa) was handed down. The Mādhyandina-sâkhâ begins with ourselves, then 1. Saurpanâya, 2. Gautama, 3. Vâtsya, 4. Vâtsya and Pârasarya, 5. Sâṅkrīya and Bhâradvâga, 6. Audavâhi and Sāndīlya, 7. Vaigavâpa and Gautama, 8. Vaigavâpâya and Vaishṭapureya, 9. Sāndīlya and Rauhinyâna, 10. Saunaka, Âtreya, and Raibhya, 11. Pautimāshyâya and Kaundīnyâna, 12. Kaundīnya, 13. Kaundīnya, 14. Kaundīnya and Āgnivesya, 15. Saitava, 16. Pârasarya, 17. Gâtukarṇya, 18. Bhâradvâga, 19. Bhâradvâga, Âsurâya, and Gautama, 20. Bhâradvâga, 21. Vaigavâpâya. Then the same as the Kânvas to Gâtukarṇya, who learns from Bhâradvâga, who learns from Bhâradvâga, Âsurâya, and Yâska. Then Traivani &c. as in the Kânva-vamśa.

18. Bhâradvâga from Pârâsarya,
19. Pârâsarya from Vaigavâpâyana,
20. Vaigavâpâyana from Kausikâyani,
- 21¹. Kausikâyani
3. from Ghr̥itakausika,
22. Ghr̥itakausika from Pârâsaryâyana,
23. Pârâsaryâyana from Pârâsarya,
24. Pârâsarya from Gâtûkarnya²,
25. Gâtûkarnya from Âsurâyana and Yâska³,
26. Âsurâyana and Yâska from Traivani,
27. Traivani from Aupagandhani,
28. Aupagandhani from Âsuri,
29. Âsuri from Bhâradvâga,
30. Bhâradvâga from Âtreya,
31. Âtreya from Mânti,
32. Mânti from Gautama,
33. Gautama from Gautama,
34. Gautama from Vâtsya,
35. Vâtsya from Sândilya,
36. Sândilya from Kaisorya Kâpya,
37. Kaisorya Kâpya from Kumârahârta,
38. Kumârahârta from Gâlava,
39. Gâlava from Vidarbhi-kaundinya,
40. Vidarbhi - kaundinya from Vatsanapât Bâbhrava,
41. Vatsanapât Bâbhrava from Pathi Saubhara,
42. Pathi Saubhara from Ayâsya Ângirasa,
43. Ayâsya Ângirasa from Âbhûti Tvâshtra,
44. Âbhûti Tvâshtra from Visvarûpa Tvâshtra,
45. Visvarûpa Tvâshtra from Asvinau,

¹ From here the Vamsa agrees with the Vamsa at the end of IV, 6.

² Bhâradvâga, in Mâdhyandina text.

³ Bhâradvâga, Âsurâyana, and Yâska, in Mâdhyandina text.

-
46. Asvinau from Dadhyaċ Ātharvana,
 47. Dadhyaċ Ātharvana from Atharvan Daiva,
 48. Atharvan Daiva from Mrityu Prādhvamsana,
 49. Mrityu Prādhvamsana from Pradhvamsana,
 50. Pradhvamsana from Ekarshi,
 51. Ekarshi from Vipraċitti ¹,
 52. Vipraċitti from Vyashċi,
 53. Vyashċi from Sanāru,
 54. Sanāru from Sanātana,
 55. Sanātana from Sanaga,
 56. Sanaga from Parameshċin,
 57. Parameshċin from Brahman,
 58. Brahman is Svayambhu, self-existent.
- Adoration to Brahman ².
-

¹ Vipragitti, in Mādhyandina text.

² Similar genealogies are found Brh. Ār. Up. IV, 6, and VI, 5.

THIRD ADHYĀYA.

FIRST BRĀHMAṆA ¹.

Adoration to the Highest Self (Paramâtman)!

1. Ganaka Vaideha (the king of the Videhas) sacrificed with a sacrifice at which many presents were offered to the priests of (the Asvamedha). Brāhmanas of the Kurus and the Pāṇḍalas had come thither, and Ganaka Vaideha wished to know, which of those Brāhmanas was the best read. So he enclosed a thousand cows, and ten pâdas (of gold)² were fastened to each pair of horns.

2. And Ganaka spoke to them: 'Ye venerable Brāhmanas, he who among you is the wisest, let him drive away these cows.'

Then those Brāhmanas durst not, but Yâgñavalkya said to his pupil: 'Drive them away, my dear.'

He replied: 'O glory of the *Sâman*³,' and drove them away.

The Brāhmanas became angry and said: 'How could he call himself the wisest among us?'

Now there was Asvala, the Hotri priest of Ganaka Vaideha. He asked him: 'Are you indeed the wisest among us, O Yâgñavalkya ?' He replied : ' I bow before the wisest (the best knower of Brahman), but I wish indeed to have these cows.'

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1067.

² Palakaturbhâgaḥ pâdaḥ suvarṇasya. Comm.

³ One expects iti after udaga, but Sâmasravas is applied to Yâgñavalkya, and not to the pupil. Yâgñavalkya, as the commentator observes, was properly a teacher of the Yagur-veda, but as the pupil calls him Sâmasravas, he shows that Yâgñavalkya knew all the four Vedas, because the Sâmans are taken from the Rig-veda, and the Atharva-veda is contained in the other three Vedas. Regnaud, however, refers it to the pupil, and translates, 'Ô toi qui apprends le Sâma-veda.'

Then Asvala, the Hotri priest, undertook to question him.

3. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'everything here (connected with the sacrifice) is reached by death, everything is overcome by death. By what means then is the sacrificer freed beyond the reach of death ?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'By the Hotri priest, who is Agni (fire), who is speech. For speech is the Hotri of the sacrifice (or the sacrificer), and speech is Agni, and he is the Hotri. This constitutes freedom, and perfect freedom (from death).'

4. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'everything here is reached by day and night, everything is overcome by day and night. By what means then is the sacrificer freed beyond the reach of day and night ?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'By the Adhvaryu priest, who is the eye, who is Âditya (the sun)¹. For the eye is the Adhvaryu of the sacrifice, and the eye is the sun, and he is the Adhvaryu. This constitutes freedom, and perfect freedom.'

5. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'everything here is reached by the waxing and waning of the moon, everything is overcome by the waxing and waning of the moon. By what means then is the sacrificer freed beyond the reach of the waxing and waning of the moon ?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'By the Udgâtri priest, who is Vâyu (the wind), who is the breath. For the breath is the Udgâtri of the sacrifice, and the breath is the wind, and he is the Udgâtri. This constitutes freedom, and perfect freedom.'

¹ One expects âdityena ģakshushâ, instead of ģakshushâdityena, but see § 6.

6. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'this sky is, as it were, without an ascent (staircase.) By what approach does the sacrificer approach the Svarga world?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'By the Brahman priest, who is the mind (manas), who is the moon. For the mind is the Brahman of the sacrifice, and the mind is the moon, and he is the Brahman. This constitutes freedom, and perfect freedom. These are the complete deliverances (from death).'

Next follow the achievements.

7. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'how many Rik verses will the Hotri priest employ to-day at this sacrifice?'

'Three,' replied Yâgñavalkya.

'And what are these three?'

'Those which are called Puronuvâkyâ, Yâgyâ, and, thirdly, Sasyâ¹.'

'What does he gain by them?'

'All whatsoever has breath.'

8. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'how many oblations (âhuti) will the Adhvaryu priest employ to-day at this sacrifice?'

'Three,' replied Yâgñavalkya.

'And what are these three?'

'Those which, when offered, flame up; those which, when offered, make an excessive noise; and those which, when offered, sink down².'

¹ The Puronuvâkyâs are hymns employed before the actual sacrifice, the Yâgyâs accompany the sacrifice, the Sasyâs are used for the Sastra. All three are called Stotriyâs.

² These oblations are explained as consisting of wood and oil, of flesh, and of milk and Soma. The first, when thrown on the

‘What does he gain by them?’

‘By those which, when offered, flame up, he gains the Deva (god) world, for the Deva world flames up, as it were. By those which, when offered, make an excessive noise, he gains the Pitṛi (father) world, for the Pitṛi world is excessively (noisy)¹. By those which, when offered, sink down, he gains the Manushya (man) world, for the Manushya world is, as it were, down below.’

9. ‘Yâgñavalkya,’ he said, ‘with how many deities does the Brahman priest on the right protect to-day this sacrifice?’

‘By one,’ replied Yâgñavalkya.

‘And which is it?’

‘The mind alone; for the mind is endless, and the Visvedevas are endless, and he thereby gains the endless world.’

10. ‘Yâgñavalkya,’ he said, ‘how many Stotriyâ hymns will the Udgâtri priest employ to-day at this sacrifice?’

‘Three,’ replied Yâgñavalkya.

‘And what are these three?’

‘Those which are called Purunuvâkyâ, Yâgyâ, and, thirdly, Sasyâ.’

‘And what are these with regard to the body (adhyâtmam)?’

‘The Purunuvâkyâ is Prâna (up-breathing), the Yâgyâ the Apâna (down-breathing), the Sasyâ the Vyâna (back-breathing).’

fire, flame up. The second, when thrown on the fire, make a loud hissing noise. The third, consisting of milk, Soma, &c., sink down into the earth.

¹ On account of the cries of those who wish to be delivered out of it. Comm.

‘What does he gain by them?’

‘He gains the earth by the Puronuvâkyâ, the sky by the Yâgyâ, heaven by the Sasyâ.’

After that Asvala held his peace.

SECOND BRÂHMANA¹.

1. Then Gâratkârava Ârtabhâga² asked. ‘Yâgñavalkya,’ he said, ‘how many Grahas are there, and how many Atigrahas³?’

‘Eight Grahas,’ he replied, ‘and eight Atigrahas.’

‘And what are these eight Grahas and eight Atigrahas?’

2. ‘Prâna (breath) is one Graha, and that is seized by Apâna (down-breathing) as the Atigrâha⁴, for one smells with the Apâna.’

3. ‘Speech (vâk) is one Graha, and that is seized by name (nâman) as the Atigrâha, for with speech one pronounces names.’

4. ‘The tongue is one Graha, and that is seized by taste as the Atigrâha, for with the tongue one perceives tastes.’

5. ‘The eye is one Graha, and that is seized by form as the Atigrâha, for with the eye one sees forms.’

6. ‘The ear is one Graha, and that is seized by sound as the Atigrâha, for with the ear one hears sounds.’

7. ‘The mind is one Graha, and that is seized by

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1069.

² A descendant of Ârtabhâga of the family of Garatkâru.

³ Graha is probably meant originally in its usual sacrificial sense, as a vessel for offering oblations. But its secondary meaning, in which it is here taken, is a taker, a grasper, i. e. an organ of sense, while atigraha is intended for that which is grasped, i. e. an object of sense.

⁴ Here the â is long, kâândasatvât.

desire as the Atigrâha, for with the mind one desires desires.'

7 8. 'The arms are one Graha, and these are seized by work as the Atigrâha, for with the arms one works work.'

8 9. 'The skin is one Graha, and that is seized by touch as the Atigrâha, for with the skin one perceives touch. These are the eight Grahas and the eight Atigrahas.'

10. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'everything is the food of death. What then is the deity to whom death is food?'

'Fire (agni) is death, and that is the food of water. Death is conquered again.'

11. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'when such a person (a sage) dies, do the vital breaths (prâṇas) move out of him or no?'

'No,' replied Yâgñavalkya; 'they are gathered up in him, he swells, he is inflated, and thus inflated the dead lies at rest.'

12. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'when such a man dies, what does not leave him?'

9 'The name,' he replied; 'for the name is endless, the Visvedevas are endless, and by it he gains the endless world.'

13. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'when the speech of this dead person enters into the fire¹, breath into the air, the eye into the sun, the mind into the moon, the hearing into space, into the earth the body, into the ether the self, into the shrubs the hairs of the body, into the trees the hairs of the head, when the blood and the seed are deposited in the water, where is then that person ?'

¹ The commentator explains purusha here by asamyagdarsin, one who does not know the whole truth. See also Deussen, Vedânta, p. 405, and p. 399, note.

Yâgñavalkya said : 'Take my hand, my friend. We two alone shall know of this; let this question of ours not be (discussed) in public.' Then these two went out and argued, and what they said was karman (work), what they praised was *karman*¹, viz. that a man becomes good by good work, and bad by bad work. After that Gâratkârava Ârtabhâga held his peace.

THIRD BRĀHMAṆA².

1. Then Bhugyu Lâhyâyani asked. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'we wandered about as students³, and came to the house of Patañkala Kâpya. He had a daughter who was possessed by a Gandharva. We asked him, 'Who art thou?' and he (the Gandharva) replied: 'I am Sudhanvan, the Âṅgîrasa.' And when we asked him about the ends of the world, we said to him, 'Where were the *Pârikshitas*⁴? Where then were the Pârikshitas, I ask thee, Yâgñavalkya, where were the Pârikshitas ?'

2. Yâgñavalkya said : 'He said to thee, I suppose, that they went where those go who have performed a horse-sacrifice.'

He said : 'And where do they go who have performed a horse-sacrifice ?'

¹ What is intended is that the samsâra continues by means of karman, while karman by itself never leads to moksha.

² Mâdhyandina text, p. 1070.

³ The commentator explains karakâh as adhyayanârtham vrata-karanâk karakâh, adhvaryavo vâ. See Professor R. G. Bhandarkar, in Indian Antiquary, 1883, p. 145.

⁴ An old royal race, supposed to have vanished from the earth.

Yâgñavalkya replied : 'Thirty-two journeys of the car of the sun is this world. The earth surrounds it on every side, twice as large, and the ocean surrounds this earth on every side, twice as large. Now there is between¹ them a space as large as the edge of a razor or the wing of a mosquito. Indra, having become a bird, handed them (through the space) to Vâyu (the air), and Vâyu (the air), holding them within himself, conveyed them to where they dwell who have performed a horse-sacrifice. Somewhat in this way did he praise Vâyu indeed. Therefore Vâyu (air) is everything by itself, and Vâyu is all things together. He who knows this, conquers death.' After that Bhugyu Lâhyâyani held his peace.

FOURTH BRÂHMANA².

'1. Then Ushasta Kâkrâyana asked. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'tell me the Brahman which is visible, not invisible³, the Self (âtman), who is within all.'

Yâgñavalkya replied : 'This, thy Self, who is within all.'

'Which Self, O Yâgñavalkya, is within all?'

Yâgñavalkya replied : 'He who breathes in the up-breathing, he is thy Self, and within all. He who breathes in the down-breathing, he is thy Self, and within all. He who breathes in the on-breathing, he is thy Self, and within all. He who breathes in ¹ The commentator explains that this small space or hole is between the two halves of the mundane egg.

² Mâdhyandina text, p. 1071. It follows after what is here the fifth Brâhmana, treating of Kahodâ Kaushitakeya.

³ Deussen, Vedânta, p. 163, translates, 'das immanente, nicht transcendente Brahman,' which is right, but too modern.

the out-breathing, he is thy Self, and within all. This is thy Self, who is within all.'

2. Ushasta Kâkrâyana said: 'As one might say, this is a cow, this is a horse, thus has this been explained by thee. Tell me the Brahman which is visible, not invisible, the Self, who is within all.'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'This, thy Self, who is within all.'

'Which Self, O Yâgñavalkya, is within all?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Thou couldst not see the (true) seer of sight, thou couldst not hear the (true) hearer of hearing, nor perceive the perceiver of perception, nor know the knower of knowledge. This is thy Self, who is within all. Everything also is of evil.' After that Ushasta Kâkrâyana held his peace.

FIFTH BRÂHMANA¹.

1. Then Kahola Kaushîtakeya asked. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'tell me the Brahman which is visible, not invisible, the Self (âtman), who is within all.'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'This, thy Self, who is within all.'

'Which Self, O Yâgñavalkya, is within all?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'He who overcomes hunger and thirst, sorrow, passion, old age, and death. When Brâhmanas know that Self, and have risen above the desire for sons², wealth, and (new) worlds³, they wander about as mendicants. For a desire for sons is desire for wealth, a desire for wealth is desire for worlds. Both these are indeed desires. Therefore let a Brâhmana, after he has done with learning, wish to stand by real strength¹; after he has done with that strength and learning, he becomes a Muni (a Yogin); and after he has done with what is not the knowledge of a Muni, and with what is the knowledge of a Muni, he is a Brāhmaṇa. By whatever means he has become a Brāhmaṇa, he is such indeed². Everything else is of evil.' After that Kahola Kaushītakeya held his peace.

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1071, standing before the fourth Brâhmana.

² See Brh. Âr. Up. IV, 4, 22.

³ Life in the world of the Fathers, or in the world of the Gods.

SIXTH BRĀHMAṆA³.

1. Then Gārgī Vāṅaknavī asked. 'Yāgñavalkya,' she said, 'everything here is woven, like warp and woof, in water. What then is that in which water is woven, like warp and woof?'

'In air, O Gārgī,' he replied.

'In what then is air woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of the sky, O Gārgī,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of the sky woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of the Gandharvas, O Gārgī,' he replied.

¹ Knowledge of the Self, which enables us to dispense with all other knowledge.

² Mr. Gough proposes as an alternative rendering: 'Let a Brāhmaṇa renounce learning and become as a child; and after renouncing learning and a childlike mind, let him become a quietist; and when he has made an end of quietism and non-quietism, he shall become a Brāhmaṇa, a Brāhmaṇa indeed.' Deussen takes a similar view, but I doubt whether 'the knowledge of babes' is not a Christian rather than an Indian idea, in spite of Saṅkara's remarks on Ved. Sūtra, III, 4, 50, which are strangely at variance with his commentary here. Possibly the text may be corrupt, for tish/hāset too is a very peculiar form. We might conjecture balyena, as we have abalyam, in IV, 4, 1. In Kaush. Up. III, 3, ābālyam stands for ābālyam, possibly for ābālyam. The construction of kena syād yena syāt tenedṛīṣa eva, however, is well known.

³ Mādhyandina text, p. 1072.

'In what then are the worlds of the Gandharvas woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of Âditya (sun), O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of Âditya (sun) woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of ~~Â~~^{ch}andra (moon), O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of ~~Â~~^{ch}andra (moon) woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of the Nakshatras (stars), O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of the Nakshatras (stars) woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of the Devas (gods), O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of the Devas (gods) woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of Indra, O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of Indra woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of Pragâpati, O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of Pragâpati woven, like warp and woof?'

'In the worlds of Brahman, O Gârgî,' he replied.

'In what then are the worlds of Brahman woven, like warp and woof?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'O Gârgî, Do not ask too much, lest thy head should fall off. Thou askest too much about a deity about which we are not to ask too much¹. Do not ask too much, O Gârgî.' After that Gârgî Vâknavî held her peace.

¹ According to the commentator questions about Brahman are to be answered from the Scriptures only, and not to be settled by argument.

SEVENTH BRĀHMANA¹.

1. Then Uddālaka Āruni² asked. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'we dwelt among the Madras in the houses of Patañkala Kâpya, studying the sacrifice. His wife was possessed of a Gandharva, and we asked him: "Who art thou?" He answered: "I am Kabandha Âtharvana." And he said to Patañkala Kâpya and to (us) students: "Dost thou know, Kâpya, that thread by which this world and the other world, and all beings are strung together?" And Patañkala Kâpya replied: "I do not know it, Sir." He said again to Patañkala Kâpya and to (us) students: "Dost thou know, Kâpya, that puller (ruler) within (antaryâmin), who within pulls (rules) this world and the other world and all beings?" And Patañkala Kâpya replied: "I do not know it, Sir." He said again to Patañkala Kâpya and to (us) students: "He, O Kâpya, who knows that thread and him who pulls (it) within, he knows Brahman, he knows the worlds, he knows the Devas, he knows the Vedas, he knows the Bhûtas (creatures), he knows the Self, he knows everything." Thus did he (the Gandharva) say to them, and I know it. If thou, O Yâgñavalkya, without knowing that string and the puller within, drivest away those Brahma-cows (the cows offered as a prize to him who best knows Brahman), thy head will fall off.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'O Gautama, I believe I know that thread and the puller within.'

¹ Mâdhyaṇdina text, p. 1072.

² Afterwards addressed as Gautama; see before, p. 1, note.

The other said: 'Anybody may say, I know, I know. Tell what thou knowest.'

2. Yâgñavalkya said: 'Vâyu (air) is that thread, O Gautama. By air, as by a thread, O Gautama, this world and the other world, and all creatures are strung together. Therefore, O Gautama, people say of a dead person that his limbs have become unstrung; for by air, as by a thread, O Gautama, they were strung together.'

The other said: 'So it is, O Yâgñavalkya. Tell now (who is) the puller within.'

3. Yâgñavalkya said: 'He who dwells in the earth, and within the earth¹, whom the earth does not know, whose body the earth is, and who pulls (rules) the earth within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

4. 'He who dwells in the water, and within the water, whom the water does not know, whose body the water is, and who pulls (rules) the water within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

5. 'He who dwells in the fire, and within the fire, whom the fire does not know, whose body the fire is, and who pulls (rules) the fire within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

6. 'He who dwells in the sky, and within the sky, whom the sky does not know, whose body the sky is, and who pulls (rules) the sky within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

7. 'He who dwells in the air (vâyu), and within the air, whom the air does not know, whose body the air is, and who pulls (rules) the air within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

¹ I translate antara by 'within,' according to the commentator, who explains it by abhyantara, but I must confess that I should prefer to translate it by 'different from,' as Deussen does, l. c. p. 160, particularly as it governs an ablative.

8. 'He who dwells in the heaven (dyu), and within the heaven, whom the heaven does not know, whose body the heaven is, and who pulls (rules) the heaven within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

9. 'He who dwells in the sun (âditya), and within the sun, whom the sun does not know, whose body the sun is, and who pulls (rules) the sun within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

10. 'He who dwells in the space (disa^h), and within the space, whom the space does not know, whose body the space is, and who pulls (rules) the space within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

11. 'He who dwells in the moon and stars (kān-dra-tâarakam), and within the moon and stars, whom the moon and stars do not know, whose body the moon and stars are, and who pulls (rules) the moon and stars within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

12. 'He who dwells in the ether (âkâsa), and within the ether, whom the ether does not know, whose body the ether is, and who pulls (rules) the ether within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

13. 'He who dwells in the darkness (tamas), and within the darkness, whom the darkness does not know, whose body the darkness is, and who pulls (rules) the darkness within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

14. 'He who dwells in the light (tegas), and within the light, whom the light does not know, whose body the light is, and who pulls (rules) the light within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

So far with respect to the gods (adhidaivatam); now with respect to beings (adhibhûtam).

15. Yâgñavalkya said: 'He who dwells in all beings, and within all beings, whom all beings do not know, whose body all beings are, and who pulls (rules) all beings within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

16. 'He who dwells in the breath (prâna), and within the breath, whom the breath does not know, whose body the breath is, and who pulls (rules) the breath within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

17. 'He who dwells in the tongue (vâk), and within the tongue, whom the tongue does not know, whose body the tongue is, and who pulls (rules) the tongue within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

18. 'He who dwells in the eye, and within the eye, whom the eye does not know, whose body the eye is, and who pulls (rules) the eye within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

19. 'He who dwells in the ear, and within the ear, whom the ear does not know, whose body the ear is, and who pulls (rules) the ear within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

20. 'He who dwells in the mind, and within the mind, whom the mind does not know, whose body the mind is, and who pulls (rules) the mind within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

21. 'He who dwells in the skin, and within the skin, whom the skin does not know, whose body the skin is, and who pulls (rules) the skin within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

22. 'He who dwells in knowledge¹, and within knowledge, whom knowledge does not know, whose body knowledge is, and who pulls (rules) knowledge within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal.'

23. 'He who dwells in the seed, and within the seed, whom the seed does not know, whose body the seed is, and who pulls (rules) the seed within, he is thy Self, the puller (ruler) within, the immortal; unseen, but seeing; unheard, but hearing; unperceived, but perceiving; unknown, but knowing. There is no other seer but he, there is no other hearer but he, there is no other perceiver but he, there is no other knower but he. This is thy Self, the ruler within, the immortal. Everything else is of evil.' After that Uddālaka Āruṇi held his peace.

EIGHTH BRĀHMANA².

1. Then Vâḷaknavi³ said: 'Venerable Brâhmanas, I shall ask him two questions. If he will answer them, none of you, I think, will defeat him in any argument concerning Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'Ask, O Gârgi.'

2. She said: 'O Yâgñavalkya, as the son of a warrior from the Kâśts or Videhas might string his loosened bow, take two pointed foe-piercing arrows in his hand and rise to do battle, I have risen to fight thee with two questions. Answer me these questions.'

¹ Self, i.e. the individual Self, according to the Mâdhyandina school; see Deussen, p. 161.

² Mâdhyandina text, p. 1075.

³ Gârgî, not the wife of Yâgñavalkya.

Yâgñavalkya said : 'Ask, O Gârgî.'

3. She said : 'O Yâgñavalkya, that of which they say that it is above the heavens, beneath the earth, embracing heaven and earth¹, past, present, and future, tell me in what is it woven, like warp and woof?'

4. Yâgñavalkya said : 'That of which they say that it is above the heavens, beneath the earth, embracing heaven and earth, past, present, and future, that is woven, like warp and woof, in the ether (âkâśa).'

5. She said : 'I bow to thee, O Yâgñavalkya, who hast solved me that question. Get thee ready for the second.'

Yâgñavalkya said² : 'Ask, O Gârgî.'

6. She said : 'O Yâgñavalkya, that of which they say that it is above the heavens, beneath the earth, embracing heaven and earth, past, present, and future, tell me in what is it woven, like warp and woof?'

7. Yâgñavalkya said : 'That of which they say that it is above the heavens, beneath the earth, embracing heaven and earth, past, present, and future, that is woven, like warp and woof, in the ether.'

Gârgî said : 'In what then is the ether woven, like warp and woof?'

8. He said : 'O Gârgî, the Brâhmanas call this the Akshara (the imperishable). It is neither coarse nor fine, neither short nor long, neither red (like fire) nor fluid (like water); it is without shadow, without darkness, without air, without ether, without attachment¹, without taste, without smell, without eyes, without ears, without speech, without mind, without light (vigour), without breath, without a mouth (or door), without measure, having no within and no without, it devours nothing, and no one devours it.'

¹ Deussen, p. 143, translates, 'between heaven and earth,' but that would be the antariksha.

² This repetition does not occur in the Mâdhyandina text.

9. 'By the command of that Akshara (the imperishable), O Gârgî, sun and moon stand apart². By the command of that Akshara, O Gârgî, heaven and earth stand apart. By the command of that Akshara, O Gârgî, what are called moments (nimesha), hours (muhûrta), days and nights, half-months, months, seasons, years, all stand apart. By the command of that Akshara, O Gârgî, some rivers flow to the East from the white mountains, others to the West, or to any other quarter. By the command of that Akshara, O Gârgî, men praise those who give, the gods follow the sacrificer, the fathers the Darvî-offering.'

10. 'Whosoever, O Gârgî, without knowing that Akshara (the imperishable), offers oblations in this world, sacrifices, and performs penance for a thousand years, his work will have an end. Whosoever, O Gârgî, without knowing this Akshara, departs this world, he is miserable (like a slave)³. But he, O Gârgî, who departs this world, knowing this Akshara, he is a Brâhmaṇa.'

11. 'That Brahman,' O Gârgî, 'is unseen, but seeing; unheard, but hearing; unperceived, but perceiving; unknown, but knowing. There is nothing

¹ Not adhering to anything, like lac or gum.

² Each follows its own course.

³ 'He stores up the effects from work, like a miser his riches,' Roer. 'He is helpless,' Gough.

that sees but it, nothing that hears but it, nothing that perceives but it, nothing that knows but it. In that Akshara then, O Gârgî, the ether is woven, like warp and woof.'

12. Then said Gârgî: 'Venerable Brâhmans, you may consider it a great thing, if you get off by bowing before him. No one, I believe, will defeat him in any argument concerning Brahman.' After that Vâknavî held her peace.

NINTH BRĀHMANA¹.

1. Then Vidagdha Sâkalya asked him²: 'How many gods are there, O Yâgñavalkya?' He replied with this very Nivid³: 'As many as are mentioned in the Nivid of the hymn of praise addressed to the Visvedevas, viz. three and three hundred, three and three thousand⁴.'

'Yes,' he said, and asked again: 'How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?'

'Thirty-three,' he said.

¹ Mâdhyandina text, p. 1076.

² This disputation between Yâgñavalkya and Vidagdha Sâkalya occurs in a simpler form in the Satapatha-brâhmana, XI, p. 873. He is here represented as the first who defies Yâgñavalkya, and whom Yâgñavalkya asks at once, whether the other Brâhmans had made him the ulmukâvakshayana, the cat's paw, literally one who has to take a burning piece of wood out of the fire (ardha-dagdhakâshtham ulmukam; tasya vahnirasanam avakshayanam vinârah). The end, however, is different, for on asking the nature of the one god, the Prâna, he is told by Yâgñavalkya that he has asked for what he ought not to ask, and that therefore he will die and thieves will carry away his bones.

³ Nivid, old and short invocations of the gods; devatâsaṅkhyâ-vâkâkâni mantrapadâni kânikid vaisvadeve sastre sasyante. Saṅkara and Dvivedagaṅga.

⁴ This would make 3306 devatâs.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked again : ‘How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?’

‘Six,’ he said.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked again : ‘How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?’

‘Three,’ he said.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked again : ‘How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?’

‘Two,’ he said.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked again : ‘How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?’

‘One and a half (adhyardha),’ he said.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked again : ‘How many gods are there really, O Yâgñavalkya?’

‘One,’ he said.

‘Yes,’ he said, and asked : ‘Who are these three and three hundred, three and three thousand?’

2. Yâgñavalkya replied : ‘They are only the various powers of them, in reality there are only thirty-three gods¹.’

He asked : ‘Who are those thirty-three?’

Yâgñavalkya replied : ‘The eight Vasus, the eleven Rudras, the twelve Âdityas. They make thirty-one, and Indra and Pragâpati make the thirty-three².’

3. He asked : ‘Who are the Vasus.’

Yâgñavalkya replied : ‘Agni (fire), Prithivî (earth), Vâyu (air), Antariksha (sky), Âditya (sun), Dyû (heaven), Kândramas (moon), the Nakshatras (stars), these are the Vasus, for in them all that dwells (this world)³ rests; and therefore they are called Vasus.’

¹ ‘The glories of these are three and thirty.’ Gough, p. 172.

² Trayastrimsau, i. e. trayastrimsatah pûranau.

³ The etymological explanation of Vasu is not quite clear, and

4. He asked : 'Who are the Rudras ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'These ten vital breaths (prānas, the senses, i. e. the five gñānendriyas, and the five karmendriyas), and Ātman¹, as the eleventh. When they depart from this mortal body, they make us cry (rodayanti), and because they make us cry, they are called Rudras.'

5. He asked : 'Who are the Ādityas ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'The twelve months of the year, and they are Ādityas, because they move along (yanti), taking up everything² (ādadānāḥ). Because they move along, taking up everything, therefore they are called Ādityas.'

6. He asked : 'And who is Indra, and who is Pragâpati ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'Indra is thunder, Pragâpati is the sacrifice.'

He asked : 'And what is the thunder ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'The thunderbolt.'

He asked : 'And what is the sacrifice ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'The (sacrificial) animals.'

7. He asked : 'Who are the six ?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'Agni (fire), Prithivī (earth), Vāyu (air), Antariksha (sky), Āditya (sun), Dyū (heaven), they are the six, for they are all³ this, the six.'

8. He asked : 'Who are the three gods ?'

the commentator hardly explains our text. Perhaps vasu is meant for the world or the dwellers therein. The more usual explanation occurs in the Satap. Brâh. p. 1077, etc hīdam sarvam vâsayante tadyad idam sarvam vâsayante tasmâd vasava iti; or on p. 874, where we read te yad idam sarvam &c.

¹ Ātman is here explained as manas, the common sensory.

² The life of men, and the fruits of their work.

³ They are the thirty-three gods..

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'These three worlds, for in them all these gods exist.'

He asked : 'Who are the two gods?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'Food and breath.'

He asked : 'Who is the one god and a half?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'He that blows.'

9. Here they say : 'How is it that he who blows like one only, should be called one and a half (adhyardha)?' And the answer is : 'Because, when the wind was blowing, everything grew (adhyardhnot).'

He asked : 'Who is the one god?'

Yāgñavalkya replied : 'Breath (prāna), and he is Brahman (the Sūtrātman), and they call him That (tyad).'

10. Sākalya said¹ : 'Whosoever knows that person (or god) whose dwelling (body) is the earth, whose sight (world) is fire², whose mind is light,—the prin-

¹ I prefer to attribute this to Sākalya, who is still the questioner, and not Yāgñavalkya; but I am not quite satisfied that I am right in this, or in the subsequent distribution of the parts, assigned to each speaker. If Sākalya is the questioner, then the sentence, veda vā aham tam puruṣam sarvasyātmanaḥ parāyanam yam āttha, must belong to Yāgñavalkya, because he refers to the words of another speaker. Lastly, the sentence vadaiva has to be taken as addressed to Sākalya. The commentator remarks that, he being the questioner, one expects prikkha instead of vada. But Yāgñavalkya may also be supposed to turn round on Sākalya and ask him a question in turn, more difficult than the question addressed by Sākalya to Yāgñavalkya, and in that case the last sentence must be taken as an answer, though an imperfect one, of Sākalya's. The commentator seems to think that after Yāgñavalkya told Sākalya to ask this question, Sākalya was frightened and asked it, and that then Yāgñavalkya answered in turn.

² The Mādhyandina text varies considerably. It has the first time, kashur lokaḥ for agnir lokaḥ. I keep to the same construction throughout, taking mano gyoṭiḥ, not as a compound, but like agnir loko yasya, as a sentence, i. e. mano gyoṭir yasya.

ciple of every (living) self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. This corporeal (material, earthy) person, "he is he." But tell me¹, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ² (deity)?'

Sâkalya replied : ' The Immortal³.'

11. Sâkalya said : ' Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling is love (a body capable of sensual love), whose sight is the heart, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. This love-made (loving) person, "he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ?'

Sâkalya replied : ' The women⁴.'

12. Sâkalya said : ' Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling are the colours, whose sight is the eye, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. That person in the sun, "he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ?'

Sâkalya replied : ' The True⁵.'

13. Sâkalya said : ' Whosoever knows that person

¹ Ask me. Comm.

² That from which he is produced, that is his devatâ. Comm.

³ According to the commentator, the essence of food, which produces blood, from which the germ receives life and becomes an embryo and a living being.

⁴ Because they excite the fire of love. Comm.

⁵ The commentator explains satya, the true, by the eye, because the sun owes its origin to the eye.

whose dwelling is ether, whose sight is the ear, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. The person who hears¹ and answers, "he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ?'

Sâkalya replied: 'Space.'

14. Sâkalya said: 'Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling is darkness, whose sight is the heart, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. The shadowy² person, "he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ?'

Sâkalya replied: 'Death.'

15. Sâkalya said: 'Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling are (bright) colours, whose sight is the eye, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. The person in the looking-glass, "he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ?'

Sâkalya replied: 'Vital breath' (asu).

16. Sâkalya said: 'Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling is water, whose sight is the heart, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya.'

¹ Read srautra instead of srotra; see Bṛh. Âr. Up. II, 5, 6.

² Shadow, kṛhâyâ, is explained here by agnâna, ignorance, not by gñâna, knowledge.

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. The person in the water, " he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ? '

Sâkalya replied : ' Varuna. '

17. Sâkalya said : ' Whosoever knows that person whose dwelling is seed, whose sight is the heart, whose mind is light,—the principle of every self, he indeed is a teacher, O Yâgñavalkya. '

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' I know that person, the principle of every self, of whom thou speakest. The filial person, " he is he." But tell me, Sâkalya, who is his devatâ? '

Sâkalya replied : ' Pragâpati. '

18. Yâgñavalkya said : ' Sâkalya, did those Brâhmanas (who themselves shrank from the contest) make thee the victim¹? '

Sâkalya said : ' Yâgñavalkya, because thou hast decried the Brâhmanas of the Kuru-Pañkâlas, what² Brahman dost thou know? '

19. Yâgñavalkya said : ' I know the quarters with their deities and their abodes. '

¹ Âṅgārāvakshayana is explained as a vessel in which coals are extinguished, and Ānandagiri adds that Yâgñavalkya, in saying that Sâkalya was made an âṅgārāvakshayana by his fellow Brâhmanas, meant that he was given up by them as a victim, in fact that he was being burnt or consumed by Yâgñavalkya. I should prefer to take âṅgārāvakshayana in the sense of ulmukāvakshayana, an instrument with which one takes burning coals from the fire to extinguish them, a pair of tongs. Read sandamsa instead of sandesa. Kshi with ava means to remove, to take away. We should call an âṅgārāvakshayana a cat's paw. The Brâhmanas used Sâkalya as a cat's paw.

² It seems better to take kim as the interrogative pronoun than as an interrogative particle.

Sākalya said : ' If thou knowest the quarters with their deities and their abodes,

20. ' Which is thy deity in the Eastern quarter?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' Âditya (the sun).'

Sākalya said : ' In what does that Âditya abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the eye.'

Sākalya said : ' In what does the eye abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the colours, for with the eye he sees the colours.'

Sākalya said : ' And in what then do the colours abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the heart¹, for we know colours by the heart, for colours abide in the heart².'

Sākalya said : ' So it is indeed, O Yâgñavalkya.'

21. Sākalya said : ' Which is thy deity in the Southern quarter?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' Yama.'

Sākalya said : ' In what does that Yama abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the sacrifice.'

Sākalya said : ' In what does the sacrifice abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the Dakshinâ (the gifts to be given to the priests).'

Sākalya said : ' In what does the Dakshinâ abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In Sradhâ (faith), for if a man believes, then he gives Dakshinâ, and Dakshinâ truly abides in faith.'

Sākalya said : ' And in what then does faith abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' In the heart, for by the heart faith knows, and therefore faith abides in the heart.'

Sākalya said : ' So it is indeed, O Yâgñavalkya.'

¹ Heart stands here for buddhi and manas together. Comm.

² In the text, published by Dr. Roer in the Bibliotheca Indica, a sentence is left out, viz. hrīdaya ity uvāka, hrīdayena hi rūpāni gānāti, hrīdaye hy eva rūpāni pratish/hitāni bhavantīty.

22. Sākalya said : 'Which is thy deity in the Western quarter?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'Varuna.'

Sākalya said : 'In what does that Varuna abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the water.'

Sākalya said : 'In what does the water abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the seed.'

Sākalya said : 'And in what does the seed abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the heart. And therefore also they say of a son who is like his father, that he seems as if slipt from his heart, or made from his heart; for the seed abides in the heart.'

Sākalya said : 'So it is indeed, O Yâgñavalkya.'

23. Sākalya said : 'Which is thy deity in the Northern quarter?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'Soma.'

Sākalya said : 'In what does that Soma abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the Dīkshâ¹.'

Sākalya said : 'In what does the Dīkshâ abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the True; and therefore they say to one who has performed the Dīkshâ, Speak what is true, for in the True indeed the Dīkshâ abides.'

Sākalya said : 'And in what does the True abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'In the heart, for with the heart do we know what is true, and in the heart indeed the True abides.'

Sākalya said : 'So it is indeed, O Yâgñavalkya.'

24. Sākalya said : 'Which is thy deity in the zenith?'

¹ Dīkshâ is the initiatory rite for the Soma sacrifice. Having sacrificed with Soma which has to be bought, the sacrificer becomes endowed with wisdom, and wanders to the North, which is the quarter of Soma.

Yâgñavalkya said: 'Agni.'

Sâkalya said: 'In what does that Agni abide.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In speech.'

Sâkalya said: 'And in what does speech abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the heart.'

Sâkalya said: 'And in what does the heart abide?'

25. Yâgñavalkya said: 'O Ahallika¹, when you think the heart could be anywhere else away from us, if it were away from us, the dogs might eat it, or the birds tear it.'

26. Sâkalya said: 'And in what dost thou (thy body) and the Self (thy heart) abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the Prâna (breath).'

Sâkalya said: 'In what does the Prâna abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the Apâna (down-breathing)².'

Sâkalya said: 'In what does the Apâna abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the Vyâna (back-breathing)³.'

Sâkalya said: 'In what does the Vyâna abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the Udâna (the out-breathing)⁴.'

Sâkalya said: 'In what does the Udâna abide?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'In the Samâna⁵. That Self

¹ A term of reproach, it may be a ghost or preta, because ahani liyate, it disappears by day.

² Because the prâna would run away, if it were not held back by the apâna.

³ Because the apâna would run down, and the prâna up, if they were not held back by the vyâna.

⁴ Because all three, the prâna, apâna, and vyâna, would run away in all directions, if they were not fastened to the udâna.

⁵ The Samâna can hardly be meant here for one of the five prânas, generally mentioned before the udâna, but, as explained by Dvivedaganga, stands for the Sûtrâtman. This Sûtrâtman abides in the Antaryâmin, and this in the Brahman (Kûâstha), which is (âtman) is to be described by No, no¹! He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be (is not) comprehended; he is imperishable, for he cannot perish; he is unattached, for he does not attach himself; unfettered, he does not suffer, he does not fail.'

* 'These are the eight abodes (the earth, &c.), the eight worlds (fire, &c.), the eight gods (the immortal food, &c.), the eight persons (the corporeal, &c.) He who after dividing and uniting these persons², went beyond (the Samâna), that person, taught in the Upanishads, I now ask thee (to teach me). If thou shalt not explain him to me, thy head will fall.'

Sākalya did not know him, and his head fell, nay, thieves took away his bones, mistaking them for something else.

27. Then Yâgñavalkya said: 'Reverend Brâhmanas, whosoever among you desires to do so, may now question me. Or question me, all of you. Or whosoever among you desires it, I shall question him, or I shall question all of you.

But those Brâhmanas durst not (say anything).

28. Then Yâgñavalkya questioned them with these Slokas:

1. 'As a mighty tree in the forest, so in truth is man, his hairs are the leaves, his outer skin is the bark.

2. 'From his skin flows forth blood, sap from the skin (of the tree); and thus from the wounded therefore described next. Could Samâna be here the same as in IV, 3, 7?

¹ See before, II, 3, 6; also IV, 2, 4; IV, 4, 22; IV, 5, 15.

² Dividing them according to the different abodes, worlds, and persons, and uniting them at last in the heart.

man¹ comes forth blood, as from a tree that is struck.

3. 'The lumps of his flesh are (in the tree) the layers of wood, the fibre is strong like the tendons². The bones are the (hard) wood within, the marrow is made like the marrow of the tree.

4. 'But, while the tree, when felled, grows up again more young from the root, from what root, tell me, does a mortal grow up, after he has been felled by death?

5. 'Do not say, "from seed," for seed is produced from the living³; but a tree, springing from a grain, clearly⁴ rises again after death⁵.

6. 'If a tree is pulled up with the root, it will not grow again; from what root then, tell me, does a mortal grow up, after he has been felled by death?

7. 'Once born, he is not born (again); for who should create him again⁶?'

¹ In the Mādhyandina-sâkhâ, p. 1080, tasmât tadâtunnât, instead of tasmât tadâtrimât.

² Saṅkara seems to have read snâvavat, instead of snâva tat sthiram, as we read in both Sâkhâs.

³ Here the Mādhyandinas (p. 1080) add, gâta eva na gâyate, ko nv enam ganayet punaḥ, which the Kânvas place later.

⁴ Instead of aṅgasâ, the Mādhyandinas have anyataḥ.

⁵ The Mādhyandinas have dhânâruha u vai, which is better than iva vai, the iva being, according to Saṅkara's own confession, useless. The thread of the argument does not seem to have been clearly perceived by the commentators. What the poet wants to say is, that a man, struck down by death, does not come to life again from seed, because human seed comes from the living only, while trees, springing from grain, are seen to come to life after the tree (which yielded the grain or the seed) is dead. Pretya-sambhava, like pretya-bhâva, means life after death, and pretyasambhava, as an adjective, means coming to life after death.

⁶ This line too is taken in a different sense by the commentator. According to him, it would mean: 'If you say, He has been born ‘Brahman, who is knowledge and bliss, he is the principle, both to him who gives gifts¹, and also to him who stands firm, and knows.’

(and there is an end of all questioning), I say, No; he is born again, and the question is, How?’ This is much too artificial. The order of the verses in the Mādhyandina-jâkhâ is better on the whole, leading up more naturally to the question, ‘From what root then does a mortal grow up, after he has been felled by death?’ When the Brâhmans cannot answer, Yâgñavalkya answers, or the Sruti declares, that the root from whence a mortal springs again, after death, is Brahman.

¹ Saṅkara explains râtir dâtuḥ as râter dâtuḥ, a reading adopted by the Mādhyandinas. He then arrives at the statement that Brahman is the principle or the last source, also the root of a new life, both for those who practise works and for those who, having relinquished works, stand firm in knowledge. Regnaud (II, p. 138) translates: ‘C’est Brahma (qui est) l’intelligence, le bonheur, la richesse, le but suprême de celui qui offre (des sacrifices), et de celui qui réside (en lui), de celui qui connaît.’

FOURTH ADHYĀYA.

FIRST BRĀHMANA.

1. When Ganaka Vaideha was sitting (to give audience), Yâgñavalkya approached, and Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Yâgñavalkya, for what object did you come, wishing for cattle, or for subtle questions¹?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'For both, Your Majesty;

2. 'Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

Ganaka Vaideha replied: 'Gitvan Sailini told me that speech (vâk) is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did Sailini² tell you, that speech is Brahman; for what is the use of a dumb person? But did he tell you the body (âyatana) and the resting-place (pratisṭhâ) of that Brahman?'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'He did not tell me.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only³.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Then tell me, Yâgñavalkya.'

¹ Anv-anta, formed like Sûtrânta, Siddhânta, and probably Vedânta, means subtle questions.

² Roer and Poley give here Sailina; Weber also (pp. 1080 and 1081) has twice Sailina (Silinasyâpatyam).

³ This seems to mean that Gitvan's explanation of Brahman is lame or imperfect, because there are four pâdas of that Brahman, and he taught one only. The other three are its body, its place, and its form of worship (pragñetīyam upanishad brahmanas katur-thaḥ pâdaḥ). See also Maitr. Up. VII, p. 221.

Yâgñavalkya said: 'The tongue is its body, ether its place, and one should worship it as knowledge.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'What is the nature of that knowledge?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Your Majesty, speech itself (is knowledge). For through speech, Your Majesty, a friend is known (to be a friend), and likewise the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, Sâma-veda, the Atharvângi-rasas, the Itihâsa (tradition), Purâna-vidyâ (knowledge of the past), the Upanishads, Slokas (verses), Sûtras (rules), Anuvyâkhyânas and Vyâkhyânas (commentaries¹, &c.); what is sacrificed, what is poured out, what is (to be) eaten and drunk, this world and the other world, and all creatures. By speech alone, Your Majesty, Brahman is known, speech indeed, O King, is the Highest Brahman. Speech does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.'

3. Yâgñavalkya said: 'Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

Ganaka Vaideha replied: 'Udañka Saulbâyana told me that life (prâna)² is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did ¹ See before, II, 4, 10; and afterwards, IV, 5, 11.

² See Taitt. Up. III, 3.

Udañka Saulbâyana tell you that life is Brahman ; for what is the use of a person without life ? But did he tell you the body and the resting-place of that Brahman ?'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' He did not tell me.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only.'

Ganaka Vaideha said ; ' Then tell me, Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' Breath is its body, ether its place, and one should worship it as what is dear.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' What is the nature of that which is dear ?'

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' Your Majesty, life itself (is that which is dear) ;' because for the sake of life, Your Majesty, a man sacrifices even for him who is unworthy of sacrifice, he accepts presents from him who is not worthy to bestow presents, nay, he goes to a country, even when there is fear of being hurt¹, for the sake of life. Life, O King, is the Highest Brahman. Life does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.'

4. Yâgñavalkya said : ' Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

¹ Or it may mean, he is afraid of being hurt, to whatever country he goes, for the sake of a livelihood.

Ganaka Vaideha replied : 'Barku Vārshna told me that sight (lakshus) is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did Barku Vārshna tell you that sight is Brahman ; for what is the use of a person who cannot see ? But did he tell you the body and the resting-place of that Brahman ?'

Ganaka Vaideha said : 'He did not tell me.'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : 'Then tell me, Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'The eye is its body, ether its place, and one should worship it as what is true.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : 'What is the nature of that which is true ?'

Yâgñavalkya replied : 'Your Majesty, sight itself (is that which is true) ; for if they say to a man who sees with his eye, "Didst thou see ?" and he says, "I saw," then it is true. Sight, O King, is the Highest Brahman. Sight does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : 'I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.'

Yâgñavalkya said : 'My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.'

5. Yâgñavalkya said : 'Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

Ganaka Vaideha replied : 'Gardabhīvibhīta Bhāradvāja told me that hearing (śrotra) is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did Gardabhîvibhîta Bhâradvâga tell you that hearing is Brahman; for what is the use of a person who cannot hear? But did he tell you the body and the resting-place of that Brahman?'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' He did not tell me.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' Then tell me, Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' The ear is its body, ether its place, and we should worship it as what is endless.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' What is the nature of that which is endless?'

Yâgñavalkya replied : ' Your Majesty, space (disa^h) itself (is that which is endless), and therefore to whatever space (quarter) he goes, he never comes to the end of it. For space is endless. Space indeed, O King, is hearing¹, and hearing indeed, O King, is the Highest Brahman. Hearing does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.'

Yâgñavalkya said : ' My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.'

6. Yâgñavalkya said : ' Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

¹ Dvivedagaṅga states, digbhâgo hi pārthivâdhish/hânâvakkhinnaḥ srotram ity ukyate, atas tayoṛ ekatvam.

Ganaka Vaideha replied: 'Satyakâma Gâbâla told me that mind ¹ (manas) is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did Satyakâma Gâbâla tell you that mind is Brahman; for what is the use of a person without mind? But did he tell you the body and the resting-place of that Brahman?'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'He did not tell me.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Then tell me, Yâgñavalkya.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'Mind itself is its body, ether its place, and we should worship it as bliss.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'What is the nature of bliss?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Your Majesty, mind itself; for with the mind does a man desire a woman, and a like son is born of her, and he is bliss. Mind indeed, O King, is the Highest Brahman. Mind does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.'

7. Yâgñavalkya said: 'Let us hear what anybody may have told you.'

Ganaka Vaideha replied: 'Vidagdha Sâkalya told me that the heart (hrîdaya) is Brahman.'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'As one who had (the benefit of a good) father, mother, and teacher might tell, so did Vidagdha Sākalya tell you that the heart is Brahman; for what is the use of a person without a heart? But did he tell you the body and the resting-place of that Brahman?’

¹ See also Taitt. Up. III, 4.

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘He did not tell me.’

Yāgñavalkya said: ‘Your Majesty, this (Brahman) stands on one leg only.’

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘Then tell me, Yāgñavalkya.’

Yāgñavalkya said: ‘The heart itself is its body, ether its place, and we should worship it as certainty (sthiti).’

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘What is the nature of certainty?’

Yāgñavalkya replied: ‘Your Majesty, the heart itself; for the heart indeed, O King, is the body of all things, the heart is the resting-place of all things, for in the heart, O King, all things rest. The heart indeed, O King, is the Highest Brahman. The heart does not desert him who worships that (Brahman) with such knowledge, all creatures approach him, and having become a god, he goes to the gods.’

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘I shall give you (for this) a thousand cows with a bull as big as an elephant.’

Yāgñavalkya said: ‘My father was of opinion that one should not accept a reward without having fully instructed a pupil.’

SECOND BRĀHMAṆA.

1. Ganaka Vaideha, descending from his throne, said: ‘I bow to you, O Yāgñavalkya, teach me.’

Yāgñavalkya said: ‘Your Majesty, as a man who wishes to make a long journey, would furnish himself with a chariot or a ship, thus is your mind well furnished by these Upanishads¹. You are honourable, and wealthy, you have learnt the Vedas and been told the Upanishads. Whither then will you go when departing hence?’

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘Sir, I do not know whither I shall go.’

Yâgñavalkya said: ‘Then I shall tell you this, whither you will go.’

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘Tell it, Sir.’

2. Yâgñavalkya said: ‘That person who is in the right eye², he is called Indha, and him who is Indha they call indeed³ Indra mysteriously, for the gods love what is mysterious, and dislike what is evident.

3. ‘Now that which in the shape of a person is in the right eye, is his wife, Virâg⁴. Their meeting-place⁵ is the ether within the heart, and their food the red lump within the heart. Again, their covering⁶ is that which is like net-work within the heart, and the road on which they move (from sleep to waking) is the artery that rises upwards from the heart. Like a hair divided into a thousand parts, so are the veins of it, which are called Hita⁷, placed

¹ This refers to the preceding doctrines which had been communicated to Ganaka by other teachers, and particularly to the upâsanâs of Brahman as knowledge, dear, true, endless, bliss, and certainty.

² See also Maitr. Up. VII, p. 216.

³ The Mâdhyandinas read paroksheneva, but the commentator explains iva by eva. See also Ait. Up. I, 3, 14.

⁴ Indra is called by the commentator Vaisvânara, and his wife Virâg. This couple, in a waking state, is Visva; in sleep, Taigasa.

⁵ Samstâva, lit. the place where they sing praises together, that is, where they meet.

⁶ Prâvarana may also mean hiding-place, retreat.

⁷ Hita, a name frequently given to these nâdis; see IV, 3, 20; Khând. Up. VI, 5, 3, comm.; Kaush. Up. IV, 20. See also Kaṭha Up. VI, 16.

firmly within the heart. Through these indeed that (food) flows on flowing, and he (the Taigasa) receives as it were purer food¹ than the corporeal Self (the Vaisvânara).

4. 'His (the Taigasa's) Eastern quarter are the prâṇas (breath) which go to the East;

'His Southern quarter are the prâṇas which go to the South;

'His Western quarter are the prâṇas which go to the West;

'His Northern quarter are the prâṇas which go to the North;

'His Upper (Zenith) quarter are the prâṇas which go upward;

'His Lower (Nadir) quarter are the prâṇas which go downward;

'All the quarters are all the prâṇas. And he (the Âtman in that state) can only be described by No², no! He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be comprehended; he is undecaying, for he cannot decay; he is not attached, for he does not attach himself; he is unbound, he does not suffer, he does not perish. O Ganaka, you have indeed reached fearlessness,'—thus said Yâgñavalkya.

Then Ganaka said: 'May that fearlessness come to you also who teachest us fearlessness. I bow to you. Here are the Videhas, and here am I (thy slave).'

¹ Dvivedagaṅga explains that food, when it is eaten, is first of all changed into the coarse food, which goes away downward, and into the subtler food. This subtler food is again divided into the middle juice that feeds the body, and the finest, which is called the red lump.

² See Brĕh. Up. II, 3, 6; IV, 9, 26.

THIRD BRÂHMANA.

1. Yâgñavalkya came to Ganaka Vaideha, and he did not mean to speak with him¹. But when formerly

¹ The introduction to this Brâhmana has a very peculiar interest, as showing the close coherence of the different portions which together form the historical groundwork of the Upanishads. Ganaka Vaideha and Yâgñavalkya are leading characters in the Bṛihadâraṇyaka-upanishad, and whenever they meet they seem to converse quite freely, though each retains his own character, and Yâgñavalkya honours Ganaka as king quite as much as Ganaka honours Yâgñavalkya as a Brâhmana. Now in our chapter we read that Yâgñavalkya did not wish to enter on a discussion, but that Ganaka was the first to address him (pûrvam paprakṣha). This was evidently considered not quite correct, and an explanation is given, that Ganaka took this liberty because on a former occasion Yâgñavalkya had granted him permission to address questions to him, whenever he liked. It might be objected that such an explanation looks very much like an after-thought, and we find indeed that in India itself some of the later commentators tried to avoid the difficulty by dividing the words sa mene na vadishya iti, into sam enena vadishya iti, so that we should have to translate, 'Yâgñavalkya came to Ganaka intending to speak with him.' (See Dvivedagaṅga's Comm. p. 1141.) This is, no doubt, a very ingenious conjecture, which might well rouse the envy of European scholars. But it is no more. The accents decide nothing, because they are changed by different writers, according to their different views of what the Pada text ought to be. What made me prefer the reading which is supported by Saṅkara and Dvivedagaṅga, though the latter alludes to the other padakṣheda, is that the tmesis, sam enena vadishye, does not occur again, while sa mene is a common phrase. But the most interesting point, as I remarked before, is that this former disputation between Ganaka and Yâgñavalkya and the permission granted to the King to ask any question he liked, is not a mere invention to account for the apparent rudeness by which Yâgñavalkya is forced to enter on a discussion against his will, but actually occurs in a former chapter. In Satap. Br. XI, 6, 2, 10, we read: tasmai ha Yâgñavalkyo varam dadau; sa hovâta, kâma-

Ganaka Vaideha and Yâgñavalkya had a disputation on the Agnihotra, Yâgñavalkya had granted him a boon, and he chose (for a boon) that he might be free to ask him any question he liked. Yâgñavalkya granted it, and thus the King was the first to ask him a question.

2. 'Yâgñavalkya,' he said, 'what is the light of man¹?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'The sun, O King; for, having the sun alone for his light, man sits, moves about, does his work, and returns.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'So indeed it is, O Yâgñavalkya.'

3. Ganaka Vaideha said: 'When the sun has set, O Yâgñavalkya, what is then the light of man?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'The moon indeed is his light; for, having the moon alone for his light, man sits, moves about, does his work, and returns.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'So indeed it is, O Yâgñavalkya.'

4. Ganaka Vaideha said: 'When the sun has set, O Yâgñavalkya, and the moon has set, what is the light of man?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Fire indeed is his light;

prasna eva me tvayi Yâgñavalkyâsad iti, tato brahmâ Ganaka âsa. This would show that Ganaka was considered almost like a Brâhmana, or at all events enjoyed certain privileges which were supposed to belong to the first caste only. See, for a different view, Deussen, Vedânta, p. 203; Regnaud (Matériaux pour servir à l'histoire de la philosophie de l'Inde), Errata; and Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. lxxiii.

¹ Read kimgyotir as a Bahuvrîhi. Purusha is difficult to translate. It means man, but also the true essence of man, the soul, as we should say, or something more abstract still, the person, as I generally translate it, though a person beyond the Ego.

for, having fire alone for his light, man sits, moves about, does his work, and returns.'

5. Ganaka Vaideha said: 'When the sun has set, O Yâgñavalkya, and the moon has set, and the fire is gone out, what is then the light of man?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Sound indeed is his light; for, having sound alone for his light, man sits, moves about, does his work, and returns. Therefore, O King, when one cannot see even one's own hand, yet when a sound is raised, one goes towards it.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'So indeed it is, O Yâgñavalkya.'

6. Ganaka Vaideha said: 'When the sun has set, O Yâgñavalkya, and the moon has set, and the fire is gone out, and the sound hushed, what is then the light of man?'

Yâgñavalkya said: 'The Self indeed is his light; for, having the Self alone as his light, man sits, moves about, does his work, and returns.'

7. Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Who is that Self?'

Yâgñavalkya replied: 'He who is within the heart, surrounded by the Prâṇas¹ (senses), the person of light, consisting of knowledge. He, remaining the same, wanders along the two worlds², as if³ thinking, as if moving. During sleep (in dream) he transcends this world and all the forms of death (all that falls under the sway of death, all that is perishable).

8. 'On being born that person, assuming his body,

¹ Sâṃpiyalakṣanâ saptamî, Dvivedagaṅga. See Brîh. Up. IV, 4, 22.

² In this world, while awake or dreaming; in the other world, while in deep sleep.

³ The world thinks that he thinks, but in reality he does not, he only witnesses the acts of buddhi, or thought.

becomes united with all evils ; when he departs and dies, he leaves all evils behind.

9. 'And there are two states for that person, the one here in this world, the other in the other world, and as a third¹ an intermediate state, the state of sleep. When in that intermediate state, he sees both those states together, the one here in this world, and the other in the other world. Now whatever his admission to the other world may be, having gained that admission, he sees both the evils and the blessings².

'And when he falls asleep, then after having taken away with him the material from the whole world, destroying³ and building it up again, he sleeps (dreams) by his own light. In that state the person is self-illuminated.

10. 'There are no (real) chariots in that state, no horses, no roads, but he himself sends forth (creates) chariots, horses, and roads. There are no blessings there, no happiness, no joys, but he himself sends forth (creates) blessings, happiness, and joys. There are no tanks there, no lakes, no rivers, but he himself sends forth (creates) tanks, lakes, and rivers. He indeed is the maker.

¹ There are really two sthânas or states only ; the place where they meet, like the place where two villages meet, belongs to both, but it may be distinguished as a third. Dvivedagaṅga (p. 1141) uses a curious argument in support of the existence of another world. In early childhood, he says, our dreams consist of the impressions of a former world, later on they are filled with the impressions of our senses, and in old age they contain visions of a world to come.

² By works, by knowledge, and by remembrance of former things ; see Br̥h. Up. IV, 4, 2.

³ Dividing and separating the material, i. e. the impressions received from this world. The commentator explains mâtṛā as a portion of the impressions which are taken away into sleep. 'Destroying' he refers to the body, which in sleep becomes senseless, and 'building up' to the imaginations of dreams.

11. 'On this there are these verses :

'After having subdued by sleep all that belongs to the body, he, not asleep himself, looks down upon the sleeping (senses). Having assumed light, he goes again to his place, the golden person¹, the lonely bird. (1)

12. 'Guarding with the breath (prāṇa, life) the lower nest, the immortal moves away from the nest ; that immortal one goes wherever he likes, the golden person, the lonely bird. (2)

13. 'Going up and down in his dream, the god makes manifold shapes for himself, either rejoicing together with women, or laughing (with his friends), or seeing terrible sights. (3)

14. 'People may see his playground², but himself no one ever sees. Therefore they say, "Let no one wake a man suddenly, for it is not easy to remedy, if he does not get back (rightly to his body)."

'Here some people (object and) say : "No, this (sleep) is the same as the place of waking, for what he sees while awake, that only he sees when asleep³."

¹ The Mādhyandinas read paurusha, as an adjective to ekahamsa, but Dvivedagaṅga explains paurusha as a synonym of purusha, which is the reading of the Kāṇvas.

² Cf. Susruta III, 7, 1.

³ I have translated this according to the commentator, who says : 'Therefore the Self is self-illuminated during sleep. But others say the state of waking is indeed the same for him as sleep ; there is no other intermediate place, different from this and from the other world. . . . And if sleep is the same as the state of waking, then is this Self not separate, not cause and effect, but mixed with them, and the Self therefore not self-illuminated. What he means

No, here (in sleep) the person is self-illuminated (as we explained before).'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'I give you, Sir, a thousand. Speak on for the sake of (my) emancipation.'

15. Yâgñavalkya said: 'That (person) having enjoyed himself in that state of bliss (samprasâda, deep sleep), having moved about and seen both good and evil, hastens back again as he came, to the place from which he started (the place of sleep), to dream¹. And whatever he may have seen there, he is not followed (affected) by it, for that person is not attached to anything.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'So it is indeed, Yâgña-is that others, in order to disprove the self-illumination, say that this sleep is the same as the state of waking, giving as their reason that we see in sleep or in dreams exactly what we see in waking. But this is wrong, because the senses have stopped, and only when the senses have stopped does one see dreams. Therefore there is no necessity for admitting another light in sleep, but only the light inherent in the Self. This has been proved by all that went before.' Dr. Roer takes the same view in his translation, but Deussen (Vedânta, p. 205) takes an independent view, and translates: 'Therefore it is said: It (sleep) is to him a place of waking only, for what he sees waking, the same he sees in sleep. Thus this spirit serves there for his own light.' Though the interpretations of Saṅkara and Dvivedagaṅga sound artificial, still Dr. Deussen's version does not remove all difficulties. If the purusha saw in sleep no more than what he had seen before in waking, then the whole argument in favour of the independent action, or the independent light of the purusha, would go; anyhow it would be no argument on Yâgñavalkya's side. See also note to paragraph 9, before.

¹ The Mâdhyandinas speak only of his return from svapnânta to buddhânta, from sleep to waking, instead of his going from samprasâda (deep sleep) to svapnâ (dream), from svapnâ to buddhânta, and from buddhânta again to svapnânta, as the Kâṇvas have it. In § 18 the Kâṇvas also mention svapnânta and buddhânta only, but the next paragraph refers to sushupti.

valkya. I give you, Sir, a thousand. Speak on for the sake of emancipation.'

16. Yâgñavalkya said : ' That (person) having enjoyed himself in that sleep (dream), having moved about and seen both good and evil, hastens back again as he came, to the place from which he started, to be awake. And whatever he may have seen there, he is not followed (affected) by it, for that person is not attached to anything.'

Ganaka Vaideha said : ' So it is indeed, Yâgñavalkya. I give you, Sir, a thousand. Speak on for the sake of emancipation.'

17. Yâgñavalkya said : ' That (person) having enjoyed himself in that state of waking, having moved about and seen both good and evil, hastens back again as he came, to the place from which he started, to the state of sleeping (dream).

18. ' In fact, as a large fish moves along the two banks of a river, the right and the left, so does that person move along these two states, the state of sleeping and the state of waking.

19. ' And as a falcon, or any other (swift) bird, after he has roamed about here in the air, becomes tired, and folding his wings is carried to his nest, so does that person hasten to that state where, when asleep, he desires no more desires, and dreams no more dreams.

20. ' There are in his body the veins called Hitâ, which are as small as a hair divided a thousandfold, full of white, blue, yellow, green, and red¹. Now when, as it were, they kill him, when, as it were, they overcome him, when, as it were, an elephant chases him, when, as it were, he falls into a well, he fancies, through ignorance, that danger which he (commonly) sees in waking. But when he fancies that he is, as it were, a god, or that he is, as it were, a king¹, or "I am this altogether," that is his highest world².

¹ Dvivedagaṅga explains that if phlegm predominates, qualified by wind and bile, the juice in the veins is white ; if wind predominates, qualified by phlegm and bile, it is blue ; if bile predominates, qualified by wind and phlegm, it is yellow ; if wind and phlegm

21. 'This indeed is his (true) form, free from desires, free from evil, free from fear³. Now as a man, when embraced by a beloved wife, knows nothing that is without, nothing that is within, thus this person, when embraced by the intelligent (prâgña) Self, knows nothing that is without, nothing that is within. This indeed is his (true) form, in which his wishes are fulfilled, in which the Self (only) is predominate, with little bile only, it is green; and if the three elements are equal, it is red. See also Ânandagiri's gloss, where Susruta is quoted. Why this should be inserted here, is not quite clear, except that in sleep the purusha is supposed to move about in the veins.

¹ Here, again, the commentator seems to be right, but his interpretation does violence to the context. The dangers which a man sees in his sleep are represented as mere imaginations, so is his idea of being of god or a king, while the idea that he is all this (aham evedam sarvaḥ, i. e. idam sarvam, see Saṅkara, p. 873, l. 11) is represented as the highest and real state. But it is impossible to begin a new sentence with aham evedam sarvam, and though it is true that all the preceding fancies are qualified by iva, I prefer to take deva and rāgaṇ as steps leading to the sarvâtmatva.

² The Mâdhyandinas repeat here the sentence from yatra supto to pasyati, from the end of § 19.

³ The Kânva text reads atikkhandâ apahatapâpmâ. Saṅkara explains atikkhandâ by atikkhandam, and excuses it as svâdhyâya-dharmaḥ pâṭhaḥ. The Mâdhyandinas read atikkhandô, but place the whole sentence where the Kânvas put âptakâmam &c., at the end of § 21.

his wish, in which no wish is left,—free from any sorrow ¹.

22. 'Then a father is not a father, a mother not a mother, the worlds not worlds, the gods not gods, the Vedas not Vedas. Then a thief is not a thief, a murderer not a murderer ², a ~~Kāṇḍāla~~³ not a ~~Kāṇḍāla~~⁴, a Paulkasa ⁵ not a Paulkasa, a Sramana ⁶ not a Sramana, a Tâpasa ⁷ not a Tâpasa. He is not followed by good, not followed by evil, for he has then overcome all the sorrows of the heart ⁸.

chandal

23. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not see, yet he is seeing, though he does not see ⁸. For sight is inseparable from the ¹ The Kânvas read sokântaram, the Mâdhyandinas asokântaram, but the commentators arrive at the same result, namely, that it means sokasūnyam, free from grief. Saṅkara says: sokântaram sokakḥhidram sokasūnyam ityetaḥ, kḥokamadhyaman iti vâ; sarvathâpy asokam. Dvivedagaṅga says: na vidyate soko 'ntare madhye yasya tad asokântaram (ra, Weber) sokasūnyam.

² Bhrûnahan, varish/habrahmahantâ.

³ The son of a Sûdra father and a Brâhmana mother.

⁴ The son of a Sûdra father and a Kshatriya mother.

⁵ A mendicant.

⁶ A Vânaprastha, who performs penances.

⁷ I have translated as if the text were ananvâgataḥ puṇyena ananvâgataḥ pâpena. We find anvâgata used in a similar way in §§ 15, 16, &c. But the Kânvas read ananvâgatam puṇyena ananvâgatam pâpena, and Saṅkara explains the neuter by referring it to rūpam (rûpaparatvân napumsakalingam). The Mâdhyandinas, if we may trust Weber's edition, read ananvâgataḥ puṇyenânvâgataḥ pâpena. The second anvâgataḥ may be a mere misprint, but Dvivedagaṅga seems to have read ananvâgatam, like the Kânvas, for he says: ananvâgatam iti rūpavishayo napumsakanirdesaḥ.

⁸ This is the old Upanishad argument that the true sense is the Self, and not the eye. Although therefore in the state of profound sleep, where the eye and the other senses rest, it might be said that the purusha does not see, yet he is a seer all the time, though he does not see with the eye. The seer cannot lose his character seer, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could see.

24. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not smell, yet he is smelling, though he does not smell. For smelling is inseparable from the smeller, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could smell.

25. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not taste, yet he is tasting, though he does not taste. For tasting is inseparable from the taster, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could taste.

26. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not speak, yet he is speaking, though he does not speak. For speaking is inseparable from the speaker, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could speak.

27. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not hear, yet he is hearing, though he does not hear. For hearing is inseparable from the hearer, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could hear.

28. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not think, yet he is thinking, though he does not think. For thinking is inseparable from the thinker, because it cannot perish.

of seeing, as little as the fire can lose its character of burning, so long as it is fire. The Self sees by its own light, like the sun, even where there is no second, no object but the Self, that could be seen.

But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could think.

29. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not touch, yet he is touching, though he does not touch. For touching is inseparable from the toucher, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could think.

30. 'And when (it is said that) there (in the Sushupti) he does not know, yet he is knowing, though he does not know. For knowing is inseparable from the knower, because it cannot perish. But there is then no second, nothing else different from him that he could know.

31. 'When (in waking and dreaming) there is, as it were, another, then can one see the other, then can one smell the other, then can one speak to the other, then can one hear the other, then can one think the other, then can one touch the other, then can one know the other.

32. 'An ocean¹ is that one seer, without any duality; this is the Brahma-world², O King.' Thus did Yâgñavalkya teach him. This is his highest goal, this is his highest success, this is his highest world, this is his highest bliss. All other creatures live on a small portion of that bliss.

33. 'If a man is healthy, wealthy, and lord of others, surrounded by all human enjoyments, that is the highest blessing of men. Now a hundred of these human blessings make one blessing of the fathers who have conquered the world (of the fathers). A hundred blessings of the fathers who have conquered this world make one blessing in the Gandharva world. A hundred blessings in the Gandharva world make one blessing of the Devas by merit (work, sacrifice), who obtain their godhead by merit. A hundred blessings of the Devas by merit make one blessing of the Devas by birth, also (of) a Srotriya¹ who is without sin, and not overcome by desire. A hundred blessings of the Devas by birth make one blessing in the world of Pragâpati, also (of) a Srotriya who is without sin, and not overcome by desire. A hundred blessings in the world of Pragâpati make one blessing in the world of Brahman, also (of) a Srotriya who is without sin, and not overcome by desire. And this is the highest blessing².

¹ Salila is explained as salilavat, like the ocean, the seer being one like the ocean, which is one only. Dr. Deussen takes salila as a locative, and translates it 'In dem Gewoge,' referring to Svetâsvatara-upanishad VI, 15.

² Or this seer is the Brahma-world, dwells in Brahman, or is Brahman.

‘This is the Brahma-world, O king,’ thus spake Yâgñavalkya.

Ganaka Vaideha said: ‘I give you, Sir, a thousand. Speak on for the sake of (my) emancipation.’

Then Yâgñavalkya was afraid lest the King, having become full of understanding, should drive him from all his positions³.

34. And Yâgñavalkya said: ‘That (person), having enjoyed himself in that state of sleeping (dream),

¹ An accomplished student of the Veda.

² See Taitt. Up. II, 8, p. 59; Khând. Up. VIII, 2, 1-10; Kaush. Up. I, 3-5; Regnaud, II, p. 33 seq.

³ Saṅkara explains that Yâgñavalkya was not afraid that his own knowledge might prove imperfect, but that the king, having the right to ask him any question he liked, might get all his knowledge from him.

having moved about and seen both good and bad, hastens back again as he came, to the place from which he started, to the state of waking¹.

35. 'Now as a heavy-laden carriage moves along groaning, thus does this corporeal Self, mounted by the intelligent Self, move along groaning, when a man is thus going to expire².

36. 'And when (the body) grows weak through old age, or becomes weak through illness, at that time that person, after separating himself from his members, as an Amra (mango), or Udumbara (fig), or Pippala-fruit is separated from the stalk, hastens back again as he came, to the place from which he started, to (new) life.

37. 'And as policemen, magistrates, equerries, and governors wait for a king who is coming back, with food and drink, saying, "He comes back, he approaches," thus do all the elements wait on him who knows this, saying, "That Brahman comes, that Brahman approaches."

38. 'And as policemen, magistrates, equerries, and governors gather round a king who is departing, thus do all the senses (prâṇas) gather round the Self at the time of death, when a man is thus going to expire.'

FOURTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Yâgñavalkya continued: 'Now when that Self, having sunk into weakness³, sinks, as it were, into

¹ See § 17, before.

² Sâṅkara seems to take uḁḁhvâsî as a noun. He writes: yatraitad bhavati; etad iti kriyâviseshanam ūrdhvôḁḁhvâsî yator-dhvoḁḁhvâsītvam asya bhavatītyarthaḥ.

³ In the Kaush. Up. III, 3, we read yatraitat purusha ârto unconsciousness, then gather those senses (prāṇas) around him, and he, taking with him those elements of light, descends into the heart. When that person in the eye¹ turns away, then he ceases to know any forms.

2. “He has become one,” they say, “he does not see².” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not smell.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not taste.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not speak.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not hear.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not think.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not touch.” “He has become one,” they say, “he does not know.” The point of his heart³ becomes lighted up, and by that light the Self departs, either through the eye⁴, or through the skull⁵, or through other places of the body. And when he thus departs, life (the chief prāṇa) departs after him, and when life thus departs, all the other marishyan ābālyam etya sammohati. Here ābālyam should certainly be ābālyam, as in the commentary; but should it not be ābālyam, as here. See also Brīh. Up. III, 5, 1, note.

¹ Kākshusha purusha is explained as that portion of the sun which is in the eye, while it is active, but which, at the time of death, returns to the sun.

² Ekībhavati is probably a familiar expression for dying, but it is here explained by Śaṅkara, and probably was so intended, as meaning that the organs of the body have become one with the Self (līṅgātman). The same thoughts are found in the Kaush. Up. III, 3, prāṇa ekadhā bhavati.

³ The point where the nāḍīs or veins go out from the heart.

⁴ When his knowledge and deeds qualify him to proceed to the sun. Śaṅkara.

⁵ When his knowledge and deeds qualify him to proceed to the Brahma-world.

vital spirits (prâṇas) depart after it. He is conscious, and being conscious he follows¹ and departs.

‘Then both his knowledge and his work take hold of him, and his acquaintance with former things².’

3. ‘And as a caterpillar, after having reached the end of a blade of grass, and after having made another approach (to another blade)³, draws itself together towards it, thus does this Self, after having thrown off this body⁴ and dispelled all ignorance, and after making another approach (to another body), draw, himself together towards it.

4. ‘And as a goldsmith, taking a piece of gold, turns it into another, newer and more beautiful shape, so does this Self, after having thrown off this body

¹ This is an obscure passage, and the different text of the Mādhyandinas shows that the obscurity was felt at an early time. The Mādhyandinas read: Samgñānam anvavakrāmati sa esha gñāṇaḥ savigñāno bhavati. This would mean, ‘Consciousness departs after. He the knowing (Self) is self-conscious.’ The Kāṇvas read: Savigñāno bhavati, savigñānam evānvavakrāmati. Roer translates: ‘It is endowed with knowledge, endowed with knowledge it departs;’ and he explains, with Saṅkara, that the knowledge here intended is such knowledge as one has in a dream, a knowledge of impressions referring to their respective objects, a knowledge which is the effect of actions, and not inherent in the self. Deussen translates: ‘Sie (die Seele) ist von Erkenntnissart, und was von Erkenntnissart ist, ziehet ihr nach.’ The Persian translator evidently thought that self-consciousness was implied, for he writes: ‘Cum quovis corpore additionem sumat . . . in illo corpore aham est, id est, ego sum.’

² This acquaintance with former things is necessary to explain the peculiar talents or deficiencies which we observe in children. The three words vidyā, karman, and pūrvapragñā often go together (see Saṅkara on Bṛh. Up. IV, 3, 9). Deussen’s conjecture, apūrvapragñā, is not called for.

³ See Bṛh. Up. IV, 3, 9, a passage which shows how difficult it would be always to translate the same Sanskrit words by the same words in English; see also Brahmopanishad, p. 245.

⁴ See Bṛh. Up. IV, 3, 9, and IV, 3, 13.

and dispelled all ignorance, make unto himself another, newer and more beautiful shape, whether it be like the Fathers, or like the Gandharvas, or like the Devas, or like Pragâpati, or like Brahman, or like other beings.

5. 'That Self is indeed Brahman, consisting of knowledge, mind, life, sight, hearing, earth, water, wind, ether, light and no light, desire and no desire, anger and no anger, right or wrong, and all things. Now as a man is like this or like that¹, according as he acts and according as he behaves, so will he be :— a man of good acts will become good, a man of bad acts, bad. He becomes pure by pure deeds, bad by bad deeds.

'And here they say that a person consists of desires. And as is his desire, so is his will ; and as is his will, so is his deed ; and whatever deed he does, that he will reap.

6. 'And here there is this verse: "To whatever object a man's own mind is attached, to that he goes strenuously together with his deed ; and having obtained the end (the last results) of whatever deed he does here on earth, he returns again from that world (which is the temporary reward of his deed) to this world of action."

'So much for the man who desires. But as to the man who does not desire, who, not desiring, freed from desires, is satisfied in his desires, or desires the Self only, his vital spirits do not depart elsewhere,—being Brahman, he goes to Brahman.

7. 'On this there is this verse : "When all desires

¹ The iti after adomaya is not clear to me, but it is quite clear that a new sentence begins with tadyadetat, which Regnaud, II, p. 101 and p. 139, has not observed.

which once entered his heart are undone, then does the mortal become immortal, then he obtains Brahman."

'And as the slough of a snake lies on an ant-hill, dead and cast away, thus lies this body; but that disembodied immortal spirit (prāṇa, life) is Brahman only, is only light.'

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Sir, I give you a thousand.'

8¹. 'On this there are these verses:

'The small, old path stretching far away² has been found by me. On it sages who know Brahman move on to the Svarga-loka (heaven), and thence higher on, as entirely free³.

9. 'On that path they say that there is white, or blue, or yellow, or green, or red⁴; that path was found by Brahman, and on it goes whoever knows Brahman, and who has done good, and obtained splendour.

10. 'All who worship what is not knowledge (avidyā) enter into blind darkness: those who delight in knowledge, enter, as it were, into greater darkness⁵.

11. 'There are⁶ indeed those unblessed worlds,

¹ This may be independent matter, or may be placed again into the mouth of Yâgñavalkya.

² Instead of vitataḥ, which perhaps seemed to be in contradiction with anu, there is a Mādhyandina reading vitara, probably intended originally to mean leading across. The other adjective mâṃsprīṣṭa I cannot explain. Saṅkara explains it by mâṃsprīṣṭaḥ, mayâ labdhaḥ.

³ That this is the true meaning, is indicated by the various readings of the Mādhyandinas, tena dhîrâ apiyanti brahmavida utkrāmya svargam lokam ito vimuktāḥ. The road is not to lead to Svarga only, but beyond.

⁴ See the colours of the veins as given before, IV, 3, 20.

⁵ See Vâg. Up. 9. Saṅkara in our place explains avidyâ by works, and vidyâ by the Veda, excepting the Upanishads.

⁶ See Vâg. Up. 3; Kāṭha Up. I, 3.

covered with blind darkness. Men who are ignorant and not enlightened go after death to those worlds.

12. 'If a man understands the Self, saying, "I am He," what could he wish or desire that he should pine after the body¹.

13. 'Whoever has found and understood the Self that has entered into this patched-together hiding-place², he indeed is the creator, for he is the maker of everything, his is the world, and he is the world itself³.

14. 'While we are here, we may know this; if not, I am ignorant⁴, and there is great destruction. Those who know it, become immortal, but others suffer pain indeed.

15. 'If a man clearly beholds this Self as God, and as the lord of all that is and will be, then he is no more afraid.

16. 'He behind whom the year revolves with the days, him the gods worship as the light of lights, as immortal time.

17. 'He in whom the five beings⁵ and the ether rest, him alone I believe to be the Self,—I who ¹ That he should be willing to suffer once more the pains inherent in the body. The Mādhyandinas read saṛīram and saṃkaret, instead of sañgaret.

² The body is meant, and is called deha from the root dih, to knead together. Roer gives saṃdehye gahane, which Śaṅkara explains by saṃdehe. Poley has saṃdeghe, which is the right Kāṇva reading. The Mādhyandinas read saṃdehe. Gahane might be taken as an adjective also, referring to saṃdehe.

³ Śaṅkara takes loka, world, for âtma, self.

⁴ I have followed Śaṅkara in translating avediḥ by ignorant, but the text seems corrupt.

⁵ The five ganas, i. e. the Gandharvas, Pitṛis, Devas, Asuras, and Rakshas; or the four castes with the Nishâdas; or breath, eye, ear, food, and mind.

know, believe him to be Brahman; I who am immortal, believe him to be immortal.

18. 'They who know the life of life, the eye of the eye, the ear of the ear, the mind of the mind, they have comprehended the ancient, primeval Brahman¹.

19. 'By the mind alone it is to be perceived², there is in it no diversity. He who perceives therein any diversity, goes from death to death.

20. 'This eternal being that can never be proved, is to be perceived in one way only; it is spotless, beyond the ether, the unborn Self, great and eternal.

21. 'Let a wise Brāhmaṇa, after he has discovered him, practise wisdom³. Let him not seek after many words, for that is mere weariness of the tongue.

22. 'And he is that great unborn Self, who consists of knowledge, is surrounded by the Prāṇas, the ether within the heart⁴. In it there reposes the ruler of all, the lord of all, the king of all. He does not become greater by good works, nor smaller by evil works. He is the lord of all, the king of all things, the protector of all things. He is a bank⁵ and a boundary, so that these worlds may not be confounded. Brāhmaṇas seek to know him by the study of the Veda, by sacrifice, by gifts, by penance, by fasting, and he who knows him, becomes a Muni. Wishing for that world (for Brahman) only, mendicants leave their homes.

'Knowing this, the people of old did not wish for offspring. What shall we do with offspring, they said,

¹ See Talavak. Up. I, 2.

² See Katha Up. IV, 10-11.

³ Let him practise abstinence, patience, &c., which are the means of knowledge.

⁴ See Brh. Up. IV, 3, 7.

⁵ See Khând. Up. VIII, 4.

we who have this Self and this world (of Brahman)¹? And they, having risen above the desire for sons, wealth, and new worlds, wander about as mendicants. For desire for sons is desire for wealth, and desire for wealth is desire for worlds. Both these are indeed desires only. He, the Self, is to be described by No, no²! He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be comprehended; he is imperishable, for he cannot perish; he is unattached, for he does not attach himself; unfettered, he does not suffer, he does not fail. Him (who knows), these two do not overcome, whether he says that for some reason he has done evil, or for some reason he has done good—he overcomes both, and neither what he has done, nor what he has omitted to do, burns (affects) him.

23. 'This has been told by a verse (Rik): "This eternal greatness of the Brāhmaṇa does not grow larger by work, nor does it grow smaller. Let man try to find (know) its trace, for having found (known) it, he is not sullied by any evil deed."

'He therefore that knows it, after having become quiet, subdued, satisfied, patient, and collected³, sees self in Self, sees all as Self. Evil does not overcome him, he overcomes all evil. Evil does not burn him, he burns all evil. Free from evil, free from spots, free from doubt, he becomes a (true) Brāhmaṇa; this is the Brahma-world, O King,'—thus spoke Yāgñavalkya.

Ganaka Vaideha said: 'Sir, I give you the Videhas, and also myself, to be together your slaves.'

24. This⁴ indeed is the great, the unborn Self, the

¹ Cf. Brīh. Up. III, 5, 1. ² See Brīh. Up. III, 9, 26; IV, 2, 4.

³ See Deussen, Vedānta, p. 85.

⁴ As described in the dialogue between Ganaka and Yāgñavalkya.

strong¹, the giver of wealth. He who knows this obtains wealth.

25. This great, unborn Self, undecaying, undying, immortal, fearless, is indeed Brahman. Fearless is Brahman, and he who knows this becomes verily the fearless Brahman.

FIFTH BRÂHMANA².

✓ 1. Yâgñavalkya had two wives, Maitreyî and Kâtâyāni. Of these Maitreyî was conversant with Brahman, but Kâtâyāni possessed such knowledge only as women possess. And Yâgñavalkya, when he wished to get ready for another state of life (when he wished to give up the state of a householder, and retire into the forest),

2. Said, 'Maitreyî, verily I am going away from this my house (into the forest). Forsooth, let me make a settlement between thee and that Kâtâyāni.'

3. Maitreyî said: 'My Lord, if this whole earth, full of wealth, belonged to me, tell me, should I be immortal by it, or no?'

'No,' replied Yâgñavalkya, 'like the life of rich people will be thy life. But there is no hope of immortality by wealth.'

4. And Maitreyî said: 'What should I do with that by which I do not become immortal? What my Lord knoweth³ (of immortality), tell that clearly to me.'

5. Yâgñavalkya replied: 'Thou who art truly dear to me, thou hast increased what is dear (to me in

¹ Annâda is here explained as 'dwelling in all beings, and eating all food which they eat.'

² See before, II, 4.

³ The Kânva text has vettha instead of veda.

thee)¹. Therefore, if you like, Lady, I will explain it to thee, and mark well what I say.'

6. And he said: 'Verily, a husband is not dear, that you may love the husband; but that you may love the Self, therefore a husband is dear.

'Verily, a wife is not dear, that you may love the wife; but that you may love the Self, therefore a wife is dear.

'Verily, sons are not dear, that you may love the sons; but that you may love the Self, therefore sons are dear.

'Verily, wealth is not dear, that you may love wealth; but that you may love the Self, therefore wealth is dear.

'Verily, cattle² are not dear, that you may love cattle; but that you may love the Self, therefore cattle are dear.

'Verily, the Brahman-class is not dear, that you may love the Brahman-class; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Brahman-class is dear.

'Verily, the Kshatra-class is not dear, that you may love the Kshatra-class; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Kshatra-class is dear.

'Verily, the worlds are not dear, that you may love the worlds; but that you may love the Self, therefore the worlds are dear.

'Verily, the Devas are not dear, that you may love the Devas; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Devas are dear.

¹ The Kâṇva text has avṛidhat, which Saṅkara explains by vardhitavatiṁ nirdhâritavaty asi. The Mâdhyandinas read avṛitat, which the commentator explains by avartayat, vartitavaty asi.

² Though this is added here, it is not included in the summing up in § 6.

‘Verily, the Vedas are not dear, that you may love the Vedas; but that you may love the Self, therefore the Vedas are dear.

‘Verily, creatures are not dear, that you may love the creatures; but that you may love the Self, therefore are creatures dear. Self.

‘Verily, everything is not dear, that you may love everything; but that you may love the Self, therefore everything is dear.

‘Verily, the Self is to be seen, to be heard, to be perceived, to be marked, O Maitreyi! When the Self has been seen, heard, perceived, and known, then all this is known.’ X

7. ‘Whosoever looks for the Brahman-class elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Brahman-class. Whosoever looks for the Kshatra-class elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Kshatra-class. Whosoever looks for the worlds elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the worlds. Whosoever looks for the Devas elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Devas. Whosoever looks for the Vedas elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the Vedas. Whosoever looks for the creatures elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by the creatures. Whosoever looks for anything elsewhere than in the Self, was abandoned by anything.

‘This Brahman-class, this Kshatra-class, these worlds, these Devas, these Vedas, all these beings, this everything, all is that Self.

8. ‘Now as the sounds of a drum, when beaten, cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the drum is seized, or the beater of the drum;

9. 'And as the sounds of a conch-shell, when blown, cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the shell is seized, or the blower of the shell ;

10. 'And as the sounds of a lute, when played, cannot be seized externally (by themselves), but the sound is seized, when the lute is seized, or the player of the lute ;

11. 'As clouds of smoke proceed by themselves out of lighted fire kindled with damp fuel, thus verily, O Maitreyī, has been breathed forth from this great Being what we have as Rīg-veda, Yagur-veda, Sāma-veda, Atharvāṅgirasas, Itihāsa, Purāṇa, Vidyā, the Upanishads, Slokas, Sūtras, Anuvyākhyānas, Vyākhyānas, what is sacrificed, what is poured out, food, drink¹, this world and the other world, and all creatures. From him alone all these were breathed forth.

12. 'As all waters find their centre in the sea, all touches in the skin, all tastes in the tongue, all smells in the nose, all colours in the eye, all sounds in the ear, all percepts in the mind, all knowledge in the heart, all actions in the hands, all movements in the feet, and all the Vedas in speech,—

13. 'As a mass of salt has neither inside nor outside, but is altogether a mass of taste, thus indeed has that Self neither inside nor outside, but is altogether a mass of knowledge ; and having risen from out these elements, vanishes again in them. When he has departed, there is no more knowledge (name), I say, O Maitreyī,'—thus spoke Yāgñavalkya.

¹ Explained by annadānanimittam and peyadānanimittam dharma-gātam. See before, IV, 1, 2.

14. Then Maitreyī said: 'Here, Sir, thou hast landed me in utter bewilderment. Indeed, I do not understand him.'

But he replied: 'O Maitreyī, I say nothing that is bewildering. Verily, beloved, that Self is imperishable, and of an indestructible nature.'

15. 'For when there is as it were duality, then one sees the other, one smells the other, one tastes the other, one salutes the other, one hears the other, one perceives the other, one touches the other, one knows the other; but when the Self only is all this, how should he see another, how should he smell another, how should he taste another, how should he salute another, how should he hear another, how should he touch another, how should he know another? How should he know Him by whom he knows all this? That Self is to be described by No, no¹! He is incomprehensible, for he cannot be comprehended; he is imperishable, for he cannot perish; he is unattached, for he does not attach himself; unfettered, he does not suffer, he does not fail. How, O beloved, should he know the Knower? Thus, O Maitreyī, thou hast been instructed. Thus far goes immortality.' Having said so, Yâgñavalkya went away (into the forest).

SIXTH BRĀHMAṆA.

I. Now follows the stem²:

1. (We) from Pautimâshya,
2. Pautimâshya from Gaupavana,
3. Gaupavana from Pautimâshya,

¹ See Bṛh. Up. III, 9, 26; IV, 2, 4; IV, 4, 22.

² The line of teachers and pupils by whom the Yâgñavalkya-

4. Pautimāshya from Gaupavana,
5. Gaupavana from Kausika,
6. Kausika from Kaundīnya,
7. Kaundīnya from Sândīlya,
8. Sândīlya from Kausika and Gautama,
9. Gautama
2. from Âgnivesya,
 10. Âgnivesya from Gârgya,
 11. Gârgya from Gârgya,
 12. Gârgya from Gautama,
 13. Gautama from Saitava,
 14. Saitava from Pârâsaryâyana,
 15. Pârâsaryâyana from Gârgyâyana,
 16. Gârgyâyana from Uddâlakâyana,
 17. Uddâlakâyana from Gâbâlâyana,
 18. Gâbâlâyana from Mâdhyandinâyana,
 19. Mâdhyandinâyana from Saukarâyana,
 20. Saukarâyana from Kâshâyana,
 21. Kâshâyana from Sâyakâyana,
 22. Sâyakâyana from Kausikâyani ¹,
 23. Kausikâyani
3. from Ghrîtakausika,
 24. Ghrîtakausika from Pârâsaryâyana, kânda was handed down. From 1-10 the Vamsa agrees with the Vamsa at the end of II, 6.

The Mâdhyandina text begins with vayam, we, and proceeds to 1. Saurpanâya, 2. Gautama, 3. Vâtsya, 4. Pârâsarya, &c., as in the Madhukânda, p. 118, except in 10, where it gives Gaivantâyana for Âtreya. Then after 12. Kaundīnyâyana, it gives 13. 14. the two Kaundīnyas, 15. the Aurnavâbhas, 16. Kaundīnya, 17. Kaundīnya, 18. Kaundīnya and Âgnivesya, 19. Saitava, 20. Pârâsarya, 21. Gâtukarnya, 22. Bhâradvâga, 23. Bhâradvâga, Âsurâyana, and Gautama, 24. Bhâradvâga, 25. Valâkâkausika, 26. Kâshâyana, 27. Saukarâyana, 28. Traivani, 29. Aupagandhani, 30. Sâyakâyana, 31. Kausikâyani, &c., as in the Kânva text, from No. 22 to Brahman.

¹ From here the Vamsa agrees again with that given at the end of II, 6.

25. Pârâsaryâyana from Pârâsarya,
26. Pârâsarya from Gâtukarṇya,
27. Gâtukarṇya from Âsurâyana and Yâska¹,
28. Âsurâyana from Travani,
29. Travani from Aupagandhani,
30. Aupagandhani from Âsuri,
31. Âsuri from Bhâradvâga,
32. Bhâradvâga from Âtreya,
33. Âtreya from Mânti,
34. Mânti from Gautama,
35. Gautama from Gautama,
36. Gautama from Vâtsya,
37. Vâtsya from Sândilya,
38. Sândilya from Kaisorya Kâpya,
39. Kaisorya Kâpya from Kumârahârta,
40. Kumârahârta from Gâlava,
41. Gâlava from Vidarbhi-kaundînya,
42. Vidarbhi-kaundînya from Vatsanapât Bâbhrava,
43. Vatsanapât Bâbhrava from Pathi Saubhara,
44. Pathi Saubhara from Ayâsya Âṅgîrasa,
45. Ayâsya Âṅgîrasa from Âbhûti Tvâshtra,
46. Âbhûti Tvâshtra from Visvarûpa Tvâshtra,
47. Visvarûpa Tvâshtra from Asvinau,
48. Asvinau from Dadhyaċ Âtharvana,
49. Dadhyaċ Âtharvana from Atharvan Daiva,
50. Atharvan Daiva from Mrityu Prâdhvamsana,
51. Mrityu Prâdhvamsana from Pradhvamsana,
52. Pradhvamsana from Ekarshi,
53. Ekarshi from Vipraċitti²,
54. Vipraċitti from Vyashî,

¹ The Mâdhyandina text has, 1. Bhâradvâga, 2. Bhâradvâga, Âsurâyana, and Yâska.

² Vipragitti, Mâdhyandina text.

55. Vyashī from Sanāru,
 56. Sanāru from Sanātana,
 57. Sanātana from Sanaga,
 58. Sanaga from Parameshīin,
 59. Parameshīin from Brahman,
 60. Brahman is Svayambhu, self-existent.
- Adoration to Brahman.

FIFTH ADHYÂYA.

FIRST BRÂHMANA¹.

1. That (the invisible Brahman) is full, this (the visible Brahman) is full². This full (visible Brahman) proceeds from that full (invisible Brahman). On grasping the fulness of this full (visible Brahman) there is left that full (invisible Brahman)³.

Om (is) ether, (is) Brahman⁴. 'There is the old ether (the invisible), and the (visible) ether of the atmosphere,' thus said Kauravyâyanîputra. This (the Om) is the Veda (the means of knowledge), thus the Brâhmanas know. One knows through it all that has to be known.

SECOND BRÂHMANA.

1. The threefold descendants of Pragâpati, gods, men, and Asuras (evil spirits), dwelt as Brahmacârin (students) with their father Pragâpati. Having finished their studentship the gods said: 'Tell us (something), Sir.' He told them the syllable Da. Then he said: 'Did you understand?' They said: 'We did understand. You told us "Dâmyata," Be subdued.' 'Yes,' he said, 'you have understood.'

2. Then the men said to him: 'Tell us something,

¹ This is called a Khila, or supplementary chapter, treating of various auxiliary means of arriving at a knowledge of Brahman.

² Full and filling, infinite.

³ On perceiving the true nature of the visible world, there remains, i.e. there is perceived at once, as underlying it, or as being it, the invisible world or Brahman. This and the following paragraph are called Mantras.

⁴ This is explained by Sâṅkara as meaning, Brahman is Kha, the ether, and called Om, i.e. Om and Kha are predicates of Brahman.

Sir.' He told them the same syllable Da. Then he said: 'Did you understand?' They said: 'We did understand. You told us, "Datta," Give.' 'Yes,' he said, 'you have understood.'

3. Then the Asuras said to him: 'Tell us something, Sir.' He told them the same syllable Da. Then he said: 'Did you understand?' They said: 'We did understand. You told us, "Dayadham," Be merciful.' 'Yes,' he said, 'you have understood.'

The divine voice of thunder repeats the same, Da Da Da, that is, Be subdued, Give, Be merciful. Therefore let that triad be taught, Subduing, Giving, and Mercy.

THIRD BRĀHMANA.

1. Pragâpati is the heart, is this Brahman, is all this. The heart, hrīdaya, consists of three syllables. One syllable is hri, and to him who knows this, his own people and others bring offerings¹. One syllable is da, and to him who knows this, his own people and others bring gifts. One syllable is yam, and he who knows this, goes to heaven (svarga) as his world.

FOURTH BRĀHMANA.

1. This (heart) indeed is even that, it was indeed the true² (Brahman). And whosoever knows this great glorious first-born as the true Brahman, he conquers these worlds, and conquered likewise may that (enemy) be³! yes, whosoever knows this great

¹ Sāṅkara explains that with regard to the heart, i.e. buddhi, the senses are 'its own people,' and the objects of the senses 'the others.'

² The true, not the truth; the truly existing. The commentator explains it as it was explained in II, 3, 1, as sat and tya, containing both sides of the Brahman.

³ An elliptical expression, as explained by the commentator: 'May that one (his enemy) be conquered, just as that one was glorious first-born as the true Brahman; for Brahman is the true.

FIFTH BRĀHMANA.

1. In the beginning this (world) was water. Water produced the true¹, and the true is Brahman. Brahman produced Pragâpati², Pragâpati the Devas (gods). The Devas adore the true (satyam) alone. This satyam consists of three syllables. One syllable is sa, another t(i), the third³ yam. The first and last syllables are true, in the middle there is the untrue⁴. This untrue is on both sides enclosed by the true, and thus the true preponderates. The untrue does not hurt him who knows this.

2. Now what is the true, that is the Âditya (the sun), the person that dwells in yonder orb, and the person in the right eye. These two rest on each other, the former resting with his rays in the latter, the latter with his prâṇas (senses) in the former. When the latter is on the point of departing this life, he sees that orb as white only, and those rays (of the sun) do not return to him.

conquered by Brahman. If he conquers the world, how much more his enemy!' It would be better, however, if we could take gita in the sense of vasîkrîta or dânta, because we could then go on with ya evam veda.

¹ Here explained by the commentator as Pûtrâtmaka Hiranyagarbha.

² Here explained as Virâg.

³ Satyam is often pronounced satiam, as trisyllabic. Saṅkara, however, takes the second syllable as t only, and explains the i after it as an anubandha. The Kânva text gives the three syllables as sa, ti, am, which seems preferable; cf. Khând. Up. VIII, 3, 5; Taitt. Up. II, 6.

⁴ This is explained by a mere play on the letters, sa and ya having nothing in common with mṛityu, death, whereas t occurs in mṛityu and anṛita. Dvivedagaṅga takes sa and am as true, because they occur in satya and amṛita, and not in mṛityu, while ti is untrue, because the t occurs in mṛityu and anṛita.

3. Now of the person in that (solar) orb Bhûh is the head, for the head is one, and that syllable is one; Bhuva the two arms, for the arms are two, and these syllables are two; Svar the foot, for the feet are two, and these syllables are two¹. Its secret name is Ahar (day), and he who knows this, destroys (hanti) evil and leaves (gahâti) it.

4. Of the person in the right eye Bhûh is the head, for the head is one, and that syllable is one; Bhuva the two arms, for the arms are two, and these syllables are two; Svar the foot, for the feet are two, and these syllables are two. Its secret name is Aham (ego), and he who knows this, destroys (hanti) evil and leaves (gahâti) it.

SIXTH BRÂHMANA.

1. That person, under the form of mind (manas), being light indeed², is within the heart, small like a grain of rice or barley. He is the ruler of all, the lord of all—he rules all this, whatsoever exists.

SEVENTH BRÂHMANA.

1. They say that lightning is Brahman, because lightning (vidyut) is called so from cutting off (vidânât)³. Whosoever knows this, that lightning is Brahman, him (that Brahman) cuts off from evil, for lightning indeed is Brahman.

¹ Svar has to be pronounced suvar.

² Bhâh/satya must be taken as one word, as the commentator says, bhâ eva satyam sadbhâva svarûpam yasya so 'yam bhâh/satyo bhâh/svara.

³ From do, avakhandane, to cut; the lightning cutting through the darkness of the clouds, as Brahman, when known, cuts through the darkness of ignorance.

EIGHTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Let him meditate on speech as a cow. Her four udders are the words Svâhâ, Vashaṭ, Hanta, and Svadhâ¹. The gods live on two of her udders, the Svâhâ and the Vashaṭ, men on the Hanta, the fathers on the Svadhâ. The bull of that cow is breath (prâṇa), the calf the mind.

NINTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Agni Vaisvânara is the fire within man by which the food that is eaten is cooked, i.e. digested. Its noise is that which one hears, if one covers one's ears. When he is on the point of departing this life, he does not hear that noise.

TENTH BRÂHMANA.

1. When the person goes away from this world, he comes to the wind. Then the wind makes room for him, like the hole of a carriage wheel, and through it he mounts higher. He comes to the sun. Then the sun makes room for him, like the hole of a Lambara², and through it he mounts higher. He comes to the moon. Then the moon makes room for him, like the hole of a drum, and through it he mounts higher, and arrives at the world where there is no sorrow, no snow³. There he dwells eternal years.

¹ There are two udders, the Svâhâ and Vashaṭ, on which the gods feed, i. e. words with which oblations are given to the gods. With Hanta they are given to men, with Svadhâ to the fathers.

² A musical instrument.

³ The commentator explains hima by bodily pain, but snow is much more characteristic.

ELEVENTH BRĀHMANA.

1. This is indeed the highest penance, if a man, laid up with sickness, suffers pain¹. He who knows this, conquers the highest world.

This is indeed the highest penance, if they carry a dead person into the forest². He who knows this, conquers the highest world.

This is indeed the highest penance, if they place a dead person on the fire³. He who knows this, conquers the highest world.

TWELFTH BRĀHMANA.

1. Some say that food is Brahman, but this is not so, for food decays without life (prāna). Others say that life (prāna) is Brahman, but this is not so, for life dries up without food. Then these two deities (food and life), when they have become one, reach that highest state (i.e. are Brahman). Thereupon Prātrida said to his father: 'Shall I be able to do any good to one who knows this, or shall I be able to do him any harm⁴?' The father said to him, beckoning with his hand: 'Not so, O Prātrida; for who could reach the highest state, if he has only got to the oneness of these two?' He then said to him: 'Vi;

¹ The meaning is that, while he is suffering pain from illness, he should think that he was performing penance. If he does that, he obtains the same reward for his sickness which he would have obtained for similar pain inflicted on himself for the sake of performing penance.

² This is like the penance of leaving the village and living in the forest.

³ This is like the penance of entering into the fire.

⁴ That is, is he not so perfect in knowledge that nothing can harm him?

verily, food is Vi, for all these beings rest (vish/âni) on food.' He then said: 'Ram; verily, life is Ram, for all these beings delight (ramante) in life. All beings rest on him, all beings delight in him who knows this.'

THIRTEENTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Next follows the Uktha¹. Verily, breath (prâna) is Uktha, for breath raises up (utthâpayati) all this. From him who knows this, there is raised a wise son, knowing the Uktha; he obtains union and oneness with the Uktha.

2. Next follows the Yagus. Verily, breath is Yagus, for all these beings are joined in breath². For him who knows this, all beings are joined to procure his excellence; he obtains union and oneness with the Yagus.

3. Next follows the Sâman. Verily, breath is the Sâman, for all these beings meet in breath. For him who knows this, all beings meet to procure his excellence; he obtains union and oneness with the Sâman.

4. Next follows the Kshatra. Verily, breath is the Kshatra, for breath is Kshatra, i.e. breath protects (trâyate) him from being hurt (kshanito^h). He who knows this, obtains Kshatra (power), which requires no protection; he obtains union and oneness with Kshatra³.

¹ Meditation on the hymn called uktha. On the uktha, as the principal part in the Mahâvrata, see Kaush. Up. III, 3; Ait. Âr. II, 1, 2. The uktha, yagus, sâman, &c. are here represented as forms under which prâna or life, and indirectly Brahman, is to be meditated on.

² Without life or breath nothing can join anything else; therefore life is called yagus, as it were yugus.

³ Instead of Kshatram atram, another Sâkhâ, i. e. the Mâdhyandina, reads Kshatramâtram, which Dvivedagaṅga explains as, he FOURTEENTH BRĀHMANA.

1. The words Bhûmi (earth), Antariksha (sky), and Dyū¹ (heaven) form eight syllables. One foot of the Gâyatrî consists of eight syllables. This (one foot) of it is that (i.e. the three worlds). And he who thus knows that foot of it, conquers as far as the three worlds extend.

2. The Rîkas, the Yagûmshi, and the Sâmâni form eight syllables. One foot (the second) of the Gâyatrî consists of eight syllables. This (one foot) of it is that (i.e. the three Vedas, the Rîg-veda, Yagur-veda, and Sâma-veda). And he who thus knows that foot of it, conquers as far as that threefold knowledge extends.

3. The Prâna (the up-breathing), the Apâna (the down-breathing), and the Vyâna (the back-breathing) form eight syllables. One foot (the third) of the Gâyatrî consists of eight syllables. This (one foot) of it is that (i.e. the three vital breaths). And he who thus knows that foot of it, conquers as far as there is anything that breathes. And of that (Gâyatrî, or speech) this indeed is the fourth (turîya), the bright (darsata) foot, shining high above the skies². What is here called turîya (the fourth) is meant for ĥaturtha (the fourth); what is called darsatam padam (the bright foot) is meant for him who is as it were seen (the person in the sun); and what is called paroragas (he who shines high above the obtains the nature of the Kshatra, or he obtains the Kshatra which protects (Kshatram âtram).

¹ Dyū, nom. Dyaus, must be pronounced Diyaus.

² Paroragas, masc., should be taken as one word, like paroksha, viz. he who is beyond all ragas, all visible skies.

skies) is meant for him who shines higher and higher above every sky. And he who thus knows that foot of the Gâyatrî, shines thus himself also with happiness and glory.

4. That Gâyatrî (as described before with its three feet) rests on that fourth foot, the bright one, high above the sky. And that again rests on the True (satyam), and the True is the eye, for the eye is (known to be) true. And therefore even now, if two persons come disputing, the one saying, I saw, the other, I heard, then we should trust the one who says, I saw. And the True again rests on force (bala), and force is life (prâna), and that (the True) rests on life¹. Therefore they say, force is stronger than the True. Thus does that Gâyatrî rest with respect to the self (as life). That Gâyatrî protects (tatre) the vital breaths (gayas); the gayas are the prânas (vital breaths), and it protects them. And because it protects (tatre) the vital breaths (gayas), therefore it is called Gâyatrî. And that Sâvitri verse which the teacher teaches², that is it (the life, the prâna, and indirectly the Gâyatrî); and whomsoever he teaches, he protects his vital breaths.

5. Some teach that Sâvitri as an Anushûbh³ verse, saying that speech is Anushûbh, and that we teach ¹ Saṅkara understood the True (satyam) by tad, not the bala, the force.

² The teacher teaches his pupil, who is brought to him when eight years old, the Sâvitri verse, making him repeat each word, and each half verse, till he knows the whole, and by teaching him that Sâvitri, he is supposed to teach him really the prâna, the life, as the self of the world.

³ The verse would be, Rig-veda V, 82, 1 :

Tat savitur vṛinīmahe vayam devasya bhoganam
Sreshṭham sarvadhātamam turam bhagasya dhīmahi.

that speech. Let no one do this, but let him teach the Gâyatrî as Sâvitri¹. And even if one who knows this receives what seems to be much as his reward (as a teacher), yet this is not equal to one foot of the Gâyatrî.

6. If a man (a teacher) were to receive as his fee these three worlds full of all things, he would obtain that first foot of the Gâyatrî. And if a man were to receive as his fee everything as far as this threefold knowledge extends, he would obtain that second foot of the Gâyatrî. And if a man were to receive as his fee everything whatsoever breathes, he would obtain that third foot of the Gâyatrî. But 'that fourth bright foot, shining high above the skies²', cannot be obtained by anybody—whence then could one receive such a fee?

7. The adoration³ of that (Gâyatrî):

'O Gâyatrî, thou hast one foot, two feet, three feet, four feet⁴. Thou art footless, for thou art not known. Worship to thy fourth bright foot above the skies.' If⁵ one (who knows this) hates some ¹ Because Gâyatrî represents life, and the pupil receives life when he learns the Gâyatrî.

² See before, § 2.

³ Upasthâna is the act of approaching the gods, προσκύνησις, Angehen, with a view of obtaining a request. Here the application is of two kinds, abhiġârîka, imprecatory against another, and abhyudayika, auspicious for oneself. The former has two formulas, the latter one. An upasthâna is here represented as effective, if connected with the Gâyatrî.

⁴ Consisting of the three worlds, the threefold knowledge, the threefold vital breaths, and the fourth foot, as described before.

⁵ I have translated this paragraph very freely, and differently from Saṅkara. The question is, whether dvishyât with iti can be used in the sense of abhiġâra, or imprecation. If not, I do not see how the words should be construed. The expression yasmâ upa-one and says, 'May he not obtain this,' or 'May this wish not be accomplished to him,' then that wish is not accomplished to him against whom he thus prays, or if he says, 'May I obtain this.'

8. And thus Ganaka Vaideha spoke on this point to *Buḍiḷa Āsvatarāsvi*¹: 'How is it that thou who spokest thus as knowing the Gâyatrī, hast become an elephant and carriest me?' He answered: 'Your Majesty, I did not know its mouth. Agni, fire, is indeed its mouth; and if people pile even what seems much (wood) on the fire, it consumes it all. And thus a man who knows this, even if he commits what seems much evil, consumes it all and becomes pure, clean, and free from decay and death.'

FIFTEENTH BRĀHMANA.

1. ²The face of the True (the Brahman) is covered with a golden disk³. Open that, O *Pūshan*⁴, that we may see the nature of the True⁵.

2. O Pūshan, only seer, Yama (judge), Sūrya (sun), son of *Pragâpati*⁶, spread thy rays and gather them!

tish/hate is rightly explained by Dvivedagaṅga, yadartham evam upatish/hate.

¹ Asvatarasyâsvasyâpatyam, Saṅkara.

² These verses, which are omitted here in the Mâdhyandina text, are found at the end of the Vâgasaneyi-upanishad 15-18. They are supposed to be a prayer addressed to Āditya by a dying person.

³ Mahîdhara on verse 17: 'The face of the true (purusha in the sun) is covered by a golden disk.' Saṅkara explains here mukha, face, by mukhyam svarûpam, the principal form or nature.

⁴ Pūshan is here explained as a name of Savitrī, the sun; likewise all the names in the next verse.

⁵ Cf. Maitr. Up. VI, 35.

⁶ Of Īsvara or Hiranyagarbha.

The light which is thy fairest form, I see it. I am what he is (viz. the person in the sun).

3. Breath to air and to the immortal! Then this my body ends in ashes. Om! Mind, remember! Remember thy deeds! Mind, remember! Remember thy deeds¹!

4. Agni, lead us on to wealth (beatitude) by a good path², thou, O God, who knowest all things! Keep far from us crooked evil, and we shall offer thee the fullest praise! (Rv. I, 189, 1.)

¹ The Vâgasaneyi-saṃhitâ reads: Om, krato smara, kṛbe smara, kṛitam smara. Uvaṭa holds that Agni, fire, who has been worshipped in youth and manhood, is here invoked in the form of mind, or that kratu is meant for sacrifice. 'Agni, remember me! Think of the world! Remember my deeds!' Kṛbe is explained by Mahîdhara as a dative of kṛp, kṛp meaning loka, world, what is made to be enjoyed (kalpyate bhogâya).

² Not by the Southern path, the dark, from which there is a fresh return to life.

SIXTH ADHYĀYA.

FIRST BRĀHMAṆA¹.

1. Hariḥ, Om. He who knows the first and the best, becomes himself the first and the best among his people. Breath is indeed the first and the best. He who knows this, becomes the first and the best among his people, and among whomsoever he wishes to be so.

2. He who knows the richest², becomes himself the richest among his people. Speech is the richest. He who knows this, becomes the richest among his people, and among whomsoever he wishes to be so.

3. He who knows the firm rest, becomes himself firm on even and uneven ground. The eye indeed is the firm rest, for by means of the eye a man stands firm on even and uneven ground. He who knows this, stands firm on even and uneven ground.

4. He who knows success, whatever desire he desires, it succeeds to him. The ear indeed is success. For in the ear are all these Vedas successful. He who knows this, whatever desire he desires, it succeeds to him.

5. He who knows the home, becomes a home of his own people, a home of all men. The mind

¹ This Brāhmaṇa, also called a Khila (p. 1010, l. 8 ; p. 1029, l. 8), occurs in the Mādhyandina-sâkhâ XIV, 9, 2. It should be compared with the Khândogya-upanishad V, 1 (Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 72); also with the Ait. Âr. II, 4 ; Kaush. Up. III, 3 ; and the Prasṇa Up. II, 3.

² Here used as a feminine, while in the Khând. Up. V, 1, it is vasishṭha.

indeed is the home. He who knows this, becomes a home of his own people and a home of all men.

6. He who knows generation¹, becomes rich in offspring and cattle. Seed indeed is generation. He who knows this, becomes rich in offspring and cattle.

7. These Prâṇas (senses), when quarrelling together as to who was the best, went to Brahman² and said: 'Who is the richest of us?' He replied: 'He by whose departure this body seems worst, he is the richest.'

8. The tongue (speech) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came back and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like unto people, not speaking with the tongue, but breathing with breath, seeing with the eye, hearing with the ear, knowing with the mind, generating with seed. Thus we have lived.' Then speech entered in.

9. The eye (sight) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came back and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like blind people, not seeing with the eye, but breathing with the breath, speaking with the tongue, hearing with the ear, knowing with the mind, generating with seed. Thus we have lived.' Then the eye entered in.

10. The ear (hearing) departed, and having been absent for a year, it came back and said: 'How have you been able to live without me?' They replied: 'Like deaf people, not hearing with the ear, ¹ This is wanting in the Khând. Up. Roer and Poley read Pragâpati for pragâti. MS. I. O. 375 has pragâti, MS. I. O. 1973 pragâpati.

² Here we have Pragâpati, instead of Brahman, in the Khând. Up.; also sresh/ha instead of vasish/ha.

but breathing with the breath, speaking with the tongue, seeing with the eye, knowing with the mind, generating with seed. Thus we have lived.' Then the ear entered in.

11. The mind departed, and having been absent for a year, it came back and said : ' How have you been able to live without me ? ' They replied : ' Like fools, not knowing with their mind, but breathing with the breath, seeing with the eye, hearing with the ear, generating with seed. Thus we have lived.' Then the mind entered in.

12. The seed departed, and having been absent for a year, it came back and said : ' How have you been able to live without me ? ' They replied : ' Like impotent people, not generating with seed, but breathing with the breath, seeing with the eye, hearing with the ear, knowing with the mind. Thus we have lived.' Then the seed entered in.

13. The (vital) breath, when on the point of departing, tore up these senses, as a great, excellent horse of the Sindhu country might tare up the pegs to which he is tethered. They said to him : ' Sir, do not depart. We shall not be able to live without thee.' He said : ' Then make me an offering.' They said : ' Let it be so.'

14. Then the tongue said : ' If I am the richest, then thou art the richest by it.' The eye said : ' If I am the firm rest, then thou art possessed of firm rest by it.' The ear said : ' If I am success, then thou art possessed of success by it.' The mind said : ' If I am the home, thou art the home by it.' The seed said : ' If I am generation, thou art possessed of generation by it.' He said : ' What shall be food, what shall be dress for me ? '

They replied: 'Whatever there is, even unto dogs, worms, insects, and birds¹, that is thy food, and water thy dress. He who thus knows the food of Ana (the breath)², by him nothing is eaten that is not (proper) food, nothing is received that is not (proper) food. Srotriyas (Vedic theologians) who know this, rinse the mouth with water when they are going to eat, and rinse the mouth with water after they have eaten, thinking that thereby they make the breath dressed (with water).'

SECOND BRĀHMAṆA³.

1. Svetaketu Āruneya went to the settlement of the Pañkâlas. He came near to Pravâhana Gaivali⁴, who was walking about (surrounded by his men). As soon as he (the king) saw him, he said: 'My boy!' Svetaketu replied: 'Sir!'

Then the king said: 'Have you been taught by your father!' 'Yes,' he replied.

2. The king said: 'Do you know how men, when they depart from here, separate from each other?' 'No,' he replied.

'Do you know how they come back to this world?' 'No,' he replied⁵.

¹ It may mean, every kind of food, such as is eaten by dogs, worms, insects, and birds.

² We must read, with MS. I.O. 375, anasyânnam, not annasyânnam, as MS. I.O. 1973, Roer, and Poley read. Weber has the right reading, which is clearly suggested by Khând. Up. V, 2, 1.

³ See Khând. Up. V, 3; Muir, Original Sanskrit Texts, I, 433; Deussen, Vedânta, p. 390. The commentator treats this chapter as a supplement, to explain the ways that lead to the pitṛloka and the devaloka.

⁴ The MSS. I. O. 375 and 1973 give Gaivali, others Gaibali. He is a Kshatriya sage, who appears also in Khând. Up. I, 8, 1, as silencing Brâhmanas.

⁵ The same question is repeated in Roer's edition, only substi-

‘Do you know how that world does never become full with the many who again and again depart thither?’ ‘No,’ he replied.

‘Do you know at the offering of which libation the waters become endowed with a human voice and rise and speak?’ ‘No,’ he replied.

‘Do you know the access to the path leading to the Devas and to the path leading to the Fathers, i. e. by what deeds men gain access to the path leading to the Devas or to that leading to the Fathers? For we have heard even the saying of a Rîshi: “I heard of two paths for men, one leading to the Fathers, the other leading to the Devas. On those paths all that lives moves on, whatever there is between father (sky) and mother (earth).”’

Svetaketu said: ‘I do not know even one of all these questions.’

3. Then the king invited him to stay and accept his hospitality. But the boy, not caring for hospitality, ran away, went back to his father, and said: ‘Thus then you called me formerly well-instructed!’ The father said: ‘What then, you sage?’ The son replied: ‘That fellow of a Râganya asked me five questions, and I did not know one of them.’

‘What were they?’ said the father.

‘These were they,’ the son replied, mentioning the different heads.

4. The father said: ‘You know me, child, that whatever I know, I told you. But come, we shall go thither, and dwell there as students.’

‘You may go, Sir,’ the son replied.

tuting sampadyante for âpadyante. The MSS. I. O. 375 and 1973 do not support this.

Then Gautama went where (the place of) Pravâhana Gaivali was, and the king offered him a seat, ordered water for him, and gave him the proper offerings. Then he said to him : 'Sir, we offer a boon to Gautama.'

5. Gautama said : 'That boon is promised to me; tell me the same speech which you made in the presence of my boy.'

6. He said : 'That belongs to divine boons, name one of the human boons.'

7. He said : 'You know well that I have plenty of gold, plenty of cows, horses, slaves, attendants, and apparel; do not heap on me¹ what I have already in plenty, in abundance, and superabundance.'

The king said : 'Gautama, do you wish (for instruction from me) in the proper way?'

Gautama replied : 'I come to you as a pupil.'

In word only have former sages (though Brahmins) come as pupils (to people of lower rank), but Gautama actually dwelt as a pupil (of Pravâhana, who was a Râganya) in order to obtain the fame of having respectfully served his master².

¹ Abhyavadânya is explained as niggardly, or unwilling to give, and derived from vadânya, liberal, a-vadânya, illiberal, and abhi, towards. This, however, is an impossible form in Sanskrit. Vadânya means liberal, and stands for avadânya, this being derived from avadâna, lit. what is cut off, then a morsel, a gift. In abhyavadânya the original a reappears, so that abhyavadânya means, not niggardly, but on the contrary, liberal, i. e. giving more than is required. Avadânya has never been met with in the sense of niggardly, and though a rule of Pânini sanctions the formation of a-vadânya, it does not say in what sense. Abhyavadâ in the sense of cutting off in addition occurs in Satap. Br. II, 5, 2, 40; avadânam karoti, in the sense of making a present, occurs Maitr. Up. VI, 33.

² The commentator takes the opposite view. In times of distress, he says, former sages, belonging to a higher caste, have

8. The king said : 'Do not be offended with us, neither you nor your forefathers, because this knowledge has before now never dwelt with any Brâhmana¹. But I shall tell it to you, for who could refuse you when you speak thus ?

9. 'The altar (fire), O Gautama, is that world (heaven)²; the fuel is the sun itself, the smoke his rays, the light the day, the coals the quarters, the sparks the intermediate quarters. On that altar the Devas offer the sraddhâ libation (consisting of water³). From that oblation rises Soma, the king (the moon).

10. 'The altar, O Gautama, is Parganya (the god of rain); the fuel is the year itself, the smoke the clouds, the light the lightning, the coals the thunderbolt, the sparks the thunderings. On that altar the Devas offer Soma, the king (the moon). From that oblation rises rain.

11. 'The altar, O Gautama, is this world⁴; the fuel is the earth itself, the smoke the fire, the light the night, the coals the moon, the sparks the stars. On that altar the Devas offer rain. From that oblation rises food.

submitted to become pupils to teachers of a lower caste, not, however, in order to learn, but simply in order to live. Therefore Gautama also becomes a pupil in name only, for it would be against all law to act otherwise. See Gautama, Dharma-sûtras VII, 1, ed. Stenzler; translated by Bühler, p. 209.

¹ Here, too, my translation is hypothetical, and differs widely from Saṅkara.

² Cf. Khând. Up. V, 4.

³ Deussen translates : 'In diesem Feuer opfern die Götter den Glauben.'

⁴ Here a distinction is made between ayam loka, this world, and prithivî, earth, while in the Khând. Up. ayam loka is the earth, asau loka the heaven.

12. 'The altar, O Gautama, is man; the fuel the opened mouth, the smoke the breath, the light the tongue, the coals the eye, the sparks the ear. On that altar the Devas offer food. From that oblation rises seed.

13. 'The altar, O Gautama, is woman¹. On that altar the Devas offer seed. From that oblation rises man. He lives so long as he lives, and then when he dies,

14. 'They take him to the fire (the funeral pile), and then the altar-fire is indeed fire, the fuel fuel, the smoke smoke, the light light, the coals coals, the sparks sparks. In that very altar-fire the Devas offer man, and from that oblation man rises, brilliant in colour.

15. 'Those who thus know this (even Grihasthas), and those who in the forest worship faith and the True² (Brahman Hiranyagarbha), go to light (ar-kis), from light to day, from day to the increasing half, from the increasing half to the six months when the sun goes to the north, from those six months to the world of the Devas (Devaloka), from the world of the Devas to the sun, from the sun to the place of lightning. When they have thus reached the place of lightning a spirit³ comes near them, and leads them to the worlds of the (conditioned) Brahman. In these worlds of Brahman they dwell exalted for ages. There is no returning for them.

¹ Tasyâ upastha eva samil, lomâni dhûmo, yonir arkir, yad antaḥkaroti te 'ngârâ, abhinandâ visphuliṅgâḥ.

² Saṅkara translates, 'those who with faith worship the True,' and this seems better.

³ 'A person living in the Brahma-world, sent forth, i. e. created, by Brahman, by the mind,' Saṅkara. 'Der ist nicht wie ein Mensch,' Deussen, p. 392.

16. 'But they who conquer the worlds (future states) by means of sacrifice, charity, and austerity, go to smoke, from smoke to night, from night to the decreasing half of the moon, from the decreasing half of the moon to the six months when the sun goes to the south, from these months to the world of the fathers, from the world of the fathers to the moon. Having reached the moon, they become food, and then the Devas feed on them there, as sacrificers feed on Soma, as it increases and decreases¹. But when this (the result of their good works on earth) ceases, they return again to that ether, from ether to the air, from the air to rain, from rain to the earth. And when they have reached the earth, they become food, they are offered again in the altar-fire, which is man (see § 11), and thence are born in the fire of woman. Thus they rise up towards the worlds, and go the same round as before.

'Those, however, who know neither of these two paths, become worms, birds, and creeping things.'

THIRD BRĀHMAṆA².

1. If a man wishes to reach greatness (wealth for performing sacrifices), he performs the upasad rule during twelve days³ (i. e. he lives on small quantities of milk), beginning on an auspicious day of the light half of the moon during the northern progress of the sun, collecting at the same time in a cup or a dish made of Udumbara wood all sorts of herbs, including fruits. He sweeps the floor (near the house-altar, āvasathya), sprinkles it, lays the fire, spreads grass round it according to rule¹, prepares the clarified butter (āgrya), and on a day, presided over by a male star (nakshatra), after having properly mixed the Mantha² (the herbs, fruits, milk, honey, &c.), he sacrifices (he pours āgrya into the fire), saying³: 'O Gâtavedas, whatever adverse gods there are in thee, who defeat the desires of men, to them I offer this portion; may they, being pleased, please me with all desires.' Svâhâ!

¹ See note 4 on Kṛāṇḍ. Up. V, 10, and Deussen, Vedānta, p. 393. Sankara guards against taking āpyāyasvāpakshīyasva as a Mantra. A similar construction is gāyasva mṛīyasva, see Kṛāṇḍ. Up. V, 10, 8.

² Mādhyandina text, p. 1103; cf. Kṛāṇḍ. Up. V, 2, 4-8; Kaush. Up. II, 3.

³ Yasmin punye 'nukūle 'hni karma kīkīrshati tataḥ prāk punyāham evārabhya dvādaśāham upasadvratī.

'That cross deity who lies down⁴, thinking that all things are kept asunder by her, I worship thee as propitious with this stream of ghee.' Svâhâ!

2. He then says, Svâhâ to the First, Svâhâ to the Best, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Breath, Svâhâ to her who is the richest, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Speech, Svâhâ to the Support, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Eye, Svâhâ to Success, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Ear, Svâhâ to the ¹ As the whole act is considered smârta, not srâuta, the order to be observed (âvriti) is that of the sthâlpâka.

² Dravadravye prakshiptâ mathitâh saktavaḥ is the explanation of Mantha, given in Gaimin. N. M. V. p. 406.

³ These verses are not explained by Saṅkara, and they are absent in the Khând. Up. V, 2, 6, 4.

⁴ The Mâdhyandinas read nipadyase.

- Home, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Mind, Svâhâ to Offspring, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Seed, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

3. He then says, Svâhâ to Agni (fire), pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Soma, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Bhûh (earth), Svâhâ, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Bhuvaḥ (sky), Svâhâ, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svaḥ (heaven), Svâhâ, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Bhûr, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, Svâhâ, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Brahman (the priesthood), pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Kshatra (the knighthood), pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Past, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Future, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to the Universe, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to all things, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

He then says, Svâhâ to Pragâpati, pours ghee into the fire, and throws what remains into the Mantha (mortar).

4. Then he touches it (the Mantha, which is dedicated to Prâna, breath), saying : ' Thou art fleet (as breath). Thou art burning (as fire). Thou art full (as Brahman). Thou art firm (as the sky). Thou art the abode of all (as the earth). Thou hast been saluted with Hiñ (at the beginning of the sacrifice by the prastotri). Thou art saluted with Hiñ (in the middle of the sacrifice by the prastotri). Thou hast been sung (by the udgâtri at the beginning of the sacrifice). Thou art sung (by the udgâtri in the middle of the sacrifice). Thou hast been celebrated (by the adhvaryu at the beginning of the sacrifice). Thou art celebrated again (by the âgnîdhra in the middle of the sacrifice). Thou art bright in the wet (cloud). Thou art great. Thou art powerful. Thou art food (as Soma). Thou art light (as Agni, fire, the eater). Thou art the end. Thou art the absorption (of all things).'

5. Then he holds it (the Mantha) forth, saying : ' Thou ¹ knowest all, we know thy greatness. He is

¹ These curious words â mamsi â mamhi te mahi are not explained by Saṅkara. Ânandagiri explains them as I have transindeed a king, a ruler, the highest lord. May that king, that ruler make me the highest lord.'

6. Then he eats it, saying: 'Tat savitur vare-nyam ¹ (We meditate on that adorable light)—The winds drop honey for the righteous, the rivers drop honey, may our plants be sweet as honey! Bhûr (earth) Svâhâ!

'Bhargo devasya dhîmahi (of the divine Savitri)—May the night be honey in the morning, may the air above the earth, may heaven, our father, be honey! Bhuvaḥ (sky) Svâhâ!

'Dhiyo yo naḥ prokodayât (who should rouse our thoughts)—May the tree be full of honey, may the sun be full of honey, may our cows be sweet like honey! Svaḥ (heaven) Svâhâ!'

He repeats the whole Sâvitri verse, and all the verses about the honey, thinking, May I be all this!
Bhûr, Bhuvaḥ, Svaḥ, Svâhâ! Having thus swallowed all, he washes his hands, and sits down behind the altar, turning his head to the East. In the morning he worships Âditya (the sun), with the hymn, 'Thou art the best lotus of the four quarters, may I become the best lotus among men.' Then returning as he came, he sits down behind the altar and recites the genealogical list ².

7. Uddâlaka Âruni told this (Mantha-doctrine) to his pupil Vâgasaneyâ Yâgñavalkya, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

lated them. They correspond to 'amo nâmâsy amâ hi te sarvam idam' in the Khând. Up. V, 2, 6, 6. The Mâdhyandinas read:
âmo'sy âmam hi te mayi, sa hi râgâ, &c. Dvivedagaṅga translates:
'thou art the knower, thy knowledge extends to me.'

¹ Rv. III, 62, 10.

² This probably refers to the list immediately following.

8. Vâgasaneya Yâgñavalkya told the same to his pupil Madhuka Paingya, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

9. Madhuka Paingya told the same to his pupil Kûla Bhâgavitti, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

10. Kûla Bhâgavitti told the same to his pupil Gânaki Âyasthûna, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

11. Gânaki Âyasthûna told the same to his pupil Satyakâma Gâbâla, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

12. Satyakâma Gâbâla told the same to his pupils, and said: 'If a man were to pour it on a dry stick, branches would grow, and leaves spring forth.'

Let no one tell this¹ to any one, except to a son or to a pupil².

13. Four things are made of the wood of the Udumbara tree, the sacrificial ladle (sruva), the cup (kâmasa), the fuel, and the two churning sticks.

There are ten kinds of village (cultivated) seeds, viz. rice and barley (brîhiyavâs), sesamum and kidney-beans (tilamâshâs), millet and panic seed (anupriyaṅgavas), wheat (godhûmâs), lentils (masûrâs), pulse (khalvâs), and vetches (khalakulâs³). After having

¹ The Mantha-doctrine with the prâṇadarsana. Comm.

² It probably means to no one except to one's own son and to one's own disciple. Cf. Svet. Up. VI, 22.

³ I have given the English names after Roer, who, living in India, had the best opportunity of identifying the various kinds of plants here mentioned. The commentators do not help us much. Saṅkara ground these he sprinkles them with curds (dadhi), honey, and ghee, and then offers (the proper portions) of clarified butter¹ (āgrya).

FOURTH BRĀHMANA².

1. The earth is the essence of all these things, water is the essence of the earth, plants of water, flowers of plants, fruits of flowers, man of fruits, seed of man.

2. And Pragâpati thought, let me make an abode for him, and he created a woman (Satarûpâ).

Tâm³ srishtvādha upâsta, tasmât striyam adha upâsita. Sa etam prâñkam grāvānam ātmana eva samudapārayat, tenainām abhyasrigat.

says that in some places Priyaṅgu (panic seed or millet) is called Kaṅgu; that Khalva, pulse, is also called Nishpāva and Valla, and Khalakula, vetches, commonly Kulattha. Dvivedagaṅga adds that Anu is called in Guzerat Moriya, Priyaṅgu Kaṅgu, Khalva, as nishpāva, Valla, and Khalakula Kulattha.

¹ According to the rules laid down in the proper Grihya-sūtras.

² This Brāhmana is inserted here because there is supposed to be some similarity between the preparation of the Srīmantha and the Putramantha, or because a person who has performed the Srīmantha is fit to perform the Putramantha. Thus Saṅkara says: Prānadarsinaḥ srīmantham karma kṛitavataḥ putramanthe 'dhikāraḥ. Yadā putramantham kīkīrshati tadā srīmantham kṛitvā ritukālam patnyāḥ (brahmakāryena) pratikshata iti.

³ I have given those portions of the text which did not admit of translation into English, in Sanskrit. It was not easy, however, to determine always the text of the Kāṇva-sākhā. Poley's text is not always correct, and Roer seems simply to repeat it. Saṅkara's commentary, which is meant for the Kāṇva text, becomes very short towards the end of the Upanishad. It is quite sufficient for the purpose of a translation, but by no means always for restoring a correct text. MS. Wilson 369, which has been assigned to the Kāṇva-sākhā, and which our Catalogue attributes to the same school, gives the Mādhyandina text, and so does MS. Mill 108. I have therefore collated two MSS. of the India Office, which Dr. Rost had the kindness to select for me, MS. 375 and MS. 1973, which I call A. and B.

3. Tasyâ vedir upastho, lomâni barhis, karmâ-dhishavane, samiddho¹ madhyatas, tau mushkau. Sa yâvân ha vai vâgapeyena yagamânasya loko bhavati tâvân asya loko bhavati ya evam vidvân adhopahâsam karaty â sa² strînâm sukritam vriṅkte 'tha ya idam avidvân adhopahâsam karaty âsya striyah sukritam vriṅgate.

4. Etad dha sma vai tadvidvân Uddâlaka Ârunir âhaitad dha sma vai tadvidvân Nâko Maudgalya âhaitad dha sma vai tadvidvân Kumârahârta âha, bahavo maryâ brâhmanâyanâ³ nirindriyâ visukrîto 'smâl lokât prayanti⁴ ya idam avidvâmso 'dhopahâsam karantîti. Bahu vâ⁵ idam suptasya vâ gâgrato vâ retah skandati,

5. Tad abhimrised anu vâ mantrayeta yan me 'dya retah prâthivîm askântsîd yad oshadhîr apy asarad yad apah, idam aham tad reta âdade punar mâm aîtv indriyam punas tegaḥ punar bhagaḥ, punar agnayo⁶ dhishnyâ yathâsthânam kalpantâm, ity anâmikâṅgushthâbhyâm âdâyântarena stanau vâ bhruvau vâ nimrîṅgyât⁷.

6. If a man see himself in the water⁸, he should

¹ Roer reads samidho, but Saṅkara and Dvivedagaṅga clearly presuppose samiddho, which is in A. and B.

² Roer has âsâm sa strînâm, Poley, A. and B. have âsâm strînâm. Saṅkara (MS. Mill 64) read â sa strînâm, and later on âsya striyah, though both Roer and Poley leave out the â here too (â asyeti khedah).

³ Brâhmanâyanâḥ, the same as brahmabandhavaḥ, i. e. Brâhmins by descent only, not by knowledge.

⁴ Narakam gakkhantîtyarthaḥ. Dvivedagaṅga.

⁵ Bahu vâ svalpam vâ.

⁶ The Mâdhyandina text has agnayo, and Dvivedagaṅga explains it by dhishnyâ agnayah sarîrasthitâḥ. Poley and Roer have punar agnir dhishnyâ, and so have A. and B.

⁷ Nirmrîgyât, A.; nimrîṅgyât, B.

⁸ Dvivedagaṅga adds, retoyonâv udake retahsikas tatra svakkhâyâdarsane prâyaskittam âha.

recite the following verse: 'May there be in me splendour, strength, glory, wealth, virtue.'

She is the best of women whose garments are pure¹. Therefore let him approach a woman whose garments are pure, and whose fame is pure, and address her.

7. If she do not give in², let him, as he likes, bribe her (with presents). And if she then do not give in, let him, as he likes, beat her with a stick or with his hand, and overcome her³, saying: 'With manly strength and glory I take away thy glory,'—and thus she becomes unglorious⁴.

8. If she give in, he says: 'With manly strength and glory I give thee glory,'—and thus they both become glorious.

9. Sa yâm ikkhet kâmayeta meti tasyâm artham nishâtaya⁵ mukhena mukham sandhâyopastham asyâ abhimrîsyâ gaped aṅgâdaṅgât sambhavasi hridayâd adhi gâyase, sa tvam aṅgakashâyo⁶ 'si digdhavid-dhâm⁷ iva mâdayemâm amûm mayîti⁸.

10. Atha yâm ikkhen na garbham dadhîteti⁹ tasyâm artham nishâtaya mukhena mukham sandhâyâbhiprânyâpânyâd indriyena te retasâ reta âdada ity aretâ¹⁰ eva bhavati.

¹ Trirâtravratam krîtvâ katurtha 'hni snâtâm.

² Instead of connecting kâmam with dadyât, Dvivedagaṅga explains it by yathâsakti.

³ Atikram, scil. maithunâya.

⁴ Bandhyâ durbhagâ.

⁵ Nishâtaya, A. B.; nishâtaya, Roer, Poley; the same in § 10.

⁶ Sa tvam aṅgânâm kashâyo raso 'si.

⁷ Vishaliptasaraviddhâm mrigîm iva.

⁸ Mâdayeti is the reading of the Mâdhyandina text. Poley, Roer, A. and B. read mâdayemâm amûm mayîti. Ânandagiri has mrigîm ivâmûm madîyâm striyam me mâdaya madvasâm kurv ityarthah. Dvivedagaṅga explains mâdayeti.

⁹ Rûpabhramsayauvanahânibhayât.

¹⁰ Agarbhini.

11. Atha yâm ikkhed garbham dadhīti tasyâm artham nishāya mukhena mukham sandhâyāpānyābhiprānyād indriyena te retasā reta ādadhāmiti garbhiny eva bhavati.

12. Now again, if a man's wife has a lover and the husband hates him, let him (according to rule)¹ place fire by an unbaked jar, spread a layer of arrows in inverse order², anoint these three arrow-heads³ with butter in inverse order, and sacrifice, saying : 'Thou hast sacrificed in my fire, I take away thy up and down breathing, I here⁴.'

'Thou hast sacrificed in my fire, I take away thy sons and cattle, I here.'

'Thou hast sacrificed in my fire, I take away thy sacred and thy good works, I here.'

'Thou hast sacrificed in my fire, I take away thy hope and expectation, I here.'

He whom a Brāhmaṇa who knows this curses, departs from this world without strength and without good works. Therefore let no one wish even for sport with the wife of a Srottriya⁵ who knows this, for he who knows this, is a dangerous enemy.

13. When the monthly illness seizes his wife, she

¹ Āvasathyāgnim eva pragvālya.

² Paśīmāgram dakṣināgram vā yathā syāt tathā.

³ Tisraḥ is left out by Roer and Poley, by A. and B.

⁴ I have translated according to the Kāṇva text, as far as it could be made out. As there are four imprecations, it is but natural that tisraḥ should be left out in the Kāṇva text. It is found in the Mādhyandina text, because there the imprecations are only three in number, viz. the taking away of hope and expectation, of sons and cattle, and of up and down breathing. Instead of asāv iti, which is sufficient, the Mādhyandina text has asāv iti nāma gr̥hṇāti, and both Ānandagiri and Dvivedagaṅga allow the alternative, ātmanaḥ sator vā nāma gr̥hṇāti, though asau can really refer to the speaker only.

⁵ Roer reads dvāreṇa; Poley, A. and B. dāreṇa; the Mādhyan-should for three days not drink from a metal vessel, and wear a fresh dress. Let no Vrishala or Vrishali (a Sûdra man or woman) touch her. At the end of the three days, when she has bathed, the husband should make her pound rice ¹.

14. And if a man wishes that a white son should be born to him, and that he should know one Veda, and live to his full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with milk and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring.

15. And if a man wishes that a reddish ² son with tawny eyes should be born to him, and that he should know two Vedas, and live to his full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with coagulated milk and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring.

16. And if a man wishes that a dark son should be born to him with red eyes, and that he should know three Vedas, and live to his full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with water and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring.

17. And if a man wishes that a learned daughter should be born to him, and that she should live to her full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with sesamum and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring.

18. And if a man wishes that a learned son should be born to him, famous, a public man, a popular speaker, that he should know all the Vedas, and that dinas gââyâyâ. Saṅkara, according to Roer, interprets dvârena, but it seems that dârena is used here in the singular, instead of the plural. See Pâraskara Grihya-sûtras I, 11.

¹ To be used for the ceremony described in § 14 seq.

² Kapilo varnataḥ piṅgalaḥ piṅgākshaḥ.

he should live to his full age, then, after having prepared boiled rice with meat and butter, they should both eat, being fit to have offspring. The meat should be of a young or of an old bull.

19. And then toward morning, after having, according to the rule of the Sthālpāka (pot-boiling), performed the preparation of the Āgya (clarified butter¹), he sacrifices from the Sthālpāka bit by bit, saying : ' This is for Agni, Svāhā ! This is for Anumati, Svāhā ! This is for the divine Savitṛi, the true creator, Svāhā ! ' Having sacrificed, he takes out the rest of the rice and eats it, and after having eaten, he gives it to his wife. Then he washes his hands, fills a water-jar, and sprinkles her thrice with it, saying : ' Rise hence, O Visvāvasu², seek another blooming girl, a wife with her husband.'

20. Then he embraces her, and says : ' I am Ama (breath), thou art Sâ (speech)³. Thou art Sâ (speech), I am Ama (breath). I am the Sâman, thou art the Rik⁴. I am the sky, thou art the earth. Come, let us strive together, that a male child may be begotten⁵.'

¹ Karum śrapayitvâ.

² Name of a Gandharva, as god of love. See Rig-veda X, 85, 22. Divedagaṅga explains the verse differently, so that the last words imply, I come together with my own wife.

³ Because speech is dependent on breath, as the wife is on the husband. See Khând. Up. I, 6, 1.

⁴ Because the Sâma-veda rests on the Rig-veda.

⁵ This is a verse which is often quoted and explained. It occurs in the Atharva-veda XIV, 71, as 'amo 'ham asmi sâ tvam, sâma-ham asmy rik tvam, dyaur aham prithivî tvam; tâv iha sam bhavâva pragâm â ganayâvahai.'

Here we have the opposition between amaḥ and sâ, while in the Ait. Brâhmaṇa VIII, 27, we have amo 'ham asmi sa tvam, giving amaḥ in opposition to sa. It seems not unlikely that this

21. Athāsya ūrū vihāpayati, vigihithām dyāvāpri-thivī iti tasyām artham nishṭāya mukhena mukham sandhāya trir enām anulomām¹ anumārshī, Vishnur yonim kalpayatu, Tvashtā rūpāni pimsatu, āsiñkatu Pragāpatir Dhātā garbham dadhatu te. Garbham dhehi Sinvāli, garbham dhehi prīthushṭuke, garbham te Asvinau devāv ādhattām pushkarasragau.

22. Hiranmayī arant yābhyām nirmanthatām² asvi-nau³, tam te garbham havāmahe⁴ dasame māsi sūtave. Yathāgnigarbhā prīthivī, yathā dyaus in-drena garbhini, vāyur disām yathā garbha evam garbham dadhāmi te 'sāv iti⁵.

23. Soshyantīm⁶ adbhir abhyukshati. Yathā vāyuh⁷ pushkarintīm samīṅgayati sarvataḥ, evā te garbha egatu sahāvaitu garāyunā. Indrasyāyam vragah krītaḥ sārgaḥ⁸ saparisrayaḥ⁹, tam indra nirgahi garbhena sāvarām¹⁰ saheti.

was an old proverbial formula, and that it meant originally no more than 'I am he, and thou art she.' But this meaning was soon forgotten. In the Khând. Up. I, 6, 1, we find sâ explained as earth, ama as fire (Sacred Books of the East, vol. i, p. 13). In the Ait.
Brâhmana sâ is explained as Rik, ama as Sâman. I have therefore in our passage also followed the interpretation of the commentary, instead of rendering it, 'I am he, and thou art she; thou art she,
and I am he.'

¹ Anulomam, mûrdhānam ārabhya pādāntam.

² Nirmathitavantau. ³ Asvinau devau, Mādhyandina text.

⁴ Dadhāmahe, Mādhyandina text. Instead of sūtave, A. has sūyate, B. sūtaye.

⁵ Iti nāma grīhñāti, Mādhyandina text. Saṅkara says, asāv iti tasyāḥ. Ānandagiri says, asāv iti patyur vā nirdeśaḥ; tasyā nāma grīhñāti pūrvena sambandhaḥ. Dvivedagaṅga says, ante bhartāsāv aham iti svātmano nāma grīhñāti, bhāryāyā vā.

⁶ See Pāraskara Grīhya-sūtra I, 16 seq.

⁷ Vātaḥ, M.

⁸ Argadāyā nirodhena saha vartamānaḥ sārgadaḥ, Dvivedagaṅga.

⁹ Saparisrayaḥ, parisrayena pariveshtanena garāyunā sahitaḥ, Dvivedagaṅga.

¹⁰ Sāvarām is the reading given by Poley, Roer, A. and B.

24¹. When the child is born, he prepares the fire, places the child on his lap, and having poured prishadāgya, i. e. dadhi (thick milk) mixed with ghṛita (clarified butter) into a metal jug, he sacrifices bit by bit of that prishadāgya, saying: 'May I, as I increase in this my house, nourish a thousand! May fortune never fail in his race, with offspring and cattle, Svāhā!'

'I offer to thee in my mind the vital breaths which are in me, Svāhā!'

'Whatever² in my work I have done too much, or whatever I have here done too little, may the wise Agni Svishtakṛit make this right and proper for us, Svāhā!'

25. Then putting his mouth near the child's right ear, he says thrice, Speech, speech³! After Ānandagiri explains: garbhaniṣṣaranānantaram yā māmsapeṣī nirgakkhati sāvārā, tām ka nirgamayety arthah. Dvivedagaṅga (ed. Weber) writes: nirgamyamānamāmsapeṣī sâ-avarasabdavâtyâ, tam sâvaram ka nirgamaya.

¹ These as well as the preceding rules refer to matters generally treated in the Gr̥hya-sūtras; see Āsvalāyana, Gr̥hya-sūtras I, 13 seq.; Pāraskara, Gr̥hya-sūtras I, 11 seq.; Sāṅkhāyana, Gr̥hya-sūtras I, 19 seq. It is curious, however, that Āsvalāyana I, 13, 1, refers distinctly to the Upanishad as the place where the pumsavana and similar matters were treated. This shows that the Upanishads were known before the composition of the Gr̥hya-sūtras, and explains perhaps, at least partially, why the Upanishads were considered as rahasya. Āsvalāyana says, 'Conception, begetting of a boy, and guarding the embryo are to be found in the Upanishad. But if a man does not read the Upanishad, let him know that he should feed his wife,' &c. Nārāyaṇa explains that Āsvalāyana here refers to an Upanishad which does not exist in his own Sākhā, but he objects to the conclusion that therefore the garbhādhāna and other ceremonies need not be performed, and adds that some hold it should be performed, as prescribed by Saunaka and others.

² Āsvalāyana, Gr̥hya-sūtra I, 10, 23.

³ Trayīlakṣaṇā vāk tvayi pravratv iti gapato 'bhiprāyaḥ.

that he pours together thick milk, honey, and clarified butter, and feeds the child with (a ladle of) pure gold¹, saying: 'I give thee Bhûh, I give thee Bhuva^h, I give thee Sva^h². Bhûr, Bhuva^h, Sva^h, I give thee all³.'

26⁴. Then he gives him his name, saying: 'Thou art Veda;'⁵ but this is his secret name⁶.

27. Then he hands the boy to his mother and gives him her breast, saying: 'O Sarasvatî, that breast of thine which is inexhaustible, delightful, abundant, wealthy, generous, by which thou cherishest all blessings, make that to flow here⁶.'

28⁷. Then he addresses the mother of the boy:

¹ Cf. Pâraskara Grîhya-sûtras I, 16, 4, anâmikayâ suvarnântarhitayâ; Sâṅkhâyana, Grîhya-sûtras I, 24, prâsayeg gâtarpurâṇa.

² Bhûr bhuva^h sva^h are explained by Dvivedagaṅga as the Rig-veda, Yagur-veda, and Sâma-veda. They might also be earth, air, and heaven. See Sâṅkhâyana, Grîhya-sûtras I, 24; Bhur rigvedam tvayi dadhâmi, &c.

³ The Mâdhyandinas add here another verse, which the father recites while he strokes his boy: 'Be a stone, be an axe, be pure gold. Thou art my Self, called my son; live a hundred harvests.' The same verse occurs in the Âsvalâyana Grîhya-sûtras I, 15, 3.

⁴ The two ceremonies, here described, are the âyushya-karman and the medhâganana. They are here treated rather confusedly. Pâraskara (Grîhya-sûtras I, 16, 3) distinguishes the medhâganana and the âyushya. He treats the medhâganana first, which consists in feeding the boy with honey and clarified butter, and saying to him bhûs tvayi dadhâmi, &c. The âyushya consists in repeating certain verses in the boy's ear, wishing him a long life, &c. In Âsvalâyana's Grîhya-sûtras, I, 15, 1 contains the âyushya, I, 15, 2 the medhâganana. Sâṅkhâyana also (I, 24) treats the âyushya first, and the medhâganana afterwards, and the same order prevails in the Mâdhyandina text of the Bṛihadâraṇyaka-upanishad.

⁵ In the Mâdhyandina text these acts are differently arranged.

⁶ Rig-veda I, 164, 49.

⁷ These verses are differently explained by various commentators. Ânandagiri explains iâ as stutyâ, bhogyâ. He derives Maitrâvaruṇî

‘Thou art I/â Maitrâvaruñî: thou strong woman hast born a strong boy. Be thou blessed with strong children thou who hast blessed me with a strong child.’

And they say of such a boy: ‘Ah, thou art better than thy father; ah, thou art better than thy grandfather. Truly he has reached the highest point in happiness, praise, and Vedic glory who is born as the son of a Brâhmana that knows this.’

FIFTH BRÂHMANA.

1. Now follows the stem¹:

1. Pautimâshîputra from Kâtyâyanîputra, from Maitrâvaruna, i.e. Vasishtha, the son of Mitrâvarunau, and identifies her with Arundhatî. Dvivedagaṅga takes idâ as bhogyâ, or idâpâtrî, or prâthivîrûpâ, and admits that she may be called Maitrâvaruñî, because born of Mitrâvarunau. Vîre is rightly taken as a vocative by Dvivedagaṅga, while Ânandagiri explains it as a locative, mayi nimittabhûte. One expects agîganah instead of agîganat, which is the reading of A. and B. The reading of the Mâdhyandinas, âgîganathâh, is right grammatically, but it offends against the metre, and is a theoretical rather than a real form. If we read agîganah, we must also read akarah, unless we are prepared to follow the commentator, who supplies bhavati.

¹ The Mâdhyandinas begin with vayam, we, then 1. Bhâradvâgîputra, 2. Vâtsîmandavîputra, 3. Pârasarîputra, 4. Gârgîputra, 5. Pârâsarî-kaundîniputra, 6. Gârgîputra, 7. Gârgîputra, 8. Bâdeyîputra, 9. Maushikîputra, 10. Hârikarnîputra, 11. Bhâradvâgîputra, 12. Paingîputra, 13. Saunakîputra, 14. Kâsyapî-bâlâkyâ-mâharîputra, 15. Kautsîputra, 16. Baudhîputra, 17. Sâlaṅkâyanîputra, 18. Vârshaganîputra, 19. Gautamîputra, 20. Âtreyyîputra, 21. Gautamîputra, 22. Vâtsîputra, 23. Bhâradvâgîputra, 24. Pârâsarîputra, 25. Vârkârûnîputra; then from No. 20 as in the Kânva text.

This stem is called by Saṅkara, Samastapraṇavamsah, and Ânandagiri adds, pûrvau vamsau purushavisheshtau, trîtiyas tu strîvisheshtah, strîprâdhânyât. Dvivedagaṅga writes, putramantha-karmanah strîsamskârârthatvenoktatvât tatsannidhânâd ayam vamsah strîprâdhânyenoktyate.

2. Kātyāyanīputra from Gotamīputra,
3. Gotamīputra from Bhāradvāgīputra,
4. Bhāradvāgīputra from Pārāsarīputra,
5. Pārāsarīputra from Aupasvatīputra,
6. Aupasvatīputra from Pārāsarīputra,
7. Pārāsarīputra from Kātyāyanīputra,
8. Kātyāyanīputra from Kausikīputra,
9. Kausikīputra from Ālambīputra and Vaiyāghrapadīputra,
10. Ālambīputra and Vaiyāghrapadīputra from Kāṇvīputra,
11. Kāṇvīputra from Kāpīputra,
12. Kāpīputra
2. from Ātreyaīputra,
13. Ātreyaīputra from Gautamīputra,
14. Gautamīputra from Bhāradvāgīputra,
15. Bhāradvāgīputra from Pārāsarīputra,
16. Pārāsarīputra from Vātsīputra,
17. Vātsīputra from Pārāsarīputra,
- 18¹. Pārāsarīputra from Vārkārunīputra,
19. Vārkārunīputra from Vārkārunīputra,
20. Vārkārunīputra from Ārtabhāgīputra,
21. Ārtabhāgīputra from Sauṅgīputra,
22. Sauṅgīputra from Sāṅkrītiputra,
- 23². Sāṅkrītiputra from Ālambāyanīputra,
24. Ālambāyanīputra from Ālambīputra,
25. Ālambīputra from Gāyantīputra,
26. Gāyantīputra from Māṇḍūkāyanīputra,
27. Māṇḍūkāyanīputra from Māṇḍūkīputra,
28. Māṇḍūkīputra from Sāṇḍīlīputra,
29. Sāṇḍīlīputra from Rāthitarīputra,
- 30³. Rāthitarīputra from Bhālukīputra,

¹ M. has only one.² M. inverts 23 and 24.³ Deest in M.

31. Bhālukîputra from Krauñçikîputrau,
32. Krauñçikîputrau from Vaittabhatîputra ¹,
33. Vaittabhatîputra from Kârsakeyîputra ²,
34. Kârsakeyîputra from Prâkṇayogîputra,
35. Prâkṇayogîputra from Sâṅgîvîputra ³,
36. Sâṅgîvîputra from Prâsṇîputra Âsurivâsin,
37. Prâsṇîputra Âsurivâsin from Âsurâyana,
38. Âsurâyana from Âsuri,
39. Âsuri
3. from Yâgñavalkya,
40. Yâgñavalkya from Uddâlaka,
41. Uddâlaka from Aruna,
42. Aruna from Upavesi,
43. Upavesi from Kusri,
44. Kusri from Vâgasravas,
45. Vâgasravas from Gihvâvat Vâdhyoga,
46. Gihvâvat Vâdhyoga from Asita Vârshagana,
47. Asita Vârshagana from Harita Kasyapa,
48. Harita Kasyapa from Silpa Kasyapa,
49. Silpa Kasyapa from Kasyapa Naidhruvi,
50. Kasyapa Naidhruvi from Vâk,
51. Vâk from Ambhinî,
52. Ambhinî from Âditya, the Sun.

As coming from Âditya, the Sun, these pure ⁴ Yagus verses have been proclaimed by Yâgñavalkya Vâgasaneyya.

¹ Vaidabhrîîputra, M.

² Bhālukîputra, M.

³ Kârsakeyîputra after 35 in M.

⁴ They are called suklâni, white or pure, because they are not mixed with Brâhmanas, avyâmisrâni brâhmaṇena (doshair asaṅkîr-nâni, paurusheyatvadoshadvârâbhâvâd ityarthaḥ). Or they are ayâ-tayâmâni, unimpaired. Ânandagiri adds, Pragâpatim ârabhya Sâṅgîvîputraparyantam (No. 36) Vâgasaneyisâkhâsu sarvâsv eko vamsa ityâha samânam iti. Dvivedagaṅga says: Vâgisâkhâvakkhin-

- 4¹. The same as far as Sâṅgīvīputra (No. 36), then
36. Sâṅgīvīputra from Mândūkâyani,
 37. Mândūkâyani from Mândavya,
 38. Mândavya from Kautsa,
 39. Kautsa from Mâhitthi,
 40. Mâhitthi from Vâmakakshâyana,
 41. Vâmakakshâyana from Sândilya,
 42. Sândilya from Vâtsya,
 43. Vâtsya from Kusri,
 44. Kusri from Yagñavalkas Râgastambâyana,
 45. Yagñavalkas Râgastambâyana from Tura Kâvasheya,
 46. Tura Kâvasheya from Pragâpati,
 47. Pragâpati from Brahman,
 48. Brahman is Svayambhu, self-existent.
Adoration to Brahman !

nânâm yagushâm Sûryenopadish/atvam Yâgñavalkyena prâptatvam ka purâneshu prasiddham.

¹ This last paragraph is wanting in the Mâdhyandina text, but a very similar paragraph occurs in Satapatha-brâhmana X, 6, 5, 9, where, however, Vâtsya comes before Sândilya.

SVETÂSVATARA-UPANISHAD.

SVETÂSVATARA- UPANISHAD.

FIRST ADHYÂYA.

✓ 1. The Brahma-students say: Is Brahman the cause¹? Whence are we born? Whereby do we live, and whither do we go? O ye who know Brahman, (tell us) at whose command we abide, whether in pain or in pleasure?

¹ This translation seems the one which Sāṅkara himself prefers, for on p. 277, when recapitulating, he says, kim brahma kâranam âhosvit kâlâdi. In comparing former translations, whether by Weber, Roer, Gough, and others, it will be seen that my own differs considerably from every one of them, and differs equally from Sāṅkara's interpretation. It would occupy too much space to criticise former translations, nor would it seem fair, considering how long ago they were made, and how imperfect were the materials which were then accessible. All I wish my readers to understand is that, if I differ from my predecessors, I do so after having carefully examined their renderings. Unfortunately, Roer's edition of both the text and the commentary is often far from correct. Thus in the very first verse of the Svetâsvatara-upanishad, I think we ought to read sampratish/hâh, instead of sampratish/hitâh. In the commentary the reading is right. Vyavasyâm is a misprint for vyavasthâm. In the second verse we must separate kâlâh and svabhâvaḥ. Yadrikkhâ, no very unusual word, meaning chance, was formerly taken for a name of the moon! Instead of na tvâtma-bhâvât, both sense and metre require that we should read anâtmabhâvât, though the commentators take a different view. They say, because there is a self, and then go on to say that even that would not suffice. Such matters, however, belong to a critical commentary on the Upanishads rather than to a translation, and I can refer to them in cases of absolute necessity only, and where the readings of the two MSS., A. and B, seem to offer some help.

2. Should time, or nature¹, or necessity, or chance, or the elements be considered as the cause, or he who is called the person (purusha, vigñânâtmâ)? It cannot be their union either, because that is not self-dependent², and the self also is powerless, because there is (independent of him) a cause of good and evil³.

3. The sages, devoted to meditation and concentration, have seen the power belonging to God himself⁴, hidden in its own qualities (guṇa). He, being one, superintends all those causes, time, self, and the rest⁵.

4⁶. We meditate on him who (like a wheel) has one felly with three tires, sixteen ends, fifty spokes, with twenty counter-spokes, and six sets of eight;

¹ Svabhâva, their own nature or independent character.

² Union presupposes a uniter.

³ Âtmâ is explained by Sâṅkara as the gîvâh, the living self, and as that living self is in his present state determined by karman, work belonging to a former existence, it cannot be thought of as an independent cause.

⁴ Devâtmasakti is a very important term, differently explained by the commentators, but meaning a power belonging to the Deva, the Îsvara, the Lord, not independent of him, as the Sâṅkhyas represent Prakṛiti or nature. Herein lies the important distinction between Vedânta and Sâṅkhya.

⁵ Kâlâtma^{bhyâm} yuktâni, kâlapurushasamyuktâni svabhâvâdîni. Âtman is here taken as synonymous with purusha in verse 2.

⁶ It is difficult to say whether this verse was written as a summing up of certain technicalities recognised in systems of philosophy existing at the time, or whether it is a mere play of fancy. I prefer the former view, and subjoin the explanation given by Sâṅkara, though it is quite possible that on certain points he may be mistaken. The Îsvara or deva is represented as a wheel with one felly, which would seem to be the phenomenal world. It is called trivṛt, three-fold, or rather having three tires, three bands or hoops to bind the felly, these tires being intended for the three guṇas of the prakṛiti, the Sattva, Ragas, and Tamas. In the Brahmopaniṣad (Bibl. Ind.

whose one rope is manifold, who proceeds on three different roads, and whose illusion arises from two causes.

p. 251) the trivṛt sūtram is mentioned. Next follows śoḍaśāntam, ending in the sixteen. These sixteen are differently explained. They may be meant for the five elements and the eleven indriyas or organs (the five receptive and the five active senses, together with manas, the common sensory); or for the sixteen kalās, mentioned in the Prasṇopaniṣad, VI, 1, p. 283. Then follows a new interpretation. The one felly may be meant for the chaos, the undeveloped state of things, and the sixteen would then be the two products in a general form, the Virāḡ and the Sūtrātman, while the remaining fourteen would be the individual products, the bhuvanas or worlds beginning with Bhûḥ.

Next follows satārdhāram, having fifty spokes. These fifty spokes are supposed to produce the motion of the mundane wheel, and are explained by Śaṅkara as follows :

1. The five Viparyayas, misconceptions, different kinds of ignorance or doubt, viz. Tamas, Moha, Mahāmoha, Tāmisra, Andhatāmisra, or, according to Patañjali, ignorance, self-love, love, hatred, and fear (Yoga-sūtras I, 8 ; II, 2 ; Sāṅkhya-sūtras III, 37).

2. The twenty-eight Asaktis, disabilities, causes of misconception. (See Sāṅkhya-sūtras III, 38.)

3. The nine inversions of the Tuṣṭis, satisfactions. (Sāṅkhya-sūtras III, 39.)

4. The eight inversions of the Siddhis, perfections. (Sāṅkhya-sūtras III, 40.)

These are afterwards explained singly. There are 8 kinds of Tamas, 8 kinds of Moha, 10 kinds of Mahāmoha, 18 kinds of Tāmisra, and 18 kinds of Andhatāmisra, making 62 in all. More information on the Asaktis, the Tuṣṭis, and Siddhis may be found in the Sāṅkhya-sūtras III, 37-45 ; Sāṅkhya-kārikā 47 seq. ; Yoga-sūtras II, 2 seq.

Then follow the 20 pratyayas, the counter-spokes, or wedges to strengthen the spokes, viz. the 10 senses and their 10 objects.

The six ashṭakas or ogdoads are explained as the ogdoads of Prakṛiti, of substances (dhātu), of powers (aiśvarya), of states (bhāva), of gods (deva), of virtues (ātmaguna).

The one, though manifold cord, is love or desire, Kāma, whether of food, children, heaven or anything else.

The three paths are explained as righteousness, unrighteousness,

5¹. We meditate on the river whose water consists of the five streams, which is wild and winding with its five springs, whose waves are the five vital breaths, whose fountain head is the mind, the course of the five kinds of perceptions. It has five whirlpools, its rapids are the five pains; it has fifty kinds of suffering, and five branches.

6. In that vast Brahma-wheel, in which all things live and rest, the bird flutters about, so long as he thinks that the self (in him) is different from the mover (the god, the lord). When he has been blessed by him, then he gains immortality².

7. But what is praised (in the Upanishads) is the and knowledge, and the one deception arising from two causes is ignorance of self, produced by good or bad works.

¹ Here again, where the īśvara is likened to a stream, the minute coincidences are explained by Śaṅkara in accordance with certain systems of philosophy. The five streams are the five receptive organs, the five springs are the five elements, the five waves are the five active organs. The head is the manas, the mind, or common sensory, from which the perceptions of the five senses spring. The five whirlpools are the objects of the five senses, the five rapids are the five pains of being in the womb, being born, growing old, growing ill, and dying. The next adjective pañākā-sadbhedām is not fully explained by Śaṅkara. He only mentions the five divisions of the kṣeṣa (see Yoga-sūtras II, 2), but does not show how their number is raised to fifty. Dr. Roer proposes to read pañākṣeṣa-bhedām, but that would not agree with the metre. The five parvans or branches are not explained, and may refer to the fifty kinds of suffering (kṣeṣa). The whole river, like the wheel in the preceding verse, is meant for the Brahman as kārya-kāraṇātma, in the form of cause and effect, as the phenomenal, not the absolutely real world.

² If he has been blessed by the Īśvara, i. e. when he has been accepted by the Lord, when he has discovered his own true self in the Lord. It must be remembered, however, that both the Īśvara, the Lord, and the puruṣa, the individual soul, are phenomenal only, and that the Brahma-wheel is meant for the prapañka, the manifest, but unreal world.

Highest Brahman, and in it there is the triad¹. The Highest Brahman is the safe support, it is imperishable. The Brahma-students², when they have known what is within this (world), are devoted and merged in the Brahman, free from birth³.

8. The Lord (īsa) supports all this together, the perishable and the imperishable, the developed and the undeveloped. The (living) self, not being a lord, is bound⁴, because he has to enjoy (the fruits of works); but when he has known the god (deva), he is freed from all fetters.

9. There are two, one knowing (īśvara), the other not-knowing (gṛīva), both unborn, one strong, the other weak⁵; there is she, the unborn, through whom each man receives the recompense of his works⁶; and there is the infinite Self (appearing) under all forms, but himself inactive. When a man finds out these three, that is Brahma⁷.

10. That which is perishable⁸ is the Pradhâna⁹ (the first), the immortal and imperishable is Hara¹⁰.

¹ The subject (bhoktrī), the object (bhogya), and the mover (preritrī), see verse 12.

² B. has Vedavido, those who know the Vedas.

³ Tasmin praliyate tv ātmā samādhiḥ sa udāhṛtaḥ.

⁴ Read badhyate for budhyate.

⁵ The form īśanīsau is explained as śhāndasa; likewise brahmam for brahma.

⁶ Cf. Svet. Up. IV, 5, bhuktabhogyām.

⁷ The three are (1) the lord, the personal god, the creator and ruler; (2) the individual soul or souls; and (3) the power of creation, the devâtmasakti of verse 3. All three are contained in Brahman; see verses 7, 12. So 'pi mâyî paramesvaro mâyopâdhisannidhes tadvân iva.

⁸ See verse 8.

⁹ The recognised name for Prakṛiti, or here Devâtmasakti, in the later Sâṅkhya philosophy.

¹⁰ Hara, one of the names of Śiva or Rudra, is here explained as

The one god rules the perishable (the pradhâna) and the (living) self¹. From meditating on him, from joining him, from becoming one with him there is further cessation of all illusion in the end.

11. When that god is known, all fetters fall off, sufferings are destroyed, and birth and death cease. From meditating on him there arises, on the dissolution of the body, the third state, that of universal lordship²; but he only who is alone, is satisfied³.

12. This, which rests eternally within the self, should be known; and beyond this not anything has to be known. By knowing the enjoyer⁴, the enjoyed, and the ruler, everything has been declared to be threefold, and this is Brahman.

13. As the form of fire, while it exists in the under-wood⁵, is not seen, nor is its seed destroyed, avidyâder haranât, taking away ignorance. He would seem to be meant for the îsvara or deva, the one god, though immediately afterwards he is taken for the true Brahman, and not for its phenomenal divine personification only.

¹ The self, âtman, used here, as before, for purusha, the individual soul, or rather the individual souls.

² A blissful state in the Brahma-world, which, however, is not yet perfect freedom, but may lead on to it. Thus it is said in the Sivadharmottara :

Dhyânâd aisvaryam atulam aisvaryât sukham uttamam, Gñânena tat parityagya videho muktim âpnuyât.

³ This alone-ness, kevalatvam, is produced by the knowledge that the individual self is one with the divine self, and that both the individual and the divine self are only phenomenal forms of the true Self, the Brahman.

⁴ Bhoktâ, possibly for bhoktrâ, unless it is a Khândasa form. It was quoted before, Bibl. Ind. p. 292, l. 5. The enjoyer is the purusha, the individual soul, the subject; the enjoyed is prakṛiti, nature, the object; and the ruler is the îsvara, that is, Brahman, as god. I take brahmam etat in the same sense here as in verse 9.

⁵ This metaphor, like most philosophical metaphors in Sanskrit, but it has to be seized again and again by means of the stick and the under-wood, so it is in both cases, and the Self has to be seized in the body by means of the pranava (the syllable Om).

14. By making his body the under-wood, and the syllable Om the upper-wood, man, after repeating the drill of meditation, will perceive the bright god, like the spark hidden in the wood¹.

15. As oil in seeds, as butter in cream, as water in (dry) river-beds², as fire in wood, so is the Self seized within the self, if man looks for him by truthfulness and penance³;

16. (If he looks) for the Self that pervades everything, as butter is contained in milk, and the roots whereof are self-knowledge and penance. That is the Brahman taught by the Upanishad.

is rather obscure at first sight, but very exact when once understood. Fire, as produced by a fire drill, is compared to the Self. It is not seen at first, yet it must be there all the time; its linga or subtle body cannot have been destroyed, because as soon as the stick, the indhana, is drilled in the under-wood, the yoni, the fire becomes visible. In the same way the Self, though invisible during a state of ignorance, is there all the time, and is perceived when the body has been drilled by the Pranava, that is, after, by a constant repetition of the sacred syllable Om, the body has been subdued, and the ecstatic vision of the Self has been achieved.

Indhana, the stick used for drilling, and yoni, the under-wood, in which the stick is drilled, are the two araxis, the fire-sticks used for kindling fire. See Tylor, Anthropology, p. 260.

¹ Cf. Dhyānavindūpan. verse 20; Brahmopanishad, p. 256.

² Srotas, a stream, seems to mean here the dry bed of a stream, which, if dug into, will yield water.

³ The construction is correct, if we remember that he who is seized is the same as he who looks for the hidden Self. But the metre would be much improved if we accepted the reading of the Brahmopanishad, evam ātmā ātmani gr̥hyate 'sau, which is confirmed by B. The last line would be improved by reading, satye-nainam ye 'nupasyanti dhīrāḥ.

SECOND ADHYĀYA.

1¹. Savitri (the sun), having first collected his mind and expanded his thoughts, brought Agni (fire), when he had discovered his light, above the earth.

2². With collected minds we are at the command of the divine Savitri, that we may obtain blessedness.

¹ The seven introductory verses are taken from hymns addressed to Savitri as the rising sun. They have been so twisted by Saṅkara, in order to make them applicable to the teachings of the Yoga philosophy, as to become almost nonsensical. I have given a few specimens of Saṅkara's renderings in the notes, but have translated the verses, as much as possible, in their original character. As they are merely introductory, I do not understand why the collector of the Upanishad should have seen in them anything but an invocation of Savitri.

These verses are taken from various Samhitās. The first yuñgānaḥ prathamam is from Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 1, 1; Vāg. Samh. XI, 1; see also Sat. Br. VI, 3, 1, 12. The Taittirīya-text agrees with the Upanishad, the Vāgasaneyi-text has dhiyam for dhiyaḥ, and agneḥ for agnim. Both texts take tatvāya as a participle of tan, while the Upanishad reads tattvāya, as a dative of tattva, truth. I have translated the verse in its natural sense. Saṅkara, in explaining the Upanishad, translates: 'At the beginning of our meditation, joining the mind with the Highest Self, also the other prāṇas, or the knowledge of outward things, for the sake of truth, Savitri, out of the knowledge of outward things, brought Agni, after having discovered his brightness, above the earth, in this body.' He explains it: 'May Savitri, taking our thoughts away from outward things, in order to concentrate them on the Highest Self, produce in our speech and in our other senses that power which can lighten all objects, which proceeds from Agni and from the other favourable deities.' He adds that 'by the favour of Savitri, Yoga may be obtained.'

² The second verse is from Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 1, 3; Vāg. Samh. XI, 2. The Vāgasaneyi-text has svargyāya for svargeyāya, and saktyā for saktyai. Saṅkara explains: 'With a mind that has been joined

3¹. May Savitri, after he has reached with his mind the gods as they rise up to the sky, and with his thoughts (has reached) heaven, grant these gods to make a great light to shine.

4². The wise sages of the great sage collect their mind and collect their thoughts. He who alone knows the law (Savitri) has ordered the invocations ; great is the praise of the divine Savitri.

by Savitri to the Highest Self, we, with the sanction of that Savitri, devote ourselves to the work of meditation, which leads to the obtainment of Svarga, according to our power.' He explains Svarga by Paramâtman. Sâyana in his commentary on the Taittirîya-samhitâ explains svargeyâya by svargaloke gîyamânasyâgneḥ sampâdanâya ; Saṅkara, by svargaprâptihetubhûtâyâ dhyânakarmāne. Saktyai is explained by Saṅkara by yathâsâmarthyam ; by Sâyana, by saktâ bhûyâsma. Mahîdhara explains saktyâ by svasâmarthyena. I believe that the original reading was svargyâya saktyai, and that we must take saktyai as an infinitive, like ityai, construed with a dative, like drîsaye sûryâya, for the seeing of the sun. The two attracted datives would be governed by save, 'we are under the command of Savitri,' svargyâya saktyai, 'that we may obtain svargya, life in Svarga or blessedness.'

¹ The third verse is from Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 1, 2 ; Vâg. Samh. XI, 3. The Taittirîyas read yuktvâya manasâ ; the Vâgasaneyins, yuktvâya savitâ. Saṅkara translates : 'Again he prays that Savitri, having directed the devas, i. e. the senses, which are moving towards Brahman, and which by knowledge are going to brighten up the heavenly light of Brahman, may order them to do so ; that is, he prays that, by the favour of Savitri, our senses should be turned away from outward things to Brahman or the Self.' Taking the hymn as addressed to Savitri, I have translated deva by gods, not by senses, suvaryataḥ by rising to the sky, namely, in the morning. The opposition between manasâ and dhiyâ is the same here as in verse 1, and again in verse 4.

² This verse is from Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 1, 4 ; 1, 2, 13, 1, 1 ; Vâg. Samh. V, 14 ; XI, 4 ; XXXVII, 2 ; Rig-veda V, 81, 1 ; Sat. Br. III, 5, 3, 11 ; VI, 3, 1, 16. Saṅkara explains this verse again in the same manner as he did the former verses, while the Satapatha-brâhmaṇa supplies two different ritual explanations.

5¹. Your old prayer has to be joined² with praises. Let my song go forth like the path of the sun! May all the sons of the Immortal listen, they who have reached their heavenly homes.

6. Where the fire is rubbed³, where the wind is checked, where the Soma flows over, there the mind is born.

¹ For this verse, see Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 2, 1; Vâg. Samh. XI, 5; Atharva-veda XVIII, 3, 39; Rig-veda X, 13, 1. The Vâgasaneyins read vi sloka etu for vi slokâ yanti; sûreḥ for sûrâḥ; srinvantu for srinvanti; and the Rig-veda agrees with them. The dual vâm is accounted for by the verse belonging to a hymn celebrating the two sakatas, carts, bearing the offerings (havirdhâne); most likely, however, the dual referred originally to the dual deities of heaven and earth. I prefer the text of the Rig-veda and the Vâgasaneyins to that of the Taittirîyas, and have translated the verse accordingly. In the Atharva-veda XVIII, 39, if we may trust the edition, the verse begins with svâsasthe bhavatam indave naḥ, which is really the end of the next verse (Rv. X, 13, 2), while the second line is, vi sloka eti pathyeva sûriḥ srinvantu visve amṛtâsa etat. I see no sense in pathyeva sûrâḥ. Saṅkara explains pathyeva by pathi sanmârge, athavâ pathyâ kîrtiḥ, while his later commentary, giving srinvantu and putrâḥ sûrâtmano hiranyagarbhasya, leads one to suppose that he read sûreḥ srinvantu. Sâyana (Taitt. Samh. IV, 1, 1, 2) explains pathyâ sûrâ iva by gîrvânamârga antarikshe sûryarasmayo yathâ prasaranti tadvat. The same, when commenting on the Rig-veda (X, 13, 1), says: pathyâ-iva sûreḥ, yathâ stotuḥ sva-bhûtâ pathyâ parinâmasukhâvahâhutir visvân devân prati vividham gakkhati tadvat. Mahîdhara (Vâg. Samh. XI, 5) refers sûreḥ (panditasya) to slokaḥ, and explains pathyeva by patho 'napetâ pathyâ yagnînamârgapravrittâhutiḥ.

² Yugé cannot stand for yuñge, as all commentators and translators suppose, but is a dative infinitive. Neither can yuñgate in the following verse stand for yuñkte (see Boehlingk, s. v.), or be explained as a subjunctive form. A. reads adhirudhyate, B. abhirudhyate, with a marginal note abhinudyate. It is difficult to say whether in lighting the fire the wind should be directed towards it, or kept from it.

³ That is, at the Soma sacrifice, after the fire has been kindled and stirred by the wind, the poets, on partaking of the juice, are

7. Let us love the old Brahman by the grace of Savitri; if thou make thy dwelling there, the path will not hurt thee¹.

8. If a wise man hold his body with its three erect parts (chest, neck, and head) even², and turn his senses with the mind towards the heart, he will then in the boat of Brahman³ cross all the torrents which cause fear.

9. Compressing his breathings let him, who has subdued all motions, breathe forth through the nose with gentle breath⁴. Let the wise man without fail restrain his mind, that chariot yoked with vicious horses⁵.

10. Let him perform his exercises in a place⁶ inspired for new songs. Saṅkara, however, suggests another explanation as more appropriate for the Upanishad, namely, 'Where the fire, i.e. the Highest Self, which burns all ignorance, has been kindled (in the body, where it has been rubbed with the syllable Om), and where the breath has acted, i.e. has made the sound peculiar to the initial stages of Yoga, there Brahman is produced.' In fact, what was intended to be taught was this, that we must begin with sacrificial acts, then practise yoga, then reach samâdhi, perfect knowledge, and lastly bliss.

¹ We must read krinavase, in the sense of 'do this and nothing will hurt thee,' or, if thou do this, thy former deeds will no longer hurt thee.

² Cf. Bhagavadgîtâ VI, 13. Samam kâyasirogrîvam dhârayan. Saṅkara says: trîny unnatâny urogrîvasirâmsy unnatâni yasmin sarîre.

³ Explained by Saṅkara as the syllable Om.

⁴ Cf. Bhagavadgîtâ V, 27. Prânâpânau samau kṛtvâ nâsâbhyantara kârinau. See Telang's notes, Sacred Books of the East, vol. viii, p. 68 seq.

⁵ A similar metaphor in Kaṭh. Up. III, 4-6; Sacred Books of the East, vol. xv, p. 13.

⁶ The question is whether sabdagalâsrayâdibhiḥ should be referred to mano'nukûle, as I have translated it, or to vivargite, as Saṅkara seems to take it, because he renders sabda, sound, by noise, and level, pure, free from pebbles, fire, and dust, delightful by its sounds, its water, and bowers, not painful to the eye, and full of shelters and caves.

11. When Yoga is being performed, the forms which come first, producing apparitions in Brahman, are those of misty smoke, sun, fire, wind, fire-flies, lightnings, and a crystal moon¹.

12. When, as earth, water, light, heat, and ether arise, the fivefold quality of Yoga takes place², then there is no longer illness, old age, or pain³ for him who has obtained a body, produced by the fire of Yoga.

13. The first results of Yoga they call lightness, healthiness, steadiness, a good complexion, an easy pronunciation, a sweet odour, and slight excretions.

14. As a metal disk (mirror), tarnished by dust, shines bright again after it has been cleaned, so is the one incarnate person satisfied and free from grief, after he has seen the real nature of the self⁴.

âsraya by mandapa, a booth. See Bhagavadgîtâ VI, 11. In the Maitr. Up. VI, 30, Râmatîrtha explains sukau dese by girinadî-pulinaguhâdisuddhashthâne. See also Âsv. Grîhya-sûtras III, 2, 2.

¹ Or, it may be, a crystal and the moon.

² The Yogaguna is described as the quality of each element, i.e. smell of the earth, taste of water, &c. It seems that the perception of these gunas is called yogapravṛtti. Thus by fixing the thought on the tip of the nose, a perception of heavenly scent is produced; by fixing it on the tip of the tongue, a perception of heavenly taste; by fixing it on the point of the palate, a heavenly colour; by fixing it on the middle of the tongue, a heavenly touch; by fixing it on the roof of the tongue, a heavenly sound. By means of these perceptions the mind is supposed to be steadied, because it is no longer attracted by the outward objects themselves. See Yoga-sûtras I, 35.

³ Or no death, na mṛityuḥ, B.

⁴ Pareshâm pâḥe tadvat sa tattvam prasamîkshya dehîti.

15. And when by means of the real nature of his self he sees, as by a lamp, the real nature of Brahman, then having known the unborn, eternal god, who is beyond all natures¹, he is freed from all fetters.

16. He indeed is the god who pervades all regions: he is the first-born (as Hiranyagarbha), and he is in the womb. He has been born, and he will be born². He stands behind all persons, looking everywhere.

17. The god³ who is in the fire, the god who is in the water, the god who has entered into the whole world, the god who is in plants, the god who is in trees, adoration be to that god, adoration!

¹ Sarvatattvair avidyâatkâryair visuddham asamsprisham.

² This verse is found in the Vâg. Samh. XXXII, 4; Taitt. Âr. X, 1, 3, with slight modifications. The Vâgasaneyins read esha hi; sa eva gâtaḥ (A. B.) for sa vigâtaḥ; ganâs (A. B.) for ganâms. The Âranyaka has sa vigâyamânaḥ for sa vigâtaḥ, pratyānmukhâs for pratyāṅganâms, and visvatomukhaḥ for sarvatomukhaḥ. Colebrooke (Essays, I, 57) gives a translation of it. If we read ganâḥ, we must take it as a vocative.

³ B. (not A.) reads yo rudro yo 'gnau.

THIRD ADHYĀYA¹.

1. The snarer² who rules alone by his powers, who rules all the worlds by his powers, who is one and the same, while things arise and exist³,—they who know this are immortal.

2. For there is one Rudra only, they do not allow a second, who rules all the worlds by his powers. He stands behind all persons⁴, and after having created all worlds he, the protector, rolls it up⁵ at the end of time.

3⁶. That one god, having his eyes, his face, his arms, and his feet in every place, when producing heaven and earth, forges them together with his arms and his wings⁷.

¹ This Adhyāya represents the Highest Self as the personified deity, as the lord, īśa, or Rudra, under the sway of his own creative power, prakṛiti or mâyā.

² Śaṅkara explains gāla, snare, by mâyā. The verse must be corrected, according to Śaṅkara's commentary:

ya eko gālavân īśata īśanībhiḥ sarvāñ llokān īśata īśanībhiḥ.

³ Sambhava, in the sense of Vergehen, perishing, rests on no authority.

⁴ Here again the MSS. A. B. read ganâs, as a vocative.

⁵ I prefer samkukoka to samkukopa, which gives us the meaning that Rudra, after having created all things, draws together, i. e. takes them all back into himself, at the end of time. I have translated samsrīgya by having created, because Boehtlingk and Roth give other instances of samsrīg with that sense. Otherwise, 'having mixed them together again,' would seem more appropriate. A. and B. read samkukoka.

⁶ This is a very popular verse, and occurs Rig-veda X, 81, 3; Vâg. Samh. XVII, 19; Ath.-veda XIII, 2, 26; Taitt. Samh. IV, 6, 2, 4; Taitt. Âr. X, 1, 3.

⁷ Śaṅkara takes dhamati in the sense of samyogayati, i. e. he joins men with arms, birds with wings.

4. He¹, the creator and supporter of the gods, Rudra, the great seer, the lord of all, he who formerly gave birth to Hiraṇyagarbha, may he endow us with good thoughts.

5². O Rudra, thou dweller in the mountains, look upon us with that most blessed form of thine which is auspicious, not terrible, and reveals no evil!

6³. O lord of the mountains, make lucky that arrow which thou, a dweller in the mountains, holdest in thy hand to shoot. Do not hurt man or beast!

7. Those who know beyond this the High Brahman, the vast, hidden in the bodies of all creatures, and alone enveloping everything, as the Lord, they become immortal⁴.

8⁵. I know that great person (purusha) of sunlike lustre beyond the darkness⁶. A man who knows him truly, passes over death; there is no other path to go⁷.

9. This whole universe is filled by this person (purusha), to whom there is nothing superior, from whom there is nothing different, than whom there is

¹ See IV, 12.

² See Vâg. Samh. XVI, 2; Taitt. Samh. IV, 5, 1, 1.

³ See Vâg. Samh. XVI, 3; Taitt. Samh. IV, 5, 1, 1; Nilarudropan. p. 274.

⁴ The knowledge consists in knowing either that Brahman is Îsa or that Îsa is Brahman. But in either case the gender of the adjectives is difficult. The Svetâsvatara-upanishad seems to use brîhanta as an adjective, instead of brîhat. I should prefer to translate: Beyond this is the High Brahman, the vast. Those who know Îsa, the Lord, hidden in all things and embracing all things to be this (Brahman), become immortal. See also Muir, Metrical Translations, p. 196, whose translation of these verses I have adopted with few exceptions.

⁵ Cf. Vâg. Samh. XXX, 18; Taitt. Âr. III, 12, 7; III, 13, 1.

⁶ Cf. Bhagavadgîtâ VIII, 9.

⁷ Cf. Svet. Up. VI, 15.

nothing smaller or larger, who stands alone, fixed like a tree in the sky¹.

10. That which is beyond this world is without form and without suffering. They who know it, become immortal, but others suffer pain indeed².

11. That Bhagavat³ exists in the faces, the heads, the necks of all, he dwells in the cave (of the heart) of all beings, he is all-pervading, therefore he is the omnipresent Siva.

12. That person (purusha) is the great lord; he is the mover of existence⁴, he possesses that purest power of reaching everything⁵, he is light, he is undecaying.

13⁶. The person (purusha), not larger than a thumb,

¹ Divi, the sky, is explained by Saṅkara as dyotanâtmani svamāhimni.

² The pain of samsâra, or transmigration. See Bṛihad. Up. IV, 3, 20 (p. 178).

³ I feel doubtful whether the two names Bhagavat and Siva should here be preserved, or whether the former should be rendered by holy, the latter by happy. The commentator explains Bhagavat by aisvaryaśya samagrasya vîryasya yasasaḥ śriyaḥ

Gñānavairāgyayoḥ kaiva śāntām bhaga itiranā.

Wilson, in his Essay on the Religious Sects of the Hindus, published in 1828, in the Asiatic Researches, XVI, p. 11, pointed out that this verse and another (Svet. Up. II, 2) were cited by the Saivas as Vedic authorities for their teaching. He remarked that these citations would scarcely have been made, if not authentic, and that they probably did occur in the Vedas. In the new edition of this Essay by Dr. Rost, 1862, the references should have been added.

⁴ Saṅkara explains sattvasya by antaḥkaranasya.

⁵ I take prâpti, like other terms occurring in this Upanishad, in its technical sense. Prâpti is one of the vibhûtis or aisvaryaś, viz. the power of touching anything at will, as touching the moon with the tip of one's finger. See Yoga-sûtras, ed. Rajendralal Mitra, p. 121.

⁶ Cf. Taitt. Âr. X, 71 (Anuv. 38, p. 858). Kaṭh. Up. IV, 12-13; above, p. 16.

dwelling within, always dwelling in the heart of man, is perceived by the heart, the thought¹, the mind; they who know it become immortal.

14². The person (purusha) with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet, having compassed the earth on every side, extends beyond it by ten fingers' breadth.

15. That person alone (purusha) is all this, what has been and what will be; he is also the lord of immortality; he is whatever grows by food³.

16. Its⁴ hands and feet are everywhere, its eyes and head are everywhere, its ears are everywhere, it stands encompassing all in the world⁵.

17. Separate from all the senses, yet reflecting the qualities of all the senses, it is the lord and ruler of all, it is the great refuge of all.

18. The embodied spirit within the town with nine gates⁶, the bird, flutters outwards, the ruler of

¹ The text has manvîsa, which Saṅkara explains by gñânesa. But Weber has conjectured rightly, I believe, that the original text must have been manîshâ. The difficulty is to understand how so common a word as manîshâ could have been changed into so unusual a word as manvîsa. See IV, 20.

² This is a famous verse of the Rig-veda, X, 90, 1; repeated in the Atharva-veda, XIX, 6, 1; Vâg. Samh. XXXI, 1; Taitt. Âr. III, 12, 1. Saṅkara explains ten fingers' breadth by endless; or, he says, it may be meant for the heart, which is ten fingers above the navel.

³ Sâyana, in his commentary on the Rig-veda and the Taitt. Âr., gives another explanation, viz. he is also the lord of all the immortals, i. e. the gods, because they grow to their exceeding state by means of food, or for the sake of food.

⁴ The gender changes frequently, according as the author thinks either of the Brahman, or of its impersonation as Îsa, Lord.

⁵ Saṅkara explains loka by nikâya, body.

⁶ Cf. Kaṭh. Up. V, 1.

the whole world, of all that rests and of all that moves.

19. Grasping without hands, hasting without feet, he sees without eyes, he hears without ears. He knows what can be known, but no one knows him; they call him the first, the great person (purusha).

20¹. The Self, smaller than small, greater than great, is hidden in the heart of the creature. A man who has left all grief behind, sees the majesty, the Lord, the passionless, by the grace of the creator (the Lord).

21². I know³ this undecaying, ancient one, the self of all things, being infinite and omnipresent. They declare that in him all birth is stopped, for the Brahma-students proclaim him to be eternal⁴.

¹ Cf. Taitt. Âr. X, 12 (10), p. 800; Kañ. Up. II, 20; above, p. 11. The translation had to be slightly altered, because the Svetâsvataras, as Taittirîyas, read akratum for akratuñ, and îsam for âtmanah.

² Cf. Taitt. Âr. III, 13, 1; III, 12, 7.

³ A. reads vedârûdham, not B.

⁴ A. and B. read brahmavâdino hi pravadanti.

FOURTH ADHYĀYA.

1. He, the sun, without any colour, who with set purpose¹ by means of his power (sakti) produces endless colours², in whom all this comes together in the beginning, and comes asunder in the end—may he, the god, endow us with good thoughts³.

2. That (Self) indeed is Agni (fire), it is Âditya (sun), it is Vâyu (wind), it is Kāndramas (moon); the same also is the starry firmament⁴, it is Brahman (Hiranyagarbha), it is water, it is Pragâpati (Virâg).

3. Thou art woman, thou art man; thou art youth, thou art maiden; thou, as an old man, totterest⁵ along on thy staff; thou art born with thy face turned everywhere.

4. Thou art the dark-blue bee, thou art the green

¹ Nihitârtha, explained by Saṅkara as gr̥h̥itaprayoganaḥ svârthanirapekshaḥ. This may mean with set purpose, but if we read agr̥h̥itaprayoganaḥ it would mean the contrary, namely, without any definite object, irrespective of his own objects. This is possible, and perhaps more in accordance with the idea of creation as propounded by those to whom the devâtmasakti is mâyâ. Nihita would then mean hidden.

² Colour is intended for qualities, differences, &c.

³ This verse has been translated very freely. As it stands, vi kaiti kânte visvam âdau sa devaḥ, it does not construe, in spite of all attempts to the contrary, made by Saṅkara. What is intended is yasminn idam sam ka vi kaiti sarvam (IV, 11); but how so simple a line should have been changed into what we read now, is difficult to say.

⁴ This is the explanation of Saṅkara, and probably that of the Yoga schools in India at his time. But to take sukram for dīptiman nakshatrâdi, brahma for Hiranyagarbha, and Pragâpati for Virâg seems suggested by this verse only.

⁵ Vañkayasi, an exceptional form, instead of vañkasi (A. B.)

parrot with red eyes, thou art the thunder-cloud, the seasons, the seas. Thou art without beginning¹, because thou art infinite, thou from whom all worlds are born.

5². There is one unborn being (female), red, white, and black, uniform, but producing manifold offspring. There is one unborn being (male) who loves her and lies by her; there is another who leaves her, while she is eating what has to be eaten.

¹ We see throughout the constant change from the masculine to the neuter gender, in addressing either the lord or his true essence.

² This is again one of the famous verses of our Upanishad, because it formed for a long time a bone of contention between Vedânta and Sâṅkhya philosophers. The Sâṅkhyas admit two principles, the Purusha, the absolute subject, and the Prakṛiti, generally translated by nature. The Vedânta philosophers admit nothing but the one absolute subject, and look upon nature as due to a power inherent in that subject. The later Sâṅkhyas therefore, who are as anxious as the Vedântins to find authoritative passages in the Veda, confirming their opinions, appeal to this and other passages, to show that their view of Prakṛiti, as an independent power, is supported by the Veda. The whole question is fully discussed in the Vedânta-sûtras I, 4, 8. Here we read rohitakṛishṇa-suklâm, which seems preferable to lohita-kṛishṇa-varṇâm, at least from a Vedânta point of view, for the three colours, red, black, and white, are explained as signifying either the three guṇas, ragas, sattva, and tamas, or better (Khând. Up. VI, 3, 1), the three elements, tejas (fire), ap (water), and anna (earth). A. reads rohitasuklakṛishṇâm; B. lohitasuklakṛishṇâ (sic). We also find in A. and B. bhuktabhogâm for bhuktabhogyâm, but the latter seems technically the more correct reading. It would be quite wrong to imagine that aga and agâ are meant here for he-goat and she-goat. These words, in the sense of unborn, are recognised as early as the hymns of the Rig-veda, and they occurred in our Upanishad I, 9, where the two agas are mentioned in the same sense as here. But there is, no doubt, a play on the words, and the poet wished to convey the second meaning of he-goat and she-goat, only not as the primary, but as the secondary intention.

6¹. Two birds, inseparable friends, cling to the same tree. One of them eats the sweet fruit, the other looks on without eating.

7. On the same tree man sits grieving, immersed, bewildered, by his own impotence (an-īśā). But when he sees the other lord (īśa) contented, and knows his glory, then his grief passes away.

8². He who does not know that indestructible being of the Rig-veda, that highest ether-like (Self) wherein all the gods reside, of what use is the Rig-veda to him? Those only who know it, rest contented.

9. That from which the maker (mâyin³) sends forth all this—the sacred verses, the offerings, the sacrifices, the panaceas, the past, the future, and all

¹ The same verses occur in the Mundaka Up. III, 1.

² It is difficult to see how this verse comes in here. In the Taitt. Ār. II, 11, 6, it is quoted in connection with the syllable Om, the Akshara, in which all the Vedas are comprehended. It is similarly used in the Nṛsiṃha-pūrva-tāpanī, IV, 2; V, 2. In our passage, however, akshara is referred by Śaṅkara to the paramâtman, and I have translated it accordingly. Rikah is explained as a genitive singular, but it may also be taken as a nom. plur., and in that case both the verses of the Veda and the gods are said to reside in the Akshara, whether we take it for the Paramâtman or for the Om. In the latter case, parame vyoman is explained by utkrīṣhṭe and rakshake.

³ It is impossible to find terms corresponding to mâyâ and mâyin. Mâyâ means making, or art, but as all making or creating, so far as the Supreme Self is concerned, is phenomenal only or mere illusion, mâyâ conveys at the same time the sense of illusion. In the same manner mâyin is the maker, the artist, but also the magician or juggler. What seems intended by our verse is that from the akshara, which corresponds to brahman, all proceeds, whatever exists or seems to exist, but that the actual creator or the author of all emanations is īśa, the Lord, who, as creator, is acting through mâyâ or devâtmasakti. Possibly, however, anya, the other, may be meant for the individual purusha.

that the Vedas declare—in that the other is bound up through that mâyâ.

10. Know then Prakṛiti (nature) is Mâyâ (art), and the great Lord the Mâyin (maker); the whole world is filled with what are his members.

11. If a man has discerned him, who being one only, rules over every germ (cause), in whom all this comes together and comes asunder again, who is the lord, the bestower of blessing, the adorable god, then he passes for ever into that peace.

12¹. He, the creator and supporter of the gods, Rudra, the great seer, the lord of all, who saw² Hiranyagarbha being born, may he endow us with good thoughts.

13. He who is the sovereign of the gods, he in whom all the worlds³ rest, he who rules over all two-footed and four-footed beings, to that god⁴ let us sacrifice an oblation.

14. He who has known him who is more subtle than subtle, in the midst of chaos, creating all things, having many forms, alone enveloping everything⁵, the happy one (Siva), passes into peace for ever.

¹ See before, III, 4.

² Saṅkara does not explain this verse again, though it differs from III, 4. Vigñânâtman explains pasyata by apasyata, and qualifies the Âtmanepada as irregular.

³ B. reads yasmin devâh, not A.

⁴ I read tasmai instead of kasmai, a various reading mentioned by Vigñânâtman. It was easy to change tasmai into kasmai, because of the well-known line in the Rig-veda, kasmai devâya havishâ vidhema. Those who read kasmai, explain it as a dative of Ka, a name of Pragâpati, which in the dative should be kâya, and not kasmai. It would be better to take kasmai as the dative of the interrogative pronoun. See M. M., History of Ancient Sanskrit Literature, p. 433; and Vitâna-sutras IV, 22.

⁵ Cf. III, 7.

15. He also was in time¹ the guardian of this world, the lord of all, hidden in all beings. In him the Brahmarshis and the deities are united², and he who knows him cuts the fetters of death asunder.

16. He who knows Siva (the blessed) hidden in all beings, like the subtile film that rises from out the clarified butter³, alone enveloping everything,—he who knows the god, is freed from all fetters.

17. That god, the maker of all things, the great Self⁴, always dwelling in the heart of man, is perceived by the heart, the soul, the mind⁵;—they who know it become immortal.

18. When the light has risen⁶, there is no day, no night, neither existence nor non-existence⁷; Siva (the blessed) alone is there. That is the eternal, the adorable light of Savitri⁸,—and the ancient wisdom proceeded thence.

19. No one has grasped him above, or across, or in the middle⁹. There is no image of him whose name is Great Glory.

20. His form cannot be seen, no one perceives him with the eye. Those¹⁰ who through heart and

¹ In former ages, Saṅkara.

² Because both the Brahmarshis, the holy seers, and the deities find their true essence in Brahman.

³ We should say, like cream from milk.

⁴ Or the high-minded.

⁵ See III, 13.

⁶ Atamas, no darkness, i. e. light of knowledge.

⁷ See on the difficulty of translating sat and asat, τὸ ὄν and τὸ μὴ ὄν, the remarks in the Preface.

⁸ Referring to the Gâyatrî, Rig-veda III, 62, 10; see also Svet. Up. V, 4.

⁹ See Muir, Metrical Translations, p. 198; Maitr. Up. VI, 17.

¹⁰ B. reads hrîdâ manîshâ manasâbhiklîpto, yat tad vidur; A. hrîdi hrîdistham manasâya enam evam vidur.

mind know him thus abiding in the heart, become immortal.

21. 'Thou art unborn,' with these words some one comes near to thee, trembling. O Rudra, let thy gracious¹ face protect me for ever!

22². O Rudra! hurt us not in our offspring and descendants, hurt us not in our own lives, nor in our cows, nor in our horses! Do not slay our men in thy wrath, for, holding oblations, we call on thee always.

¹ Dakshina is explained either as invigorating, exhilarating, or turned towards the south.

² See Colebrooke, Miscellaneous Essays, I, p. 141; Rig-veda I, 114, 8; Taitt. Samh. IV, 5, 10, 3; Vâg. Samh. XVI, 16. The various readings are curious. Âyushi in the Svet. Up., instead of âyau in the Rig-veda, is supported by the Taitt. Samh. and the Vâg. Samh.; but Vigñânâtman reads âyau. As to bhâmito, it seems the right reading, being supported by the Rig-veda, the Taitt. Samh., and the Svet. Up., while bhâvito in Roer's edition is a misprint. The Vâg. Samh. alone reads bhâmino, which Mahidhara refers to virân. The last verse in the Rig-veda and Vâg. Samh. is havishmantah sadam it tvâ havâmahe; in the Taitt. Samh. havishmantanto namasâ vidhema te. In the Svet. Up. havishmantah sadasi tvâ havâmahe, as printed by Roer, seems to rest on Sankara's authority only. The other commentators, Sankarânanda and Vigñânâtman, read and interpret sadam it.

FIFTH ADHYĀYA.

1. In the imperishable and infinite Highest Brahman¹, wherein the two, knowledge and ignorance, are hidden², the one, ignorance, perishes³, the other, knowledge, is immortal; but he who controls both, knowledge and ignorance, is another⁴.

2. It is he who, being one only, rules over every germ (cause), over all forms, and over all germs; it is he who, in the beginning, bears⁵ in his thoughts the wise son, the fiery, whom he wishes to look on⁶ while he is born⁷.

3⁸. In that field⁹ in which the god, after spreading out one net after another¹⁰ in various ways, draws it together again, the Lord, the great Self¹¹, having ¹ Śaṅkara explains Brahmapare by brahmano hiranyagarbhāt pare, or by parasmin brahmaṇi, which comes to the same. Vigñānātman adds hāṇḍasaḥ paranipātāḥ. As the termination e may belong to the locative singular or to the nom. dual, commentators vary in referring some of the adjectives either to brahman or to vidyāvidye.

² Gūḍhe, lokair gñātum asakye, Śaṅkarānanda.

³ Śaṅkara explains ksharam by samsrītikāraṇam, amṛitam by mokṣaḥetuḥ.

⁴ Śaṅkara explains that he is different from them, being only the sākshin, or witness. Śaṅkarānanda seems to have read Somya, i. e. Somavatpriyadarsana, as if Svetāśvatvara addressed his pupil.

⁵ Like a mother, see I, 9.

⁶ Like a father.

⁷ See on this verse the remarks made in the Introduction.

⁸ The MSS. read yasmin for asmin, and patayas for yatayas, which the commentator explains by patīn.

⁹ The world, or the mūlaprakṛti, the net being the samsāra.

¹⁰ Śaṅkara explains ekaikam by pratyekam, i. e. for every creature, such as gods, men, beasts, &c.

¹¹ I doubt whether mahātmā should be translated by the great further created the lords¹, thus carries on his lordship over all.

4. As the car (of the sun) shines, lighting up all quarters, above, below, and across, thus does that god, the holy, the adorable, being one, rule over all that has the nature of a germ².

5. He, being one, rules over all and everything, so that the universal germ ripens its nature, diversifies all natures that can be ripened³, and determines all qualities⁴.

6⁵. Brahmâ (Hiranyagarbha) knows this, which is hidden in the Upanishads, which are hidden in the Vedas, as the Brahma-germ. The ancient gods Self, or whether great would not be sufficient. The whole verse is extremely difficult.

¹ From Hiranyagarbha to insects; or beginning with Marîçi.

² Cf. IV, 11; V, 2.

³ MS. B. has prâkyân, and explains it by pûrvotpannân.

⁴ This is again a very difficult verse. I have taken visvayoniḥ as a name for Brahman, possessed of that devâtmasakti which was mentioned before, but I feel by no means satisfied. The commentators do not help, because they do not see the difficulty of the construction. If one might conjecture, I should prefer paṭet for paṭati, and should write parizâmayed yat, and viniyogayed yat, unless we changed yakṣa into yaṣṣa.

⁵ This verse admits of various translations, and requires also some metrical emendations. Thus Vigñânâtman explains vedaghyopanishatsu very ingeniously by the Veda, i. e. that part of it which teaches sacrifices and their rewards; the Guhya, i. e. the Âranyaka, which teaches the worship of Brahman under various legendary aspects; and the Upanishads, which teach the knowledge of Brahman without qualities. These three divisions would correspond to the karmakânda, yogakânda, and gñânakânda (Gaimini, Patañjali, Bâdarâyana). See Deussen, Vedânta, p. 20. Mr. Gough and Dr. Roer take Brahmayoni as 'the source of the Veda,' or as the source of Hiranyagarbha. The irregular form vedate may be due to a corruption of vedânte.

and poets who knew it, they became it and were immortal.

7¹. But he who is endowed with qualities, and performs works that are to bear fruit, and enjoys the reward of whatever he has done, migrates through his own works, the lord of life, assuming all forms, led by the three Guṇas, and following the three paths².

8³. That lower one also, not larger than a thumb, but brilliant like the sun, who is endowed with personality and thoughts, with the quality of mind and the quality of body, is seen small even like the point of a goad.

9. That living soul is to be known as part of the hundredth part of the point of a hair⁴, divided a hundred times, and yet it is to be infinite.

10. It is not woman, it is not man, nor is it neuter; whatever body it takes, with that it is joined⁵ (only).

11⁶. By means of thoughts, touching, seeing, and

¹ Here begins the description of what is called the tvam (thou), as opposed to the tat (that), i. e. the living soul, as opposed to the Highest Brahman.

² The paths of vice, virtue, and knowledge.

³ Both MSS. (A. and B.) read ârâgramâtro hy avaro 'pi dri-sh/aḥ.

⁴ An expression of frequent occurrence in Buddhist literature.

⁵ A. and B. read yugyate. A. explains yugyate by sambadh-yate. B. explains adyate bhakshyate tirobhūtaḥ kriyate. Śaṅkara explains rakshyate, saṁrakshyate, tattaddharmân âtmany adhyasyâ-bhimanyate.

⁶ The MSS. vary considerably. Instead of mohair, A. and B. read homair. They read grâsâmbuvrîshyâ kâtma. A. reads âtmavivṛiddhiganma, B. âtmanivṛiddhaganmâ. A. has abhisam-prapadye, B. abhisamprapadyate. My translation follows Śaṅkara, who seems to have read âtmavivṛiddhiganma, taking the whole line passions the incarnate Self assumes successively in various places various forms¹, in accordance with his deeds, just as the body grows when food and drink are poured into it.

12. That incarnate Self, according to his own qualities, chooses (assumes) many shapes, coarse or subtile, and having himself caused his union with them, he is seen as another and another², through the qualities of his acts, and through the qualities of his body.

13³. He who knows him who has no beginning and no end, in the midst of chaos, creating all things, having many forms, alone enveloping everything, is freed from all fetters.

14. Those who know him who is to be grasped by the mind, who is not to be called the nest (the body⁴), who makes existence and non-existence, the

as a simile and in an adverbial form. Vigñânâtman, however, differs considerably. He reads homaiḥ, and explains homa as the act of throwing oblations into the fire, as in the Agnihotra. This action of the hands, he thinks, stands for all actions of the various members of the body. Grâsâmbuvrîṣhā he takes to mean free distribution of food and drink, and then explains the whole sentence by 'he whose self is born unto some states or declines from them again, namely, according as he has showered food and drink, and has used his hands, eyes, feelings, and thoughts.' Saṅkarânanda takes a similar view, only he construes saṅkalpanam and sparśanam as two drîṣhās, te eva drîṣhāi, tayor âtmâgnau prakshepâ homâḥ; and then goes on, na kevalam etaiḥ, kim tv asmin sthâne jarire grâsâmbuvrîṣhyâ ka. He seems to read âtmavivṛddhaganmâ, but afterwards explains vivṛiddhi by vividhâ vṛiddhiḥ.

¹ Forms as high as Hiranyagarbha or as low as beasts.

² Instead of aparo, B. reads avaro, but explains aparo.

³ Cf. III, 7; IV, 14, 16.

⁴ Nîḍa is explained as the body, but Saṅkarânanda reads anilâkhyam, who is called the wind, as being prânasya prânam, the breath of the breath.

happy one (Siva), who also creates the elements¹, they have left the body.

¹ Saṅkara explains kalāsargakaram by he who creates the sixteen kalās, mentioned by the Âtharvavikas, beginning with prâna, and ending with nâman; see Prasâna Up. VI, 4. Vigñânâtman suggests two other explanations, 'he who creates by means of the kalâ, i. e. his inherent power;' or 'he who creates the Vedas and other sciences.' The sixteen kalās are, according to Saṅkarânanda, prâna, sraddhâ, kha, vâyu, gyotiḥ, ap, prithivî, indriya, manaḥ, anna, vîrya, tapaḥ, mantra, karman, kâla (?), nâman. See also before, I, 4.

SIXTH ADHYĀYA.

1¹. Some wise men, deluded, speak of Nature, and others of Time (as the cause of everything²); but it is the greatness of God by which this Brahma-wheel is made to turn.

2. It is at the command of him who always covers this world, the knower, the time of time³, who assumes qualities and all knowledge⁴, it is at his command that this work (creation) unfolds itself, which is called earth, water, fire, air, and ether;

3⁵. He who, after he has done that work and rested again, and after he has brought together one essence (the self) with the other (matter), with one, two, three, or eight, with time also and with the subtile qualities of the mind, ↓

4. Who, after starting⁶ the works endowed with (the three) qualities, can order all things, yet when, in the absence of all these, he has caused the destruction of the work, goes on, being in truth⁷ different (from all he has produced);

¹ See Muir, Metrical Translations, p. 198.

² See before, I, 2.

³ The destroyer of time. Vigñānātman reads kālakālo, and explains it by kālasya niyantā, upahartā. Saṅkarānanda explains kālāḥ sarvavināśakārī, tasyāpi vināśakaraḥ. See also verse 16.

⁴ Or sarvavid yaḥ.

⁵ Instead of vinivartya, Vigñānātman and Saṅkarānanda read vinivṛtya.

⁶ Āruhya for ārabhya, Saṅkarānanda.

⁷ These two verses are again extremely obscure, and the explanations of the commentators throw little light on their real, original meaning. To begin with Saṅkara, he assumes the subject to be the same as he at whose command this work unfolds itself, and explains

5. He is the beginning, producing the causes which unite (the soul with the body), and, being tattvasya tattvena sametya yogam by âtmano bhûmyâdinâ yogam samgamayya. As the eight Tattvas he gives earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, thought, personality, while the Âtmagunas are, according to him, the affections of the mind, love, anger, &c. In the second verse, however, Saṅkara seems to assume a different subject. 'If a man,' he says, 'having done works, infected by qualities, should transfer them on Îsvara, the Lord, there would be destruction of the works formerly done by him, because there would be no more connection with the self.' Something is left out, but that this is Saṅkara's idea, appears from the verses which he quotes in support, and which are intended to show that Yogins, transferring all their acts, good, bad, or indifferent, on Brahman, are no longer affected by them. 'That person,' Saṅkara continues, 'his works being destroyed and his nature purified, moves on, different from all things (tattva), from all the results of ignorance, knowing himself to be Brahman.' 'Or,' he adds, 'if we read anyad, it means, he goes to that Brahman which is different from all things.'

Saṅkarânanda takes a different view. He says: 'If a man has performed sacrifices, and has finished them, or, has turned away from them again as vain, and if he has obtained union with that which is the real of the (apparently) real, &c.' The commentator then asks what is that with which he obtains union, and replies, 'the one, i. e. ignorance; the two, i. e. right and wrong; the three, i. e. the three colours, red, white, and black; and the eight, i. e. the five elements, with mind, thought, and personality; also with time, and with the subtile affections of the mind.' He then goes on, 'If that man, after having begun qualified works, should take on himself all states (resulting from ignorance), yet, when these states cease, there would be an end of the work, good or bad, done by him, and when his work has come to an end, he abides in truth (according to the Veda); while the other, who differs from the Veda, is wrong.' Saṅkarânanda, however, evidently feels that this is a doubtful interpretation, and he suggests another, viz. 'If the Lord himself,' he says, 'determined these states (bhâva), it would seem that there would be no end of samsâra. He therefore says, that when these states, ignorance &c., cease, the work done by man ceases; and when the work done ceases, the living soul gets free of samsâra, being in truth another, i. e. different from ignorance and its products.'

Vigñânâtman says: 'If a man, having done work, turns away above the three kinds of time (past, present, future), he is seen as without parts¹, after we have first worshipped that adorable god, who has many forms, and who is the true source (of all things), as dwelling in our own mind.

6. He is beyond all the forms of the tree² (of the world) and of time, he is the other, from whom this world moves round, when³ one has known him who from it, and obtains union of one tattva (the tvam, or self) with the real tattva (the tat, or the Lord);—and how? By means of the one, i. e. the teaching of the Guru; the two, i. e. love of the Guru and of the Lord; the three, i. e. hearing, remembering, and meditating; the eight, i. e. restraint, penance, postures, regulation of the breath, abstraction, devotion, contemplation, and meditation (Yoga-sûtras II, 29); by time, i. e. the right time for work; by the qualities of the self, i. e. pity, &c.; by the subtle ones, i. e. the good dispositions for knowledge, then (we must supply) he becomes free.' And this he explains more fully in the next verse. 'If, after having done qualified works, i. e. works to please the Lord, a Yati discards all things, and recognises the phenomenal character of all states, and traces them back to their real source in Mûlaprakṛiti and, in the end, in the Sakṣidânanda, he becomes free. If they (the states) cease, i. e. are known in their real source, the work done ceases also in its effects, and when the work has been annihilated, he goes to freedom, being another in truth; or, if we read anyat, he goes to what is different from all these things, namely, to the Lord; or, he goes to a state of perfect lordship in truth, having discovered the highest truth, the oneness of the self with the Highest Self.'

I think that, judging from the context, the subject is really the same in both verses, viz. the Lord, as passing through different states, and at last knowing himself to be above them all. Yet, the other explanations may be defended, and if the subject were taken to be different in each verse, some difficulties would disappear.

¹ Vigñânâtman and Saṅkarânanda read akalo 'pi, without parts, and Saṅkara, too, presupposes that reading, though the text is corrupt in Roer's edition.

² Explained as samsâravṛksha, the world-tree, as described in the Kaṭha Up. VI, 1.

³ It seems possible to translate this verse in analogy with the former, and without supplying the verb either from yâti, in verse 4, brings good and removes evil, the lord of bliss, as dwelling within the self, the immortal, the support of all.

7. Let us know that highest great lord of lords¹, the highest deity of deities, the master of masters, the highest above, as god, the lord of the world, the adorable.

8. There is no effect and no cause known of him, no one is seen like unto him or better; his high power is revealed as manifold, as inherent, acting as force and knowledge. ✓

9. There is no master of his in the world, no ruler of his, not even a sign of him². He is the cause, the lord of the lords of the organs³, and there is of him neither parent nor lord. \

10. That only god who spontaneously covered himself, like a spider, with threads drawn from the first cause (pradhâna), grant us entrance into Brahman⁴. ✓

11. He is the one God, hidden in all beings, all-or from vidâma, in verse 7. The poet seems to have said, he is that, he is seen as that, when one has worshipped him, or when one has known him within oneself.

¹ Sāṅkara thinks that the lords are Vaivasvata &c.; the deities, Indra &c.; the masters, the Pragâpatīs. Viṣṇûânâtman explains the lords as Brahman, Viṣṇu, Rudra, &c.; the deities as Indra, &c.; the masters as Hiranyagarbha, &c. Sāṅkarânanda sees in the lords Hiranyagarbha &c., in the deities Agni &c., in the masters the Pragâpatīs, such as Kasyapa.

² If he could be inferred from a sign, there would be no necessity for the Veda to reveal him.

³ Karana, instrument, is explained as organ of sense. The lords of such organs would be all living beings, and their lord the true Lord.

⁴ Besides brahmâpyayam, i. e. brahmany apyayam, ekîbhâvam, another reading is brahmâvyayam, i. e. brahma kâvyayam ka.

pervading, the self within all beings, watching over all works, dwelling in all beings, the witness, the perceiver¹, the only one, free from qualities.

✓ 12². He is the one ruler of many who (seem to act, but really do) not act³; he makes the one seed manifold. The wise who perceive him within their self, to them belongs eternal happiness, not to others.

13⁴. He is the eternal among eternal, the thinker among thinkers, who, though one, fulfils the desires of many. He who has known that cause which is to be apprehended by Sāṅkhya (philosophy) and Yoga (religious discipline), he is freed from all fetters.

¹ All the MSS. seem to read ketâ, not ketâ.

² See Kaṭha-upanishad V, 12-15.

³ Sāṅkara explains that the acts of living beings are due to their organs, but do not affect the Highest Self, which always remains passive (nishkriya).

⁴ I have formerly translated this verse, according to the reading nityo 'nityânâm ketanas ketanânâm, the eternal thinker of non-eternal thoughts. This would be a true description of the Highest Self who, though himself eternal and passive, has to think (gīvâtman) non-eternal thoughts. I took the first ketana in the sense of ketâ, the second in the sense of ketanam. The commentators, however, take a different, and it may be, from their point, a more correct view. Sāṅkara says: 'He is the eternal of the eternal, i. e. as he possesses eternity among living souls (gīvas), these living souls also may claim eternity. Or the eternal may be meant for earth, water, &c. And in the same way he is the thinker among thinkers.'

Sāṅkarānanda says: 'He is eternal, imperishable, among eternal, imperishable things, such as the ether, &c. He is thinking among thinkers.'

Vigñānātman says: 'The Highest Lord is the cause of eternity in eternal things on earth, and the cause of thought in the thinkers on earth.' But he allows another construction, namely, that he is the eternal thinker of those who on earth are endowed with eternity and thought. In the end all these interpretations come to

14. The¹ sun does not shine there, nor the moon and the stars, nor these lightnings, and much less this fire. When he shines, everything shines after him; by his light all this is lightened.

15. He is the one bird² in the midst of the world; he is also (like) the fire (of the sun) that has set in the ocean. A man who knows him truly, passes over death³; there is no other path to go.

16. He makes all, he knows all, the self-caused, the knower⁴, the time of time (destroyer of time), who assumes qualities and knows everything, the master of nature and of man⁵, the lord of the three qualities (guṇa), the cause of the bondage, the existence, and the liberation of the world⁶.

17. He who has become that⁷, he is the immortal, remaining the lord, the knower, the ever-present guardian of this world, who rules this world for ever, for no one else is able to rule it.

18. Seeking for freedom I go for refuge to that God who is the light of his own thoughts⁸, he who the same, viz. that there is only one eternal, and only one thinker, from whom all that is (or seems to be) eternal and all that is thought on earth is derived.

¹ See Kath. Up. V, 15; Mund. Up. II, 2, 10; Bhagavadgītā XV, 6.

² Hamsa, frequently used for the Highest Self, is explained here as hantya avidyā dibandhakāraṇam iti hamsaḥ.

³ Cf. III, 8.

⁴ Again the MSS. read kālakālo, as in verse 2. They also agree in putting gñāḥ before kālakālo, as in verse 2.

⁵ Pradhānam avyaktam, kshetragñō vigñānātmā.

⁶ He binds, sustains, and dissolves worldly existence.

⁷ He who seems to exist for a time in the form of kshetragñā and pradhāna.

⁸ The MSS. vary between ātmabuddhiprakāśam and ātmabuddhiprasādam. The former reading is here explained by Saṅkarānanda as svabuddhisākṣinam.

first creates Brahman (m.)¹ and delivers the Vedas to him ;

19. Who is without parts, without actions, tranquil, without fault, without taint², the highest bridge to immortality—like a fire that has consumed its fuel.

20. Only when men shall roll up the sky like a hide, will there be an end of misery, unless God has first been known³.

21. Through the power of his penance and through the grace of God⁴ has the wise Svetāsvatara truly⁵ proclaimed Brahman, the highest and holiest, to the best of ascetics⁶, as approved by the company of Rishis.

¹ Explained as Hiranyagarbha.

² Nirāṅganam nirlepam.

³ Saṅkarānanda reads tadā śivam avigñāya dukkhasyānto bhaviṣyati; Vigñānātman retains devam, but mentions śivam as a various reading. Both have anto, not antam, like Roer. Saṅkara seems to have found na before bhaviṣyati, or to have read dukkhānto na bhaviṣyati, for he explains that there will be no end of misery, unless God has first been known. It is possible, however, that the same idea may be expressed in the text as we read it, so that it should mean, Only when the impossible shall happen, such as the sky being rolled up by men, will misery cease, unless God has been discovered in the heart.

⁴ The MSS. read devaprasādāt, which is more in keeping with the character of this Upanishad.

⁵ Samyak may be both adverb and adjective in this sentence, kākāḥshinyāyena.

⁶ Atyāsramin is explained by Saṅkara as atyantam pūgyatamā-sramibhyaḥ; and he adds, ṣaṭśikṣaḥ bhikṣavaḥ ka bahūdakakuṭṭakau, Hamsaḥ paramahamsas ka yo yaḥ paśkāt sa uttamaḥ. Weber (Indische Studien, II, 109) has himself corrected his mistake of reading antyāsramibhyaḥ, and translating it by neighbouring hermits.

These four stages in the life of a Sannyāsin are the same to-day as they were in the time of the Upanishads, and Dayānanda Sarasvatī

22. This highest mystery in the Vedânta, delivered in a former age, should not be given to one whose passions have not been subdued, nor to one who is not a son, or who is not a pupil¹.

23. If these truths have been told to a high-minded man, who feels the highest devotion for God, and for his Guru as for God, then they will shine forth,—then they will shine forth indeed.

describes them in his autobiography, though in a different order :

1. Kuśīkaka, living in a hut, or in a desolate place, and wearing a red-ochre coloured garment, carrying a three-knotted bamboo rod, and wearing the hair in the centre of the crown of the head, having the sacred thread, and devoting oneself to the contemplation of Parabrahma. 2. Bahūdaka, one who lives quite apart from his family and the world, maintains himself on alms collected at seven houses, and wears the same kind of reddish garment. 3. Hamsa, the same as in the preceding case, except the carrying of only a one-knotted bamboo. 4. Paramahansa, the same as the others ; but the ascetic wears the sacred thread, and his hair and beard are quite long. This is the highest of all orders. A Paramahansa who shows himself worthy is on the very threshold of becoming a Dīkshita.

¹ Cf. Brh. Up. VI, 3, 12 ; Maitr. Up. VI, 29.

PRASŔA-UPANISHAD.

PRASŒA-UPANISHAD.

FIRST QUESTION.

Adoration to the Highest Self! Hariḥ, Om!

1. Sukesas¹ Bhâradvâga², and Saivya Satyakâma, and Sauryâyanin³ Gârgya, and Kausalya⁴ Âsvalâyana, and Bhârgava Vaidarbhi⁵, and Kabandhin Kâtyâyana, these were devoted to Brahman, firm in Brahman, seeking for the Highest Brahman. They thought that the venerable Pippalâda could tell them all that, and they therefore took fuel in their hands (like pupils), and approached him.

2. That Rishi said to them: 'Stay here a year longer, with penance, abstinence, and faith; then you may ask questions according to your pleasure, and if we know them, we shall tell you all.'

3. Then⁶ Kabandhin Kâtyâyana approached him and asked: 'Sir, from whence may these creatures be born?'

¹ Sukesas seems better than Sukesan, and he is so called in the sixth Prasṇa, in MS. Mill 74.

² Bhâradvâga, Saivya, Gârgya, Âsvalâyana, Bhârgava, and Kâtyâyana are, according to Saṅkara, names of gotras or families.

³ Sûryasyâpatyam Sauryaḥ, tadapatyam Sauryâyaninḥ. Dîrghaḥ sulopas ka kṛândasa iti sa eva Sauryâyaninḥ.

⁴ Kausalyo nâmataḥ, kosalâyâm bhavo vâ.

⁵ Vaidarbhi is explained as vidarbheḥ prabhavaḥ, or Vidarbheshu prabhavaḥ. Vidarbha, a country, south of the Vindhya mountains, with Kundîna as its capital. Vaidarbha, a king of the Vidarbhas, is mentioned in the Ait. Brâhm. VII, 34. Vaidarbhi is a patronymic of Vidarbha. See B. R. s. v.

⁶ After the year was over.

4. He replied : 'Pragâpati (the lord of creatures) was desirous of creatures (pragâh). He performed penance¹, and having performed penance, he produces a pair, matter (rayi) and spirit (prâna), thinking that they together should produce creatures for him in many ways.

5². The sun is spirit, matter is the moon. All this, what has body and what has no body, is matter, and therefore body indeed is matter.

6. Now Âditya, the sun, when he rises, goes toward the East, and thus receives the Eastern spirits into his rays. And when he illuminates the South, the West, the North, the Zenith, the Nadir, the intermediate quarters, and everything, he thus receives all spirits into his rays.

7. Thus he rises, as Vaisvânara, (belonging to all men,) assuming all forms, as spirit, as fire. This has been said in the following verse :

8³. (They knew) him who assumes all forms, the golden⁴, who knows all things, who ascends highest, alone in his splendour, and warms us ; the thousand-rayed, who abides in a hundred places, the spirit of all creatures, the Sun, rises.

9. The year indeed is Pragâpati, and there are two paths thereof, the Southern and the Northern. Now those who here believe in sacrifices and pious gifts as work done, gain the moon only as their ¹ Or he meditated ; see Upanishads, vol. i, p. 238, n. 3.

² Saṅkara explains, or rather obscures, this by saying that the sun is breath, or the eater, or Agni, while matter is the food, namely, Soma.

³ Cf. Maitr. Up. VI, 8.

⁴ Harinam is explained as rasmimantam, or as harati sarveshâm prâṇinâm âyûmshi bhaumân vâ rasân iti harinaḥ. I prefer to take it in the sense of yellow, or golden.

(future) world, and return again. Therefore the Rishis who desire offspring, go to the South, and that path of the Fathers is matter (rayi).

10. But those who have sought the Self by penance, abstinence, faith, and knowledge, gain by the Northern path Âditya, the sun. This is the home of the spirits, the immortal, free from danger, the highest. From thence they do not return, for it is the end. Thus says the *Sloka*¹:

11. Some call him the father with five feet (the five seasons), and with twelve shapes (the twelve months), the giver of rain in the highest half of heaven; others again say that the sage is placed in the lower half, in the chariot² with seven wheels and six spokes.

12. The month is Pragâpati; its dark half is matter, its bright half spirit. Therefore some Rishis perform sacrifice in the bright half, others in the other half.

13. Day and Night³ are Pragâpati; its day is spirit, its night matter. Those who unite in love by day waste their spirit, but to unite in love by night is right.

14. Food is Pragâpati. Hence proceeds seed, and from it these creatures are born.

15. Those therefore who observe this rule of Pragâpati (as laid down in § 13), produce a pair, and to them belongs this Brahma-world here⁴. But ¹ Rig-veda I, 164, 12. We ought to read upare viâkshanam.

² Saptaâkre, i. e. rathe. The seven wheels are explained as the rays or horses of the sun; or as half-years, seasons, months, half-months, days, nights, and muhûrtas.

³ Taken as one, as a Nychthemeron.

⁴ In the moon, reached by the path of the Fathers.

those in whom dwell penance, abstinence, and truth,

16. To them belongs that pure Brahma-world, to them, namely, in whom there is nothing crooked, nothing false, and no guile.'

SECOND QUESTION.

1. Then Bhārgava Vaidarbhi asked him: 'Sir, How many gods¹ keep what has thus been created, how many manifest this², and who is the best of them?'

2. He replied: 'The ether is that god, the wind, fire, water, earth, speech, mind, eye, and ear. These, when they have manifested (their power), contend and say: We (each of us) support this body and keep it³.

3⁴. Then Prāṇa (breath, spirit, life), as the best, said to them: Be not deceived, I alone, dividing myself fivefold, support this body and keep it.

4. They were incredulous; so he, from pride, did as if he were going out from above. Thereupon,

¹ Devāḥ, powers, organs, senses.

² Their respective power.

³ This is Sāṅkara's explanation, in which bāṇa is taken to mean the same as śarīra, body. But there seems to be no authority for such a meaning, and Ānandagiri tries in vain to find an etymological excuse for it. Bāṇa or Vāṇa generally means an arrow, or, particularly in Brāhmaṇa writings, a harp with many strings. I do not see how an arrow could be used as an appropriate simile here, but a harp might, if we take avashābhyā in the sense of holding the frame of the instrument, and vidhārayāmaḥ in the sense of stretching and thereby modulating it.

⁴ On this dispute of the organs of sense, see Brh. Up. VI, 1, p. 201; Khānd. Up. V, 1 (S. B. E., vol. i, p. 72).

as he went out, all the others went out, and as he returned, all the others returned. As bees go out when their queen¹ goes out, and return when she returns, thus (did) speech, mind, eye, and ear; and, being satisfied, they praise Prâna, saying:

5. He is Agni (fire), he shines as Sûrya (sun), he is Parganya (rain), the powerful (Indra), he is Vâyû (wind), he is the earth, he is matter, he is God—he is what is and what is not, and what is immortal.

6. As spokes in the nave of a wheel, everything is fixed in Prâna, the verses of the Rîg-veda, Yagur-veda, Sâma-veda, the sacrifice, the Kshatriyas, and the Brâhmans.

7. As Pragâpati (lord of creatures) thou movest about in the womb, thou indeed art born again. To thee, the Prâna, these creatures bring offerings, to thee who dwellest with the other prânas (the organs of sense).

8. Thou art the best carrier for the Gods, thou art the first offering² to the Fathers. Thou art the true work of the *Rîshis*³, of the Atharvângiras.

9. O Prâna, thou art Indra by thy light, thou art Rudra, as a protector; thou movest in the sky, thou art the sun, the lord of lights.

10. When thou showerest down rain, then, O Prâna, these creatures of thine are delighted⁴, hoping that there will be food, as much as they desire.

¹ In Sanskrit it is madhukarârâga, king of the bees.

² When a srâddha is offered to the Pitrîs.

³ Explained as the eye and the other organs of sense which the chief Prâna supports; but it is probably an old verse, here applied to a special purpose.

⁴ Another reading is prânate, they breathe.

11. Thou art a Vrâtya¹, O Prâna, the only *Rishi*², the consumer of everything, the good lord. We are the givers of what thou hast to consume, thou, O Mâtariśva³, art our father.

12. Make propitious that body of thine which dwells in speech, in the ear, in the eye, and which pervades the mind; do not go away!

13. All this is in the power of Prâna, whatever exists in the three heavens. Protect us like a mother her sons, and give us happiness and wisdom.'

THIRD QUESTION.

1. Then Kausalya Ârvalâyana asked: 'Sir, whence is that Prâna (spirit) born? How does it come into this body? And how does it abide, after it has divided itself? How does it go out? How does it support what is without⁴, and how what is within?'

2. He replied: 'You ask questions more difficult, but you are very fond of Brahman, therefore I shall tell it you.

3. This Prâna (spirit) is born of the Self. Like the shadow thrown on a man, this (the prâna) is

¹ A person for whom the samskâras, the sacramental and initiatory rites, have not been performed. Saṅkara says that, as he was the first born, there was no one to perform them for him, and that he is called Vrâtya, because he was pure by nature. This is all very doubtful.

² Agni is said to be the Rishi of the Âtharvans.

³ Instead of the irregular vocative Mâtariśva, there is another reading, Mâtariśvanaḥ, i. e. thou art the father of Mâtariśvan, the wind, and therefore of the whole world.

⁴ All creatures and the gods.

spread out over it (the Brahman)¹. By the work of the mind² does it come into this body.

4. As a king commands officials, saying to them : Rule these villages or those, so does that Prâna (spirit) dispose the other prânas, each for their separate work.

5. The Apâna (the down-breathing) in the organs of excretion and generation; the Prâna himself dwells in eye and ear, passing through mouth and nose. In the middle is the Samâna³ (the on-breathing); it carries what has been sacrificed as food equally (over the body), and the seven lights proceed from it.

6. The Self⁴ is in the heart. There are the 101 arteries, and in each of them there are a hundred (smaller veins), and for each of these branches there are 72,000⁵. In these the Vyâna (the back-breathing) moves.

¹ Over Brahman, i. e. the Self, the parama purusha, the akshara, the satya. The prâna being called a shadow, is thereby implied to be unreal (anrîta). Sâṅkara.

² Manokṛita is explained as an ârsha sandhi. It means the good or evil deeds, which are the work of the mind.

³ I keep to the usual translation of Samâna by on-breathing, though it is here explained in a different sense. Samâna is here supposed to be between prâna and apâna, and to distribute the food equally, samam, over the body. The seven lights are explained as the two eyes, the two ears, the two nostrils, and the mouth.

⁴ Here the Lingâtma or Givâtma.

⁵ A hundred times 101 would give us 10,100, and each multiplied by 72,000 would give us a sum total of 727,200,000 veins, or, if we add the principal veins, 727,210,201. Âṇandagiri makes the sum total, 72 koṭis, 72 lakshas, six thousands, two hundred and one, where the six of the thousands seems to be a mistake for dasasahasram. In the Brîhadâr. Upanishad II, 1, 19, we read of 72,000 arteries, likewise in Yâgñavalkya III, 68. See also Brîh. Up. IV,

7. Through one of them, the Udāna (the out-breathing) leads (us) upwards to the good world by good work, to the bad world by bad work, to the world of men by both.

8. The sun rises as the external Prāna, for it assists the Prāna in the eye¹. The deity that exists in the earth, is there in support of man's Apāna (down-breathing). The ether between (sun and earth) is the Samāna (on-breathing), the air is Vyāna (back-breathing).

9. Light is the Udāna (out-breathing), and therefore he whose light has gone out comes to a new birth with his senses absorbed in the mind.

10. Whatever his thought (at the time of death) with that he goes back to Prāna, and the Prāna, united with light², together with the self (the gīvâtma) leads on to the world, as deserved.

11. He who, thus knowing, knows Prāna, his offspring does not perish, and he becomes immortal. Thus says the Sloka :

12. He who has known the origin³, the entry, the place, the fivefold distribution, and the internal state⁴ of the Prāna, obtains immortality, yes, obtains immortality.'

3, 20; Khând. Up. VI, 5, 3, comm.; Kaush. Up. IV, 20; Kaṭha Up. VI, 16.

¹ Without the sun the eye could not see.

² With Udāna, the out-breathing.

³ This refers to the questions asked in verse 1, and answered in the verses which follow.

⁴ The adhyâtma, as opposed to the vâhya, mentioned in verse 1. Ayati instead of âyâti is explained by khândasam hrasvatvam.

FOURTH QUESTION.

1. Then Sauryâyanin Gârgya asked : 'Sir, What are they that sleep in this man, and what are they that are awake in him? What power (deva) is it that sees dreams? Whose is the happiness? On what do all these depend?'

2. He replied : 'O Gârgya, As all the rays of the sun, when it sets, are gathered up in that disc of light, and as they, when the sun rises again and again, come forth, so is all this (all the senses) gathered up in the highest faculty (deva)¹, the mind. Therefore at that time that man does not hear, see, smell, taste, touch, he does not speak, he does not take, does not enjoy, does not evacuate, does not move about. He sleeps, that is what people say.

3. The fires of the prâṇas are, as it were², awake in that town (the body). The Apâna is the Gârhapatya fire, the Vyâna the Anvâhâryapaṭana fire; and because it is taken out of the Gârhapatya fire, which is fire for taking out³, therefore the Prâṇa is the Âhavanîya fire⁴.

¹ See note to verse 5.

² We ought to read agnaya iva.

³ Pranayana, pranîyate 'smâd iti pranayano gârhapatyô 'gniḥ.

⁴ The comparison between the prâṇas and the fires or altars is not very clear. As to the fires or altars, there is the Gârhapatya, placed in the South-west, the household fire, which is always kept burning, from which the fire is taken to the other altars. The Anvâhâryapaṭana, commonly called the Dakshina fire, placed in the South, used chiefly for oblations to the forefathers. The Âhavanîya fire, placed in the East, and used for sacrifices to the gods.

Now the Apâna is identified with the Gârhapatya fire, no reason being given except afterwards, when it is said that the Prâṇa is the Âhavanîya fire, being taken out of the Gârhapatya, here called

4. Because it carries equally these two oblations, the out-breathing and the in-breathing, the Samâna is he (the Hotri priest)¹. The mind is the sacrificer, the Udâna is the reward of the sacrifice, and it leads the sacrificer every day (in deep sleep) to Brahman.

5. There that god² (the mind) enjoys in sleep greatness. What has been seen, he² sees again; what has been heard, he hears again; what has been enjoyed in different countries and quarters, he enjoys again; what has been seen and not seen, heard and not heard, enjoyed and not enjoyed, he sees it all; he, being all, sees.

6. And when he is overpowered by light³, then that god sees no dreams, and at that time that happiness arises in his body.

7. And, O friend, as birds go to a tree to roost, thus all this rests in the Highest Âtman,—

8. The earth and its subtile elements, the water and its subtile elements, the light and its subtile elements, the air and its subtile elements, the ether and its subtile elements; the eye and what can be pranayana, in the same manner as the prâna proceeds in sleep from the apâna. The Vyâna is identified with the Dakshinâgni, the Southern fire, because it issues from the heart through an aperture on the right.

¹ The name of the Hotri priest must be supplied. He is supposed to carry two oblations equally to the Âhavanîya, and in the same way the Vyâna combines the two breathings, the in and out breathings.

² The gîvâtman under the guise of manas. The Sanskrit word is deva, god, used in the sense of an invisible power, but as a masculine. The commentator uses manodeva, p. 212, l. 5. I generally translate deva, if used in this sense, by faculty, but the context required a masculine. See verse 2.

³ In the state of profound sleep or sushupti.

seen, the ear and what can be heard, the nose and what can be smelled, the taste and what can be tasted, the skin and what can be touched, the voice and what can be spoken, the hands and what can be grasped, the feet and what can be walked, the mind and what can be perceived, intellect (buddhi) and what can be conceived, personality and what can be personified, thought and what can be thought, light and what can be lighted up, the Prâna and what is to be supported by it.

9. For he it is who sees, hears, smells, tastes, perceives, conceives, acts, he whose essence is knowledge¹, the person, and he dwells in the highest, indestructible Self,—

10. He who knows that indestructible being, obtains (what is) the highest and indestructible, he without a shadow, without a body, without colour, bright,—yes, O friend, he who knows it, becomes all-knowing, becomes all. On this there is this Śloka :

11. He, O friend, who knows that indestructible being wherein the true knower, the vital spirits (prânas), together with all the powers (deva), and the elements rest, he, being all-knowing, has penetrated all.'

FIFTH QUESTION.

1. Then Saivya Satyakâma asked him : 'Sir, if some one among men should meditate here until death on the syllable Om, what would he obtain by it ?'

2. He replied : 'O Satyakâma, the syllable Om (AUM) is the highest and also the other Brahman ;

¹ Buddhi and the rest are the instruments of knowledge, but there is the knower, the person, in the Highest Self.

therefore he who knows it arrives by the same means¹ at one of the two.

3. If he meditate on one Mâtrâ (the A)², then, being enlightened by that only, he arrives quickly at the earth³. The Rik-verses lead him to the world of men, and being endowed there with penance, abstinence, and faith, he enjoys greatness.

4. If he meditate with⁴ two Mâtrâs (A + U) he arrives at the Manas⁵, and is led up by the Yagus-verses to the sky, to the Soma-world. Having enjoyed greatness in the Soma-world, he returns again.

5. Again, he who meditates with this syllable AUM of three Mâtrâs, on the Highest Person, he comes to light and to the sun. And as a snake is freed from its skin, so is he freed from evil. He is led up by the Sâman-verses to the Brahma-world⁶; and from him, full of life (Hiranyagarbha, the lord of the Satya-loka⁷), he learns⁸ to see the all-pervading, the Highest Person. And there are these two Slokas :

6. The three Mâtrâs (A + U + M), if employed separate, and only joined one to another, are mortal⁹;

¹ Âyatanena, âlambanena.

² Dîpikâyâm Vâkaspatinaivâkâramâtram ityeva vyâkhyâtam.

³ Sampadyate prâpnoti ganmeti seshah.

⁴ Srutau tritîyâ dvitîyârthe.

⁵ Literally the mind, but here meant for the moon, as before. It is clear that manasi belongs to sampadyate, not, as the Dîpikâ and Roer think, to dhyâyîta. Some take it for svapnâbhimânî Hiranyagarbha.

⁶ The world of Hiranyagarbha, called the Satyaloka.

⁷ On a later addition, bringing in the Om as consisting of three Mâtrâs and a half, see Weber, Ind. Stud. I, p. 453; Roer, p. 138.

⁸ Tadupadeseneti yâvat.

⁹ Because in their separate form, A, U, M, they do not mean the Highest Brahman.

but in acts, external, internal, or intermediate, if well performed, the sage trembles not ¹.

7. Through the Rik-verses he arrives at this world, through the Yagus-verses at the sky, through the Sâman-verses at that which the poets teach,—he arrives at this by means of the Oṅkāra; the wise arrives at that which is at rest, free from decay, from death, from fear,—the Highest.’

SIXTH QUESTION.

1. Then Sukesas Bhâradvâga asked him, saying : ‘Sir, Hiranyanâbha, the prince of Kosalâ ², came to me and asked this question : Do you know the person of sixteen parts, O Bhâradvâga ? I said to the prince : I do not know him ; if I knew him, how should I not tell you ? Surely, he who speaks what is untrue withers away to the very root ; therefore I will not say what is untrue. Then he mounted his chariot and went away silently. Now I ask you, where is that person ?’

2. He replied : ‘Friend, that person is here within the body, he in whom these sixteen parts arise.

3. He reflected : What is it by whose departure I shall depart, and by whose staying I shall stay ?

4. He sent forth (created) Prâna (spirit) ³ ; from

¹ The three acts are explained as waking, slumbering, and deep sleep ; or as three kinds of pronunciation, târa-mandra-madhyama. They are probably meant for Yoga exercises in which the three Mâtrâs of Om are used as one word, and as an emblem of the Highest Brahman.

² Saṅkara explains Kausalya by Kosalâyâm bhavaḥ. Ânanda-tîrtha gives the same explanation. Kosalâ is the capital, generally called Ayodhyâ. There is no authority for the palatal s.

³ Saṅkara explains prâna by sarvapráno Hiranyagarbha (sarva-prâṇikaravâdhâram antarâtmânam).

Prāṇa Sraaddhā (faith)¹, ether, air, light, water, earth, sense, mind, food; from food came vigour, penance, hymns, sacrifice, the worlds, and in the worlds the name² also.

5. As these flowing rivers³ that go towards the ocean, when they have reached the ocean, sink into it, their name and form are broken, and people speak of the ocean only, exactly thus these sixteen parts of the spectator that go towards the person (purusha), when they have reached the person, sink into him, their name and form are broken, and people speak of the person only, and he becomes without parts and immortal. On this there is this verse :

6. That person who is to be known, he in whom these parts rest, like spokes in the nave of a wheel, you know him, lest death should hurt you.'

7. Then he (Pippalāda) said to them : ' So far do I know this Highest Brahman, there is nothing higher than it.'

8. And they praising him, said : ' You, indeed, are our father, you who carry us from our ignorance to the other shore.'

Adoration to the highest Rishis !

Adoration to the highest Rishis !

Tat sat. Hariḥ, Om !

¹ Faith is supposed to make all beings act rightly.

² Nāma stands here for nāmarūpe, name (concept) and form. See before, p. 259.

³ Cf. Mund. Up. IV, 2, 8 ; Khând. Up. VIII, 10.

MAITRÂYANA-BRÂHMANA-UPANISHAD.

MAITRÂYANA-BRÂHMANA- UPANISHAD.

FIRST PRAPÂTHAKA.

1. The laying of the formerly-described sacrificial fires¹ is indeed the sacrifice of Brahman. Therefore let the sacrificer, after he has laid those fires, meditate on the Self. Thus only does the sacrificer become complete and faultless.

But who is to be meditated on? He who is called Prâna (breath). Of him there is this story :

2. A King, named Bṛihadratha, having established his son in his sovereignty², went into the forest, because he considered this body as transient, and had obtained freedom from all desires. Having performed the highest penance, he stands there, with uplifted arms, looking up to the sun. At the end of a thousand (days)³, the Saint *Sâkâyana*⁴, who knew the Self, came near⁵, burning with splendour,

¹ The performance of all the sacrifices, described in the Maitrâyana-brâhmana, is to lead up in the end to a knowledge of Brahman, by rendering a man fit for receiving the highest knowledge. See Manu VI, 82 : 'All that has been declared (above) depends on meditation ; for he who is not proficient in the knowledge of the Self reaps not the full reward of the performance of rites.'

² Instead of virâgye, a doubtful word, and occurring nowhere else, m. reads vairâgye.

³ Or years, if we read sahasrasya instead of sahasrâhasya.

⁴ The descendant of Sâkâyana. Saint is perhaps too strong ; it means a holy, venerable man, and is frequently applied to a Buddha.

⁵ Both M. and m. add muneḥ before antikam, whereas the commentary has râgñāḥ.

like a fire without smoke. He said to the King : 'Rise, rise! Choose a boon!'

The King, bowing before him, said : 'O Saint, I know not the Self, thou knowest the essence (of the Self). We have heard so. Teach it us.'

Śākāyanya replied : 'This was achieved of yore ; but what thou askest is difficult to obtain¹. O Aikshvāka, choose other pleasures.'

The King, touching the Saint's feet with his head, recited this Gāthā :

3. 'O Saint, What is the use of the enjoyment of pleasures in this offensive, pithless body—a mere mass of bones, skin, sinews, marrow², flesh, seed, blood, mucus, tears, phlegm, ordure, water³, bile, and slime! What is the use of the enjoyment of pleasures in this body which is assailed by lust, hatred, greed, delusion, fear, anguish, jealousy, separation from what is loved, union with what is not loved⁴, hunger, thirst, old age, death, illness, grief, and other evils!

4. And we see that all this is perishable, as these flies, gnats, and other insects, as herbs and trees⁵,

¹ Though the commentator must have read etad vṛttam purastād duḥsakyam etat prasṇam, yet prasṇam as a neuter is very strange. M. reads etad vṛttam purastât, dussakama prikkha prasṇam ; m. reads etad vratam purastād asakyam mâ prikkha prasṇam aikshvāka, &c. This suggests the reading, etad vṛttam purastād duḥsakam mâ prikkha prasṇam, i. e. this was settled formerly, do not ask a difficult or an impossible question.

² Read maggâ.

³ M. adds vâta before pitta ; not m.

⁴ An expression that often occurs in Buddhist literature. See also Manu VI, 62 : 'On their separation from those whom they love, and their union with those whom they hate ; on their strength overpowered by old age, and their bodies racked with disease.'

⁵ The Sandhi vanaspatayodbhûta for vanaspataya udbhûta is anomalous. M. reads vanaspatayo bhûtapradhvamsinaḥ.

growing and decaying. And what of these? There are other great ones, mighty wielders of bows, rulers of empires, Sudyumna, Bhûridyumna, Indradyumna, Kuvalayâsya, Yauvanâsya, Vadhryasva, Asvapati¹, Sasabindu, Hariskandra, Ambarîsha², Nahusha, Anânata, Saryâti, Yayâti, Anaranya³, Ukshasena⁴, &c., and kings such as Marutta, Bharata (Daushyanti), and others, who before the eyes of their whole family surrendered the greatest happiness, and passed on from this world to that. And what of these? There are other great ones. We see the destruction⁵ of Gandharvas, Asuras⁶, Yakshas, Râkshasas, Bhûtas, Garas, Pisâkas, snakes, and vampires. And what of these? There is the drying up of other great oceans, the falling of mountains, the moving of the pole-star, the cutting of the wind-ropes (that hold the stars), the submergence of the earth, and the departure of the gods (suras) from their place. In such a world as this, what is the use of the enjoyment of pleasures, if he who has fed⁷ on them is seen⁸ to return (to this world) again

¹ M. carries on asvapatisasabinduhariskandrâambarîsha.

² After Ambarîsha, M. reads Nabhushânanutasayyâtiyâyânanaranyâkshasenâdayo. Nahusha (Naghusha?) is the father of Saryâti; Nâbhâga, the father of Ambarîsha. These names are so carelessly written that even the commentator says that the text is either khandasa or prâmâdika. Anânata is a mere conjecture. It occurs as the name of a Rishi in Rig-veda IX, 111.

³ Anaranya, mentioned in the Mahâbhârata, I, 230.

⁴ M. reads anaranyâkshasena.

⁵ M. and m. read nirodhanam.

⁶ M. adds Apsarasas.

⁷ M. and m. read âsritasya, but the commentator explains asitasya.

⁸ Here we have the Maitrâyana Sandhi, drisyatâ iti, instead of drisyata iti; see von Schroeder, Maitrâyani Samhitâ, p. xxviii. M. and m. read drisyata.

and again! Deign therefore to take me out! In this world I am like a frog in a dry well. O Saint, thou art my way, thou art my way.'

SECOND PRAPĀTHAKA.

1. Then the Saint Sākāyanya, well pleased, said to the King: 'Great King Bṛīhadratha, thou banner of the race of Ikshvāku, quickly obtaining a knowledge of Self, thou art happy, and art renowned by the name of Marut, the wind¹. This indeed is thy Self².'

'Which³, O Saint,' said the King.

Then the Saint said to him:

2. 'He⁴ who, without stopping the out-breathing⁵, proceeds upwards (from the sthūla to the sūkshma sarīra), and who, modified (by impressions), and yet not modified⁶, drives away the darkness (of error), he is the Self. Thus said the Saint *Maitri*⁷.' And Sākāyanya said to the King Bṛīhadratha: 'He who in perfect rest, rising from this body (both from the sthūla and sūkshma), and reaching the highest ¹ Prishadasva in the Veda is another name of the Maruts, the storm gods. Afterwards the king is called Marut, VI, 30.

² This sentence is called a Sūtra by the commentator to VI, 32.

³ M. reads Kathaya me katamo bhavān iti.

⁴ M. leaves out atha.

⁵ One might read āviśh/ambhanena, in the sense of while preventing the departure of the vital breath, as in the Bṛīh. Ār. VI, 3, prāṇena rakshann avaram kulāyam.

⁶ M. reads vyathamāno 'vyathamānas.

⁷ M. leaves out Maitri—ity evam hyāha. The commentator explains Maitri by mitrāyā apatyam rīshir maitrir maitreya. In a later passage (II, 3) M. reads Bhagavatā Maitreya, likewise the Anubhūti-prakāsa.

light¹, comes forth in his own form, he is the Self² (thus said Sâkâyanya); this is the immortal, the fearless, this is Brahman.'

3. 'Now then this is the science of Brahman, and the science of all Upanishads, O King, which was told us by the Saint *Maitri*³. I shall tell it to thee :

'We hear (in the sacred records) that there were once the *Vâlakhilyas*⁴, who had left off all evil, who were vigorous and passionless. They said to the Pragâpati Kratu : "O Saint, this body is without intelligence, like a cart. To what supernatural being belongs this great power by which such a body has been made intelligent? Or who is the driver? What thou knowest, O Saint, tell us that⁵." ' Pragâpati answered and said :

4. 'He who in the Sruti is called "Standing above," like passionless ascetics⁶ amidst the objects of the world, he, indeed, the pure, clean, undeveloped, tranquil, breathless, bodiless⁷, endless, imperishable, firm, everlasting, unborn, independent one, stands in his own greatness, and by him has this body been made intelligent, and he is also the driver of it.'

¹ M. adds svayam gyotir upasampadya.

² M. reads esha for ity esha, which seems better.

³ M. reads Maitrena vyâkhyâtâ.

⁴ M. M., Translation of Rig-veda, Preface, p. xxxiv.

⁵ M. adds : brûhîti te hoêur Bhagavan katham anena vâsyam yat Bhagavan vetsy etad asmâkam brûhîti tân hovâketi.

⁶ The commentator allows ûrdhvaretasasa to be taken as a vocative also.

⁷ Nirâtma is explained by the commentator as thoughtless, without volition, &c. But âtma is frequently used for body also, and this seems more appropriate here. M., however, reads anîsâtma, and this is the reading explained in the Anubhûtiprakâsa, p. 228, ver. 60. This might mean the Âtman which has not yet assumed the quality of a personal god. See VI, 28 ; VI, 31.

They said : 'O Saint, How has this been made intelligent by such a being as this which has no desires¹, and how is he its driver?' He answered them and said :

5. 'That Self which is very small, invisible, incomprehensible, called Purusha, dwells of his own will here in part²; just as a man who is fast asleep awakes of his own will³. And this part (of the Self) which is entirely intelligent, reflected in man (as the sun in different vessels of water), knowing the body (kshetragña), attested by his conceiving, willing, and believing⁴, is Pragâpati (lord of creatures), called Visva. By him, the intelligent, is this body made intelligent, and he is the driver thereof.'

They said to him : 'O Saint⁵, if this has been made intelligent by such a being as this, which has no desires, and if he is the driver thereof, how was it?' He answered them and said :

6. 'In the beginning Pragâpati (the lord of creatures) stood alone. He had no happiness, when alone. Meditating⁶ on himself, he created many

¹ The reading anish/hena is explained by the commentator as free from any local habitation or attachment. He also mentions the various readings anish/ena, free from wishes, and anish/hena, the smallest. M. reads anikk/hena, and this seems better than anish/ena. The Anubhûtiprakâsa reads likewise anikk/hasya.

² I read buddhipûrvam, and again with M. suptasyeva buddhipûrvam. I also read amsena without iti, as in M. The simile seems to be that a man, if he likes, can wake himself at any time of night, and this 'if he likes' is expressed by buddhipûrvam. See Anubhûtiprakâsa, vv. 67, 68.

³ M. reads vibodhayati, atha.

⁴ See Maitr. Up. V, 2; Cowell's Translation, pp. 246, 256; Vedântaparibhâshâ, ed. A. Venis, in the Pandit, IV, p. 110.

⁵ M. adds: bhagavann îdrîsasya katham amsena vartanam iti tân hovâka.

⁶ M. reads abhidhyâyan.

creatures. He looked on them and saw they were, like a stone, without understanding, and standing like a lifeless post. He had no happiness. He thought, I shall enter¹ within, that they may awake. Making himself like air (vâyû)² he entered within. Being one, he could not do it. Then dividing himself fivefold, he is called Prâna, Apâna, Samâna, Udâna, Vyâna. Now that³ air which rises upwards, is Prâna. That which moves downwards, is Apâna. That by which these two are supposed to be held, is Vyâna. That⁴ which carries the grosser material of food to the Apâna, and brings the subtler material to each limb, has the name Samâna. [After these (Prâna, Apâna, Samâna) comes the work of the Vyâna, and between them (the Prâna, Apâna, and Samâna on one side and the Vyâna on the other) comes the rising of the Udâna.] That which brings up or carries down⁵ what has been drunk and eaten, is the Udâna⁶.

Now the Upâmsu-vessel (or prâna) depends on the Antaryâma-vessel (apâna) and the Antaryâma-

¹ It is better to read with M. visânîti.

² M. vâyum iva.

³ M. Atha yo 'yam.

⁴ M. reads: yo 'yam sthaviṣṭham annam dhâtum annasyâpâne sthâpayaty aṁṣiṣṭham kânge 'nge samnayati esha vâva sa samâno 'tha yo 'yam. Leaving out annam, this seems the right reading. The whole sentence from uttaram to udânasya is left out in M.

⁵ M. nigrati kâisho vâva sa udâno 'tha yenaitâs sirâ anuvyâptâ esha vâva sa vyânaḥ.

⁶ The views of these five kinds of wind differ considerably. Here the commentator explains that the prâna and apâna, the up-breathing and down-breathing, keep the bodily warmth alive, as bellows keep up a fire. The food cooked in it is distributed by the Samâna, so that the coarse material becomes ordure, the middle flesh, the subtle material mind (manas). The udâna brings up phlegm, &c., while the Vyâna gives strength to the whole body.

vessel (apâna) on the Upâmsu-vessel¹ (prâna), and between these two the self-resplendent (Self) produced heat². This heat is the purusha (person), and this purusha is Agni Vaisvânara. And thus it is said elsewhere³: "Agni Vaisvânara is the fire within man by which the food that is eaten is cooked, i.e. digested. Its noise is that which one hears, if one covers one's ears. When a man is on the point of departing this life, he does not hear that noise."

Now he⁴, having divided himself fivefold, is hidden in a secret place (buddhi), assuming the nature of mind, having the prânas as his body, resplendent, having true concepts, and free like ether⁵. Feeling even thus that he has not attained his object, he thinks from within the interior of the heart⁶, "Let me enjoy objects." Therefore, having first broken open these five apertures (of the senses), he enjoys the objects by means of the five reins. This means that these perceptive organs (ear, skin, eye, tongue, nose) are his reins; the active organs (tongue (for speaking), hands, feet, anus, generative organ) his horses; the body his chariot, the mind the charioteer, the whip being the temperament. Driven by that whip, this body goes round like the

¹ Two sacrificial vessels (graha) placed on either side of the stone on which the Soma is squeezed, and here compared to the Prâna and Apâna, between which the Self (kâitanyâtmâ) assumes heat.

² M. reads taylor antarâle kaushnyam prâsuwat.

³ See Bṛiṣācāranyaka Up. V, 9; Khând. Up. III, 13, 8.

⁴ The Vaisvânara or purusha, according to the commentator, but originally the Pragâpati, who had made himself like air, and divided himself into five vital airs.

⁵ Thus the âtmâ, with his own qualities and those which he assumes, becomes a living being.

⁶ M. reads esho 'sya hṛīdantare tishṭhann.

wheel driven by the potter. This body is made intelligent, and he is the driver thereof.

This¹ is indeed the Self, who seeming to be filled with desires, and seeming to be overcome² by bright or dark fruits of action, wanders about in every body (himself remaining free). Because he is not manifest, because he is infinitely small, because he is invisible, because he cannot be grasped, because he is attached to nothing, therefore he, seeming to be changing, an agent in that which is not (prakṛiti), is in reality not an agent and unchanging. He is pure, firm, stable, undefiled³, unmoved, free from desire, remaining a spectator, resting in himself. Having concealed himself in the cloak of the three qualities he appears as the enjoyer of rīta, as the enjoyer of rīta (of his good works).'

THIRD PRAPÂTHAKA.

1. The Vālakhilyas said to Pragâpati Kratu: 'O Saint, if thou thus showest the greatness of that Self, then who is that other different one, also called Self⁴, who really overcome by bright and dark fruits of action, enters on a good or bad birth?

¹ M. reads: Sa vâ esha âtmeti hosann iva sitâsitaiḥ. This seems better than usanti kavayaḥ, which hardly construes.

² M. reads abhibhūyamānay iva, which again is better than ana-bhibhūta iva, for he seems to be overcome, but is not, just as he seems to be an agent, but is not. See also III, 1.

³ M. has alepo.

⁴ The pure Self, called âtma, brahma, kinmâtram, pragñānagha-nam, &c., after entering what he had himself created, and no longer distinguishing himself from the created things (bhūta), is called Bhûtâtma.

Downward or upward is his course¹, and overcome by the pairs (distinction between hot and cold, pleasure and pain, &c.) he roams about².'

2. Pragâpati Kratu replied : 'There is indeed that other³ different one, called the elemental Self (Bhûtâtâmâ), who, overcome by bright and dark fruits of action, enters on a good or bad birth : downward or upward is his course, and overcome by the pairs he roams about. And this is his explanation : The five Tanmâtrâs⁴ (sound, touch, form, taste, smell) are called Bhûta ; also the five Mahâbhûtas (gross elements) are called Bhûta. Then the aggregate⁵ of all these is called sarîra, body⁶. And lastly he of whom it was said that he dwelt in the body⁷, he is called Bhûtâtâmâ, the elemental Self. Thus his immortal Self⁸ is like a drop of water on a lotus leaf⁹, and he himself is overcome by the qualities of nature. Then¹⁰, because he is thus overcome, he becomes bewildered, and because he is bewildered, he saw not the creator, the holy Lord, abiding within himself. Carried along by the waves of the qualities¹¹, darkened in his imaginations, unstable, fickle,

¹ M. reads here and afterwards avâkam ūrdhvam vâ gatidvandvaiḥ.

² M. adds at the end, paribhramatīti katama esha iti, tân hovâketi, and leaves it out at the end of § 2.

³ M. here reads avara.

⁴ M. reads tanmâtrâni.

⁵ M. reads teshâm samudayas takkharîram.

⁶ The commentator distinguishes between lînga-sarîra, consisting of prânas, indriyas, the antaḥkarana, and the sūkshmathûtas ; and the sthûla-sarîra, consisting of the five Mahâbhûtas.

⁷ M. reads sarîram ity uktam.

⁸ M. reads athâsti tasyâḥ bindur iva.

⁹ It sticks to it, yet it can easily run off again.

¹⁰ M. reads Ato, and the commentator explains atho by ataḥ kâranât, adding sandhiḥ khandasaḥ.

¹¹ See VI, 30.

crippled, full of desires, vacillating, he enters into belief, believing "I am he," "this is mine¹;" he binds his Self by his Self, as a bird with a net, and overcome afterwards by the fruits of what he has done, he enters on a good and bad birth; downward or upward is his course, and overcome by the pairs he roams about.'

They asked: 'Which is it?' And he answered them:

3. 'This also has elsewhere been said: He who acts, is the elemental Self; he who causes to act by means of the organs², is the inner man (antaḥpuruṣa). Now as even a ball of iron, pervaded (overcome) by fire, and hammered by smiths, becomes manifold (assumes different forms, such as crooked, round, large, small³), thus the elemental Self, pervaded (overcome) by the inner man, and hammered by the qualities, becomes manifold⁴. And the four tribes (mammals, birds, &c.), the fourteen worlds (Bhûr, &c.), with all the number of beings, multiplied eighty-four times⁵, all this appears as manifoldness. And those multiplied things are impelled by man (puruṣa) as the wheel by the potter⁶. And as when the ball of iron is hammered, the fire is not overcome, so the (inner) man is not overcome, but the elemental Self is overcome, because it has united itself (with the elements).

¹ M. reads aham so mamedam.

² M. antaḥkaranaiḥ.

³ See commentary, p. 48, l. 7.

⁴ M. reads upety atha trigunam katurgālam.

⁵ M. reads katurasītilakshayoniparinatam. See also Anubhūti-prakāśa, ver. 118.

⁶ Mrityava seems an impossible word, though the commentator twice explains it as kulāla, potter. M. reads kakrineti, which seems preferable. Weber conjectures mritpaka.

4. And it has been said elsewhere¹: This body produced from marriage, and endowed with growth² in darkness, came forth by the urinary passage, was built up with bones, bedaubed with flesh, thatched with skin, filled with ordure, urine, bile, slime, marrow, fat, oil³, and many impurities besides, like a treasury full of treasures⁴.

5. And it has been said elsewhere: Bewilderment, fear, grief, sleep, sloth, carelessness, decay, sorrow, hunger, thirst, niggardliness, wrath, infidelity, ignorance, envy, cruelty⁵, folly, shamelessness, meanness⁶, pride, changeability⁷, these are the results of the quality of darkness (tamaḥ)⁸.

¹ Part of this passage has been before the mind of the author of the Mânava-dharmasâstra, when writing, VI, 76, 77: asthithûnam snâyuyutam mâmsaronitalepanam, karmâvanaddham durgandhi pûrnam mûtrapurîshayoḥ, garâsokasamâvisham rogâyatanam âturam ragasvalam anityam ka bhûtâvâsam imam tyaget. The same verses occur in the Mahâbhârata XII, 12463-4, only with tyaga at the end, instead of tyaget. The rendering of asthibhis kîtam by asthithûnam shows that kîta was understood to mean piled or built up, i. e. supported by bones.

² Instead of samvridhyupetam M. reads samviddhyapetam.

³ M. adds snâyū after vasâ, and instead of âmayaiḥ reads malaiḥ. This reading, malaiḥ, would seem preferable, though Manu's rogâyatanam might be quoted in support of âmayaiḥ. The exact meaning of vasâ is given in the Âryavidyâsudhâkara, p. 82, l. 9.

⁴ Therefore should wise people not identify their true Self with the body. M. reads vasuneti.

⁵ M. reads vaikârūyam.

⁶ Instead of nirâkrîtitvam M. reads nikrîtatvam, which is decidedly preferable. We may take it to mean either meanness, as opposed to uddhatatvam, overbearing, or knavery, the usual meaning of nikrîti.

⁷ M. reads asatvam, possibly for asattvam.

⁸ M. reads tâmasânvitaiḥ, and afterwards râgasânvitaiḥ; also trishnâ instead of antastrishnâ.

Inward thirst, fondness, passion, covetousness, unkindness, love, hatred, deceit¹, jealousy, vain restlessness, fickleness², unstableness, emulation, greed, patronising of friends, family pride, aversion to disagreeable objects, devotion to agreeable objects, whispering³, prodigality, these are the results of the quality of passion (ragas).

By these he is filled, by these he is overcome, and therefore this elemental Self assumes manifold forms, yes, manifold forms.'

FOURTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

1. The Vâlakhilyas, whose passions were subdued, approached him full of amazement and said: 'O Saint, we bow before thee; teach thou, for thou art the way, and there is no other for us. What process is there for the elemental Self, by which, after leaving this (identity with the elemental body), he obtains union⁴ with the (true) Self?' Pragâpati Kratu said to them:

2. 'It has been said elsewhere: Like the waves in large rivers, that which has been done before, cannot be turned back, and, like the tide of the sea, the approach of death is hard to stem. Bound⁵ by the fetters of the fruits of good and evil, like a cripple; without freedom, like a man in prison; beset by many fears, like one standing before Yama (the judge of

¹ M. reads vyavartatvam.

² It should be kañkalatvam.

³ M. reads mattasvaro.

⁴ Instead of the irregular sâyogyam, M. always reads sâyugyam.

⁵ It is not quite clear what is the subject to which all these adjectives refer. M. reads baddho for baddham, but afterwards agrees with the text as published by Cowell.

the dead); intoxicated by the wine of illusion, like one intoxicated by wine; rushing about, like one possessed by an evil spirit; bitten by the world, like one bitten by a great serpent; darkened by passion, like the night; illusory, like magic; false, like a dream; pithless, like the inside of the Kadalt; changing its dress in a moment, like an actor¹; fair in appearance, like a painted wall, thus they call him; and therefore it is said:

Sound², touch, and other things are like nothings; if the elemental Self is attached to them, it will not remember the Highest Place³.

3. This is indeed the remedy for the elemental Self: Acquirement of the knowledge of the Veda, performance of one's own duty, therefore conformity on the part of each man to the order to which he happens to belong. This⁴ is indeed the rule for one's own duty, other performances are like the mere branches of a stem⁵. Through it one obtains the Highest above, otherwise one falls downward⁶. Thus is one's own duty declared, which is to be found in the Vedas. No one belongs truly to an order (âsrama) who transgresses his own law⁷. And if people say, that a man does not belong to any of the orders, and that he is an ascetic⁸, this is wrong, though, on

¹ M. reads na/avat.

² M. reads ye 'rthâ anarthâ iva te sthitâh, esham.

³ M. reads na smaret paramam padam.

⁴ M. reads svadharma eva sarvam dhatte, stambhasâkhevetarâni.

⁵ The commentator considers the other sacrificial performances as hurtful, and to be avoided.

⁶ M. reads anyathâdha/ pataty, esha.

⁷ The rules of the order to which he belongs.

⁸ A Tapasvin is free from the restrictions of the preceding âsrathe other hand, no one who is not an ascetic brings his sacrificial works to perfection or obtains knowledge of the Highest Self¹. For thus it is said :

By ascetic penance goodness is obtained, from goodness understanding is reached, from understanding the Self is obtained, and he who has obtained that, does not return².

4. "Brahman is," thus said one who knew the science of Brahman; and this penance is the door to Brahman, thus said one who by penance had cast off all sin. The syllable Om is the manifest greatness of Brahman, thus said one who well grounded (in Brahman) always meditates on it. Therefore by knowledge, by penance, and by meditation is Brahman gained. Thus one goes beyond³ Brahman (Hiranyagarbha), and to a divinity higher than the gods; nay, he who knows this, and worships Brahman by these three (by knowledge, penance, and meditation), obtains bliss imperishable, infinite, and unchangeable. Then freed from those things (the senses of the body, &c.) by which he was filled and overcome, a mere charioteer⁴, he obtains union with the Self.'

mas, but he must have obeyed them first, before he can become a real Tapasvin.

¹ M. reads âsrameshv evâvasthitas tapasvî kety uk̐yata ity, etad apy uktam, &c. This would mean, 'For it is said that he only who has dwelt in the âsramas is also called a Tapasvin, a real ascetic; and this also has been said, that no one obtains self-knowledge except an ascetic.' This is not impossible, but the commentator follows the text as printed by Cowell. M. reads âtmagñânênâdhigamaḥ, karmasuddhi.

² M. reads manasâ prâpyate tv âtmâ hy âtmâptyâ na nivartata iti.

³ M. reads pura eta, which may be right.

⁴ Rathitaḥ is a very strange word, but, like everything else, it is

5. The Vâlakhilyas said: 'O Saint, thou art the teacher, thou art the teacher¹. What thou hast said, has been properly laid up in our mind. Now answer us a further question: Agni, Vâyû, Âditya, Time (kâla) which is Breath (prâna²), Food (anna), Brahmâ³, Rudra, Vishnu, thus do some meditate on one, some on another. Say which of these is the best for us.' He said to them:

6. 'These are but the chief manifestations of the highest, the immortal, the incorporeal Brahman. He who is devoted to one, rejoices here in his world (presence), thus he said. Brahman indeed is all this, and a man may meditate on, worship, or discard also those which⁴ are its chief manifestations. With these (deities) he proceeds to higher and higher worlds, and when all things perish, he becomes one with the Purusha, yes, with the Purusha.'

explained by the commentator, viz. as ratham prâpito rathitvam ka prâpita iti yâvat. Nevertheless the reading of M. seems to me preferable, viz. atha yaiḥ paripūrṇo 'bhibhūto 'yam tathaitais ka, taiḥ sarvair vimukta svâtmany eva sâyugyam upaiti. I should prefer vimuktas tv âtmany eva, and translate, 'But then, freed from all those things by which he was filled and likewise was overcome by them, he obtains union with the Self.'

¹ M. reads the second time abhivâdy asmîti, which is no improvement. It might have been ativâdyasîti.

² M. reads Yamaḥ prâṇo.

³ This is, of course, the personal Brahmâ of the Hindu triad. To distinguish this personal Brahmâ from the impersonal, I sometimes give his name in the nom. masc., Brahmâ, and not the grammatical base, Brahman.

⁴ M. reads yâ vâ asyâ. The commentator explains yâ vâsyâḥ by vâsayogyâḥ; or yâ vâ yâḥ by kâśīti, admitting a Vedic irregularity which is not quite clear.

FIFTH PRAPÂTHAKA ¹.

1. Next follows Kutsâyana's hymn of praise :

'Thou art Brahmâ, and thou art Vishnu, thou art Rudra, thou Pragâpati ², thou art Agni, Varuna, Vâyu, thou art Indra, thou the Moon.

Thou art Anna ³ (the food or the eater), thou art Yama, thou art the Earth, thou art All, thou art the Imperishable. In thee all things exist in many forms, whether for their natural or for their own (higher) ends.

Lord of the Universe, glory to thee! Thou art the Self of All, thou art the maker of All, the enjoyer of All; thou art all life, and the lord of all pleasure and joy ⁴. Glory to thee, the tranquil, the deeply hidden, the incomprehensible, the immeasurable, without beginning and without end.'

2. 'In the beginning ⁵ darkness (tamas) alone was this. It was in the Highest, and, moved by the Highest, it becomes uneven. Thus it becomes obscurity

¹ At the beginning of the fifth Prapâthaka my MS. gives the Slokas which in the printed edition are found in VI, 34, p. 178, Atreme slokâ bhavanti, yathâ nirindhano vahnir, &c., to nirvishayam smritam. Then follows as § 2, Atha yathedam Kautsyâyânistutis, tvam, &c.

² The commentator explains Brahmâ by Hiranyagarbha and Pragâpati by Virâg.

³ M. reads tvam Manus, tvam Yamas ka tvam, prithivî tvam athâ-kyutah, which is so clearly the right reading that it is difficult to understand how the mistakes arose which are presupposed by the commentary. See Taitt. Up. II, 2.

⁴ M. reads visvakrîdârati prabhu, which seems better.

⁵ M. reads tamo vâ idam ekam âsta tat paro syât tat pareneritam. It may have been tat pare 'sthât.

(ragas)¹. Then this obscurity, being moved, becomes uneven. Thus it becomes goodness (sattva). Then this goodness, being moved, the essence flowed forth². This is that part (or state of Self) which is entirely intelligent, reflected in man (as the sun is in different vessels of water) knowing the body (kshetragña), attested by his conceiving, willing, and believing, it is Pragâpati, called Visva. His manifestations have been declared before³. Now that part of him which belongs to darkness, that, O students⁴, is he who is called Rudra. That part of him which belongs to obscurity, that, O students, is he who is called Brahmâ. That part of him which belongs to goodness, that, O students, is he who is called Vishnu. He being one, becomes three, becomes eight⁵, becomes eleven⁶, becomes twelve, becomes infinite. Because⁷ he thus came to be, he is the Being (neut.), he moves about, having entered all beings, he has become the Lord of all beings. He is the Self within and without, yes, within and without.'

¹ M. reads etad vai ragaso rūpam, which is better, or, at least, more in accordance with what follows.

² M. reads sattvam everitarasasam prâsrivat.

³ A reference to Maitr. Up. II, 5, would have saved the commentator much trouble. M. has a better text. It leaves out visveti or visvâkhyas after pragâpati, which may be wrong, but then goes on: tasya proktâ agryâs tanavo brahmâ rudro vishnur iti. In enumerating the three agryâs tanavaḥ, however, M. is less consistent, for it begins with ragas or Brahmâ, then goes on to tamas or Rudra, and ends with sattva or Vishnu. The Anubhûtiprakâsa, verse 142, has the right succession.

⁴ This vocative, brahma-kârino, is always left out in M.

⁵ The five prâṇas, the sun, moon, and asterisms.

⁶ The eleven organs of sense and action, which, by dividing manas and buddhi, become twelve.

⁷ M. reads aparimitadhâ kodbhûtatvâd bhûteshu karati pravishat sarvabhûtânâm.

SIXTH PRAPÂTHAKA ¹.

1. He (the Self) bears the Self in two ways ², as he who is Prâna (breath), and as he who is Âditya (the sun). Therefore there are two paths for him ³, within and without, and they both turn back in a day and night. The Sun is the outer Self, the inner Self is Breath. Hence the motion of the inner Self is inferred from the motion of the outer Self ⁴. For thus it is said :

‘He who knows, and has thrown off all evil, the overseer of the senses ⁵, the pure-minded, firmly

¹ The commentator describes the sixth and seventh chapters as Khila, supplementary, and does not think that they are closely connected with the chief object of the Upanishad. This chief object was to show that there is only one thinking Self (ĥidâtġmâ) to be known, and that the same is to be meditated on as manifested in the different forms of Rudra, Brahmâ, Vishnu, &c. Thus the highest object of those who wish for final liberation has been explained before, as well as the proper means of obtaining that liberation. What follows are statements of the greatness of the various manifestations of the Âtman, and advice how to worship them. My MS. gives the beginning of the sixth Prapâthaka, but ends with the end of the eighth paragraph. The verses in paragraph 34, as mentioned before, are given in my MS. at the end of the fourth Prapâthaka. My translation deviates considerably from the commentary. The text is obscure and not always correct. My rule has been throughout to begin a new sentence with evam hy âha, ‘for thus it is said,’ which introduces proofs of what has been said before. The passages thus quoted as proofs from the Veda are often difficult to understand, nor do they always consist of a complete sentence. My translation therefore is often purely tentative.

² M. reads dvitiyâ for dvidhâ.

³ M. reads dvaṁ vâ etâv asya paññadhâ nâmantar bahis kâhorâtretau vyâvartete.

⁴ While the sun goes round Meru in a day and a night, the breath performs 21,000 breathings, or, more exactly, 21,600. M. reads bahirâtmagatyâ.

⁵ M. reads adhyaksha, not akshâdhyaksha.

grounded (in the Self) and looking away (from all earthly objects), he is the same.' Likewise the motion of the outer Self is inferred from the motion of the inner Self. For thus it is said :

'He who within the sun is the golden person, who looks upon this earth from his golden place, he is the same who, after entering the inner lotus of the heart¹, devours food (perceives sensuous objects, &c.)'

2. And he who having entered the inner lotus of the heart, devours food, the same, having gone to the sky as the fire of the sun, called Time, and being invisible, devours all beings as his food.

What is that lotus and of what is it made? (the Vâlakhilyas ask².)

That lotus is the same as the ether; the four quarters, and the four intermediate points are its leaves³.

These two, Breath and the Sun, move on near to each other (in the heart and in the ether). Let him worship these two, with the syllable Om, with the Vyâhrîti words (bhûh, bhuvaḥ, svar), and with the Sâvitri hymn.

3. There are two forms of Brahman⁴, the material (effect) and the immaterial (cause). The material is false, the immaterial is true. That which is true is Brahman, that which is Brahman is light, and that which is light is the Sun⁵. And this Sun became the Self of that Om.

¹ M. reads sa esho 'ntaḥ pushkare hrîtpushkare vâsrito.

² The commentator ascribes the dialogue still to the Vâlakhilyas and Pragâpati Kratu.

³ M. reads dalasamsthâ âsur vâgniḥ parata etaiḥ prânâdityâv etâ.

⁴ See Brîh. Up. II, 3, 1.

⁵ Professor Cowell, after giving the various readings of his MSS., says, 'the true reading would seem to be yat satyam tad brahma,

He divided himself threefold, for Om consists of three letters, a + u + m. Through them all this¹ is contained in him as warp and woof. For thus it is said :

‘Meditate on that Sun as Om, join your Self (the breath) with the (Self of the) Sun.’

4. And thus it has been said elsewhere : The Udgîtha (of the Sâma-veda) is the Pranava² (of the Rig-veda), and the Pranava is the Udgîtha, and thus the Sun is Udgîtha, and he is Pranava or Om. For thus it is said³ :

‘The Udgîtha, called Pranava, the leader (in the performance of sacrifices), the bright⁴, the sleepless, free from old age and death, three-footed⁵, consisting of three letters (a + u + m), and likewise to be known as fivefold (five prânas) placed in the cave.’ And it is also said :

‘The three-footed Brahman has its root upward⁶, the branches are ether, wind, fire, water, earth, &c. This one Asvattha⁷ by name, the world, is Brahman, and of it that is the light which is called the Sun, and it is also the light of that syllable Om. Therefore let him for ever worship that (breath and sun, as manifestations of Brahman) with the syllable Om.’

He alone enlightens us. For thus it is said :

yad brahma tag gyotir, yad gyotis sa âdityaḥ.’ This is exactly the reading of my own MS.

¹ M. reads kaivâsminn ity evam hyâha.

² The mystic syllable Om.

³ See Khândogyaopanishad I, 5 ; Maitr. Up. VI, 25.

⁴ M. reads nâmarûpam.

⁵ The three feet of the prâna are waking, slumber, and deep sleep ; the three feet of the sun, the three worlds, bhûḥ, bhuvaḥ, svar, as in VII, 11. See also Khând. Up. III, 12.

⁶ Cf. Kaṭh. Up. VI, 1.

⁷ Asvattha, lit. fig-tree, then frequently used metaphorically as a name of the world. Here explained as ‘it will not stand till to-morrow.’

‘This alone is the pure syllable, this alone is the highest syllable; he who knows that syllable only, whatever he desires, is his¹.’

5. And thus it has been said elsewhere: This Om² is the sound-endowed body of him (Prânâdityâtman). This is his gender-endowed body, viz. feminine, masculine, neuter. This is his light-endowed body, viz. Agni, Vâyu, Âditya. This is his lord-endowed body, viz. Brahmâ, Rudra, Vishnu. This is his mouth-endowed body, viz. Gârhapatya, Dakshinâgni, Âhavanîya³. This is his knowledge-endowed body, viz. Rik, Yagus, Sâman. This is his world-endowed body, viz. Bhûh, Bhuva, Svar. This is his time-endowed body, viz. Past, Present, Future. This is his heat-endowed body, viz. Breath, Fire, Sun. This is his growth-endowed body, viz. Food, Water, Moon. This is his thought-endowed body, viz. intellect, mind, personality. This is his breath-endowed body, viz. Prâna, Apâna, Vyâna. Therefore by the aforesaid syllable Om are all these here enumerated bodies praised and identified (with the Prânâdityâtman). For thus it is said⁴:

‘O Satyakâma, the syllable Om is the high and the low Brahman.’

6. This⁵ (world) was unuttered⁶. Then forsooth Pragâpati, having brooded, uttered it in the words Bhûh, Bhuva, Svar. This is the grossest body of that Pragâpati, consisting of the three worlds⁷. Of that body Svar is the head, Bhuva the navel, Bhûh

¹ Ka/h. Up. II, 16.

² M. reads tanûr yom iti.

³ The fires on the three altars.

⁴ Prasña Up. V, 2.

⁵ M. reads atha vyâtman.

⁶ So far the pranava or Om has been explained; now follows the explanation of the Vyâhrîtis; cf. VI, 2. Vyâhrîti is derived from vyâhar, and means an utterance.

⁷ Cf. VI, 5.

the feet, the sun the eye. For in the eye is fixed man's great measure, because with the eye he makes all measurements. The eye is truth (satyam), for the person (purusha) dwelling in the eye proceeds to all things (knows all objects with certainty). Therefore let a man worship with the Vyâhr̥tis, Bhûh, Bhuvaḥ, Svar, for thus Pragâpati, the Self of All, is worshipped as the (sun, the) Eye of All¹. For thus it is said :

‘ This (the sun) is Pragâpati's all-supporting body, for in it this all² is hid (by the light of the sun); and in this all it (the light) is hid. Therefore this is worshipped³.’

7. (The Sâvitṛi begins⁴ :) Tat Savitur vareṇyam, i.e. ‘ this of Savitṛi, to be chosen.’ Here the Âditya (sun) is Savitṛi, and the same is to be chosen by the love(r) of Self, thus say the Brahma-teachers.

(Then follows the next foot in the Sâvitṛi): Bhargo devasya dhîmahî, i.e. ‘ the splendour of the god we meditate on.’ Here the god is Savitṛi, and therefore he who is called his splendour, him I meditate on, thus say the Brahma-teachers.

¹ M. reads visvatasakshur.

² Pragâpati, according to the commentator, is identified with Satya, the true, because sat means the three worlds, and these (bhûh, bhuvaḥ, sva) are said to be his body. Hence probably the insertion of Satyam before Pragâpati at the beginning of the paragraph. Then he argues, as the eye has been called satya, and as the eye is Âditya, therefore Pragâpati also, being Satya, is Âditya, the sun. And again, if the sun is worshipped (by the vyâhr̥tis) then, like the sun, the eye of all, Pragâpati also, the self of all, is worshipped.

³ Eshopas̥ta is impossible. We must either read, with the commentator, etām upâs̥ta, or with M. eshopas̥iteti.

⁴ He now proceeds to explain the worship of the Sâvitṛi verse, which had been mentioned in VI, 2, after the Om and the Vyâhr̥tis, as the third mode of worshipping Prâṇa (breath) and Âditya (sun), these being two correlative embodiments of the Self. The Sâvitṛi is found in Rig-veda III, 62, 10, but it is here explained in a purely philosophical sense. See also Bṛh. Up. VI, 3, 6.

(Then follows the last foot): Dhiyo yo nañ prakodayât, i.e. 'who should stir up our thoughts.' Here the dhiyañ are thoughts, and he should stir these up for us, thus say the Brahma-teachers.

(He now explains the word bhargas). Now he who is called bhargas is he who is placed in yonder Âditya (sun), or he who is the pupil in the eye¹. And he is so called, because his going (gati) is by rays (bhâbhiñ); or because he parches (bhargayati) and makes the world to shrivel up. Rudra is called Bhargas, thus say the Brahma-teachers. Or bha means that he lights up these worlds; ra, that he delights these beings, ga that these creatures go to him and come from him; therefore being a bha-ra-ga, he is called Bhargas.

*Sûrya*² (sun) is so called, because Soma is continually squeezed out (su). Savitri (sun) is so called, because he brings forth (su). Âditya (sun) is so called, because he takes up (âdâ, scil. vapour, or the life of man). *Pâvana*³ is so called, because he purifies (pu). Âpas, water, is so called, because it nourishes (pyâ).

And it is said:

'Surely the Self (absorbed in Prâna, breath), which is called Immortal⁴, is the thinker, the perceiver, the goer, the evacuator⁵, the delighter, the doer, the speaker, the taster, the smeller, the seer, the hearer, and he touches. He is Vibhu (the pervader), who has entered into the body.' And it is said:

¹ M. reads târake 'kshmi.

² Sûrya is considered as the daily performer of the Prâtaḥsavana, &c., the sacrifice at which Soma is squeezed out as an offering.

³ M. reads pavamânât pavamânañ.

⁴ M. reads amṛtâkhyas ketâkhyas ketâ.

⁵ M. reads gantâ srîshâ.

‘When the knowledge is twofold (subjective and objective), then he hears, sees, smells, tastes, and touches (something), for it is the Self that knows everything.’

But when the knowledge is not twofold (subjective only), without effect, cause, and action¹, without a name, without a comparison, without a predicate²— what is that? It cannot be told³.

8. And the same Self is also called Isâna (lord), Sambhu, Bhava, Rudra (tâmasa); Pragâpati (lord of creatures), Visvasrig (creator of all), Hiranyagarbha, Satyam (truth), Prâna (breath), Hamsa (râgasa); Sâstri (ruler), Vishnu, Nârâyana (sâtvika); Arka, Savitri, Dhâtri (supporter), *Vidhâtri*⁴ (creator), Samrâg (king), Indra, Indu (moon). He is also he who warms, the Sun, hidden by the thousand-eyed golden egg, as one fire by another. He is to be thought after, he is to be sought after. Having said farewell to all living beings, having gone to the forest, and having renounced all sensuous objects, let man perceive the Self⁵ from his own body.

‘(See him)⁶ who assumes all forms, the golden, who knows all things, who ascends highest, alone in his splendour, and warms us; the thousand-rayed,

¹ M. reads kâryakâraṇakarmavinirmuktam.

² Nirupâkhyam, rightly translated by Cowell by ‘without a predicate,’ and rendered by the commentator by apramaya, i. e. not to be measured, not to be classed, i. e. without a predicate.

³ I have translated this in accordance with a well-known passage, quoted by the commentator from the Bṛihadâraṇyaka, rather than in accordance with his own interpretation.

⁴ M. leaves out vidhâtâ.

⁵ Instead of the peculiar Maitrâyaṇi reading, svâñ sârîrâd, M. reads svâs kharîrâd.

⁶ The oneness of the Sun and the Breath is proclaimed in the following verse of the Prasṇa Upanishad I, 8.

who abides in a hundred places, the spirit of all creatures, the Sun, rises¹.'

9. Therefore he who by knowing this has become the Self of both Breath and Sun, meditates (while meditating on them) on his Self, sacrifices (while sacrificing to them) to his Self—this meditation, the mind thus absorbed in these acts, is praised by the wise.

Then let him purify the contamination of the mind by the verse Ukkl̥ish̥topahatam, &c.²: 'Be it food left, or food defiled by left food, be it food given by a sinner, food coming from a dead person, or from one impure from childbirth, may the purifying power of Vasu, may Agni, and the rays of Savitr̥i, purify it, and all my sin³.'

First (before eating) he surrounds (the offered food) with water (in rinsing his mouth⁴). Then saying, Svâhâ to Prâna, Svâhâ to Apâna, Svâhâ to Vyâna, Svâhâ to Samâna, Svâhâ to Udâna, he offers (the food) with five invocations (in the fire of the mouth). What is over, he eats in silence, and then he surrounds (the food) once more afterwards with water (rinsing the mouth after his meal). Having washed let him, after sacrificing to himself, meditate on his Self with these two verses, Prâno 'gniḥ and Visvo 'si, viz. 'May the Highest Self as breath, as fire (digestive heat), as consisting of the

¹ Here ends the M. manuscript, with the following title: iti sr̥iyagussâkhâyâm Maitrâyan̥tyabrâhmanopanishadi shash̥hah̥ prapâḥhakaḥ. Samâptâ.

² In the following paragraphs the taking of food is represented as a sacrifice offered by the Self to the Self (âtmayaganarûpam bhoganam, p. 106, l. 13).

³ Several words have been inserted in this verse, spoiling the metre.

⁴ See Khând. Up. V, 2.

five vital airs, having entered (the body), himself satisfied, satisfy all, he who protects all.' 'Thou art Visva (all), thou art Vaisvânara (fire), all that is born is upheld by thee; may all offerings enter into thee; creatures live where thou grantest immortality to all.' He who eats according to this rule, does not in turn become food for others.

10. There is something else to be known. There is a further modification of this Self-sacrifice (the eating), namely, the food and the eater thereof. This is the explanation. The thinking Purusha (person), when he abides within the Pradhâna (nature), is the feeder who feeds on the food supplied by Prakṛiti (nature). The elemental Self¹ is truly his food, his maker being Pradhâna (nature²). Therefore what is composed of the three qualities (gunas) is the food, but the person within is the feeder. And for this the evidence is supplied by the senses. For animals spring from seed, and as the seed is the food, therefore it is clear that what is food is Pradhâna (the seed or cause of everything). Therefore, as has been said, the Purusha (person) is the eater, Prakṛiti, the food; and abiding within it he feeds. All that begins with the Mahat³ (power of intellect) and ends with the Viśeṣas (elements⁴), being developed from the distinction of nature with its three qualities, is the sign (that there must be a Purusha, an intel-

¹ See before, III, 3.

² This is very doubtful, in fact, unintelligible. The commentator says, asya bhûtâtmanaḥ kartâ pradhânaḥ pûrvoktaḥ, so 'pi bhogyā ity arthaḥ.

³ Technical terms, afterwards adopted by the Sâṅkhya philosophers.

⁴ Professor Cowell observes that the term viśeṣa, as here applied to the five gross elements, occurs in the Sâṅkhya-kârikâ, ver. 38.

ligent subject). And in this manner the way with its fourteen steps has been explained¹. (This is comprehended in the following verse): 'This world is indeed the food, called pleasure, pain, and error (the result of the three qualities); there is no laying hold of the taste of the seed (cause), so long as there is no development (in the shape of effect).' And in its three stages also it has the character of food, as childhood, youth, and old age; for, because these are developed, therefore there is in them the character of food².

And in the following manner does the perception of Pradhâna (nature) take place, after it has become manifest:—Intellect and the rest, such as determination, conception, consciousness, are for the tasting (of the effects of Pradhâna). Then there are the five (perceptive organs) intended for the (five) objects of senses, for to taste them. And thus are all acts of the five active organs, and the acts of the five Prânas or vital airs (for the tasting of their corresponding objects). Thus what is manifest (of nature) is food, and what is not manifest is food. The enjoyer of it is without qualities, but because he has the quality of being an enjoyer, it follows that he possesses intelligence.

As Agni (fire) is the food-eater among the gods, and Soma the food, so he who knows this eats food by Agni (is not defiled by food, as little as Agni, the sacrificial fire). This elemental Self, called Soma (food), is also called Agni, as having undeveloped nature for its mouth (as enjoying through nature, and being independent of it), because it is said, 'The ¹ Five receptive, five active organs, and four kinds of consciousness.

² Its very development proves it to be food. Cowell.

Purusha (person) enjoys nature with its three qualities, by the mouth of undeveloped nature.' He who knows this, is an ascetic, a yogin, he is a performer of the Self-sacrifice (see before). And he who does not touch the objects of the senses when they intrude on him, as no one would touch women intruding into an empty house, he is an ascetic, a yogin, a performer of the Self-sacrifice.

11. This is the highest form of Self, viz. food, for this Prâṇa (this body) subsists on food. If it eats not, it cannot perceive, hear, touch, see, smell, taste, and it loses the vital airs¹. For thus it is said :

'If it eats, then in full possession of the vital airs, it can perceive, hear, touch, speak, taste, smell, see.' And thus it is said :

'From food are born all creatures that live on earth ; afterwards they live on food, and in the end (when they die) they return to it².'

12. And thus it is said elsewhere: Surely all these creatures run about day and night, wishing to catch food. The sun takes food with his rays, and by it he shines. These vital airs digest, when sprinkled with food. Fire flares up by food, and by Brahmâ (Pragâpati), desirous of food, has all this been made. Therefore let a man worship food as his Self. For thus it is said :

'From food creatures are born, by food they grow when born ; because it is eaten and because it eats creatures, therefore it is called food (annam).'

13. And thus it is said elsewhere: This food is the body of the blessed Vishṇu, called Visvabhṛt (all-sustaining). Breath is the essence of food, mind of breath, knowledge of mind, joy of knowledge. He who knows this is possessed of food, breath, mind, knowledge, and joy. Whatever creatures here on earth eat food, abiding in them he, who knows this, eats food. Food has been called undecaying, food has been called worshipful; food is the breath of animals, food is the oldest, food has been called the physician.

¹ Khând. Up. VII, 9, 1.

² Taitt. Up. II, 2.

14. And thus it has been said elsewhere: Food is the cause of all this, time of food, and the sun is the cause of time¹. The (visible) form of time is the year, consisting of twelve months, made up of Nimeshas (twinklins) and other measures. Of the year one half (when the sun moves northward) belongs to Agni, the other to Varuṇa (when the sun moves southward). That which belongs to Agni begins with the asterism of Maghâ and ends with half of the asterism of Śravishṭhâ, the sun stepping down northward. That which belongs to Soma (instead of Varuṇa) begins with the asterism (of Aśleshâ), sacred to the Serpents, and ends with half of the asterism of Śravishṭhâ, the sun stepping up southward. And then there (are the months) one by one, belonging to the year, each consisting of nine-fourths of asterisms (two asterisms and a quarter being the twelfth part of the passage of the sun through the twenty-seven Nakṣatras), each determined by the sun moving together with the asterisms. Because time is imperceptible by sense, therefore this (the progress of the sun, &c.) is its evidence, and by it alone is time proved to exist. Without proof there is no apprehension of what is to be proved; but even what is to be proved can become proof, for the sake of making itself known,

¹ As food depends on time, therefore time is praised, which again depends on the sun, which is a form of the Self.

if the parts (the twinklings, &c.) can be distinguished from the whole (time¹). For thus it is said :

‘As many portions of time as there are, through them the sun proceeds : he who worships time as Brahman, from him time moves away very far.’ And thus it is said :

‘From time all beings flow, from time they grow ; in time they obtain rest ; time is visible (sun) and invisible (moments).’

15. There are two forms of Brahman, time and non-time. That which was before the (existence of the) sun is non-time and has no parts. That which had its beginning ‘from the sun is time and has parts. Of that which has parts, the year is the form, and from the year are born all creatures ; when produced by the year they grow, and go again to rest in the year. Therefore the year is Pragâpati, is time, is food, is the nest of Brahman, is Self. Thus it is said :

‘Time ripens and dissolves all beings in the great Self, but he who knows into what time itself is dissolved, he is the knower of the Veda.’

16. This manifest time is the great ocean of creatures. He who is called Savitri (the sun, as begetter) dwells in it, from whence the moon, stars, planets, the year, and the rest are begotten. From them again comes all this, and thus, whatever of good or evil is seen in this world, comes from them. Therefore Brahman is the Self of the sun, and a man should worship the sun under the name of time. Some say the sun is Brahman, and thus it is said :

¹ Thus, the commentator says, the existence of the lamp can be proved by the light of the lamp, as the existence of time is proved by what we see, the rising of the sun. All this is very obscure.

‘The sacrificer, the deity that enjoys the sacrifice, the oblation, the hymn, the sacrifice, Vishnu, Pragâpati, all this is the Lord, the witness, that shines in yonder orb.’

17. In the beginning Brahman was all this¹. He was one, and infinite ; infinite in the East, infinite in the South, infinite in the West, infinite in the North, above and below and everywhere infinite. East and the other regions do not exist for him, nor across, nor below, nor above. The Highest Self is not to be fixed, he is unlimited, unborn, not to be reasoned about, not to be conceived. He is like the ether (everywhere), and at the destruction of the universe, he alone is awake. Thus from that ether he wakes all this world, which consists of thought only, and by him alone is all this meditated on, and in him it is dissolved. His is that luminous form which shines in the sun, and the manifold light in the smokeless fire, and the heat which in the stomach digests the food. Thus it is said :

‘He who is in the fire, and he who is in the heart, and he who is in the sun, they are one and the same.’

He who knows this becomes one with the one.

18. This is the rule for achieving it (viz. concentration of the mind on the object of meditation): restraint of the breath, restraint of the senses, meditation, fixed attention, investigation, absorption, these are called the sixfold Yoga². When beholding by

¹ Brahman used as neuter, but immediately followed by eko 'nantaḥ, &c.

² After having explained the form of what is to be meditated on and the mode of meditation, the Upanishad now teaches the Yoga which serves to keep our thoughts in subjection, and to fix our thoughts on the object of meditation. See Yoga-Sûtras II, 29.

this Yoga, he beholds the gold-coloured maker, the lord, the person, Brahman, the cause, then the sage, leaving behind good and evil, makes everything (breath, organs of sense, body, &c.) to be one in the Highest Indestructible (in the pratyagâtman or Brahman). And thus it is said :

‘As birds and deer do not approach a burning mountain, so sins never approach those who know Brahman.’

19. And thus it is said elsewhere : When he who knows has, while he is still Prâna (breath), restrained his mind, and placed all objects of the senses far away from himself, then let him remain without any conceptions. And because the living person, called Prâna (breath), has been produced here on earth from that which is not Prâna (the thinking Self), therefore let this Prâna merge the Prâna (himself) in what is called the fourth¹. And thus it is said :

‘What is without thought, though placed in the centre of thought, what cannot be thought, the hidden, the highest—let a man merge his thought there : then will this living being (liṅga) be without attachment².’

20. And thus it has been said elsewhere : There is the superior fixed attention (dhâraṇâ) for him, viz. if he presses the tip of the tongue down the palate and restrains voice, mind, and breath, he sees

¹ The fourth stage is meant for the thinking Self, the earlier stages being waking, slumbering, and sleep.

² Professor Cowell offers two renderings of this difficult passage : ‘This which is called prâna, i.e. the individual soul as characterised by the subtil body, will thus no longer appear in its separate individuality from the absence of any conscious subject ; or, this subtil body bearing the name of intellect will thus become void of all objects.’

Brahman by discrimination (tarka). And when, after the cessation of mind¹, he sees his own Self, smaller than small, and shining, as the Highest Self², then having seen his Self as the Self, he becomes Self-less, and because he is Self-less, he is without limit, without cause, absorbed in thought. This is the highest mystery, viz. final liberation. And thus it is said :

‘Through the serenity of the thought he kills all actions, good or bad ; his Self serene, abiding in the Self, obtains imperishable bliss.’

21. And thus it has been said elsewhere : The artery, called Sushumnâ, going upwards (from the heart to the Brahmarandhra), serving as the passage of the Prâna, is divided within the palate. Through that artery, when it has been joined by the breath (held in subjection), by the sacred syllable Om, and by the mind (absorbed in the contemplation of Brahman), let him proceed upwards³, and after turning the tip of the tongue to the palate, without⁴ using any of the organs of sense, let greatness perceive greatness⁵. From thence he goes to selflessness, and through selflessness he ceases to be an enjoyer of pleasure and pain, he obtains aloneness (kevalatva, final deliverance). And thus it is said :

¹ The commentator remarks that this process is called Lambikâ-yoga, and the state produced by it Unmanî or Unmanîbhâva ; see amanîbhâva, in VI, 34, ver. 7.

² I should have preferred to translate âtmânam âtmanâ pasyati by ‘he sees his Self by his Self,’ but the commentator takes a slightly different view, and says : itthambhâve tṛtīyâ ; paramâtmārûpeṇa pasyati.

³ Cf. Kaṭha Up. VI, 16 ; Prasṇa Up. III, 6 (p. 277).

⁴ If we read samyogya we must follow the commentator in translating by ‘uniting the senses with the prâna and the manas.’

⁵ Let the Self perceive the Self.

‘Having successively fixed the breath, after it had been restrained, in the palate, thence having crossed the limit (the life), let him join himself afterwards to the limitless (Brahman) in the crown of the head.’

22. And thus it has been said elsewhere: Two Brahmins have to be meditated on, the word and the non-word. By the word alone is the non-word revealed. Now there is the word Om. Moving upward by it (where all words and all what is meant by them ceases), he arrives at absorption in the non-word (Brahman). This is the way, this is the immortal, this is union, and this is bliss. And as the spider, moving upward by the thread, gains free space, thus also he who meditates, moving upward by the syllable Om, gains independence.

Other teachers of the word (as Brahman) think otherwise. They listen to the sound of the ether within the heart while they stop the ears with the thumbs. They compare it to seven noises, like rivers, like a bell, like a brazen vessel, like the wheels of a carriage, like the croaking of frogs, like rain, and as if a man speaks in a cavern. Having passed beyond this variously apprehended sound, and having settled in the supreme, soundless (non-word), unmanifested Brahman, they become undistinguished and undistinguishable, as various flavours of the flowers are lost in the taste of honey. And thus it is said:

‘Two Brahmins are to be known, the word-Brahman and the highest Brahman; he who is perfect in the word-Brahman attains the highest Brahman¹.’

¹ Cf. Mahâbhârata XII, 8540; Sarvadarśana-saṅgraha, p. 147; Cowell's Translation, p. 271.

23. And thus it has been said elsewhere : The syllable Om is what is called the word. And its end is the silent, the soundless, fearless, sorrowless, joyful, satisfied, firm, unwavering, immortal, immovable, certain (Brahman), called Vishnu. Let him worship these two, that he may obtain what is higher than everything (final deliverance). For thus it is said :

‘He who is the high and the highest god¹, by name Om-kâra, he is soundless and free from all distinctions : therefore let a man dwell on him in the crown of his head.’

24. And thus it has been said elsewhere : The body is the bow, the syllable Om is the arrow, its point is the mind. Having cut through the darkness, which consists of ignorance², it approaches that which is not covered by darkness³. Then having cut through that which was covered (the personal soul), he saw Brahman, flashing like a wheel on fire, bright like the sun, vigorous, beyond all darkness, that which shines forth in yonder sun, in the moon, in the fire, in the lightning⁴. And having seen him, he obtains immortality. And thus it has been said :

‘Meditation is directed to the highest Being (Brahman) within, and (before) to the objects (body, Om, mind) ; thence the indistinct understanding becomes distinct.

And when the works of the mind are dissolved,

¹ The commentator takes devâ as devaḥ, though the accent is against it ; see Schroeder, Über die Maitrâyana Samhitâ, p. 9, l. 11.

² Should it not be, ‘darkness is the mark?’

³ Atamâvishā, explained as an irregular compound, atama-âvishāam, tama-âvesanarahitam.

⁴ Cf. Bhagavadgîtâ XV, 12.

then that bliss which requires no other witness, that is Brahman (Âtman), the immortal, the brilliant, that is the way, that is the (true) world.'

25. And thus it has been said elsewhere: He who has his senses hidden as in sleep, and who, while in the cavern of his senses (his body), but no longer ruled by them, sees, as in a dream, with the purest intellect, Him who is called Pranava (Om), the leader¹, the bright, the sleepless, free from old age, from death, and sorrow, he is himself also called Pranava, and becomes a leader, bright, sleepless, free from old age, from death, and sorrow. And thus it is said:

'Because in this manner he joins the Prâna (breath), the Om, and this Universe in its manifold forms, or because they join themselves (to him), therefore this (process of meditation) is called Yoga (joining).

The oneness of breath, mind, and senses, and then the surrendering of all conceptions, that is called Yoga.'

26. And thus it has also been said elsewhere: As a sportsman, after drawing out the denizens of the waters with a net, offers them (as a sacrifice) in the fire of his stomach, thus are these Prânas (vital airs), after they have been drawn out with the syllable Om, offered in the faultless fire (Brahman)².

Hence he is like a heated vessel (full of clarified butter); for as the clarified butter in the heated vessel lights up, when touched with grass and sticks, thus does this being which is called Not-breath (Âtman) light up, when touched by the Prânas (the vital airs)¹. And that which flares up, that is the manifest form of Brahman, that is the highest place of Vishnu², that is the essence of Rudra. And this, dividing his Self in endless ways, fills all these worlds. And thus it is said :

¹ Cf. VI, 4.

² Cf. Svetâsvatara-upanishad III, 10.

‘As the sparks from the fire, and as the rays from the sun, thus do his Prâṇas and the rest in proper order again and again proceed from him here on earth³.’

27. And thus it has also been said elsewhere : This is the heat of the highest, the immortal, the incorporeal Brahman, viz. the warmth of the body. And this body is the clarified butter (poured on it, by which the heat of Brahman, otherwise invisible, is lighted up). Then, being manifest, it is placed in the ether (of the heart). Then by concentration they thus remove that ether which is within the heart, so that its light appears, as it were⁴. Therefore the worshipper becomes identified with that light without much delay. As a ball of iron, if placed in the earth, becomes earth without much delay, and as, when it has once become a clod of earth, fire and smiths have nothing more to do with that ball of iron, thus does thought (without delay) disappear, together with its support⁵. And thus it is said :

¹ As the fire which exists invisibly in a heated vessel becomes visible when the heated vessel is touched with sticks dipped in butter, thus the Âtman in the body appears only when the Prâṇas are diffused in it. Or, as the clarified butter, heated together with the vessel, lights up grass that comes in contact with it, so does this Âtman (called Not-breath), by heating its two bodies which are pervaded by the reflections of the thinker, light up everything brought in contact with it, viz. the world.

² See Kaṭha Up. III, 9.

³ See VI, 31; Bṛih. Up. II, 1, 10.

⁴ The light was always there, but it seems then only to appear.

⁵ The commentator explains this differently. He says that the

‘The shrine which consists of the ether in the heart, the blissful, the highest retreat, that is our own, that is our goal, and that is the heat and brightness of the fire and the sun.’

28. And thus it has been said elsewhere : After having left behind the body, the organs of sense, and the objects of sense (as no longer belonging to us), and having seized the bow whose stick is fortitude and whose string is asceticism, having struck down also with the arrow, which consists in freedom from egotism, the first guardian of the door of Brahman—(for if man looks at the world egotistically, then, taking the diadem of passion, the earrings of greed and envy, and the staff of sloth, sleep; and sin, and having seized the bow whose string is anger, and whose stick is lust, he destroys with the arrow which consists of wishes, all beings)—having therefore killed that guardian, he crosses by means of the boat Om to the other side of the ether within the heart, and when the ether becomes revealed (as Brahman), he enters slowly, as a miner seeking minerals in a mine, into the Hall of Brahman. After that let him, by means of the doctrine of his teacher, break through the shrine of Brahman, which consists of the four nets (of food, breath, mind, knowledge, till he reaches the last shrine, that of blessedness and identity with Brahman). Thenceforth pure, similes are intended to show how, as soon as the impediment is removed, the worshipper obtains his true form, i.e. becomes Brahman. Afterwards he explains ġittam, thought, by the individual thinker, and declares that he vanishes together with the thought, which forms the āsraya, the place, or the upādhi, the outward form. Or again, he says that the ġitta, the mind, vanishes with its outward sign, viz. the thoughts and imaginations.

clean, undeveloped, tranquil, breathless, bodiless, endless, imperishable, firm, everlasting, unborn and independent, he stands on his own greatness¹, and having seen (the Self), standing in his own greatness, he looks on the wheel of the world as one (who has alighted from a chariot) looks on its revolving wheel. And thus it is said :

‘If a man practises Yoga for six months and is thoroughly free (from the outer world), then the perfect Yoga (union), which is endless, high, and hidden, is accomplished.

But if a man, though well enlightened (by instruction), is still pierced by (the gunas of) passion and darkness, and attached to his children, wife, and house, then perfect Yoga is never accomplished².’

29. After he had thus spoken (to Brîhadratha), Sâkâyanya, absorbed in thought, bowed before him, and said : ‘O King, by means of this Brahma-knowledge have the sons of Pragâpati (the Vâlakhilyas) gone to the road of Brahman. Through the practice of Yoga a man obtains contentment, power to endure good and evil, and tranquillity. Let no man preach this most secret doctrine to any one who is not his son or his pupil³, and who is not of a serene mind. To him alone who is devoted to his teacher only, and endowed with all necessary qualities, may he communicate it⁴.

¹ See Maitr. Up. II, 4 ; VI, 31.

² This would seem to have been the end of the dialogue between Pragâpati and the Vâlakhilyas, which, as related by Sâkâyanya to King Brîhadratha, began in II, 3. See, however, VII, 8.

³ Svet. Up. VI, 22 (p. 267) ; Brîh. Up. VI, 3, 12.

⁴ Here may have been the end of a chapter, but the story of Sâkâyanya and Brîhadratha is continued to VI, 30.

30. Om! Having settled down in a pure place let him, being pure himself, and firm in goodness, study the truth, speak the truth, think the truth, and offer sacrifice to the truth¹. Henceforth he has become another; by obtaining the reward of Brahman his fetters are cut asunder, he knows no hope, no fear from others as little as from himself, he knows no desires; and having attained imperishable, infinite happiness, he stands blessed in the true Brahman, who longs for a true man². Freedom from desires is, as it were, the highest prize to be taken from the best treasure (Brahman). For a man full of all desires, being possessed of will, imagination, and belief, is a slave; but he who is the opposite, is free.

Here some say, it is the *Guna*³ (i. e. the so-called Mahat, the principle of intellect which, according to the Sâṅkhyas, is the result of the Gunas or qualities), which, through the differences of nature (acquired in the former states of existence), goes into bondage to the will, and that deliverance takes place (for the Guna) when the fault of the will has been removed. (But this is not our view), because (call it guna, intellect, buddhi, manas, mind, ahaṅkāra, egotism, it is not the mind that acts, but) he sees by the mind (as his instrument), he hears by the mind; and all that we call ¹ The truth or the true are explained by, (1) the book which teaches the Highest Self; (2) by Brahman, who is to be spoken about; (3) by Brahman, who is to be meditated on; (4) by Brahman, who is to be worshipped in thought.

² I have translated this according to the commentary, but I should prefer to read satyâbhilâshini.

³ The passages within brackets had to be added from the commentary in order to make the text intelligible, at least according to Râmatîrtha's views.

desire, imagination, doubt, belief, unbelief, certainty, uncertainty, shame, thought, fear, all that is but mind (manas). Carried along by the waves of the qualities, darkened in his imaginations, unstable, fickle, crippled, full of desires, vacillating, he enters into belief, believing I am he, this is mine, and he binds his Self by his Self, as a bird with a net¹. Therefore a man, being possessed of will, imagination, and belief, is a slave, but he who is the opposite is free. For this reason let a man stand free from will, imagination, and belief—this is the sign of liberty, this is the path that leads to Brahman, this is the opening of the door, and through it he will go to the other shore of darkness. All desires are there fulfilled. And for this they quote a verse :

“When the five instruments of knowledge stand still together with the mind, and when the intellect does not move, that is called the highest state².”

Having thus said, Sākāyanya became absorbed in thought. Then Marut (i. e. the King Bṛihadṛatha)³, having bowed before him and duly worshipped him, went full of contentment to the Northern Path⁴, for there is no way thither by any side-road. This is the path to Brahman. Having burst open the solar door, he rose on high and went away. And here they quote :

‘There are endless rays (arteries) for the Self who, like a lamp, dwells in the heart: white and black, brown and blue, tawny and reddish⁵.

¹ See III, 2.

² See the same verse in Kaṭha Up. VI, 10.

³ See before, II, 1.

⁴ See Prasṇa Up. I, 10, ‘But those who have sought the Self by penance, abstinence, faith, and knowledge, gain by the Northern Path Āditya, the sun.’

⁵ See Khând. Up. VIII, 6, 1.

One of them (the Sushumnâ) leads upwards, piercing the solar orb : by it, having stepped beyond the world of Brahman, they go to the highest path.

The other hundred rays¹ rise upwards also, and on them the worshipper reaches the mansions belonging to the different bodies of gods.

But the manifest rays of dim colour which lead downwards, by them a man travels on and on helplessly, to enjoy the fruits of his actions here.'

Therefore it is said that the holy Âditya (sun) is the cause of new births (to those who do not worship him), of heaven (to those who worship him as a god), of liberty (to those who worship him as Brahman)².

31. Some one asks : 'Of what nature are those organs of sense that go forth (towards their objects)? Who sends them out here, or who holds them back?'

Another answers : 'Their nature is the Self ; the Self sends them out, or holds them back ; also the Apsaras (enticing objects of sense), and the solar rays (and other deities presiding over the senses).'

Now the Self devours the objects by the five rays (the organs of sense) ; then who is the Self?

He who has been defined by the terms pure, clean, undeveloped, tranquil³, &c., who is to be apprehended independently by his own peculiar signs. That sign of him who has no signs, is like what the pervading

¹ A similar verse, but with characteristic variations, occurs in the Khând. Up. VIII, 6, 6, and in the Kaṭha Up. VI, 16.

² Here ends the story of Sâkâyanya, which began I, 2, and was carried on through chap. VI, though that chapter and the seventh are called Khilas, or supplements, and though the MS. M. also ends, as we saw, with the eighth paragraph of the sixth chapter.

³ See before, II, 4 VI, 1⁵

heat is of fire, the purest taste of water ; thus say some¹. It is speech, hearing, sight, mind, breath ; thus say others². It is intellect, retention, remembering, knowledge ; thus say others³. Now all these are signs of the Self in the same sense in which here on earth shoots are the signs of seed, or smoke, light, and sparks of fire. And for this they quote⁴ :

‘As the sparks from the fire, and as the rays from the sun, thus do his Prâṇas and the rest in proper order again and again proceed from him here on earth.’

32. From this very Self, abiding within his Self, come forth all Prâṇas (speech, &c.), all worlds, all Vedas, all gods, and all beings ; its Upanishad (revelation)⁵ is that it is ‘the true of the true.’ Now as from a fire of greenwood, when kindled, clouds of smoke come forth by themselves (though belonging to the fire), thus from that great Being has been breathed forth all this which is the Rig-veda, the Yagur-veda, the Sâma-veda, the Atharvângirasas (Atharva-veda), the Itihâsa (legendary stories), the Purâna (accounts of the creation, &c.), Vidyâ (ceremonial doctrines), the Upanishads, the Slokas (verses interspersed in the Upanishads, &c.), the Sûtras (compendious statements), the Anuvyâkhyânas (explanatory notes), the Vyâkhyânas (elucidations)⁶—all these things are his.

¹ See Svet. Up. VI, 13.

² See Ken. Up. 2.

³ See Ait. Up. III, 2. Here we find dhr̥iti (holding), smṛ̥ti (remembering), pragñānam (knowledge), but not buddhi. Pragñānam seems the right reading, and is supported by M.

⁴ See before, VI, 26.

⁵ Revelation is here the rendering of Upanishad, upanigamaitritvât sâkshâdrahasyam, and the true (sattya) is explained first by the five elements, and then by that which is their real essence.

⁶ See K&and. Up. VI, 1. The explanations given of these literary

33. This fire (the Gârhapatya-fire) with five bricks is the year. And its five bricks are spring, summer, rainy season, autumn, winter ; and by them the fire has a head, two sides, a centre, and a tail. This earth (the Gârhapatya-fire) here is the first sacrificial pile for Pragâpati, who knows the Purusha (the Virâg). It presented the sacrificer to Vâyû (the wind) by lifting him with the hands to the sky. That Vâyû is Prâna (Hiranyagarbha).

Prâna is Agni (the Dakshinâgni-fire), and its bricks are the five vital breaths, Prâna, Vyâna, Apâna, Samâna, Udâna ; and by them the fire has a head, two sides, a centre, and a tail. This sky (the Dakshinâgni-fire) here is the second sacrificial pile for Pragâpati, who knows the Purusha. It presented the sacrificer to Indra, by lifting him with the hands to heaven. That Indra is Âditya, the sun.

That (Indra) is the Agni (the Âhavanîya-fire), and its bricks are the Rik, the Yagush, the Sâman, the Atharvângirasas, the Itihâsa, and the Purâna ; and by them the fire has a head, two sides, a tail, and a centre. This heaven (Âhavanîya-fire) is the third sacrificial pile for Pragâpati, who knows the titles are on the whole the same as those we had before in similar passages. What is peculiar to Râmatîrtha is that he explains Upanishad by such passages as we had just now, viz. its Upanishad is that it is the true of the true. The Slokas are explained as verses like those in VI, 19, akittam kittamadhyastham. The Sûtras are explained as comprehensive sentences, such as II, 2, ayam vâva khalv âtmâ te. Anuvyâkhyânas are taken as explanations following on the Sûtra in II, 2, beginning with atha ya eshokâhâvâsâvish/ambhanena. The Vyâkhyânas are taken as fuller statements of the meaning contained in the Sûtra, such as the dialogue between the Vâ lakhilyas and Kratu.

Purusha. With the hands it makes a present of the sacrificer to the Knower of the Self (Pragâpati); then the Knower of the Self, lifting him up, presented him to Brahman. In him he becomes full of happiness and joy.

34. The earth is the Gârhapatya-fire, the sky the Dakshina-fire, the heaven the Âhavanîya-fire; and therefore they are also the Pavamâna (pure), the Pāvaka (purifying), and the Suḍi (bright)¹. By this (by the three deities, Pavamâna, Pāvaka, and Suḍi) the sacrifice (of the three fires, the Gârhapatya, Dakshina, and Âhavanîya) is manifested. And because the digestive fire also is a compound of the Pavamâna, Pāvaka, and Suḍi, therefore that fire is to receive oblations, is to be laid with bricks, is to be praised, and to be meditated on. The sacrificer, when he has seized the oblation, wishes² to perform his meditation of the deity:

‘The gold-coloured bird abides in the heart, and in the sun—a diver bird, a swan, strong in splendour; him we worship in the fire.’

Having recited the verse, he discovers its meaning, viz. the adorable splendour of Savitrî (sun) is to be meditated on by him who, abiding within his mind, meditates thereon. Here he attains the place of rest for the mind, he holds it within his own Self. On this there are the following verses:

(1) As a fire without fuel becomes quiet in its

¹ Epithets of Agni, the sacrificial-fire, pavamâna applying to the Gârhapatya-fire, pāvaka to the Dakshina-fire, and suḍi to the Âhavanîya-fire. The construction of the sentence, however, is imperfect.

² This means, he ought to perform it.

place¹, thus do the thoughts, when all activity ceases, become quiet² in their place.

(2) Even in a mind which loves the truth³ and has gone to rest in itself there arise, when it is deluded by the objects of sense, wrongs resulting from former acts⁴.

(3) For thoughts alone cause the round of births⁵; let a man strive to purify his thoughts. What a man thinks, that he is: this is the old secret⁶.

(4) By the serenity of his thoughts a man blots out all actions, whether good or bad. Dwelling within his Self with serene thoughts, he obtains imperishable happiness.

(5) If the thoughts of a man were so fixed on Brahman as they are on the things of this world, who would not then be freed from bondage?

(6) The mind, it is said, is of two kinds, pure or impure; impure from the contact with lust, pure when free from lust⁷.

(7) When a man, having freed his mind from sloth, distraction, and vacillation, becomes as it were delivered from his mind⁸, that is the highest point.

(8) The mind must be restrained in the heart till it comes to an end;—that is knowledge, that is liberty: all the rest are extensions of the ties⁹ (which bind us to this life).

¹ Dies in the fireplace.

² M. reads uparâmtyati twice.

³ M. reads satyakâminaḥ.

⁴ The commentator inserts a negative.

⁵ M. reads samsâraḥ.

⁶ This is very like the teaching of the Dhammapada, I, 1.

⁷ Cf. Ind. Stud. II, 60. Brahnavindu Up. v. 1, where we read kâmasaṅkalpam, as in MS. M.

⁸ See note to VI, 20.

⁹ M. reads mokshaḥ and śeṣaḥ tu. The commentator says that

(9) That happiness which belongs to a mind which by deep meditation has been washed¹ clean from all impurity and has entered within the Self, cannot be described here by words ; it can be felt by the inward power only².

(10) Water in water, fire in fire, ether in ether, no one can distinguish them ; likewise a man whose mind has entered (till it cannot be distinguished from the Self), attains liberty.

(11) Mind alone is the cause of bondage and liberty for men ; if attached to the world, it becomes bound ; if free from the world, that is liberty³.

Therefore those who do not offer the Agnihotra (as described above), who do not lay the fires (with the bricks, as described above), who are ignorant (of the mind being the cause of the round of births), who do not meditate (on the Self in the solar orb) are debarred from remembering the ethereal place of Brahman. Therefore that fire is to receive oblations, is to be laid with bricks, is to be praised, to be meditated on.

35⁴. Adoration to Agni, the dweller on earth, who remembers his world. Grant that world to this thy worshipper !

Adoration to Vâyu, the dweller in the sky, who remembers his world. Grant that world to this thy worshipper !

this line is easy, but it is so by no means. Professor Cowell translates granthavistarâh by book-prolixity, but this sounds very strange in an Upanishad. I am not satisfied with my own translation, but it may stand till a better one is found. M. reads grîndhavistarâh. The granthis are mentioned in Khând. Up. VII, 26 ; Ka/h. Up. VI, 15.

¹ M. reads nirdhûta.

² M. reads karaneti.

³ M. reads vishayâsaktam muktyai.

⁴ Next follow invocations to be addressed to the deities.

Adoration to Âditya, the dweller in heaven, who remembers his world. Grant that world to this thy worshipper!

Adoration to Brahman, who dwells everywhere, who remembers all. Grant all to this thy worshipper!

The mouth of the true (Brahman) is covered with a golden lid; open that, O Pûshan (sun), that we may go to the true one, who pervades all (Vishnu)¹.

He who is the person in the sun, I am he².

And what is meant by the true one is the essence of the sun, that which is bright, personal, sexless³; a portion (only) of the light which pervades the ether; which is, as it were, in the midst of the sun, and in the eye, and in the fire. That is Brahman, that is immortal, that is splendour.

That is the true one, a portion (only) of the light which pervades the ether, which is in the midst of the sun, the immortal, of which Soma (the moon) and the vital breaths also are offshoots: that is Brahman, that is immortal, that is splendour.

That is the true one, a portion (only) of the light which pervades the ether, which in the midst of the sun shines as Yagus, viz. as Om, as water, light, essence, immortal, Brahman, Bhûh, Bhuva, Svar, Om.

‘The eight-footed⁴, the bright, the swan, bound

¹ The verse occurs in a more original form in Tal. Up. 15.

² The commentator adds iti after aham.

³ Khând. Up. I, 6, 6; Svet. Up. V, 10.

⁴ The eight feet are explained as the eight regions, or âroga and the rest. The swan is the sun. The three threads are the three Vedas; see Kûl. Up. I, 1; Ind. Stud. IX, 11—ashṭapâdam suṭir hamsam trisûtram manim avyayam, dvivartamânam taigasaidham with three threads, the infinitely small, the imperishable, blind for good and evil, kindled with light—he who sees him, sees everything.’

A portion (only) of the light which pervades the ether, are the two rays rising in the midst of the sun. That is the knower¹ (the Sun), the true one. That is the Yagus, that is the heat, that is Agni (fire), that is Vâyu (wind), that is breath, that is water, that is the moon, that is bright, that is immortal, that is the place of Brahman, that is the ocean of light. In that ocean the sacrificers are dissolved² like salt, and that is oneness with Brahman, for all desires are there fulfilled. And here they quote :

‘Like a lamp, moved by a gentle wind, he who dwells within the gods shines forth. He who knows this, he is the knower, he knows the difference (between the high and the highest Brahman); having obtained unity, he becomes identified with it.

They who rise up in endless number, like spray drops (from the sea), like lightnings from the light within the clouds in the highest heaven, they, when they have entered into the light of glory (Brahman), appear like so many flame-crests in the track of fire.’

36. There are two manifestations of the Brahma-light : one is tranquil, the other lively. Of that which is tranquil, the ether is the support ; of that which is lively, food. Therefore (to the former) sacrifice must be offered on the house-altar with hymns, herbs, ghee, meat, cakes, sthâlpâka, and other things ; to the latter, with meat and drinks (belonging to the great sacrifices) thrown into the mouth, for the mouth sarvaḥ pāyan na pāyati. Here the eight feet are explained as the five elements, manas, buddhi, and ahaṅkāra.

¹ Savit for savitri.

² Vilīyante for vilīyante.

is the Âhavanîya-fire ; and this is done to increase our bodily vigour, to gain the world of purity, and for the sake of immortality. And here they quote :

‘Let him who longs for heaven, offer an Agni-hotra. By an Agnishôma he wins the kingdom of Yama ; by Uktha, the kingdom of Soma ; by a Shodasin-sacrifice, the kingdom of Sûrya ; by an Atirâtra-sacrifice, the kingdom of Indra ; by the sacrifices beginning with the twelve-night sacrifice and ending with the thousand years’ sacrifice, the world of Pragâpati.

As a lamp burns so long as the vessel that holds the wick is filled with oil, these two, the Self and the bright Sun, remain so long as the egg (of the world) and he who dwells within it hold together.’

37. Therefore let a man perform all these ceremonies with the syllable Om (at the beginning). Its splendour is endless, and it is declared to be three-fold, in the fire (of the altar), in the sun (the deity), in the breath (the sacrificer). Now this is the channel to increase the food, which makes what is offered in the fire ascend to the sun. The sap which flows from thence, rains down as with the sound of a hymn. By it there are vital breaths, from them there is offspring. And here they quote :

‘The offering which is offered in the fire, goes to the sun ; the sun rains it down by his rays ; thus food comes, and from food the birth of living beings.’

And thus he said :

‘The oblation which is properly thrown on the fire, goes toward the sun ; from the sun comes rain, from rain food, from food living beings¹.’

¹ See Manu III, 76.

38. He who offers the Agnihotra breaks through the net of desire. Then, cutting through bewilderment, never approving of anger, meditating on one desire (that of liberty), he breaks through the shrine of Brahman with its four nets, and proceeds thence to the ether. For having there broken through the (four) spheres of the Sun, the Moon, the Fire, and Goodness, he then, being purified himself, beholds dwelling in goodness, immovable, immortal, indestructible, firm, bearing the name of Vishnu, the highest abode, endowed with love of truth and omniscience, the self-dependent Intelligence (Brahman), standing in its own greatness. And here they quote :

‘In the midst of the sun stands the moon, in the midst of the moon the fire, in the midst of fire goodness, in the midst of goodness the Eternal.’

Having meditated on him who has the breadth of a thumb within the span (of the heart) in the body, who is smaller than small, he obtains the nature of the Highest ; there all desires are fulfilled. And on this they quote :

‘Having the breadth of a thumb within the span (of the heart) in the body, like the flame of a lamp, burning twofold or threefold, that glorified Brahman, the great God, has entered into all the worlds. Om ! Adoration to Brahman ! Adoration !’

SEVENTH PRAPÂTHAKA.

1. Agni, the Gâyatra (metre), the Trivṛt (hymn), the Rathantara (song), the spring, the upward breath (prâṇa), the Nakshatras, the Vasus (deities)—these rise in the East ; they warm, they rain, they praise¹

¹ Other MSS. read sruvanti, which seems better.

(the sun), they enter again into him (the sun), they look out from him (the sun). He (the sun) is inconceivable, without form, deep, covered, blameless, solid, unfathomable, without qualities, pure, brilliant, enjoying the play of the three qualities, awful, not caused, a master-magician¹, the omniscient, the mighty, immeasurable, without beginning or end, blissful, unborn, wise, indescribable, the creator of all things, the self of all things, the enjoyer of all things, the ruler of all things, the centre of the centre of all things.

2. Indra, the Trishṭubh (metre), the Pañḥadasa (hymn), the Brīhat (song), the summer, the through-going breath (Vyāna), Soma, the Rudras—these rise in the South; they warm, they rain, they praise, they enter again into him, they look out from him. He (the sun) is without end or beginning, unmeasured, unlimited, not to be moved by another, self-dependent, without sign, without form, of endless power, the creator, the maker of light.

3. The Maruts, the Gagatī (metre), the Saptadasa (hymn), the Vairupa (song), the rainy season, the downward breath (apāna), Sukra, the Âdityas—these rise in the West; they warm, they rain, they praise, they enter again into him, they look out from him. That is the tranquil, the soundless, fearless, sorrowless, joyful, satisfied, firm, immovable, immortal, eternal, true, the highest abode, bearing the name of Vishṇu.

4. The Visve Devas, the Anushṭubh (metre), the Ekaviṃśa (hymn), the Vairāga (song), the autumn, the equal breath (samāna), Varuṇa, the Sādhyas—these rise in the North; they warm, they rain, they praise, they enter again into him, they look out from him. He is pure within, purifying, undeveloped, tranquil, breathless, selfless, endless.

¹ See VII, 11, abhidhyātur viśrātir iva.

5. Mitrâ-Varunau, the Pañkti (metre), the Trina-vatrayastrimsa (hymns), the Sâkvara-raivata (songs), the snowy and dewy seasons, the out-going breath (udâna), the Ângiras, the Moon—these rise above ; they warm, they rain, they praise, they enter again into him, they look out from him—who is called Pranava (Om), the leader, consisting of light, without sleep, old age, death, and sorrow.

6. Sani (Saturn), Rahu and Ketu (the ascending and descending nodes), the serpents, Rakshas, Yakshas, men, birds, sarabhas, elephants, &c.—these rise below ; they warm, they rain, they praise, they enter again into him, they look out from him—he who is wise, who keeps things in their right place, the centre of all, the imperishable, the pure, the purifier, the bright, the patient, the tranquil.

7. And he is indeed the Self, smaller (than small) within the heart, kindled like fire, endowed with all forms. Of him is all this food, within him all creatures are woven. That Self is free from sin¹, free from old age, from death and grief, from hunger and thirst, imagining nothing but what it ought to imagine, and desiring nothing but what it ought to desire. He is the highest lord, he is the supreme master of all beings, the guardian of all beings, a boundary keeping all things apart in their right places². He the Self, the lord, is indeed Sambhu, Bhava, Rudra, Pragâpati, the creator of all, Hiranyagarbha, the true, breath, the swan, the ruler, the eternal, Vishnu, Nârâyana. And he who abides in the fire, and he who abides in the heart, and he who abides in the sun, they are one and the same. To thee who art this, endowed with all forms, settled in the true ether, be adoration !

¹ See Khând. Up. VIII, 7, 1.

² See Khând. Up. VIII, 4, 1, where we find setur vidhrîr eshâm lokânâm.

8. Now follow the impediments in the way of knowledge, O King¹ ! This is indeed the origin of the net of bewilderment, that one who is worthy of heaven lives with those who are not worthy of heaven. That is it. Though they have been told that there is a grove before them, they cling to a small shrub. And others also who are always merry, always abroad, always begging, always making a living by handiwork ; and others who are begging in towns, performing sacrifices for those who are not allowed to offer sacrifices, who make themselves the pupils of Sûdras, and Sûdras who know the sacred books ; and others who are malignant, who use bad language, dancers, prize-fighters, travelling mendicants, actors, those who have been degraded in the king's service ; and others who for money pretend that they can lay (the evil influences) of Yakshas, Râkshasas, ghosts, goblins, devils, serpents, imps, &c. ; and others who falsely wear red dresses², earrings, and skulls ; and others who wish to entice by the jugglery of false arguments, mere comparisons and paralogisms, the believers in the Veda—with all these he should not live together. They are clearly thieves, and unworthy of heaven. And thus it is said :

¹ This king is not meant for Brîhadratha.

² This refers to people who claim the privileges and licence of Sannyâsins without having passed through the discipline of the preceding âramas. As this was one of the chief complaints made against the followers of Sâkyamuni, it might refer to Buddhists, but it ought to be borne in mind that there were Buddhists before Buddha.

‘The world unsettled by the paralogisms of the denial of Self, by false comparisons and arguments, does not know what is the difference between Veda and philosophy¹.’

9. Br̥haspati, having become Sukra, brought forth that false knowledge for the safety of Indra and for the destruction of the Asuras. By it they show that good is evil, and that evil is good. They say that we ought to ponder on the (new) law, which upsets the Veda and the other sacred books². Therefore let no one ponder on that false knowledge : it is wrong, it is, as it were, barren. Its reward lasts only as long as the pleasure lasts, as with one who has fallen from his caste. Let that false science not be attempted, for thus it is said :

(1) Widely opposed and divergent are these two, the one known as false knowledge, the other as knowledge. I (Yama) believe Naṭiketas to be possessed by a desire of knowledge ; even many pleasures do not move thee³.

(2) He who knows at the same time both the imperfect (sacrifice, &c.) and the perfect knowledge (of the Self), he crosses death by means of the imperfect, and obtains immortality by means of the perfect knowledge⁴.

(3) Those who are wrapped up⁵ in the midst of

¹ If we translate thus, the use of vidyâ for vr̥thâ vidyâ is unusual ; if we follow the commentary, we should have to translate, he does not know the Veda and the other knowledge.

² All this may refer to Buddhists, but not by necessity, for there were heretics, such as Br̥haspati, long before Sâkyamuni.

³ See Kaṭh. Up. II, 4.

⁴ See Vâg. Up. II, 11.

⁵ Veshṭyamânâḥ, instead of vartamânâḥ.

imperfect knowledge, fancying themselves alone wise and learned, they wander about floundering and deceived, like the blind led by the blind¹.

10. The gods and the demons, wishing to know the Self, went into the presence of Brahman (their father, Pragâpati)². Having bowed before him, they said: 'O blessed one, we wish to know the Self, do thou tell us.' Then, after having pondered a long while, he thought, these demons are not yet self-subdued³; therefore a very different Self was told to them (from what was told to the gods). On that Self these deluded demons take their stand, clinging to it, destroying the true means of salvation (the Veda), preaching untruth. What is untrue they see as true, as in jugglery. Therefore, what is taught in the Vedas, that is true. What is said in the Vedas, on that the wise keep their stand. Therefore let a Brâhman not read what is not of the Veda, or this will be the result.

11. This is indeed the nature of it (the Veda), the supreme light of the ether which is within the heart. This is taught as threefold, in the fire, in the sun, in the breath. This is indeed the nature of it, the syllable Om, of the ether which is within the heart. By it (by the Om) that (light) starts, rises, breathes forth, becomes for ever the means of the worship and knowledge of Brahman. That (light, in the shape of

¹ See Kaṭh. Up. II, 5.

² Cf. Khând. Up. VIII, 8.

³ I prefer ayatât mânâh, though it is the easier (sugama) reading, as compared with anyatât mânâh, those who seek for the Self elsewhere, namely, in the body. It seems to me to refer to those who, without having subdued the passions of their body, wish to obtain the knowledge of the Highest Self. Possibly, however, the author may have intended a climax from ayatât mânâh to anyatamam.

Om), when there is breathing, takes the place of the internal heat, free from all brightness¹. This is like the action of smoke; for when there is a breath of air, the smoke, first rising to the sky in one column, follows afterwards every bough, envelopes it and takes its shape². It is like throwing salt (into water), like heating ghee³. The Veda comes and goes like the dissolving view of a master-magician⁴. And here they quote:

‘Why then is it called “like lightning?” Because as soon as it comes forth (as Om) it lights up the whole body. Therefore let a man worship that boundless light by the syllable Om.’

(1) The man in the eye who abides in the right eye, he is Indra, and his wife abides in the left eye⁵.

(2) The union of these two takes place in the cavity within the heart, and the ball of blood which is there, that is indeed the vigour and life of these two.

(3) There is a channel going from the heart so far, and fixed in that eye; that is the artery for both of them, being one, divided into two.

¹ This seems to be the meaning adopted by the commentator; but may it not be, sending forth brightness?

² The simile is not very clear. The light of Brahman is below the sphere of fire in the body. That sphere of fire becoming heated, the light of Brahman becomes manifest. When the fire has been fanned by the wind of sonant breath, then the light of Brahman, embodying itself in the wind and the fire, manifests itself first in the mere sound of Om, but afterwards, checked by throat, palate, &c., it assumes the form of articulate letters, and ends by becoming the Veda in its many branches.

³ As these are outwardly changed, without losing their nature, thus the light of Brahman, though assuming the different forms of the Veda, remains itself.

⁴ See before, VII, 1.

⁵ See Bṛh. Up. IV, 2, 2, 3, where Indra is explained as Indha.

(4) The mind excites the fire of the body, that fire stirs the breath, and the breath, moving in the chest, produces the low sound.

(5) Brought forth by the touch of the fire, as with a churning-stick, it is at first a minim, from the minim it becomes in the throat a double minim; on the tip of the tongue know that it is a treble minim, and, when uttered, they call it the alphabet (στοιχεῖα)¹.

(6) He who sees this, does not see death, nor disease, nor misery, for seeing he sees all (objectively, not as affecting him subjectively); he becomes all everywhere (he becomes Brahman).

(7) There is the person in the eye, there is he who walks as in sleep, he who is sound asleep, and he who is above the sleeper: these are the four conditions (of the Self), and the fourth is greater than all².

(8) Brahman with one foot moves in the three, and Brahman with three feet is in the last.

¹ A comparison of this verse with Khând. Up. VII, 26, shows the great freedom with which the wording of these ancient verses was treated. Instead of—

Na pasyan mṛityum pasyati na rogāṃ nota duḥkhatām, Sarvāṃ hi pasyan pasyati sarvāṃ āpnoti sarvasaḥ,

the Khândogya Up. reads:

Na pasyo mṛityum pasyati na rogāṃ nota duḥkhatām,
Sarvāṃ ha pasyaḥ pasyati sarvāṃ āpnoti sarvasaḥ.

² The conditions here described are sometimes called the Viśva (Vaiśvānara), Tāgasa, Prāgñā, and Turīya. In the first state the Self is awake, and enjoys the world; in the second he sees everything as in a dream; in the third the two former states cease, and he is absorbed in sleep; in the fourth he becomes again the pure Self. In the first state the Self has the disguise of a coarse material body; in the second of a subtle material body; in the third its disguise is potential only; in the fourth it has no disguise, either potential or realised.

It is that both the true (in the fourth condition) and the untrue (in the three conditions) may have their desert, that the Great Self (seems to) become two, yes, that he (seems to) become two¹.

¹ 'By reason of the experience of the false and the true, the great Soul appears possessed of duality.' Cowell.

TRANSLITERATION OF ORIENTAL ALPHABETS ADOPTED FOR THE TRANSLATIONS
OF THE SACRED BOOKS OF THE EAST.

CONSONANTS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
Gutturales.
1 Tenuis	k	.	.	क	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	𐬕	k
2 " aspirata	kh	.	.	ख	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	𐬖	kh
3 Media	g	.	.	ग	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	𐬗	.
4 " aspirata	gh	.	.	घ	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	𐬘	.
5 Gutturo-labialis	q	.	.							.
6 Nasalis	ñ (ng)	.	.	ङ	{ 𐬙 (ng) } { 𐬚 (ñ) }	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	𐬙	h, hs
7 Spiritus asper	h	.	.	ह	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	.
8 " lenis	,	.	.							.
9 " asper faucalis	'h	.	.							.
10 " lenis faucalis	'h	.	.							.
11 " asper fricatus		'h	.							.
12 " lenis fricatus		'h	.							.
Gutturales modificatae (palatales, &c.)
13 Tenuis	k	.	क	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	k
14 " aspirata	kh	.	ख	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	kh
15 Media	g	.	ग	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	.
16 " aspirata	gh	.	घ	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	.
17 " Nasalis	ñ	.	ङ	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	𐬛	.

CONSONANTS (continued).	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlvi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
18 Semivocalis	y	.	.	य	𐬨	𐬎	ي	ي	י	y
19 Spiritus asper	(ʔ)
20 " lenis	(j)
21 " asper assibilatus	s	.	श	𐬑	𐬑	ش	ش	ש	.
22 " lenis assibilatus	z	z
Dentales.
23 Tenuis	t	.	.	त	𐬔	𐬔	ت	ت	ת	t
24 " aspirata	th	.	.	थ	𐬕	𐬕	ث	ث	ת	th
25 " assibilata	d	.	TH	द
26 Media	dh
27 " aspirata
28 " assibilata	DH
29 Nasalis	n	.	.	न	.	.	ن	ن	נ	n
30 Semivocalis	l	.	.	ल	𐬌	𐬌	ل	ل	ל	l
31 " mollis 1	l
32 " mollis 2	L
33 Spiritus asper 1	s	.	.	स	𐬑	𐬑	س	س	ש	s
34 " asper 2	s (ʃ)
35 " lenis	z	ز	ز	ז	z
36 " asperimus 1	z (ʒ)
37 " asperimus 2	z (ʒ)	ʒ, ʒh

Dentales modificatae (linguales, &c.)		Labiales.
38 Tenuis	t	38 Tenuis	p
39 " aspirata	th	48 Tenuis	ph
40 Media	d	49 " aspirata	b
41 " aspirata	dh	50 Media	bh
42 Nasalis	n	51 " aspirata
43 Semivocalis	r	52 Tenuissima	m
44 " fricata	r	53 Nasalis	w
45 " diacritica		54 Semivocalis	hw
46 Spiritus asper	sh	55 " aspirata	f
47 " lenis	zh	56 Spiritus asper	v
		57 " lenis	m
		58 Anusvāra	h
		59 Visarga

VOWELS.	MISSIONARY ALPHABET.			Sanskrit.	Zend.	Pehlevi.	Persian.	Arabic.	Hebrew.	Chinese.
	I Class.	II Class.	III Class.
	0
1 Neutralis	0			ǎ . . .
2 Laryngo-palatalis	ǎ			â . . .
3 " labialis	ǒ			î . . .
4 Gutturalis brevis	a			â . . .
5 " longa	ā	(a)		î . . .
6 Palatalis brevis	i			î . . .
7 " longa	ī	(i)		î . . .
8 Dentalis brevis	ɿ			î . . .
9 " longa	ɿ̄			î . . .
10 Lingualis brevis	ri			î . . .
11 " longa	rī			î . . .
12 Labialis brevis	u			î . . .
13 " longa	ū	(u)		î . . .
14 Gutturo-palatalis brevis	e			î . . .
15 " longa	é(ai)	(e)		î . . .
16 Diphthongus gutturo-palatalis	ai	(ai)		î . . .
17 " "	ei(ēi)			î . . .
18 " "	oi(ōu)			î . . .
19 Gutturo-labialis brevis	o			î . . .
20 " longa	ô(au)	(o)		î . . .
21 Diphthongus gutturo-labialis	au	(au)		î . . .
22 " "	eu(ēu)			î . . .
23 " "	ou(ōu)			î . . .
24 Gutturalis fracta	ä			î . . .
25 Palatalis fracta	ī			î . . .
26 Labialis fracta	ū			î . . .
27 Gutturo-labialis fracta	ö			î . . .

UNIVERSITY OF CALIFORNIA LIBRARY
BERKELEY

Return to desk from which borrowed.
This book is DUE on the last date stamped below.

JAN 19 1948

13 Mar '53 KF

MAR 3 1953 LU

4 May '55 MB

APR 25 1955 LU

5 Jan '56 REQ

DEC 15 1955 LU

15 OCT '60 AR

REC'D LD

OCT 27 1960

LD 21-100m-9, '47 (A5702s16) 476

26 Nov '62 JW

REC'D LD

NOV 28 1962 2n 5666 RCD

27 Apr '63 DB

MAY 27 1963

REC'D LD

MAY 2 1963

10 May '65 LD

REC'D LD

MAY 24 '65 -6 PM

MAR 30 1966 59

YC 54595

